“When you undertake them, do they lead to welfare and happiness, or not? Or how do you see this?”

“When you undertake them, they lead to welfare and happiness. That’s how we see it.”

“So, Bhaddiya, when we said: ‘Please, Bhaddiya, don’t go by oral transmission, don’t go by lineage, don’t go by testament, don’t go by canonical authority, don’t rely on logic, don’t rely on inference, don’t go by reasoned train of thought, don’t go by the acceptance of a view after deliberation, don’t go by the appearance of competence, and don’t think “The ascetic is our respected teacher.” But when you know for yourselves: “These things are skillful, blameless, praised by sensible people, and when you undertake them, they lead to welfare and happiness”, then you should acquire them and keep them.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

The true persons in the world encourage their disciples: ‘Please, mister, live rid of greed. Then you won’t act out of greed by way of body, speech, or mind. Live rid of hate … delusion … aggression. Then you won’t act out of hate … delusion … aggression by way of body, speech, or mind.”

When he said this, Bhaddiya the Licchavi said to the Buddha, “Excellent, sir! … From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

“Well, Bhaddiya, did I say to you: ‘Please, Bhaddiya, be my disciple, and I will be your teacher’?”

“No, sir.”

“Though I state and assert this, certain ascetics and brahmins misrepresent me with the incorrect, hollow, false, untruthful claim: ‘The ascetic Gotama is a magician. He knows a conversion magic, and uses it to convert the disciples of those of other religions.’”

“Sir, this conversion magic is excellent. This conversion magic is lovely! If my loved ones —relatives and kin—were to be converted by this, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If all the aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials were to be converted by this, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness.”

“That’s so true, Bhaddiya! That’s so true, Bhaddiya! If all the aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials were to be converted by this, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If the whole world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—were to be converted by this, for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If these great sal trees were to be converted by this, for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness—if they were sentient. How much more then a human being!”

AN 4.194

AN 4.194
At Sāpūga
Sāmugiyasutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying in the land of the Koliyans, where they have a town named Sāpūga. Then several Koliyans from Sāpūga went up to Ānanda, bowed, and sat down to one side. Then Venerable Ānanda said to them:

"Byagghapajjas, these four factors of trying to be pure have been rightly explained by the Blessed One, who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. They are in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment. What four? The factors of trying to be pure in ethics, mind, view, and freedom.

And what is the factor of trying to be pure in ethics? It's when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they've undertaken. This is called purity of ethics. They think: 'I will fulfill such purity of ethics, or, if it's already fulfilled, I'll support it in every situation by wisdom.' Their enthusiasm for that—their effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness—is called the factor of trying to be pure in ethics.

And what is the factor of trying to be pure in mind? It's when a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. This is called purity of mind. They think: 'I will fulfill such purity of mind, or, if it's already fulfilled, I'll support it in every situation by wisdom.' Their enthusiasm for that—their effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness—is called the factor of trying to be pure in mind.

And what is the factor of trying to be pure in view? Take a mendicant who truly understands: 'This is suffering' … 'This is the origin of suffering' … 'This is the cessation of suffering' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering'. This is called purity of view. They think: 'I will fulfill such purity of view, or, if it's already fulfilled, I'll support it in every situation by wisdom.' Their enthusiasm for that—their effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness—is called the factor of trying to be pure in view.

And what is the factor of trying to be pure in freedom? That noble disciple—who has these factors of trying to be pure in ethics, mind, and view—detaches their mind from things that arouse greed, and frees their mind from things that it should be freed from. Doing so, they experience perfect freedom. This is called purity of freedom. They think: 'I will fulfill such purity of freedom, or, if it's already fulfilled, I'll support it in every situation by wisdom.’ Their enthusiasm for that—their effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness—is called the factor of trying to be pure in freedom.

These four factors of trying to be pure have been rightly explained by the Blessed One, who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. They are in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment.”

AN 4.195

AN 4.195
With Vappa
Vappasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Then Vappa of the Sakyans, a disciple of the Jains, went up to Venerable Mahāmoggallāna, bowed, and sat down to one side. Mahāmoggallāna said to him:

“Vappa, take a person who is restrained in body, speech, and mind. When ignorance fades away and knowledge arises, do you see any reason why defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life?”

“Sir, I do see such a case. Take a person who did bad deeds in a past life. But the result of that has not yet ripened. For this reason defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life.” But this conversation between Mahāmoggallāna and Vappa was left unfinished.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall. He sat down on the seat spread out, and said to Mahāmoggallāna, “Moggallāna, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?”

Moggallāna repeated the entire conversation to the Buddha, and concluded: “This was my conversation with Vappa that was unfinished when the Buddha arrived.”

Then the Buddha said to Vappa, “Vappa, we can discuss this. But only if you allow what should be allowed, and reject what should be rejected. And if you ask me the meaning of anything you don’t understand, saying: ‘Sir, why is this? What’s the meaning of that?’”

“Sir, let us discuss this. I will do as you say.”

“What do you think, Vappa? There are distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of instigating bodily activity. These don’t occur in someone who avoids such bodily activity. They don’t perform any new deeds, and old deeds are eliminated by experiencing their results little by little. This wearing away is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves. Do you see any reason why defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life?”

“No, sir.”

“What do you think, Vappa? There are distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of instigating verbal activity. These don’t occur in someone who avoids such verbal activity. They don’t perform any new deeds, and old deeds are eliminated by experiencing their results little by little. This wearing away is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves. Do you see any reason why defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life?"

"No, sir."

"What do you think, Vappa? There are distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of instigating mental activity. These don't occur in someone who avoids such mental activity. They don't perform any new deeds, and old deeds are eliminated by experiencing their results little by little. This wearing away is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves. Do you see any reason why defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life?"

"No, sir."

"What do you think, Vappa? There are distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of ignorance. These don't occur when ignorance fades away and knowledge arises. They don't perform any new deeds, and old deeds are eliminated by experiencing their results little by little. This wearing away is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves. Do you see any reason why defilements giving rise to painful feelings would defile that person in the next life?"

"No, sir."

"A mendicant whose mind is rightly freed like this has achieved six consistent responses. Seeing a sight with the eye, they're neither happy nor sad, but remain equanimous, mindful and aware. Hearing a sound with the ears … Smelling an odor with the nose … Tasting a flavor with the tongue … Feeling a touch with the body … Knowing an idea with the mind, they're neither happy nor sad, but remain equanimous, mindful and aware. Feeling the end of the body approaching, they understand: 'I feel the end of the body approaching.' Feeling the end of life approaching, they understand: 'I feel the end of life approaching.' They understand: 'When my body breaks up and my life has come to an end, everything that's felt, being no longer relished, will become cool right here.'

Suppose there was a shadow cast by a sacrificial post. Then along comes a person with a spade and basket. They cut down the sacrificial post at its base, dig it up, and pull it out by its roots, right down to the fibers and stems. Then they split it apart, cut up the parts, and chop them into splinters. Next they dry the splinters in the wind and sun, burn them with fire, and reduce them to ashes. Then they sweep away the ashes in a strong wind, or float them away down a swift stream. And so the shadow cast by the post is cut off at the root, made like a palm stump, obliterated, and unable to arise in the future.

In the same way, a mendicant whose mind is rightly freed like this has achieved six consistent responses. Seeing a sight with the eye, they're neither happy nor sad, but remain equanimous, mindful and aware. Hearing a sound with the ears … Smelling an odor with the nose … Tasting a flavor with the tongue … Feeling a touch with the body … Knowing an idea with the mind, they're neither happy nor sad, but remain equanimous, mindful and aware. Feeling the end of the body approaching, they understand: 'I feel the end of the body approaching.' Feeling the end of life approaching, they understand: 'I feel the end of life approaching.' They understand: 'When my body breaks up and my life has come to an end, everything that's felt, being no longer relished, will become cool right here.'"

When he said this, Vappa the Sakyan, the disciple of the Jains, said to the Buddha:

"Sir, suppose there was a man who raised commercial horses for profit. But he never made any profit, and instead just got weary and frustrated. In the same way, I paid homage to those Jain fools for profit. But I never made any profit, and instead just got weary and frustrated. From this day forth, any confidence I had in those Jain fools I sweep away as in a strong wind, or float away as down a swift stream.

Excellent, sir! … From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 4.196

AN 4.196
With Sāḷha
Sāḷhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then Sāḷha and Abhaya the Licchavis went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“There are, sir, some ascetics and brahmins who advocate crossing the flood by means of two things: purification of ethics, and mortification in disgust of sin. What does the Buddha say about this?”

“Sāḷha, purification of ethics is one of the factors of the ascetic life, I say. But those ascetics and brahmins who teach fervent mortification in disgust of sin—regarding it as essential and clinging to it—are incapable of crossing the flood. And those ascetics and brahmins whose livelihood and behavior by way of body, speech, and mind, is not pure are also incapable of knowing and seeing, of supreme awakening.

Suppose a man who wanted to cross a river took a sharp axe into a wood. There he’d see a large green sal tree, straight and young and grown free of defects. He’d cut it down at the base, cut off the top, and completely strip off the branches and foliage. Then he’d trim it with axes and machetes, plane it, and sand it with a rock. Finally, he’d launch out on the river.

What do you think, Sāḷha? Is that man capable of crossing the river?”

“No, sir. Why not? Because that green sal tree is well worked on the outside, but inside it’s still not cleared out. I’d expect that green sal tree to sink, and the man to come to ruin.”

“In the same way, Sāḷha, those ascetics and brahmins who teach fervent mortification in disgust of sin—regarding it as essential and clinging to it—are incapable of crossing the flood. And those ascetics and brahmins whose livelihood and behavior by way of body, speech, and mind is not pure are also incapable of knowing and seeing, of supreme awakening.

But those ascetics and brahmins who don’t teach mortification in disgust of sin—not regarding it as essential or clinging to it—are capable of crossing the flood. And those ascetics and brahmins whose behavior by way of body, speech, and mind is pure are also capable of knowing and seeing, of supreme awakening.

Suppose a man who wanted to cross a river took a sharp axe into a wood. There he’d see a large green sal tree, straight and young and grown free of defects. He’d cut it down at the base, cut off the top, and completely strip off the branches and foliage. Then he’d trim it with axes and machetes. Then he'd take a chisel and completely clear it out inside. Then he'd plane it, sand it with a rock, and make it into a boat. Finally he'd fix it with oars and rudder, and launch out on the river.

What do you think, Sāḷha? Is that man capable of crossing the river?"

"Yes, sir. Why is that? Because that green sal tree is well worked on the outside, cleared out on the inside, made into a boat, and fixed with oars and rudder. I'd expect that boat to not sink, and the man to safely make it to the far shore."

"In the same way, Sāḷha, those ascetics and brahmins who don't teach fervent mortification in disgust of sin—not regarding it as essential or clinging to it—are capable of crossing the flood. And those ascetics and brahmins whose behavior by way of body, speech, and mind is pure are also capable of knowing and seeing, of supreme awakening. Suppose there was a warrior who knew lots of fancy archery tricks. It is only with these three factors that he becomes worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship. What three? He's a long-distance shooter, a marksman, and one who shatters large objects.

Just as a warrior is a long-distance shooter, a noble disciple has right immersion. A noble disciple with right immersion truly sees any kind of form at all—past, future, or present; internal or external; coarse or fine; inferior or superior; far or near: all form—with right understanding: 'This is not mine, I am not this, this is not my self.' They truly see any kind of feeling … perception … choices … consciousness at all—past, future, or present; internal or external; coarse or fine; inferior or superior; far or near, all consciousness—with right understanding: 'This is not mine, I am not this, this is not my self.'

Just as a warrior is a marksman, a noble disciple has right view. A noble disciple with right view truly understands: 'This is suffering' … 'This is the origin of suffering' … 'This is the cessation of suffering' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering'.

Just as a warrior shatters large objects, a noble disciple has right freedom. A noble disciple with right freedom shatters the great mass of ignorance."

AN 4.197

AN 4.197
Queen Mallikā
Mallikādevīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Queen Mallikā went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why in this life some females are ugly, unattractive, and bad-looking; and poor, with few assets and possessions; and insignificant?

And why are some females ugly, unattractive, and bad-looking; but rich, affluent, wealthy, and illustrious?

And why are some females attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty; but poor, with few assets and possessions; and insignificant?

And why are some females attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty; and rich, affluent, wealthy, and illustrious?"

"Take a female who is irritable and bad-tempered. Even when criticized a little bit she loses her temper, becoming annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, and displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness. She doesn't give to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. And she's jealous, envying, resenting, and begrudging the possessions, honor, respect, reverence, homage, and veneration given to others. If she comes back to this state of existence after passing away, wherever she is reborn she's ugly, unattractive, and bad-looking; and poor, with few assets and possessions; and insignificant.

Take another female who is irritable and bad-tempered. … But she does give to ascetics or brahmins … And she's not jealous … If she comes back to this state of existence after passing away, wherever she is reborn she's ugly, unattractive, and bad-looking; but rich, affluent, wealthy, and illustrious.

Take another female who isn't irritable and bad-tempered. … But she doesn't give to ascetics or brahmins … And she's jealous … If she comes back to this state of existence after passing away, wherever she is reborn she's attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty; but poor, with few assets and possessions; and insignificant.

Take another female who isn't irritable and bad-tempered. … She gives to ascetics and brahmins … And she's not jealous … If she comes back to this state of existence after passing away, wherever she is reborn she's attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty; and rich, affluent, wealthy, and illustrious.

This is why some females are ugly … and poor … and insignificant. And some females are ugly … but rich … and illustrious. And some females are attractive … but poor … and insignificant. And some females are attractive … and rich … and illustrious."

When this was said, Queen Mallikā said to the Buddha:

"Sir, in another life I must have been irritable and bad-tempered. Even when lightly criticized I must have lost my temper, becoming annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, and displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness. For now I am ugly, unattractive, and bad-looking.

In another life I must have given to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. For now I am rich, affluent, and wealthy.

In another life, I must not have been jealous, envying, resenting, and begrudging the possessions, honor, respect, reverence, homage, and veneration given to others. For now I am illustrious. In this royal court I command maidens of the aristocrats, brahmins, and householders. So, sir, from this day forth I will not be irritable and bad-tempered. Even when heavily criticized I won't lose my temper, become annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, or display annoyance, hate, and bitterness. I will give to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. I will not be jealous, envying, resenting, and begrudging the possessions, honor, respect, reverence, homage, and veneration given to others.

Excellent, sir! … From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 4.198

AN 4.198
Fervent Mortification of Oneself
Attantapasutta

“Mendicants, these four people are found in the world. What four?

One person mortifies themselves, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves.
One person mortifies others, pursuing the practice of mortifying others.
One person mortifies themselves and others, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves and others.
One person neither mortifies themselves nor others, pursuing the practice of not mortifying themselves or others. They live without wishes in the present life, extinguished, cooled, experiencing bliss, with self become divine.

