

OBITUARY.

PROF. A. A. HODGE, OF PRINCETON.

Archibald Alexander Hodge, D. D., Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, died at Princeton on Thursday night from the effect of a severe cold contracted on Sunday, which settled in his kidneys. He was a Trustee of Princeton College, and one of the most respected and beloved of the Professors of the Theological Seminary. Prof. Hodge was the son of Charles Hodge, the eminent Presbyterian theologian, and was in his sixty-fourth year, having been born in Princeton July 18, 1823. He was graduated from Princeton College in 1841, and from 1844 to 1846 served as a tutor in his Alma Mater, meantime attending the course at the Theological Seminary, from which he was graduated in 1847. Then he spent three years in the service of the Presbyterian Mission Board as a missionary to Allahabad. Upon his return home in 1850 he filled successively Presbyterian pulpits in Nottingham, Md., Fredericksburg, Va., and Wilkesbarre and Allegheny City, Penn. In 1864 he was appointed Professor of Didactic, Historical, and Polemic Theology in the Western Theological Seminary of Allegheny City, and this responsible post he filled until 1879, when he was called to the same chair at Princeton, filling it with distinguished ability until his sudden death. Dr. Hodge was a man of great kindness of manner and broad and liberal scholarship, and his voice was always influential in the councils of the Presbyterian Church. He was heard frequently from the Presbyterian pulpits of this city, and his sermons were always clear and forcible, and distinguished for genuine rhetorical polish. He leaves a brother, Caspar Wistar Hodge, who is also a Professor at Princeton. Among Dr. Hodge's best known published works are: "Outlines of Theology," which was also translated and published in Welsh; "The Atonement," "Commentary on the Confession of Faith," and "Presbyterian Doctrine Briefly Stated." Dr. Hodge edited the Presbyterian Review for a time, and was a frequent contributor to its columns.

OBITUARY NOTES.

The death is announced by cable of the Earl of Enniskillen at the age of 79 years.

John Ransom, managing editor of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union, died at Jacksonville Thursday night.

Louis Buckl, a member of the lumber firm of C. L. Buckl & Co., this city, and owner of extensive saw and lumber mills at Ellaville, Fla., died at Jacksonville, Fla., yesterday. He was a German Hebrew, and was 65 years old.

The Rev. Jeremiah Fitzpatrick died at the episcopal residence of the Roman Catholic Church at Hartford, Conn., yesterday afternoon. He was 47 years of age and had been in charge of parishes at Westerly, R. I., and New-Haven, Conn., before entering upon his duties as assistant at the cathedral in Hartford.

Gen. R. D. Lilly, who was stricken with paralysis Tuesday night, while addressing the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, at Richmond, died yesterday, aged about 45. He had been for a number of years financial agent of the Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va. He served in the Confederate Army, and was the youngest Brigadier-General in the service.

Corydon E. Fuller died at Des Moines, Iowa, yesterday morning. He had been in bad health for years. At Hiram College, in Ohio, James A. Garfield and Mr. Fuller became friends, and a voluminous correspondence between them lasted until Garfield's death. A biography of the late President by Mr. Fuller is now in press. Mr. Fuller taught both in the North and South, and in his newspaper career edited the South Bend Register. In 1867 he settled at Des Moines, and would have got rich but for his numerous helps toward educating young friends.

A Vienna dispatch announces the death of Alexander Ritter von Scholler, a very wealthy merchant of that city, who was especially interested in the copper mining, sugar, and cloth industries in Bohemia, Hungary, and the Province of Lower Austria. He was raised to the nobility by the Emperor in 1866. He belonged to a class of Austrian merchants who were particularly important before the year 1859, when joint stock banks first made their influence felt in Austria. Before that time he was engaged in banking as well as mercantile business.

Molyneaux Bell, who died at Albuquerque, New-Mexico, of apoplexy, Thursday, was for many years a merchant of this city engaged in the manufacture of cloaks on Canal-street. He retired from business in 1860 and served in the Union Army during the rebellion, attaining the rank of Captain and a position on Gen. Burnside's staff. He resided during the past 10 years at Albuquerque, where he was largely engaged, at the time of his death, in coal mining in Gallup, New-Mexico. He was a brother of Joseph Bell, who was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court in place of Bradford L. Prince.

John Krider, aged 73 years, died yesterday of paralysis at his residence, No. 4,407 Spruce-street, Philadelphia. For the past 50 years he was engaged in the business of gunsmith and sportsmen's supplies. In 1858 he represented the First Ward in the Philadelphia Common Council. He was Past-Master of Solomon Lodge, No. 114, F. and A. M., and for 30 years was Treasurer of the State Council of the order of United American Mechanics. He was also a member of the American Protestant Association and of the Knights of Pythias. He was well known throughout the country as a thorough sportsman, a good shot, and up to within a few years of his death was active with both his gun and fishing-rod.