And how does one person mortify themselves, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves? It’s when someone goes naked, ignoring conventions. They lick their hands, and don’t come or wait when called. They don’t consent to food brought to them, or food prepared on their behalf, or an invitation for a meal. They don’t receive anything from a pot or bowl; or from someone who keeps sheep, or who has a weapon or a shovel in their home; or where a couple is eating; or where there is a woman who is pregnant, breastfeeding, or who has a man in her home; or where there’s a dog waiting or flies buzzing. They accept no fish or meat or liquor or wine, and drink no beer. They go to just one house for alms, taking just one mouthful, or two houses and two mouthfuls, up to seven houses and seven mouthfuls. They feed on one saucer a day, two saucers a day, up to seven saucers a day. They eat once a day, once every second day, up to once a week, and so on, even up to once a fortnight. They live pursuing the practice of eating food at set intervals.

They eat herbs, millet, wild rice, poor rice, water lettuce, rice bran, scum from boiling rice, sesame flour, grass, or cow dung. They survive on forest roots and fruits, or eating fallen fruit.

They wear robes of sunn hemp, mixed hemp, corpse-wrapping cloth, rags, lodh tree bark, antelope hide (whole or in strips), kusa grass, bark, wood-chips, human hair, horse-tail hair, or owls’ wings. They tear out hair and beard, pursuing this practice. They constantly stand, refusing seats. They squat, committed to the endeavor of squatting. They lie on a mat of thorns, making a mat of thorns their bed. They pursue the practice of immersion in water three times a day, including the evening. And so they live pursuing these various ways of mortifying and tormenting the body. That’s how one person mortifies themselves, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves.

And how does one person mortify others, pursuing the practice of mortifying others? It's when a person is a slaughterer of sheep, pigs, poultry, or deer, a hunter or fisher, a bandit, an executioner, a butcher of cattle, a jailer, or has some other cruel livelihood. That's how one person mortifies others, pursuing the practice of mortifying others.

And how does one person mortify themselves and others, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves and others? It's when a person is an anointed aristocratic king or a well-to-do brahmin. He has a new ceremonial hall built to the east of the citadel. He shaves off his hair and beard, dresses in a rough antelope hide, and smears his body with ghee and oil. Scratching his back with antlers, he enters the hall with his chief queen and the brahmin high priest. There he lies on the bare ground strewn with grass. The king feeds on the milk from one teat of a cow that has a calf of the same color. The chief queen feeds on the milk from the second teat. The brahmin high priest feeds on the milk from the third teat. The milk from the fourth teat is served to the sacred flame. The calf feeds on the remainder. He says: 'Slaughter this many bulls, bullocks, heifers, goats, rams, and horses for the sacrifice! Fell this many trees and reap this much grass for the sacrificial equipment!' His bondservants, servants, and workers do their jobs under threat of punishment and danger, weeping, with tearful faces. That's how one person mortifies themselves and others, pursuing the practice of mortifying themselves and others.

And how does one person neither mortify themselves nor others, pursuing the practice of not mortifying themselves or others, living without wishes in the present life, extinguished, cooled, experiencing bliss, with self become divine? It's when a Realized One arises in the world, perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed. He has realized with his own insight this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—and he makes it known to others. He teaches Dhamma that's good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. A householder hears that teaching, or a householder's child, or someone reborn in a good family. They gain faith in the Realized One and reflect: 'Life at home is cramped and dirty, life gone forth is wide open. It's not easy for someone living at home to lead the spiritual life utterly full and pure, like a polished shell. Why don't I shave off my hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness?' After some time they give up a large or small fortune, and a large or small family circle. They shave off hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

Once they've gone forth, they take up the training and livelihood of the mendicants. They give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They're scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings. They give up stealing. They take only what's given, and expect only what's given. They keep themselves clean by not thieving. They give up unchastity. They are celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. They give up lying. They speak the truth and stick to the truth. They're honest and trustworthy, and don't trick the world with their words. They give up divisive speech. They don't repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. Instead, they reconcile those who are divided, supporting unity, delighting in harmony, loving harmony, speaking words that promote harmony. They give up harsh speech. They speak in a way that's mellow, pleasing to the ear, lovely, going to the heart, polite, likable, and agreeable to the people. They give up talking nonsense. Their words are timely, true, and meaningful, in line with the teaching and training. They say things at the right time which are valuable, reasonable, succinct, and beneficial.

They refrain from injuring plants and seeds. They eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night and food at the wrong time. They refrain from seeing shows of dancing, singing, and music . They refrain from beautifying and adorning themselves with garlands, fragrance, and makeup. They refrain from high and luxurious beds. They refrain from receiving gold and money, raw grains, raw meat, women and girls, male and female bondservants, goats and sheep, chickens and pigs, elephants, cows, horses, and mares, and fields and land. They refrain from running errands and messages; buying and selling; falsifying weights, metals, or measures; bribery, fraud, cheating, and duplicity; mutilation, murder, abduction, banditry, plunder, and violence.

They're content with robes to look after the body and almsfood to look after the belly. Wherever they go, they set out taking only these things. They're like a bird: wherever it flies, wings are its only burden. In the same way, a mendicant is content with robes to look after the body and almsfood to look after the belly. Wherever they go, they set out taking only these things. When they have this entire spectrum of noble ethics, they experience a blameless happiness inside themselves.

Seeing a sight with the eyes, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of sight were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of sight, and achieving restraint over it. Hearing a sound with the ears … Smelling an odor with the nose … Tasting a flavor with the tongue … Feeling a touch with the body … Knowing an idea with the mind, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of mind were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of mind, and achieving restraint over it. When they have this noble sense restraint, they experience an unsullied bliss inside themselves.

They act with situational awareness when going out and coming back; when looking ahead and aside; when bending and extending the limbs; when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes; when eating, drinking, chewing, and tasting; when urinating and defecating; when walking, standing, sitting, sleeping, waking, speaking, and keeping silent.

When they have this entire spectrum of noble ethics, this noble sense restraint, and this noble mindfulness and situational awareness, they frequent a secluded lodging—a wilderness, the root of a tree, a hill, a ravine, a mountain cave, a charnel ground, a forest, the open air, a heap of straw. After the meal, they return from almsround, sit down cross-legged, set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence. Giving up covetousness for the world, they meditate with a heart rid of covetousness, cleansing the mind of covetousness. Giving up ill will and malevolence, they meditate with a mind rid of ill will, full of compassion for all living beings, cleansing the mind of ill will. Giving up dullness and drowsiness, they meditate with a mind rid of dullness and drowsiness, perceiving light, mindful and aware, cleansing the mind of dullness and drowsiness. Giving up restlessness and remorse, they meditate without restlessness, their mind peaceful inside, cleansing the mind of restlessness and remorse. Giving up doubt, they meditate having gone beyond doubt, not undecided about skillful qualities, cleansing the mind of doubt. They give up these five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. Then, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, they enter and remain in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption.

When their mind has become immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—they extend it toward recollection of past lives … knowledge of the death and rebirth of sentient beings … knowledge of the ending of defilements. They truly understand: 'This is suffering' … 'This is the origin of suffering' … 'This is the cessation of suffering' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering'. They truly understand: 'These are defilements' … 'This is the origin of defilements' … 'This is the cessation of defilements' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of defilements'.

Knowing and seeing like this, their mind is freed from the defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. When they're freed, they know they're freed.

They understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.' That's how one person neither mortifies themselves nor others, pursuing the practice of not mortifying themselves or others, living without wishes in the present life, extinguished, cooled, experiencing bliss, with self become divine.

These are the four people found in the world."

AN 4.199

AN 4.199
Craving, the Weaver
Taṇhāsutta

The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, I will teach you about craving—the weaver, the migrant, the creeping, the clinging. This world is choked by it, engulfed by it. It makes the world tangled like yarn, knotted like a ball of thread, and matted like rushes and reeds, not escaping the places of loss, the bad places, the underworld, transmigration. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what is that craving …? There are eighteen currents of craving that derive from the interior, and eighteen that derive from the exterior.

What are the eighteen currents of craving that derive from the interior? When there is the concept ‘I am’, there are the concepts ‘I am such’, ‘I am thus’, ‘I am otherwise’; ‘I am fleeting’, ‘I am lasting’; ‘mine’, ‘such is mine’, ‘thus is mine’, ‘otherwise is mine’; ‘also mine’, ‘such is also mine’, ‘thus is also mine’, ‘otherwise is also mine’; ‘I will be’, ‘I will be such’, ‘I will be thus’, ‘I will be otherwise’. These are the eighteen currents of craving that derive from the interior.

What are the eighteen currents of craving that derive from the exterior? When there is the concept ‘I am because of this’, there are the concepts ‘I am such because of this’, ‘I am thus because of this’, ‘I am otherwise because of this’; ‘I am fleeting because of this’, ‘I am lasting because of this’; ‘mine because of this’, ‘such is mine because of this’, ‘thus is mine because of this’, ‘otherwise is mine because of this’; ‘also mine because of this’, ‘such is also mine because of this’, ‘thus is also mine because of this’, ‘otherwise is also mine because of this’; ‘I will be because of this’, ‘I will be such because of this’, ‘I will be thus because of this’, ‘I will be otherwise because of this’. These are the eighteen currents of craving that derive from the exterior.

So there are eighteen currents of craving that derive from the interior, and eighteen that derive from the exterior. These are called the thirty-six currents of craving. Each of these pertain to the past, future, and present, making one hundred and eight currents of craving.

This is that craving—the weaver, the migrant, the creeping, the clinging. This world is choked by it, engulfed by it. It makes the world tangled like yarn, knotted like a ball of thread, and matted like rushes and reeds, not escaping the places of loss, the bad places, the underworld, transmigration.”

AN 4.200

AN 4.200
Love and Hate
Pemasutta

“Mendicants, these four things are born of love and hate. What four?

Love is born of love, hate is born of love, love is born of hate, and hate is born of hate.

And how is love born of love? It’s when someone likes, loves, and cares for a person. Others treat that person with liking, love, and care. They think: ‘These others like the person I like.’ And so love for them springs up. That’s how love is born of love.

And how is hate born of love? It’s when someone likes, loves, and cares for a person. Others treat that person with disliking, loathing, and detestation. They think: ‘These others dislike the person I like.’ And so hate for them springs up. That’s how hate is born of love.

And how is love born of hate? It’s when someone dislikes, loathes, and detests a person. Others treat that person with disliking, loathing, and detestation. They think: ‘These others dislike the person I dislike.’ And so love for them springs up. That’s how love is born of hate.

And how is hate born of hate? It’s when someone dislikes, loathes, and detests a person. Others treat that person with liking, love, and care. They think: ‘These others like the person I dislike.’ And so hate for them springs up. That’s how hate is born of hate.

These are the four things that are born of love and hate.

A time comes when a mendicant … enters and remains in the first absorption. At that time they have no love born of love, hate born of love, love born of hate, or hate born of hate.

A time comes when a mendicant … enters and remains in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. At that time they have no love born of love, hate born of love, love born of hate, or hate born of hate.

A time comes when a mendicant realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. At that time any love born of love, hate born of love, love born of hate, or hate born of hate is given up, cut off at the root, made like a palm stump, obliterated, and unable to arise in the future. This is called a mendicant who doesn’t draw close or push back or fume or ignite or burn up.

And how does a mendicant draw close? It's when a mendicant regards form as self, self as having form, form in self, or self in form. They regard feeling as self, self as having feeling, feeling in self, or self in feeling. They regard perception as self, self as having perception, perception in self, or self in perception. They regard choices as self, self as having choices, choices in self, or self in choices. They regard consciousness as self, self as having consciousness, consciousness in self, or self in consciousness. That's how a mendicant draws close.

And how does a mendicant not draw close? It's when a mendicant doesn't regard form as self, self as having form, form in self, or self in form. They don't regard feeling as self, self as having feeling, feeling in self, or self in feeling. They don't regard perception as self, self as having perception, perception in self, or self in perception. They don't regard choices as self, self as having choices, choices in self, or self in choices. They don't regard consciousness as self, self as having consciousness, consciousness in self, or self in consciousness. That's how a mendicant doesn't draw close.

And how does a mendicant push back? It's when someone abuses, annoys, or argues with a mendicant, and the mendicant abuses, annoys, or argues back at them. That's how a mendicant pushes back.

And how does a mendicant not push back? It's when someone abuses, annoys, or argues with a mendicant, and the mendicant doesn't abuse, annoy, or argue back at them. That's how a mendicant doesn't push back.

And how does a mendicant fume? When there is the concept 'I am', there are the concepts 'I am such', 'I am thus', 'I am otherwise'; 'I am fleeting', 'I am lasting'; 'mine', 'such is mine', 'thus is mine', 'otherwise is mine'; 'also mine', 'such is also mine', 'thus is also mine', 'otherwise is also mine'; 'I will be', 'I will be such', 'I will be thus', 'I will be otherwise'. That's how a mendicant fumes.

And how does a mendicant not fume? When there is no concept 'I am', there are no concepts 'I am such', 'I am thus', 'I am otherwise'; 'I am fleeting', 'I am lasting'; 'mine', 'such is mine', 'thus is mine', 'otherwise is mine'; 'also mine', 'such is also mine', 'thus is also mine', 'otherwise is also mine'; 'I will be', 'I will be such', 'I will be thus', 'I will be otherwise'. That's how a mendicant doesn't fume.

And how is a mendicant ignited? When there is the concept 'I am because of this', there are the concepts 'I am such because of this', 'I am thus because of this', 'I am otherwise because of this'; 'I am fleeting because of this', 'I am lasting because of this'; 'mine because of this', 'such is mine because of this', 'thus is mine because of this', 'otherwise is mine because of this'; 'also mine because of this', 'such is also mine because of this', 'thus is also mine because of this', 'otherwise is also mine because of this'; 'I will be because of this', 'I will be such because of this', 'I will be thus because of this', 'I will be otherwise because of this'. That's how a mendicant is ignited.

And how is a mendicant not ignited? When there is no concept 'I am because of this', there are no concepts 'I am such because of this', 'I am thus because of this', 'I am otherwise because of this'; 'I am fleeting because of this', 'I am lasting because of this'; 'mine because of this', 'such is mine because of this', 'thus is mine because of this',

‘otherwise is mine because of this’; ‘also mine because of this’, ‘such is also mine because of this’, ‘thus is also mine because of this’, ‘otherwise is also mine because of this’; ‘I will be because of this’, ‘I will be such because of this’, ‘I will be thus because of this’, ‘I will be otherwise because of this’. That’s how a mendicant is not ignited.

And how does a mendicant burn up? It’s when a mendicant hasn’t given up the conceit ‘I am’, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant is burned up.

And how does a mendicant not burn up? It’s when a mendicant has given up the conceit ‘I am’, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant is not burned up.”

AN 4.201

AN 4.201
Training Rules
Sikkhāpadasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and an even truer person. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, commits sexual misconduct, lies, and uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, commits sexual misconduct, lies, and uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. And they encourage others to avoid these things. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.202

AN 4.202
Faithless
Assaddhasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and an even truer person.

And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who is faithless, shameless, imprudent, with little learning, lazy, unmindful, and witless. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who is faithless, shameless, imprudent, with little learning, lazy, confused, and witless. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who is faithful, conscientious, prudent, learned, energetic, mindful, and wise. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who is personally accomplished in faith, conscience, prudence, learning, energy, mindfulness, and wisdom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.203

AN 4.203
Seven Kinds of Deeds
Sattakammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and a better person.

And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, commits sexual misconduct, and uses speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, commits sexual misconduct, and uses speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they encourage others to avoid these things. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.204

AN 4.204
Ten Kinds of Deeds
Dasakammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and an even truer person.

And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.205

AN 4.205
Eightfold
Aṭṭhaṅgikasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and an even truer person.

And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, and wrong immersion. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, and wrong immersion. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.206

AN 4.206
The Path with Ten Factors
Dasamaggasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an untrue person and an even more untrue person, a true person and an even truer person.

And what is an untrue person? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called an untrue person.

And what is an even more untrue person? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even more untrue person.

And what is a true person? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called a true person.

And what is an even truer person? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called an even truer person.”

AN 4.207

AN 4.207
Bad Character (1st)
Paṭhamapāpadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you who’s bad and who’s worse, who’s good and who’s better.

And who’s bad? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. This is called bad.

And who’s worse? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called worse.

And who’s good? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. This is called good.

And who’s better? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called better.”

AN 4.208

AN 4.208
Bad Character (2nd)
Dutiyapāpadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you who’s bad and who’s worse, who’s good and who’s better.

And who’s bad? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called bad.

And who’s worse? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called worse.

And who’s good? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called good.

And who’s better? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called better.”

AN 4.209

AN 4.209
Bad Character (3rd)
Tatiyapāpadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you bad character and worse character, good character and better character.

And who has bad character? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. This is called bad character.

And who has worse character? It’s someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called worse character.

And who has good character? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. This is called good character.

And who has better character? It’s someone who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. And they encourage others to do these things. This is called better character.”

AN 4.210

AN 4.210
Bad Character (4th)
Catutthapāpadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you bad character and worse character, good character and better character.

And who has bad character? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called bad character.

And who has worse character? It’s someone who has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called worse character.

And who has good character? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called good character.

And who has better character? It’s someone who has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. And they encourage others in these same qualities. This is called better character.”

AN 4.211

AN 4.211
Assembly
Parisāsutta

“Mendicants, these four corrupt an assembly. What four? A monk, nun, layman, or laywoman who is unethical, of bad character. These are the four that corrupt an assembly.

Mendicants, these four beautify an assembly. What four? A monk, nun, layman, or laywoman who is ethical, of good character. These are the four that beautify an assembly.”

AN 4.212

AN 4.212
View
Diṭṭhisutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and wrong view. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? Good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and right view. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.213

AN 4.213
Ungrateful
Akataññutāsutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and being ungrateful and thankless. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? Good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and being grateful and thankful. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.214

AN 4.214
Killing Living Creatures
Pāṇātipātīsutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, and lie. … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or lie. …”

AN 4.215

AN 4.215
Path (1st)
Paṭhamamaggasutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action. … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … right view, right thought, right speech, right action. …”

AN 4.216

AN 4.216
Path (2nd)
Dutiyamaggasutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, and wrong immersion. Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. …”

AN 4.217

AN 4.217
Kinds of Expression (1st)
Paṭhamavohārapathasutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … They say they’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, but they haven’t. … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … They say they haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and they haven’t. …”

AN 4.218

AN 4.218
Kinds of Expression (2nd)
Dutiyavohārapathasutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … They say they haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, but they have. … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … They say they’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, and they have. …”

AN 4.219

AN 4.219
Imprudence
Ahirikasutta

“Someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. … They’re faithless, unethical, shameless, and imprudent. … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. … They’re faithful, ethical, conscientious, and prudent. …”

AN 4.220

AN 4.220
Unethical
Dussīlasutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? They’re faithless, unethical, lazy, and witless. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? They’re faithful, ethical, energetic, and wise. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.221

AN 4.221
Verbal Conduct
Duccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four kinds of bad conduct by way of speech. What four? Speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. These are the four kinds of bad conduct by way of speech.

There are these four kinds of good conduct by way of speech. What four? Speech that’s true, harmonious, gentle, and thoughtful. These are the four kinds of good conduct by way of speech.”

AN 4.222

AN 4.222
View
Diṭṭhisutta

“When a foolish, incompetent untrue person has four qualities they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness. What four? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and wrong view. When a foolish, incompetent untrue person has these four qualities they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness.

When an astute, competent true person has four qualities they keep themselves healthy and whole. They don’t deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much merit. What four? Good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and right view. When an astute, competent true person has these four qualities they keep themselves healthy and whole. They don’t deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much merit.”

AN 4.223

AN 4.223
Ungrateful
Akataññutāsutta

“When a foolish, incompetent untrue person has four qualities they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness. What four? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and being ungrateful and thankless. An astute person … creates much merit. … Good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and being grateful and thankful. …”

AN 4.224

AN 4.224
Killing Living Creatures
Pāṇātipātīsutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, and lie. … An astute person … creates much merit. … They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or lie. …”

AN 4.225

AN 4.225
Path (1st)
Paṭhamamaggasutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action. … An astute person … creates much merit. … right view, right thought, right speech, right action. …”

AN 4.226

AN 4.226
Path (2nd)
Dutiyamaggasutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, and wrong immersion. … An astute person … creates much merit. … right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. …”

AN 4.227

AN 4.227
Kinds of Expression (1st)
Paṭhamavohārapathasutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … They say they’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, but they haven’t. … An astute person … creates much merit. … They say they haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and they haven’t. …”

AN 4.228

AN 4.228
Kinds of Expression (2nd)
Dutiyavohārapathasutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … They say they haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, but they have. … An astute person … creates much merit. … They say they’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, and they have. …”

AN 4.229

AN 4.229
Imprudence
Ahirikasutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … They’re faithless, unethical, shameless, and imprudent. … An astute person … creates much merit. … They’re faithful, ethical, conscientious, and prudent. …”

AN 4.230

AN 4.230
Witless
Duppañña sutta

“A foolish person … creates much wickedness. … They’re faithless, unethical, lazy, and witless. … An astute person … creates much merit. … They’re faithful, ethical, energetic, and wise. When an astute, competent true person has these four qualities they keep themselves healthy and whole. They don’t deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much merit.”

AN 4.231

AN 4.231
Poets
Kavisutta

“Mendicants, there are these four poets. What four?

A poet who thoughtfully composes their own work, a poet who repeats the oral transmission, a poet who educates, and a poet who improvises.

These are the four poets.”

AN 4.232

AN 4.232
Deeds In Brief
Saṁkhittasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results.
There are bright deeds with bright results.
There are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.
There are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.233

AN 4.233
Deeds in Detail
Vitthārasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results;
bright deeds with bright results;
dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results; and neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

And what are dark deeds with dark results? It’s when someone makes hurtful choices by way of body, speech, and mind. Having made these choices, they’re reborn in a hurtful world, where hurtful contacts strike them. Touched by hurtful contacts, they experience hurtful feelings that are exclusively painful—like the beings in hell. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It’s when someone makes pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. Having made these choices, they’re reborn in a pleasing world, where pleasing contacts strike them. Touched by pleasing contacts, they experience pleasing feelings that are exclusively happy—like the gods replete with glory. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It’s when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. Having made these choices, they are reborn in a world that is both hurtful and pleasing, where hurtful and pleasing contacts strike them. Touched by both hurtful and pleasing contacts, they experience both hurtful and pleasing feelings that are a mixture of pleasure and pain—like humans, some gods, and some beings in the underworld. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? It’s the intention to give up dark deeds with dark results, bright deeds with bright results, and both dark and bright deeds with both dark and bright results. These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.234

AN 4.234
About Soṇakāyana
Soṇakāyanasutta

Then Sikhāmoggallāna the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Sikhāmoggallāna sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

"Mister Gotama, a few days ago the student Soṇakāyana came to me and said: 'The ascetic Gotama advocates not doing any deeds. So he teaches the annihilation of the world!' The world exists through deeds, and it remains because deeds are undertaken."

"Brahmin, I can't recall even seeing the student Soṇakāyana, so how could we possibly have had such a discussion? I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results;
bright deeds with bright results;
dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results; and neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

And what are the dark deeds with dark results? It's when someone makes hurtful choices by way of body, speech, and mind. … Touched by hurtful contacts, they experience hurtful feelings that are exclusively painful—like the beings in hell. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It's when someone makes pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. … Touched by pleasing contacts, they experience pleasing feelings that are exclusively happy—like the gods replete with glory. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It's when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. … Touched by both hurtful and pleasing contacts, they experience both hurtful and pleasing feelings that are a mixture of pleasure and pain—like humans, some gods, and some beings in the underworld. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? It's the intention to give up dark deeds with dark results, bright deeds with bright results, and both dark and bright deeds with both dark and bright results.

These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.235

AN 4.235
Training Rules (1st)
Paṭhamasikkhāpadasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results;
bright deeds with bright results;
dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results; and neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

And what are the dark deeds with dark results? It’s when someone kills living creatures, steals, commits sexual misconduct, lies, and uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It’s when someone doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It’s when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? It’s the intention to give up dark deeds with dark results, bright deeds with bright results, and both dark and bright deeds with both dark and bright results. These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.236

AN 4.236
Training Rules (2nd)
Dutiyasikkhāpadasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results;
bright deeds with bright results;
dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results; and neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

And what are dark deeds with dark results? It's when someone murders their mother or father or a perfected one. They maliciously shed the blood of a Realized One. Or they cause a schism in the Saṅgha. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It’s when someone doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re content, kind-hearted, with right view. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It’s when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? It’s the intention to give up dark deeds with dark results, bright deeds with bright results, and both dark and bright deeds with both dark and bright results. These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.237

AN 4.237
The Noble Path
Ariyamaggasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight. What four?

There are dark deeds with dark results;
bright deeds with bright results;
dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results; and neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

And what are dark deeds with dark results? It’s when someone makes hurtful choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It’s when someone makes pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It’s when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.238

AN 4.238
Awakening Factors
Bojjhaṅgasutta

“Mendicants, I declare these four kinds of deeds, having realized them with my own insight….

And what are dark deeds with dark results? It’s when someone makes hurtful choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark deeds with dark results.

And what are bright deeds with bright results? It’s when someone makes pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called bright deeds with bright results.

And what are dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results? It’s when someone makes both hurtful and pleasing choices by way of body, speech, and mind. These are called dark and bright deeds with dark and bright results.

And what are neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds? The awakening factors of mindfulness, investigation of principles, energy, rapture, tranquility, immersion, and equanimity. These are called neither dark nor bright deeds with neither dark nor bright results, which lead to the ending of deeds.

These are the four kinds of deeds that I declare, having realized them with my own insight.”

AN 4.239

AN 4.239
Blameworthy
Sāvajjasutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? Blameworthy deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and blameworthy view. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? Blameless deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and blameless view. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.240

AN 4.240
Pleasing
Abyābajjhasutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? Hurtful deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and hurtful view. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? Pleasing deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and pleasing view. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.241

AN 4.241
Ascetics
Samaṇasutta

“‘Only here is there a first ascetic, here a second ascetic, here a third ascetic, and here a fourth ascetic. Other sects are empty of ascetics.’ This, mendicants, is how you should rightly roar your lion’s roar.

And who is the first ascetic? It’s a mendicant who—with the ending of three fetters—is a stream-enterer, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening. This is the first ascetic.

And who is the second ascetic? It’s a mendicant who—with the ending of three fetters, and the weakening of greed, hate, and delusion—is a once-returner. They come back to this world once only, then make an end of suffering. This is the second ascetic.

And who is the third ascetic? It’s a mendicant who—with the ending of the five lower fetters—is reborn spontaneously. They’re extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This is the third ascetic.

And who is the fourth ascetic? It’s a mendicant who realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is the fourth ascetic.

‘Only here is there a first ascetic, here a second ascetic, here a third ascetic, and here a fourth ascetic. Other sects are empty of ascetics.’ This, mendicants, is how you should rightly roar your lion’s roar.”

AN 4.242

AN 4.242
Benefits of Relying on a True Person
Sappurisānisaṁsasutta

“Mendicants, you can expect four benefits from relying on a true person. What four? Growth in noble ethics, immersion, wisdom, and freedom. You can expect these four benefits from relying on a true person.”

AN 4.243

AN 4.243
Schism in the Saṅgha
Saṁghabhedakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, "Well, Ānanda, has that disciplinary issue been settled yet?"

"How could it be, sir? Venerable Anuruddha's pupil Bāhiya remains entirely committed to creating a schism in the Saṅgha. But Anuruddha doesn't think to say a single word about it."

"But Ānanda, since when has Anuruddha been involved in disciplinary issues in the midst of the Saṅgha? Shouldn't you, together with Sāriputta and Moggallāna, settle all disciplinary issues that come up?

A bad monk sees four reasons to relish schism in the Saṅgha. What four? Take an unethical monk, of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner—though claiming to be one—rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved. He thinks: 'Suppose the monks know that I'm a bad monk … If they're in harmony, they'll expel me, but if they're divided they won't.' A bad monk sees this as the first reason to relish schism in the Saṅgha.

Furthermore, a bad monk has wrong view, he's attached to an extremist view. He thinks: 'Suppose the monks know that I have wrong view … If they're in harmony they'll expel me, but if they're divided they won't.' A bad monk sees this as the second reason to relish schism in the Saṅgha.

Furthermore, a bad monk has wrong livelihood and earns a living by wrong livelihood. He thinks: 'Suppose the monks know that I have wrong livelihood … If they're in harmony they'll expel me, but if they're divided they won't.' A bad monk sees this as the third reason to relish schism in the Saṅgha.

Furthermore, a bad monk desires material possessions, honor, and admiration. He thinks: 'Suppose the monks know that I desire material possessions, honor, and admiration. If they're in harmony they won't honor, respect, revere, or venerate me, but if they're divided they will.' A bad monk sees this as the fourth reason to relish schism in the Saṅgha.

A bad monk sees these four reasons to relish schism in the Saṅgha."

AN 4.244

AN 4.244
Perils of Offenses
Āpattibhayasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four perils of offenses. What four?

Suppose they were to arrest a bandit, a criminal and present him to the king, saying: ‘Your Majesty, this is a bandit, a criminal. May Your Majesty punish them!’ The king would say: ‘Go, my men, and tie this man’s arms tightly behind his back with a strong rope. Shave his head and march him from street to street and square to square to the beating of a harsh drum. Then take him out the south gate and there, to the south of the city, chop off his head.’ The king’s men would do as they were told. Then a bystander might think: ‘This man must have done a truly bad and reprehensible deed, a capital offense. There’s no way I’d ever do such a bad and reprehensible deed, a capital offense.’ In the same way, take any monk or nun who has set up such an acute perception of peril regarding expulsion offenses. It can be expected that if they haven’t committed an expulsion offense they won’t, and if they committed one they will deal with it properly.

Suppose a man was to put on a black cloth, mess up his hair, and put a club on his shoulder. Then he approaches a large crowd and says: ‘Sirs, I’ve done a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of clubbing. I submit to your pleasure.’ Then a bystander might think: ‘This man must have done a truly bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of clubbing. … There’s no way I’d ever do such a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of clubbing.’ In the same way, take any monk or nun who has set up such an acute perception of peril regarding suspension offenses. It can be expected that if they haven’t committed a suspension offense they won’t, and if they committed one they will deal with it properly.

Suppose a man was to put on a black cloth, mess up his hair, and put a sack of ashes on his shoulder. Then he approaches a large crowd and says: ‘Sirs, I’ve done a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of a sack of ashes. I submit to your pleasure.’ Then a bystander might think: ‘This man must have done a truly bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of a sack of ashes. … There’s no way I’d ever do such a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of a sack of ashes.’ In the same way, take any monk or nun who has set up such an acute perception of peril regarding confessable offenses. It can be expected that if they haven’t committed a confessable offense they won’t, and if they committed one they will deal with it properly.

Suppose a man was to put on a black cloth and mess up his hair. Then he approaches a large crowd and says: ‘Sirs, I’ve done a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of criticism. I submit to your pleasure.’ Then a bystander might think: ‘This man must have done a truly bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of criticism. … There’s no way I’d ever do such a bad and reprehensible deed, deserving of criticism.’ In the same way, take any monk or nun who has set up such an acute perception of peril regarding acknowledgable offenses. It can be expected that if they haven’t committed an acknowledgeable offense they won’t, and if they committed one they will deal with it properly.

These are the four perils of offenses.”

AN 4.245

AN 4.245
The Benefits of Training
Sikkhānisaṁsasutta

“Mendicants, this spiritual life is lived with training as its benefit, with wisdom as its overseer, with freedom as its core, and with mindfulness as its ruler.

And how is training its benefit? Firstly, I laid down for my disciples the training that deals with supplementary regulations in order to inspire confidence in those without it and to increase confidence in those who have it. They undertake whatever supplementary regulations I have laid down, keeping them unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred.

Furthermore, I laid down for my disciples the training that deals with the fundamentals of the spiritual life in order to rightly end suffering in every way. They undertake whatever training that deals with the fundamentals of the spiritual life I have laid down, keeping it unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred. That’s how training is its benefit.

And how is wisdom its overseer? I taught the Dhamma to my disciples in order to rightly end suffering in every way. They examine with wisdom any teachings I taught them. That’s how wisdom is its overseer.

And how is freedom its core? I taught the Dhamma to my disciples in order to rightly end suffering in every way. They experience through freedom any teachings I taught them. That’s how freedom is its core.

And how is mindfulness its ruler? Mindfulness is well established in oneself: ‘In this way I’ll fulfill the training dealing with supplementary regulations, or support with wisdom in every situation the training dealing with supplementary regulations I’ve already fulfilled.’ Mindfulness is well established in oneself: ‘In this way I’ll fulfill the training dealing with the fundamentals of the spiritual life, or support with wisdom in every situation the training dealing with the fundamentals of the spiritual life I’ve already fulfilled.’ Mindfulness is well established in oneself: ‘In this way I’ll examine with wisdom the teaching that I haven’t yet examined, or support with wisdom in every situation the teaching I’ve already examined.’ Mindfulness is well established in oneself: ‘In this way I’ll experience through freedom the teaching that I haven’t yet experienced, or support with wisdom in every situation the teaching I’ve already experienced.’ That’s how mindfulness is its ruler.

‘This spiritual life is lived with training as its benefit, with wisdom as its overseer, with freedom as its core, and with mindfulness as its ruler.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 4.246

AN 4.246
Lying Postures
Seyyāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these four ways of lying down. What four? The ways a corpse, a pleasure seeker, a lion, and a Realized One lie down.

And how does a corpse lie down? Corpses usually lie flat on their backs. This is called the way a corpse lies down.

And how does a pleasure seeker lie down? Pleasure seekers usually lie down on their left side. This is called the way a pleasure seeker lies down.

And how does a lion lie down? The lion, king of beasts, lies down on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other, with his tail tucked between his thighs. When he wakes, he lifts his front quarters and checks his hind quarters. If he sees that any part of his body is disordered or displaced, he is displeased. But if he sees that no part of his body is disordered or displaced, he is pleased. This is called the way a lion lies down.

And how does a Realized One lie down? It’s when a Realized One, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. This is called the way a Realized One lies down.

These are the four ways of lying down.”

AN 4.247

AN 4.247
Worthy of a Monument
Thūpārahasutta

“Mendicants, these four are worthy of a monument. What four? A Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha; an independent Buddha; a disciple of a Realized One; and a wheel-turning monarch. These four are worthy of a monument.”

AN 4.248

AN 4.248
The Growth of Wisdom
Paññāvuddhisutta

“Mendicants, these four things lead to the growth of wisdom. What four? Associating with true persons, listening to the true teaching, rational application of mind, and practicing in line with the teaching. These four things lead to the growth of wisdom.”

AN 4.249

AN 4.249
Very Helpful
Bahukārasutta

“Mendicants, these four things are very helpful to a human being. What four? Associating with true persons, listening to the true teaching, rational application of mind, and practicing in line with the teaching. These four things are very helpful to a human being.”

AN 4.250

AN 4.250
Expressions (1st)
Paṭhamavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four ignoble expressions. What four? Saying you’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, but you haven’t. These are the four ignoble expressions.”

AN 4.251

AN 4.251
Expressions (2nd)
Dutiyavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four noble expressions. What four? Saying you haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you haven’t. These are the four noble expressions.”

AN 4.252

AN 4.252
Expressions (3rd)
Tatiyavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four ignoble expressions. What four? Saying you haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you have. These are the four ignoble expressions.”

AN 4.253

AN 4.253
Expressions (4th)
Catutthavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four noble expressions. What four? Saying you’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you have. These are the four noble expressions.”

AN 4.254

AN 4.254
Insight
Abhiññāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these four things. What four? There are things that should be completely understood by direct knowledge. There are things that should be given up by direct knowledge. There are things that should be developed by direct knowledge. There are things that should be realized by direct knowledge.

And what are the things that should be completely understood by direct knowledge? The five grasping aggregates. These are called the things that should be completely understood by direct knowledge.

And what are the things that should be given up by direct knowledge? Ignorance and craving for continued existence. These are called the things that should be given up by direct knowledge.

And what are the things that should be developed by direct knowledge? Serenity and discernment. These are called the things that should be developed by direct knowledge.

And what are the things that should be realized by direct knowledge? Knowledge and freedom. These are called the things that should be realized by direct knowledge.

These are the four things.”

AN 4.255

AN 4.255
Searches
Pariyesanāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these four ignoble searches. What four? Someone liable to old age searches only for what grows old. Someone liable to sickness searches only for what gets sick. Someone liable to death searches only for what dies. Someone whose nature is defiled searches only for what is defiled. These are the four ignoble searches.

There are these four noble searches. What four? Someone who is liable to grow old, knowing the drawback in what grows old, searches for that which is free of old age, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke, extinguishment. Someone who is liable to get sick, knowing the drawback in what gets sick, searches for that which is free of sickness, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke, extinguishment. Someone who is liable to die, knowing the drawback in what dies, searches for that which is free of death, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke, extinguishment. Someone whose nature is defiled, knowing the drawback in what is defiled, searches for that which is free of defilement, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke, extinguishment. These are the four noble searches.”

AN 4.256

AN 4.256
Ways of Being Inclusive
Saṅgahavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are these four ways of being inclusive. What four? Giving, kindly words, taking care, and equality. These are the four ways of being inclusive.”

AN 4.257

AN 4.257
With Māluṅkyaputta
Mālukyaputtasutta

Then Venerable Māluṅkyaputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief. When I’ve heard it, I’ll live alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute.”

“Well now, Māluṅkyaputta, what are we to say to the young monks, when even an old man like you, elderly and senior, asks the Realized One for brief advice?”

“Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief! May the Holy One teach me the Dhamma in brief! Hopefully I can understand the meaning of what the Buddha says! Hopefully I can be an heir of the Buddha’s teaching!”

“Māluṅkyaputta, there are four things that give rise to craving in a mendicant. What four? For the sake of robes, almsfood, lodgings, or rebirth in this or that state. These are the four things that give rise to craving in a mendicant. That craving is given up by a mendicant, cut off at the root, made like a palm stump, obliterated, and unable to arise in the future. Then they’re called a mendicant who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

When Māluṅkyaputta had been given this advice by the Buddha, he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving. Then Māluṅkyaputta, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And Venerable Māluṅkyaputta became one of the perfected.

AN 4.258

AN 4.258
Families
Kulasutta

“Mendicants, when families don’t stay wealthy for long, it’s always for one or more of these four reasons. What four? They don’t look for what’s lost; they don’t fix old things; they eat and drink too much; or they put an unethical woman or man in charge. When families don’t stay wealthy for long, it’s always for one or more of these four reasons.

When families do stay wealthy for long, it’s always for one or more of these four reasons. What four? They look for what’s lost; they fix old things; they eat and drink in moderation; and they put an ethical woman or man in charge. When families do stay wealthy for long, it’s always for one or more of these four reasons.”

AN 4.259

AN 4.259
A Thoroughbred (1st)
Paṭhamaājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with four factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and considered a factor of kingship. What four? It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred is beautiful, strong, fast, and well-proportioned. A fine royal thoroughbred with these four factors is worthy of a king. …

In the same way, a mendicant with four qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What four? It’s when a mendicant is beautiful, strong, fast, and well proportioned.

And how is a mendicant beautiful? It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. That’s how a mendicant is beautiful.

And how is a mendicant strong? It’s when a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. That’s how a mendicant is strong.

And how is a mendicant fast? It’s when they truly understand: ‘This is suffering’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering’. That’s how a mendicant is fast.

And how is a mendicant well proportioned? It’s when a mendicant receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. That’s how a mendicant is well proportioned.

A mendicant with these four qualities … is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 4.260

AN 4.260
A Thoroughbred (2nd)
Dutiyaājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with four factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and considered a factor of kingship. What four? It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred is beautiful, strong, fast, and well-proportioned. A fine royal thoroughbred with these four factors is worthy of a king. …

In the same way, a mendicant with four qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What four? It’s when a mendicant is beautiful, strong, fast, and well proportioned.

And how is a mendicant beautiful? It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. That’s how a mendicant is beautiful.

And how is a mendicant strong? It’s when a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. That’s how a mendicant is strong.

And how is a mendicant fast? It’s when a mendicant realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. That’s how a mendicant is fast.

And how is a mendicant well proportioned? It’s when a mendicant receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. That’s how a mendicant is well proportioned.

A mendicant with these four qualities … is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 4.261

AN 4.261
Powers
Balasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four powers. What four? The powers of energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. These are the four powers.”

AN 4.262

AN 4.262
Wilderness
Araññasutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has four qualities they’re not ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. What four? They have sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts; or they’re witless, dull, and stupid. When a mendicant has these four qualities they’re not ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.

When a mendicant has four qualities they’re ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. What four? They have thoughts of renunciation, good will, and harmlessness; and they’re wise, bright, and clever. When a mendicant has these four qualities they’re ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.”

AN 4.263

AN 4.263
Deeds
Kammasutta

“When a foolish, incompetent untrue person has four qualities they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness. What four? Blameworthy deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and blameworthy view. When a foolish, incompetent untrue person has these four qualities they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness.

When an astute, competent true person has four qualities they keep themselves healthy and whole. They don’t deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much merit. What four? Blameless deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, and blameless view. When an astute, competent true person has these four qualities they keep themselves healthy and whole. They don’t deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much merit.”

AN 4.264

AN 4.264
Killing Living Creatures
Pāṇātipātīsutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? They themselves kill living creatures; they encourage others to kill living creatures; they approve of killing living creatures; and they praise killing living creatures. Someone with these four qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. What four? They don’t themselves kill living creatures; they encourage others to not kill living creatures; they approve of not killing living creatures; and they praise not killing living creatures. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.265

AN 4.265
Stealing
Adinnādāyīsutta

“Mendicants, someone with four qualities is cast down to hell. What four? They themselves steal … Someone with four qualities is raised up to heaven. …

They don’t themselves steal … ”

AN 4.266

AN 4.266
Misconduct
Micchācārīsutta

"… They themselves commit sexual misconduct …

They themselves don't commit sexual misconduct …"

AN 4.267

AN 4.267
Lying Musāvādīsutta

“… They themselves lie …

… They themselves don’t lie …”

AN 4.268

AN 4.268
Divisive Speech
Pisuṇavācāsutta

"… They themselves speak divisively …

… They themselves don't speak divisively …"

AN 4.269

AN 4.269
Harsh Speech
Pharusavācāsutta

“… They themselves speak harshly …

… They themselves don’t speak harshly …”

AN 4.270

AN 4.270
Talking Nonsense
Samphappalāpasutta

“… They themselves talk nonsense …

… They themselves don’t talk nonsense …”

AN 4.271

AN 4.271
Covetousness
Abhijjhālusutta

"… They themselves are covetous …

… They themselves are content …"

AN 4.272

AN 4.272
Ill Will
Byāpannacittasutta

“… They themselves have ill will …

… They themselves have good will …”

AN 4.273

AN 4.273
Wrong View
Micchādiṭṭhisutta

“… They themselves have wrong view …

They themselves have right view; they encourage others to have right view; they approve of right view; and they praise right view. Someone with these four qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 4.274

AN 4.274
Mindfulness Meditation
Satipaṭṭhānasutta

“For insight into greed, four things should be developed. What four? Firstly, a mendicant meditates by observing an aspect of the body—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. They meditate observing an aspect of feelings … mind … principles—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. For insight into greed, these four things should be developed.”

AN 4.275

AN 4.275
Right Efforts
Sammappadhānasutta

“For insight into greed, four things should be developed. What four? Firstly, a mendicant generates enthusiasm, tries, makes an effort, exerts the mind, and strives so that bad, unskillful qualities don’t arise. …so that unskillful qualities that have arisen are given up … so that skillful qualities arise … so that skillful qualities that have arisen remain, are not lost, but increase, mature, and are fulfilled by development. For insight into greed, these four things should be developed.”

AN 4.276

AN 4.276
Bases of Psychic Power
Iddhipādasutta

“For insight into greed, four things should be developed. What four? It’s when a mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to enthusiasm, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to energy … mental development … inquiry, and active effort. For insight into greed, these four things should be developed.”

AN 4.277-303

AN 4.277–303
Complete Understanding, Etc.
Pariññādisutta

“For the complete understanding … finishing … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of greed, four things should be developed.”

AN 4.304-783

AN 4.304–783
Insight into Hate, Etc.
Dosaabhiññādisutta

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceit … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … negligence … for insight … complete understanding … finishing … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go … four things should be developed.”

The Book of the Fours is finished.

AN 5.1

AN 5.1
In Brief
Saṁkhittasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, there are these five powers of a trainee. What five? The powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom. These are the five powers of a trainee.

So you should train like this: 'We will have the trainee's powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom.' That's how you should train."

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

AN 5.2

AN 5.2
In Detail
Vitthatasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers of a trainee. What five? The powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom.

And what is the power of faith? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called the power of faith.

And what is the power of conscience? It’s when a noble disciple has a conscience. They’re conscientious about bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and conscientious about having any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the power of conscience.

And what is the power of prudence? It’s when a noble disciple is prudent. They’re prudent when it comes to bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and prudent when it comes to acquiring any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the power of prudence.

And what is the power of energy? It’s when a noble disciple lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is called the power of energy.

And what is the power of wisdom? It’s when a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called the power of wisdom. These are the five powers of a trainee.

So you should train like this: ‘We will have the trainee’s powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 5.3

AN 5.3
Suffering
Dukkhasutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has five qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithless, shameless, imprudent, lazy, and witless. When a mendicant has these five qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth.

When a mendicant has five qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, or fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, conscientious, prudent, energetic, and wise. When a mendicant has these five qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, or fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth.”

AN 5.4

AN 5.4
Cast Down
Yathābhatasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithless, shameless, imprudent, lazy, and witless. A mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, conscientious, prudent, energetic, and wise. A mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.5

AN 5.5
Disrobing
Sikkhāsutta

“Mendicants, any monk or nun who rejects the training and returns to a lesser life deserves rebuke and criticism on five legitimate grounds in the present life. What five? ‘You had no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, or wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ Any monk or nun who rejects the training and returns to a lesser life deserves rebuke and criticism on these five legitimate grounds in the present life.

Any monk or nun who lives the full and pure spiritual life in pain and sadness, weeping, with tearful face, deserves praise on five legitimate grounds in the present life. What five? ‘You had faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ Any monk or nun who lives the full and pure spiritual life in pain and sadness, weeping, with tearful face, deserves praise on these five legitimate grounds in the present life.”

AN 5.6

AN 5.6
Becoming Samāpattisutta

“Mendicants, you don’t become unskillful as long as faith is established in skillful qualities. But when faith vanishes and faithlessness takes over, you become unskillful.

You don’t become unskillful as long as conscience … prudence … energy … wisdom is established in skillful qualities.

But when wisdom vanishes and witlessness takes over, you become unskillful.”

AN 5.7

AN 5.7
Sensual Pleasures
Kāmasutta

“Mendicants, sentient beings are mostly charmed by sensual pleasures. When a gentleman has abandoned the scythe and flail and gone forth from the lay life to homelessness, they’re qualified to be called ‘a faithful renunciate from a good family’. Why is that? Because a youth can get sensual pleasures of this kind or that. Now, all sensual pleasures are just reckoned as ‘sensual pleasures’, regardless of whether they’re inferior, average, or superior.

Suppose there was a little baby boy who, because of his nursemaid’s negligence, puts a stick or stone in his mouth. The nursemaid would very quickly notice and try to take it out. If that didn’t work, she’d cradle his head with her left hand, and take it out using a hooked finger of her right hand, even if it drew blood. Why is that? I admit she’d know, ‘This will distress the child, there’s no denying.’ Still, it should be done by a nursemaid who wants what’s best for him, out of kindness and compassion. And when the boy has grown up and has enough sense, his nursemaid would not worry about him, thinking: ‘The boy can look after himself. He won’t be negligent.’

In the same way, I still need to look after a mendicant who hasn’t finished developing faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities. But when a mendicant has finished developing faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities, I need not be concerned, thinking: ‘They can look after themselves. They won’t be negligent.’”

AN 5.8

AN 5.8
Failure
Cavanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching. What five? A mendicant who is faithless … shameless … imprudent … lazy … witless fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching. A mendicant with these five qualities fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching.

A mendicant with five qualities doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching. What five? A mendicant who is faithful … conscientious … prudent … energetic … wise doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching. A mendicant with these five qualities doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching.”

AN 5.9

AN 5.9
Disrespect (1st)
Paṭhamaagāravasutta

“Mendicants, a disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with five qualities fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching. What five? A disrespectful and irreverent mendicant who is faithless … shameless … imprudent … lazy … witless fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching. A disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with these five qualities fails, and doesn’t establish themselves in the true teaching.

A respectful and reverent mendicant with five qualities doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching. What five? A respectful and reverent mendicant who is faithful … conscientious … prudent … energetic … wise doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching. A respectful and reverent mendicant with these five qualities doesn’t fail, and establishes themselves in the true teaching.”

AN 5.10

AN 5.10
Disrespect (2nd)
Dutiyaagāravasutta

“Mendicants, a disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with five qualities can’t achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training. What five? A disrespectful and irreverent mendicant who is faithless … shameless … imprudent … lazy … witless can’t achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training. A disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with these five qualities can’t achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

A respectful and reverent mendicant with five qualities can achieve growth, improvement, and maturity in this teaching and training. What five? A respectful and reverent mendicant who is faithful … conscientious … prudent … energetic … wise can achieve growth, improvement, and maturity in this teaching and training. A respectful and reverent mendicant with these five qualities can achieve growth, improvement, and maturity in this teaching and training.”

AN 5.11

AN 5.11
Not Learned From Anyone Else
Ananussutasutta

“I claim to have attained perfection and consummation of insight regarding principles not learned before from another. The Realized One has five powers of a Realized One. With these he claims the bull’s place, roars his lion’s roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel. What five? The powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom. These are the five powers of a Realized One. With these he claims the bull’s place, roars his lion’s roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel.”

AN 5.12

AN 5.12
Peak
Kūṭasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers of a trainee. What five? The powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom. These are the five powers of a trainee. Of these five powers of a trainee, the power of wisdom is the chief. It holds and binds everything together.

It’s like a bungalow. The roof-peak is the chief point, which holds and binds everything together. In the same way, of these five powers of a trainee, the power of wisdom is the chief. It holds and binds everything together.

So you should train like this: ‘We will have the trainee’s powers of faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 5.13

AN 5.13
In Brief
Saṁkhittasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers. What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. These are the five powers.”

AN 5.14

AN 5.14
In Detail
Vitthatasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers. What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom.

And what is the power of faith? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called the power of faith.

And what is the power of energy? It’s when a noble disciple lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is called the power of energy.

And what is the power of mindfulness? It’s when a noble disciple is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. This is called the power of mindfulness.

And what is the power of immersion? It’s when a noble disciple, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. As the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, they enter and remain in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. And with the fading away of rapture, they enter and remain in the third absorption, where they meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, ‘Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.’ Giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, they enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. This is called the power of immersion.

And what is the power of wisdom? It’s when a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called the power of wisdom.

These are the five powers.”

AN 5.15

AN 5.15
Should Be Seen
Daṭṭhabbasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers. What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom.

And where should the power of faith be seen? In the four factors of stream-entry.

And where should the power of energy be seen? In the four right efforts.

And where should the power of mindfulness be seen? In the four kinds of mindfulness meditation.

And where should the power of immersion be seen? In the four absorptions.

And where should the power of wisdom be seen? In the four noble truths.

These are the five powers.”

AN 5.16

AN 5.16
The Peak, Again
Punakūṭasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers. What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. These are the five powers. Of these five powers, the power of wisdom is the chief. It holds and binds everything together. It’s like a bungalow. The roof-peak is the chief point, which holds and binds everything together. In the same way, of these five powers, the power of wisdom is the chief. It holds and binds everything together.”

AN 5.17

AN 5.17
One's Own Welfare
Paṭhamahitasutta

"Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is practicing for their own welfare, but not that of others. What five? It's when a mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. But they don't encourage others in these qualities. A mendicant with these five qualities is practicing for their own welfare, but not that of others."

AN 5.18

AN 5.18
Welfare of Others (2nd)
Dutiyahitasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is practicing for the welfare of others, but not their own. What five? It’s when a mendicant is not personally accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, or the knowledge and vision of freedom. But they encourage others in these qualities. A mendicant with these five qualities is practicing for the welfare of others, but not their own.”

AN 5.19

AN 5.19
The Welfare of Neither
Tatiyahitasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is practicing neither for their own welfare, nor that of others. What five? It’s when a mendicant is not personally accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, or the knowledge and vision of freedom. Nor do they encourage others in these qualities. A mendicant with these five qualities is practicing neither for their own welfare, nor that of others.”

AN 5.20

AN 5.20
The Welfare of Both
Catutthahitasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is practicing for both their own welfare and that of others. What five? It’s when a mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. And they encourage others in these qualities. A mendicant with these five qualities is practicing both for their own welfare and that of others.”

AN 5.21

AN 5.21
Disrespect (1st)
Paṭhamaagāravasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with incompatible lifestyle to fulfill the practice dealing with supplementary regulations regarding their spiritual companions. Without fulfilling the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s impossible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Without fulfilling the practice of a trainee, it’s impossible to fulfill ethics. Without fulfilling ethics, it’s impossible to fulfill right view. Without fulfilling right view, it’s impossible to fulfill right immersion.

But it is quite possible for a respectful and reverent mendicant with compatible lifestyle to fulfill the practice dealing with supplementary regulations regarding their spiritual companions. Having fulfilled the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s possible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Having fulfilled the practice of a trainee, it’s possible to fulfill ethics. Having fulfilled ethics, it’s possible to fulfill right view. Having fulfilled right view, it’s possible to fulfill right immersion.”

AN 5.22

AN 5.22
Disrespect (2nd)
Dutiyaagāravasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a disrespectful and irreverent mendicant with incompatible lifestyle to fulfill the practice dealing with supplementary regulations regarding their spiritual companions. Without fulfilling the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s impossible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Without fulfilling the practice of a trainee, it’s impossible to fulfill the entire spectrum of ethics. Without fulfilling the entire spectrum of ethics, it’s impossible to fulfill the entire spectrum of immersion. Without fulfilling the entire spectrum of immersion, it’s impossible to fulfill the entire spectrum of wisdom.

But it is quite possible for a respectful and reverent mendicant with compatible lifestyle to fulfill the practice dealing with supplementary regulations regarding their spiritual companions. Having fulfilled the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s possible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Having fulfilled the practice of a trainee, it’s possible to fulfill the entire spectrum of ethics. Having fulfilled the entire spectrum of ethics, it’s possible to fulfill the entire spectrum of immersion. Having fulfilled the entire spectrum of immersion, it’s possible to fulfill the entire spectrum of wisdom.”

AN 5.23

AN 5.23
Corruptions
Upakkilesasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five corruptions of gold. When gold is corrupted by these it’s not pliable, workable, or radiant, but is brittle and not completely ready for working. What five? Iron, copper, tin, lead, and silver. When gold is corrupted by these five corruptions it’s not pliable, workable, or radiant, but is brittle and not completely ready for working.

But when gold is free of these five corruptions it becomes pliable, workable, and radiant, not brittle, and ready to be worked. Then the goldsmith can successfully create any kind of ornament they want, whether a ring, earrings, a necklace, or a golden garland.

In the same way, there are these five corruptions of the mind. When the mind is corrupted by these it’s not pliable, workable, or radiant. It’s brittle, and not rightly immersed in samādhi for the ending of defilements. What five? Sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. These are the five corruptions of the mind. When the mind is corrupted by these it’s not pliable, workable, or radiant. It’s brittle, and not rightly immersed in samādhi for the ending of defilements.

But when the mind is free of these five corruptions it’s pliable, workable, and radiant. It’s not brittle, and is rightly immersed in samādhi for the ending of defilements. You become capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which you extend the mind, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I wield the many kinds of psychic power—multiplying myself and becoming one again; appearing and disappearing; going unimpeded through a wall, a rampart, or a mountain as if through space; diving in and out of the earth as if it were water; walking on water as if it were earth; flying cross-legged through the sky like a bird; touching and stroking with the hand the sun and moon, so mighty and powerful, controlling the body as far as the Brahmā realm.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, may I hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with my mind. May I understand mind with greed as “mind with greed”, and mind without greed as “mind without greed”; mind with hate as “mind with hate”, and mind without hate as “mind without hate”; mind with delusion as “mind with delusion”, and mind without delusion as “mind without delusion”; constricted mind as “constricted mind”, and scattered mind as “scattered mind”; expansive mind as “expansive mind”, and unexpansive mind as “unexpansive mind”; mind that is not supreme as “mind that is not supreme”, and mind that is supreme as “mind that is supreme”; mind immersed in samādhi as “mind immersed in samādhi”, and mind not immersed in samādhi as “mind not immersed in samādhi”; freed mind as “freed mind”, and unfreed mind as “unfreed mind”.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I recollect many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. May I remember: “There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.” May I recollect my many past lives, with features and details.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, may I see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place—and understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds: “These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.” And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, may I see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. And may I understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with my own insight due to the ending of defilements.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.”

AN 5.24

AN 5.24
Unethical
Dussīlasutta

“Mendicants, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would all grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.”

AN 5.25

AN 5.25
Supported
Anuggahitasutta

“Mendicants, when right view is supported by five factors it has freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as its fruit and benefit.

What five? It’s when right view is supported by ethics, learning, discussion, serenity, and discernment. When right view is supported by these five factors it has freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as its fruit and benefit.”

AN 5.26

AN 5.26
Opportunities for Freedom
Vimuttāyatanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five opportunities for freedom. If a mendicant stays diligent, keen, and resolute at these times, their mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. What five?

Firstly, the Teacher or a respected spiritual companion teaches Dhamma to a mendicant. That mendicant feels inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma, no matter how the Teacher or a respected spiritual companion teaches it. Feeling inspired, joy springs up. Being joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, one feels bliss. And when blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is the first opportunity for freedom. If a mendicant stays diligent, keen, and resolute at this time, their mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Furthermore, it may be that neither the Teacher nor a respected spiritual companion teaches Dhamma to a mendicant. But the mendicant teaches Dhamma in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. That mendicant feels inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma, no matter how they teach it in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. Feeling inspired, joy springs up. Being joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, one feels bliss. And when blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is the second opportunity for freedom. …

Furthermore, it may be that neither the Teacher nor … the mendicant teaches Dhamma. But the mendicant recites the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. That mendicant feels inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma, no matter how they recite it in detail as they learned and memorized it. Feeling inspired, joy springs up. Being joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, one feels bliss. And when blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is the third opportunity for freedom. …

Furthermore, it may be that neither the Teacher nor … the mendicant teaches Dhamma … nor does the mendicant recite the teaching. But the mendicant thinks about and considers the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. That mendicant feels inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma, no matter how they think about and consider it in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. Feeling inspired, joy springs up. Being joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, one feels bliss. And when blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is the fourth opportunity for freedom. …

Furthermore, it may be that neither the Teacher nor … the mendicant teaches Dhamma … nor does the mendicant recite the teaching … or think about it. But a meditation subject as a foundation of immersion is properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom. That mendicant feels inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma, no matter how a meditation subject as a foundation of immersion is properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom. Feeling inspired, joy springs up. Being joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, one feels bliss. And when blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is the fifth opportunity for freedom. …

These are the five opportunities for freedom. If a mendicant stays diligent, keen, and resolute at these times, their mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

AN 5.27

AN 5.27
Immersion
Samādhisutta

“Mendicants, develop limitless immersion, alert and mindful. When you develop limitless immersion, alert and mindful, five knowledges arise for you personally. What five?

‘This immersion is blissful now, and results in bliss in the future.’ …

‘This immersion is noble and not of the flesh.’ …

‘This immersion is not cultivated by sinners.’ …

‘This immersion is peaceful and sublime and tranquil and unified, not held in place by forceful suppression.’ …

‘I mindfully enter into and emerge from this immersion.’ …

Develop limitless immersion, alert and mindful. When you develop limitless immersion, alert and mindful, these five knowledges arise for you personally.”

AN 5.28

AN 5.28
With Five Factors
Pañcaṅgikasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you how to develop noble right immersion with five factors. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And how do you develop noble right immersion with five factors?

Firstly, a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption. It has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. They drench, steep, fill, and spread their body with rapture and bliss born of seclusion. There’s no part of the body that’s not spread with rapture and bliss born of seclusion. It’s like when a deft bathroom attendant or their apprentice pours bath powder into a bronze dish, sprinkling it little by little with water. They knead it until the ball of bath powder is soaked and saturated with moisture, spread through inside and out; yet no moisture oozes out. In the same way, a mendicant drenches, steeps, fills, and spreads their body with rapture and bliss born of seclusion. There’s no part of the body that’s not spread with rapture and bliss born of seclusion. This is the first way to develop noble right immersion with five factors.

Furthermore, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, a mendicant enters and remains in the second absorption. It has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. They drench, steep, fill, and spread their body with rapture and bliss born of immersion. There’s no part of the body that’s not spread with rapture and bliss born of immersion. It’s like a deep lake fed by spring water. There’s no inlet to the east, west, north, or south, and no rainfall to replenish it from time to time. But the stream of cool water welling up in the lake drenches, steeps, fills, and spreads throughout the lake. There’s no part of the lake that’s not spread through with cool water. In the same way, a mendicant drenches, steeps, fills, and spreads their body with rapture and bliss born of immersion. There’s no part of the body that’s not spread with rapture and bliss born of immersion. This is the second way to develop noble right immersion with five factors.

Furthermore, with the fading away of rapture, a mendicant enters and remains in the third absorption. They meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, ‘Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.’ They drench, steep, fill, and spread their body with bliss free of rapture. There’s no part of the body that’s not spread with bliss free of rapture. It’s like a pool with blue water lilies, or pink or white lotuses. Some of them sprout and grow in the water without rising above it, thriving underwater. From the tip to the root they’re drenched, steeped, filled, and soaked with cool water. There's no part of them that's not spread through with cool water. In the same way, a mendicant drenches, steeps, fills, and spreads their body with bliss free of rapture. There's no part of the body that's not spread with bliss free of rapture. This is the third way to develop noble right immersion with five factors.

Furthermore, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, a mendicant enters and remains in the fourth absorption. It is without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. They sit spreading their body through with pure bright mind. There's no part of the body that's not spread with pure bright mind. It's like someone sitting wrapped from head to foot with white cloth. There's no part of the body that's not spread over with white cloth. In the same way, they sit spreading their body through with pure bright mind. There's no part of the body that's not spread with pure bright mind. This is the fourth way to develop noble right immersion with five factors.

Furthermore, the meditation that is a foundation for reviewing is properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom by a mendicant. It's like when someone views someone else. Someone standing might view someone sitting, or someone sitting might view someone lying down. In the same way, the meditation that is a foundation for reviewing is properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom by a mendicant. This is the fifth way to develop noble right immersion with five factors.

When the noble right immersion with five factors is cultivated in this way, a mendicant becomes capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which they extend the mind, in each and every case.

Suppose a water jar was placed on a stand, full to the brim so a crow could drink from it. If a strong man was to tip it any which way, would water pour out?"

"Yes, sir."

"In the same way, when noble right immersion with five factors is cultivated in this way, a mendicant becomes capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which they extend the mind, in each and every case.

Suppose there was a square, walled lotus pond on level ground, full to the brim so a crow could drink from it. If a strong man was to open the wall on any side, would water pour out?"

"Yes, sir."

"In the same way, when noble right immersion with five factors is cultivated in this way, a mendicant becomes capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which they extend the mind, in each and every case.

Suppose a chariot stood harnessed to thoroughbreds at a level crossroads, with a goad ready. Then a deft horse trainer, a master charioteer, might mount the chariot, taking the reins in his right hand and goad in the left. He'd drive out and back wherever he wishes, whenever he wishes. In the same way, when noble right immersion with five factors is cultivated in this way, a mendicant becomes capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which they extend the mind, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I wield the many kinds of psychic power: multiplying myself and becoming one again … controlling the body as far as the Brahmā realm.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, may I hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with my mind. May I understand mind with greed as “mind with greed”, and mind without greed as “mind without greed”; mind with hate as “mind with hate”, and mind without hate as “mind without hate”; mind with delusion as “mind with delusion”, and mind without delusion as “mind without delusion”; constricted mind as “constricted mind”, and scattered mind as “scattered mind”; expansive mind as “expansive mind”, and unexpansive mind as “unexpansive mind”; mind that is not supreme as “mind that is not supreme”, and mind that is supreme as “mind that is supreme”; mind immersed in samādhi as “mind immersed in samādhi”, and mind not immersed in samādhi as “mind not immersed in samādhi”; freed mind as “freed mind”, and unfreed mind as “unfreed mind”.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I recollect many kinds of past lives, with features and details.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, may I see sentient beings passing away and being reborn according to their deeds.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If you wish: ‘May I realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with my own insight due to the ending of defilements.’ You’re capable of realizing it, in each and every case.”

AN 5.29

AN 5.29
Walking Meditation
Caṅkamasutta

“Mendicants, there are five benefits of walking meditation. What five? You get fit for traveling, fit for striving in meditation, and healthy. What’s eaten, drunk, chewed, and tasted is properly digested. And immersion gained while walking lasts long. These are the five benefits of walking meditation.”

AN 5.30

AN 5.30
With Nāgita
Nāgitasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a village of the Kosalan brahmins named Icchānaṅgala. He stayed in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. The brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala heard:

“It seems the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—has arrived at Icchānaṅgala. He is staying in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. He has this good reputation: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ He has realized with his own insight this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—and he makes it known to others. He teaches Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. It’s good to see such perfected ones.”

Then, when the night had passed, they took many fresh and cooked foods and went to the forest near Icchānaṅgala, where they stood outside the gates making a dreadful racket.

Now, at that time Venerable Nāgita was the Buddha’s attendant. Then the Buddha said to Nāgita, “Nāgita, who’s making that dreadful racket? You’d think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!”

“Sir, it’s these brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala. They’ve brought many fresh and cooked foods, and they’re standing outside the gates wanting to offer it specially to the Buddha and the mendicant Saṅgha.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.”

“Sir, may the Blessed One please relent now! May the Holy One relent! Now is the time for the Buddha to relent. Wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. It’s like when it rains heavily and the water flows downhill. In the same way, wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. Why is that? Because of the Buddha’s ethics and wisdom.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.

What you eat, drink, chew, and taste ends up as excrement and urine. This is its outcome.

When loved ones decay and perish, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress arise. This is its outcome.

When you pursue meditation on the feature of ugliness, revulsion at the feature of beauty becomes stabilized. This is its outcome.

When you meditate observing impermanence in the six fields of contact, revulsion at contact becomes stabilized. This is its outcome.

When you meditate observing rise and fall in the five grasping aggregates, revulsion at grasping becomes stabilized. This is its outcome.”

AN 5.31

AN 5.31
With Sumanā
Sumanasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Princess Sumanā, escorted by five hundred chariots and five hundred royal maidens, went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, suppose there were two disciples equal in faith, ethics, and wisdom. One is a giver, one is not. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. When they have become gods, would there be any distinction or difference between them?"

"There would be, Sumanā," said the Buddha.

"As a god, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in five respects: divine lifespan, beauty, happiness, fame, and sovereignty. As a god, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in these five respects."

"But sir, if they pass away from there and come back to this state of existence as human beings, would there still be any distinction or difference between them?"

"There would be, Sumanā," said the Buddha.

"As a human being, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in five respects: human lifespan, beauty, happiness, fame, and sovereignty. As a human being, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in these five respects."

"But sir, if they both go forth from the lay life to homelessness, would there still be any distinction or difference between them?"

"There would be, Sumanā," said the Buddha.

"As a renunciate, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in five respects. They'd usually use only what they've been invited to accept—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—rarely using them without invitation. When living with other spiritual practitioners, they usually treat them agreeably by way of body, speech, and mind, rarely disagreeably. As a renunciate, the one who was a giver would surpass the other in these five respects."

"But sir, if they both attain perfection, as perfected ones would there still be any distinction or difference between them?"

“In that case, I say there is no difference between the freedom of one and the freedom of the other.”

“It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! This is quite enough to justify giving gifts and making merit. For merit is helpful for those who have become gods, human beings, and renunciates.”

“That’s so true, Sumanā. It’s quite enough to justify giving gifts and making merit. For merit is helpful for those who have become gods, human beings, and renunciates.”

That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

“The moon so immaculate, journeying across the dimension of space; outshines with its radiance all the world’s stars.

So too, a faithful individual, perfect in ethics, outshines with their generosity all the world’s stingy people.

The thundering rain cloud, its hundred peaks wreathed in lightning, pours down over the rich earth, soaking the uplands and valleys.

Even so, an astute person accomplished in vision, a disciple of the fully awakened Buddha, surpasses a stingy person in five respects:

long life and fame, beauty and happiness. Lavished with riches, they depart to rejoice in heaven.”

AN 5.32

AN 5.32
With Cundī
Cundīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Then Princess Cundī, escorted by five hundred chariots and five hundred royal maidens, went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, my brother, Prince Cunda, says this: 'Take a woman or man who goes for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. Only then do they get reborn in a good place, not a bad place, when their body breaks up, after death.' And so I ask the Buddha: Sir, what kind of teacher should you have confidence in so as to be reborn in a good place, not a bad place, when the body breaks up, after death? Sir, what kind of teaching should you have confidence in so as to be reborn in a good place, not a bad place, when the body breaks up, after death? Sir, what kind of Saṅgha should you have confidence in so as to be reborn in a good place, not a bad place, when the body breaks up, after death? Sir, what kind of ethics should you fulfill so as to be reborn in a good place, not a bad place, when the body breaks up, after death?"

"Cundī, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, is said to be the best of all sentient beings—be they footless, with two feet, four feet, or many feet; with form or formless; with perception or without perception or with neither perception nor non-perception. Those who have confidence in the Buddha have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

The noble eightfold path is said to be the best of all conditioned things. Those who have confidence in the noble eightfold path have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

Fading away is said to be the best of all things whether conditioned or unconditioned. That is, the quelling of vanity, the removing of thirst, the uprooting of clinging, the breaking of the round, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment. Those who have confidence in the teaching of fading away have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

The Saṅgha of the Realized One's disciples is said to be the best of all communities and groups. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha's disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. Those who have confidence in the Saṅgha have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

The ethical conduct loved by the noble ones is said to be the best of all ethics. It is unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. Those who fulfill the ethics loved by the noble ones fulfill the best. Fulfilling the best, the result is the best.

For those who, knowing the best teaching, base their confidence on the best—confident in the best Awakened One, supremely worthy of a religious donation;

confident in the best teaching, the bliss of fading and stilling; confident in the best Saṅgha, the supreme field of merit—giving gifts to the best, the best of merit grows: the best lifespan, beauty, fame, reputation, happiness, and strength.

An intelligent person gives to the best, settled on the best teaching. When they become a god or human, they rejoice at reaching the best.”

AN 5.33

AN 5.33
With Uggaha
Uggahasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Bhaddiya, in Jātiyā Wood.

Then Uggaha, Meṇḍaka's grandson, went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, may the Buddha please accept tomorrow's meal from me, together with three other monks." The Buddha consented with silence. Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, Uggaha got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

Then when the night had passed, the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to Uggaha's home, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then Uggaha served and satisfied the Buddha with his own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods.

When the Buddha had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, Uggaha sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, these girls of mine will be going to their husbands' families. May the Buddha please advise and instruct them. It will be for their lasting welfare and happiness."

Then the Buddha said to those girls:

"So, girls, you should train like this: 'Our parents will give us to a husband wanting what's best, out of kindness and compassion. We will get up before him and go to bed after him, and be obliging, behaving nicely and speaking politely.' That's how you should train.

So, girls, you should train like this: 'Those our husband respects—mother and father, ascetics and brahmins—we will honor, respect, revere, and venerate, and serve with a seat and a drink when they come as guests.' That's how you should train.

So, girls, you should train like this: 'We will be deft and tireless in doing domestic duties for our husband, such as knitting and sewing. We will have an understanding of how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work.' That's how you should train.

So, girls, you should train like this: 'We will know what work our husband's domestic bondservants, servants, and workers have completed, and what they've left incomplete. We will know who is sick, and who is fit or unwell. We will distribute to each a fair portion of fresh and cooked foods.' That's how you should train.

So, girls, you should train like this: 'We will ensure that any income our husbands earn is guarded and protected, whether money, grain, silver, or gold. We will not overspend, steal, waste, or lose it.' That's how you should train. When they have these five qualities, females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host.

She’d never look down on her husband, who’s always eager to work hard, always looking after her, and bringing whatever she wants.

And a good woman never scolds her husband with jealous words. Being astute, she reveres those respected by her husband.

She gets up early, works tirelessly, and manages the domestic help. She’s lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

A lady who fulfills these duties according to her husband’s desire, is reborn among the gods called ‘Lovable’.”

AN 5.34

AN 5.34
With General Sīha
Sīhasenāpatisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Then General Sīha went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and asked him, "Sir, can you point out a fruit of giving that's apparent in the present life?"

"I can, Sīha," said the Buddha.

"A giver, a donor is dear and beloved to many people. This is a fruit of giving that's apparent in the present life.

Furthermore, true persons associate with a giver. This is another fruit of giving that's apparent in the present life.

Furthermore, a giver gains a good reputation. This is another fruit of giving that's apparent in the present life.

Furthermore, a giver enters any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it's an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. This is another fruit of giving that's apparent in the present life.

Furthermore, when a giver's body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. This is a fruit of giving to do with lives to come."

When he said this, General Sīha said to the Buddha, "When it comes to those four fruits of giving that are apparent in the present life, I don't have to rely on faith in the Buddha, for I know them too. I'm a giver, a donor, and am dear and beloved to many people. I'm a giver, and true persons associate with me. I'm a giver, and I have this good reputation: 'General Sīha gives, serves, and attends on the Saṅgha.' I'm a giver, and I enter any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it's an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. When it comes to these four fruits of giving that are apparent in the present life, I don't have to rely on faith in the Buddha, for I know them too. But when the Buddha says: 'When a giver's body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.' I don't know this, so I have to rely on faith in the Buddha."

"That's so true, Sīha! That's so true! When a giver's body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

Giving, you're loved and befriended by many people. You get a good reputation, and your fame grows. A generous man enters an assembly bold and assured.

So an astute person, seeking happiness, would give gifts, having driven out the stain of stinginess. They live long in the heaven of the Three and Thirty, enjoying the company of the gods.

Having taken the opportunity to do good, when they pass from here they wander radiant in the Garden of Delight. There they delight, rejoice, and enjoy themselves, provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. Having practiced the word of the unattached, the poised, disciples of the Holy One rejoice in heaven.”

AN 5.35

AN 5.35
The Benefits of Giving
Dānānisaṁsasutta

“Mendicants, there are five benefits of giving. What five? A giver, a donor is dear and beloved by many people. True persons associate with them. They get a good reputation. They don’t neglect a layperson’s duties. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits of giving.

Giving, one is loved, and follows the way of the good. The good, disciplined spiritual practitioners associate with you.

They teach you the Dhamma that dispels all suffering. Having understood this teaching, the undefiled become fully extinguished.”

AN 5.36

AN 5.36
Timely Gifts
Kāladānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five timely gifts. What five? A gift to a visitor. A gift to someone setting out on a journey. A gift to someone who is sick. A gift at a time of famine. Presenting the freshly harvested grains and fruits first to those who are ethical. These are the five timely gifts.

The wise give at the right time, being bountiful and rid of stinginess. A religious donation at the right time to the noble ones, upright and poised, given with a clear and confident mind, is indeed abundant. Those who rejoice at that, or do other services, don’t miss out on the offering; they too have a share in the merit.

So you should give without holding back, where a gift is very fruitful. The good deeds of sentient beings support them in the next world.”

AN 5.37

AN 5.37
Food
Bhojanasutta

“Mendicants, when a giver gives food, they give the recipients five things. What five? Long life, beauty, happiness, strength, and eloquence.

Giving long life, they have long life as a god or human.

Giving beauty, they have beauty as a god or human.

Giving happiness, they have happiness as a god or human.

Giving strength, they have strength as a god or human.

Giving eloquence, they are eloquent as a god or human.

When a giver gives food, they give the recipients five things.

A wise one is a giver of life, strength, beauty, and eloquence. An intelligent giver of happiness gains happiness in return.

Giving life, strength, beauty, happiness, and eloquence, they’re long-lived and famous wherever they’re reborn.”

AN 5.38

AN 5.38
Faith
Saddhasutta

“Mendicants, a faithful gentleman gets five benefits. What five? The true persons in the world show compassion first to the faithful, not so much to the unfaithful. They first approach the faithful, not so much the unfaithful. They first receive alms from the faithful, not so much the unfaithful. They first teach Dhamma to the faithful, not so much the unfaithful. When their body breaks up, after death, the faithful are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. A faithful gentleman gets these five benefits.

Suppose there was a great banyan tree at a level crossroads. It would become a refuge for birds from all around. In the same way, a faithful gentleman becomes a refuge for many people—monks, nuns, laywomen, and laymen.

With its branches, leaves, and fruit, a great tree with its strong trunk, firmly-rooted and fruit-bearing, supports many birds.

It’s a lovely place, frequented by the sky-soarers. Those that need shade go in the shade, those that need fruit enjoy the fruit.

So too, a faithful individual is perfect in ethics, humble and amenable, sweet, courteous, and tender.

Those free of greed, freed of hate, free of delusion, undefiled, fields of merit for the world, associate with such a person.

They teach them the Dhamma, that dispels all suffering. Having understood this teaching, the undefiled become fully extinguished.”

AN 5.39

AN 5.39
A Child
Puttasutta

“Mendicants, parents see five reasons to wish for the birth of a child in the family. What five? Since we looked after them, they’ll look after us. They’ll do their duty for us. The family traditions will last. They’ll take care of the inheritance. Or else when we have passed away they’ll give an offering on our behalf. Parents see these five reasons to wish for the birth of a child in the family.

Seeing five reasons, astute people wish for a child. Since we looked after them, they’ll look after us. They’ll do their duty for us.

The family traditions will last. They’ll take care of the inheritance. Or else when we have passed away they’ll give an offering on our behalf.

Seeing these five reasons astute people wish for a child. And so true persons, grateful and thankful, look after their parents, remembering past deeds. They do for their parents, as their parents did for them in the past.

Following their advice, looking after those who raised them, the family traditions are not lost. Faithful, accomplished in ethics, such a child is praiseworthy.”

AN 5.40

AN 5.40
Great Sal Trees
Mahāsālaputtasutta

“Mendicants, great sal trees grow in five ways supported by the Himalayas, the king of mountains. What five? The branches, leaves, and foliage; the bark; the shoots; the softwood; and the hardwood. Great sal trees grow in these five ways supported by the Himalayas, the king of mountains.

In the same way, a family grows in five ways supported by a family head with faith. What five? Faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. A family grows in these five ways supported by a family head with faith.

Supported by the mountain crags in the wilds, the formidable forest, the tree grows to become lord of the forest.

So too, when the family head is ethical and faithful, supported by them, they grow: children, partners, and kin, colleagues, relatives, and those dependent for their livelihood.

Seeing the ethical conduct of the virtuous, the generosity and good deeds, those who see clearly do likewise.

Having practiced the teaching here, the path that goes to a good place, they delight in the heavenly realm, enjoying all the pleasures they desire.”

AN 5.41

AN 5.41
Getting Rich
Ādiyasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Householder, there are these five reasons to get rich. What five?

Firstly, with his legitimate wealth—earned by his efforts and initiative, built up with his own hands, gathered by the sweat of the brow—a noble disciple makes himself happy and pleased, keeping himself properly happy. He makes his mother and father happy … He makes his children, partners, bondservants, workers, and staff happy … This is the first reason to get rich.

Furthermore, with his legitimate wealth he makes his friends and colleagues happy … This is the second reason to get rich.

Furthermore, with his legitimate wealth he protects himself against losses from such things as fire, water, kings, bandits, or unloved heirs. He keeps himself safe. This is the third reason to get rich.

Furthermore, with his legitimate wealth he makes five spirit-offerings: to relatives, guests, ancestors, king, and deities. This is the fourth reason to get rich.

Furthermore, with his legitimate wealth he establishes an uplifting religious donation for ascetics and brahmins—those who avoid intoxication and negligence, are settled in patience and gentleness, and who tame, calm, and extinguish themselves—that's conducive to heaven, ripens in happiness, and leads to heaven. This is the fifth reason to get rich.

These are the five reasons to get rich.

Now if the riches a noble disciple gets for these five reasons run out, he thinks: 'So, the riches I have obtained for these reasons are running out.' And so he has no regrets.

But if the riches a noble disciple gets for these five reasons increase, he thinks: 'So, the riches I have obtained for these reasons are increasing.' And so he has no regrets in both cases.

'I've enjoyed my wealth, supporting those who depend on me; I've overcome losses; I've given uplifting religious donations; and made the five spirit-offerings. I have looked after the ethical and disciplined spiritual practitioners.

I’ve achieved the purpose for which an astute lay person wishes to gain wealth. I don’t regret what I’ve done.’

A mortal person who recollects this stands firm in the teaching of the noble ones. They’re praised in this life by the astute, and they depart to rejoice in heaven.”

AN 5.42

AN 5.42
A True Person
Sappurisasutta

“Mendicants, a true person is born in a family for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. For the benefit, welfare, and happiness of mother and father; children and partners; bondservants, workers, and staff; friends and colleagues; and ascetics and brahmins.

It’s like a great rain cloud, which nourishes all the crops for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. In the same way, a true person is born in a family for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. …

The gods protect one who is guarded by principle, who uses their wealth for the welfare of the many. One who is learned, with precepts and observances intact, and steady in principle, doesn’t lose their reputation.

Firm in principle, accomplished in ethical conduct, truthful, conscientious; like a pendant of river gold, who is worthy to criticize them? Even the gods praise them, and by Brahmā, too, they’re praised.”

AN 5.43

AN 5.43
Likable
Iṭṭhasutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Householder, these five things that are likable, desirable, and agreeable are hard to get in the world. What five? Long life, beauty, happiness, fame, and heaven. These are the five things that are likable, desirable, and agreeable, but hard to get in the world.

And I say that these five things are not got by praying or wishing for them. If they were, who would lack them?

A noble disciple who wants to live long ought not pray for it, or hope for it, or pine for it. Instead, they should practice the way that leads to long life. For by practicing that way they gain long life as a god or a human being.

A noble disciple who wants to be beautiful ought not pray for it, or hope for it, or pine for it. Instead, they should practice the way that leads to beauty. For by practicing that way they gain beauty as a god or a human being.

A noble disciple who wants to be happy ought not pray for it, or hope for it, or pine for it. Instead, they should practice the way that leads to happiness. For by practicing that way they gain happiness as a god or a human being.

A noble disciple who wants to be famous ought not pray for it, or hope for it, or pine for it. Instead, they should practice the way that leads to fame. For by practicing that way they gain fame as a god or a human being.

A noble disciple who wants to go to heaven ought not pray for it, or hope for it, or pine for it. Instead, they should practice the way that leads to heaven. For by practicing that way they gain heaven, they are one who gains the heavens.

For one who desires a continuous flow of exceptional delights—long life, beauty, fame and reputation, heaven, and birth in an eminent family—

the astute praise diligence in making merit. Being diligent, an astute person secures both benefits:

the benefit in this life, and in lives to come. A wise one, comprehending the meaning, is called ‘astute’.”

AN 5.44

AN 5.44
Agreeable
Manāpadāyīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the householder Ugga of Vesālī, where he sat on the seat spread out.

Then Ugga went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, I have heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: 'The giver of the agreeable gets the agreeable.' My sal flower porridge is agreeable: may the Buddha please accept it from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted it out of compassion.

"Sir, I have heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: 'The giver of the agreeable gets the agreeable.' My pork with jujube is agreeable: may the Buddha please accept it from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted it out of compassion.

"… My fried vegetable stalks are agreeable: may the Buddha please accept them from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted them out of compassion.

"… My boiled fine rice with the dark grains picked out, served with many soups and sauces is agreeable: may the Buddha please accept it from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted it out of compassion.

"… My cloths imported from Kāsi are agreeable: may the Buddha please accept them from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted them out of compassion.

"… My couch spread with woolen covers—shag-piled or embroidered with flowers—and spread with a fine deer hide, with a canopy above and red pillows at both ends is agreeable. But, sir, I know that this is not proper for the Buddha. However, this plank of sandalwood is worth over a thousand dollars. May the Buddha please accept it from me out of compassion." So the Buddha accepted it out of compassion.

And then the Buddha rejoiced with Ugga with these verses of appreciation:

"The giver of the agreeable gets the agreeable, enthusiastically giving clothing, bedding, food and drink, and various requisites to those of upright conduct.

Knowing the perfected ones to be like a field for what's given, offered and not held back, a true person gives what's hard to give: the giver of the agreeable gets the agreeable."

And then the Buddha, having rejoiced with Ugga with these verses of appreciation, got up from his seat and left.

Then after some time Ugga passed away, and was reborn in a host of mind-made gods. At that time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then, late at night, the glorious god Ugga, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and stood to one side. The Buddha said to him, "Ugga, I trust it is all you wished?"

"Sir, it is indeed just as I wished." Then the Buddha addressed Ugga in verse:

"The giver of the agreeable gets the agreeable, the giver of the foremost gets the foremost, the giver of the excellent gets the excellent, the giver of the best gets the best.

A person who gives the foremost, the excellent, the best: they're long-lived and famous wherever they're reborn."

AN 5.45

AN 5.45
Overflowing Merit
Puññābhisandasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of overflowing merit, overflowing goodness. They nurture happiness and are conducive to heaven, ripening in happiness and leading to heaven. They lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, to welfare and happiness.

What five? When a mendicant enters and remains in a limitless immersion of heart while using a robe … almsfood … lodging … bed and chair … medicines and supplies for the sick, the overflowing of merit for the donor is limitless …

These are the five kinds of overflowing merit, overflowing goodness. They nurture happiness, and are conducive to heaven, ripening in happiness, and leading to heaven. They lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, to welfare and happiness.

When a noble disciple has these five kinds of overflowing merit and goodness, it’s not easy to grasp how much merit they have by saying that this is the extent of their overflowing merit … that leads to happiness. It’s simply reckoned as an incalculable, immeasurable, great mass of merit.

It’s like trying to grasp how much water is in the ocean. It’s not easy to say: ‘This is how many gallons, how many hundreds, thousands, hundreds of thousands of gallons there are.’ It’s simply reckoned as an incalculable, immeasurable, great mass of water.

In the same way, when a noble disciple has these five kinds of overflowing merit and goodness, it’s not easy to grasp how much merit they have: ‘This is how much this overflowing merit … leads to happiness.’ It’s simply reckoned as an incalculable, immeasurable, great mass of merit.

Hosts of people use the rivers, and though the rivers are many, all reach the great deep, the boundless ocean, the cruel sea that’s home to precious gems.

So too, when a person gives food, drink, and clothes; and they’re a giver of beds, seats, and mats—the streams of merit reach that astute person, as the rivers bring their waters to the sea.”

AN 5.46

AN 5.46
Success
Sampadāsutta

“Mendicants, there are five accomplishments. What five? Accomplishment in faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. These are the five accomplishments.”

AN 5.47

AN 5.47
Wealth
Dhanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of wealth. What five? The wealth of faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom.

And what is the wealth of faith? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called the wealth of faith.

And what is the wealth of ethics? It’s when a noble disciple doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called the wealth of ethics.

And what is the wealth of learning? It’s when a noble disciple is very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. This is called the wealth of learning.

And what is the wealth of generosity? It’s when a noble disciple lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. This is called the wealth of generosity.

And what is the wealth of wisdom? It’s when a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called the wealth of wisdom.

These are the five kinds of wealth.

Whoever has faith in the Realized One, unwavering and well grounded; whose ethical conduct is good, praised and loved by the noble ones; who has confidence in the Saṅgha, and correct view: they’re said to be prosperous, their life is not in vain.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.”

AN 5.48

AN 5.48
Things That Cannot Be Had Alabbhanīyaṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, there are five things that cannot be had by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world. What five? That someone liable to old age should not grow old. That someone liable to sickness should not get sick. … That someone liable to death should not die. … That someone liable to ending should not end. … That someone liable to perishing should not perish. …

An unlearned ordinary person has someone liable to old age who grows old. But they don’t reflect on old age: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to old age who grows old. For as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn, they all have someone liable to old age who grows old. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to old age grows old, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to old age grows old, they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called an unlearned ordinary person struck by sorrow’s poisoned arrow, who only mortifies themselves.

Furthermore, an unlearned ordinary person has someone liable to sickness … death … ending … perishing. But they don’t reflect on perishing: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to perishing who perishes. For as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn, they all have someone liable to perishing who perishes. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to perishing perishes, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to perishing perishes, they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called an unlearned ordinary person struck by sorrow’s poisoned arrow, who only mortifies themselves.

A learned noble disciple has someone liable to old age who grows old. So they reflect on old age: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to old age who grows old. For as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn, they all have someone liable to old age who grows old. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to old age grows old, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to old age grows old, they don’t sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called a learned noble disciple who has drawn out sorrow’s poisoned arrow, struck by which unlearned ordinary people only mortify themselves. Sorrowless, free of thorns, that noble disciple only extinguishes themselves.

Furthermore, a learned noble disciple has someone liable to sickness … death … ending … perishing. So they reflect on perishing: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to perishing who perishes. For as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn, they all have someone liable to perishing who perishes. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to perishing perishes, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to perishing perishes, they don’t sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called a learned noble disciple who has drawn out sorrow’s poisoned arrow, struck by which unlearned ordinary people only mortify themselves. Sorrowless, free of thorns, that noble disciple only extinguishes themselves.

These are the five things that cannot be had by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.

Sorrowing and lamenting doesn’t do even a little bit of good. When they know that you’re sad, your enemies are encouraged.

When an astute person doesn’t waver in the face of adversity, as they’re able to evaluate what’s beneficial, their enemies suffer, seeing that their normal expression doesn’t change.

Chants, recitations, fine sayings, charity or traditions: if by means of any such things you benefit, then by all means keep doing them.

But if you understand that ‘this good thing can’t be had by me or by anyone else’, you should accept it without sorrowing, thinking: ‘The deed is powerful. What can I do now?’”

AN 5.49

AN 5.49
The King of Kosala
Kosalasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side.

Then a man went up to the king and whispered in his ear, "Your Majesty, Queen Mallikā has passed away."

When this was said, King Pasenadi was miserable and sad. He sat with his shoulders drooping, downcast, depressed, with nothing to say.

Knowing this, the Buddha said to him, "Great king, there are five things that cannot be had by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world. What five? That someone liable to old age should not grow old. … Sorrowing and lamenting doesn't do even a little bit of good … 'The deed is powerful. What can I do now?'"

AN 5.50

AN 5.50
With Nārada
Nāradasutta

At one time Venerable Nārada was staying near Pāṭaliputta, in the Chicken Monastery.

Now at that time King Muṇḍa's dear and beloved Queen Bhaddā had just passed away. And since that time, the king did not bathe, anoint himself, eat his meals, or apply himself to his work. Day and night he brooded over Queen Bhaddā's corpse.

Then King Muṇḍa addressed his treasurer, Piyaka,

"So, my good Piyaka, please place Queen Bhaddā's corpse in an iron case filled with oil. Then close it up with another case, so that we can view Queen Bhaddā's body even longer."

"Yes, Your Majesty," replied Piyaka the treasurer, and he did as the king instructed.

Then it occurred to Piyaka, "King Muṇḍa's dear and beloved Queen Bhaddā has passed away. Since then the king does not bathe, anoint himself, eat his meals, or apply himself to his work. Day and night he broods over Queen Bhaddā's corpse. Now, what ascetic or brahmin might the king pay homage to, whose teaching could help the king give up sorrow's arrow?"

Then it occurred to Piyaka, "This Venerable Nārada is staying in the Chicken Monastery at Pāṭaliputta. He has this good reputation: 'He is astute, competent, intelligent, learned, a brilliant speaker, eloquent, mature, a perfected one.' What if King Muṇḍa was to pay homage to Venerable Nārada? Hopefully when he hears Nārada's teaching, the king could give up sorrow's arrow."

Then Piyaka went to the king and said to him, "Sire, this Venerable Nārada is staying in the Chicken Monastery at Pāṭaliputta. He has this good reputation: 'He is astute, competent, intelligent, learned, a brilliant speaker, eloquent, mature, a perfected one.' What if Your Majesty was to pay homage to Venerable Nārada? Hopefully when you hear Nārada's teaching, you could give up sorrow's arrow."

"Well then, my good Piyaka, let Nārada know. For how could one such as I presume to visit an ascetic or brahmin in my realm without first letting them know?"

"Yes, Your Majesty," replied Piyaka the treasurer. He went to Nārada, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, King Muṇḍa's dear and beloved Queen Bhaddā has passed away. And since she passed away, the king has not bathed, anointed himself, eaten his meals, or got his business done. Day and night he broods over Queen Bhaddā's corpse. Sir, please teach the king so that, when he hears your teaching, he can give up sorrow's arrow."

“Please, Piyaka, let the king come when he likes.”

Then Piyaka got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled Venerable Nārada, keeping him on his right, before going to the king and saying, “Sire, the request for an audience with Venerable Nārada has been granted. Please, Your Majesty, go at your convenience.”

“Well then, my good Piyaka, harness the finest chariots.”

“Yes, Your Majesty,” replied Piyaka the treasurer. He did so, then told the king:

“Sire, the finest chariots are harnessed. Please, Your Majesty, go at your convenience.”

Then King Muṇḍa mounted a fine carriage and, along with other fine carriages, set out in full royal pomp to see Venerable Nārada at the Chicken Monastery. He went by carriage as far as the terrain allowed, then descended and entered the monastery on foot. Then the king went up to Nārada, bowed, and sat down to one side. Then Nārada said to him:

“Great king, there are five things that cannot be had by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world. What five? That someone liable to old age should not grow old. … That someone liable to sickness should not get sick. … That someone liable to death should not die. … That someone liable to ending should not end. … That someone liable to perishing should not perish. …

An unlearned ordinary person has someone liable to old age who grows old. But they don’t reflect on old age: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to old age who grows old. For all sentient beings have someone liable to old age who grows old, as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to old age grows old, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to old age grows old, they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called an unlearned ordinary person struck by sorrow’s poisoned arrow, who only mortifies themselves.

Furthermore, an unlearned ordinary person has someone liable to sickness … death … ending … perishing. But they don’t reflect on perishing: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to perishing who perishes. For all sentient beings have someone liable to perishing who perishes, as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to perishing perishes, I’d lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn’t get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.’ And so, when someone liable to perishing perishes, they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called an unlearned ordinary person struck by sorrow’s poisoned arrow, who only mortifies themselves.

A learned noble disciple has someone liable to old age who grows old. So they reflect on old age: ‘It’s not just me who has someone liable to old age who grows old. For all sentient beings have someone liable to old age who grows old, as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to old age grows old, I'd lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn't get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.' And so, when someone liable to old age grows old, they don't sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called a learned noble disciple who has drawn out sorrow's poisoned arrow, struck by which unlearned ordinary people only mortify themselves. Sorrowless, free of thorns, that noble disciple only extinguishes themselves.

Furthermore, a learned noble disciple has someone liable to sickness … death … ending … perishing. So they reflect on perishing: 'It's not just me who has someone liable to perishing who perishes. For all sentient beings have someone liable to perishing who perishes, as long as sentient beings come and go, pass away and are reborn. If I were to sorrow and wail and lament, beating my breast and falling into confusion, just because someone liable to perishing perishes, I'd lose my appetite and my physical appearance would deteriorate. My work wouldn't get done, my enemies would be encouraged, and my friends would be dispirited.' And so, when someone liable to perishing perishes, they don't sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion. This is called a learned noble disciple who has drawn out sorrow's poisoned arrow, struck by which unlearned ordinary people only mortify themselves. Sorrowless, free of thorns, that noble disciple only extinguishes themselves.

These are the five things that cannot be had by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.

Sorrowing and lamenting doesn't do even a little bit of good. When they know that you're sad, your enemies are encouraged.

When an astute person doesn't waver in the face of adversity, as they're able to evaluate what's beneficial, their enemies suffer, seeing that their normal expression doesn't change.

Chants, recitations, fine sayings, charity or traditions: if by means of any such things you benefit, then by all means keep doing them.

But if you understand that 'this good thing can't be had by me or by anyone else', you should accept it without sorrowing, thinking: 'The deed is powerful. What can I do now?'"

When he said this, King Muṇḍa said to Venerable Nārada, "Sir, what is the name of this exposition of the teaching?"

"Great king, this exposition of the teaching is called 'Pulling Out Sorrow's Arrow'."

"Indeed, sir, this is the pulling out of sorrow's arrow! Hearing this exposition of the teaching, I've given up sorrow's arrow."

Then King Muṇḍa addressed his treasurer, Piyaka, “Well then, my good Piyaka, cremate Queen Bhaddā’s corpse and build a monument. From this day forth, I will bathe, anoint myself, eat my meals, and apply myself to my work.”

AN 5.51

AN 5.51
Obstacles
Āvaraṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, there are these five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom. What five? Sensual desire … Ill will … Dullness and drowsiness … Restlessness and remorse … Doubt … These are the five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom.

Take a mendicant who has feeble and weak wisdom, not having given up these five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom. It's quite impossible that they would know what's for their own good, the good of another, or the good of both; or that they would realize any superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones.

Suppose there was a mountain river that flowed swiftly, going far, carrying all before it. But then a man would open channels on both sides, so the mid-river current would be dispersed, spread out, and separated. The river would no longer flow swiftly, going far, carrying all before it.

In the same way, take a mendicant who has feeble and weak wisdom, not having given up these five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom. It's quite impossible that they would know what's for their own good, the good of another, or the good of both; or that they would realize any superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones.

Take a mendicant who has powerful wisdom, having given up these five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom. It's quite possible that they would know what's for their own good, the good of another, or the good of both; or that they would realize any superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones.

Suppose there was a mountain river that flowed swiftly, going far, carrying all before it. But then a man would close up the channels on both sides, so the mid-river current would not be dispersed, spread out, and separated. The river would keep flowing swiftly for a long way, carrying all before it.

In the same way, take a mendicant who has powerful wisdom, having given up these five obstacles and hindrances, parasites of the mind that weaken wisdom. It's quite possible that they would know what's for their own good, the good of another, or the good of both; or that they would realize any superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones."

AN 5.52

AN 5.52
A Heap of the Unskillful
Akusalarāsisutta

“Mendicants, rightly speaking, you’d call the five hindrances a ‘heap of the unskillful’. For these five hindrances are entirely a heap of the unskillful. What five? The hindrances of sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. Rightly speaking, you’d call these five hindrances a ‘heap of the unskillful’. For these five hindrances are entirely a heap of the unskillful.”

AN 5.53

AN 5.53
Factors That Support Meditation
Padhāniyaṅgasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five factors that support meditation. What five?

It’s when a mendicant has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’

They are rarely ill or unwell. Their stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation.

They’re not devious or deceitful. They reveal themselves honestly to the Teacher or sensible spiritual companions.

They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities.

They’re wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering.

These are the five factors that support meditation.”

AN 5.54

AN 5.54
Times Good for Meditation
Samayasutta

“Mendicants, there are five times that are not good for meditation. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant is old, overcome with old age. This is the first time that’s not good for meditation.

Furthermore, a mendicant is sick, overcome by sickness. This is the second time that’s not good for meditation.

Furthermore, there’s a famine, a bad harvest, so it’s hard to get almsfood, and not easy to keep going by collecting alms. This is the third time that’s not good for meditation.

Furthermore, there’s peril due to turmoil in the wilds, so the countryfolk mount their vehicles and flee everywhere. This is the fourth time that’s not good for meditation.

Furthermore, there’s a schism in the Saṅgha. When the Saṅgha is split, they abuse, insult, block, and reject each other. This doesn’t inspire confidence in those without it, and it causes some with confidence to change their minds. This is the fifth time that’s not good for meditation.

These are the five times that are not good for meditation.

There are five times that are good for meditation. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant is a youth, young, with pristine black hair, blessed with youth, in the prime of life. This is the first time that’s good for meditation.

Furthermore, they are rarely ill or unwell. Their stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation. This is the second time that’s good for meditation.

Furthermore, there’s plenty of food, a good harvest, so it’s easy to get almsfood, and easy to keep going by collecting alms. This is the third time that’s good for meditation.

Furthermore, people live in harmony, appreciating each other, without quarreling, blending like milk and water, and regarding each other with kindly eyes. This is the fourth time that’s good for meditation.

Furthermore, the Saṅgha lives comfortably, in harmony, appreciating each other, without quarreling, with one recitation. When the Saṅgha is in harmony, they don’t abuse, insult, block, or reject each other. This inspires confidence in those without it, and increases confidence in those who have it. This is the fifth time that's good for meditation.

These are the five times that are good for meditation."

AN 5.55

AN 5.55
Mother and Son
Mātāputtasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now, at that time a mother and son had both entered the rainy season residence at Sāvatthī, as a monk and a nun. They wanted to see each other often. The mother wanted to see her son often, and the son his mother. Seeing each other often, they became close. Being so close, they became intimate. And being intimate, lust overcame them. With their minds swamped by lust, without resigning the training and declaring their inability to continue, they had sex.

Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"Mendicants, how could that silly man imagine that a mother cannot lust for her son, or that a son cannot lust for his mother? Compared to the sight of a woman, I do not see a single sight that is so arousing, sensuous, intoxicating, captivating, and infatuating, and such an obstacle to reaching the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. Sentient beings are lustful, greedy, tied, infatuated, and attached to the sight of a woman. They sorrow for a long time under the sway of a woman's sight.

Compared to the sound … smell … taste … touch of a woman, I do not see a single touch that is so arousing, sensuous, intoxicating, captivating, and infatuating, and such an obstacle to reaching the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. Sentient beings are lustful, greedy, tied, infatuated, and attached to the touch of a woman. They sorrow for a long time under the sway of a woman's touch.

When a woman walks, she occupies a man's mind. When a woman stands … sits … lies down … laughs … speaks … sings … cries … is injured, she occupies a man's mind. Even when a woman is dead, she occupies a man's mind. For if anyone should be rightly called 'an all-round snare of Māra', it's females.

You might chat with someone who has knife in hand. You might even chat with a goblin. You might sit close by a viper, whose bite would take your life. But never should you chat one on one with a female.

They captivate the unmindful with a glance and a smile. Or scantily clad, they speak charming words. It's not good to sit with such a person, even if she's injured or dead.

These five kinds of sensual stimulation are apparent in a woman's body: sights, sounds, tastes, smells, and touches so delightful.

Those swept away by the flood of sensual pleasures, not comprehending them, are governed by transmigration—time and destination, and life after life.

But those who fully understand sensual pleasures live fearing nothing from any quarter. They are those in the world who've crossed over, having reached the ending of defilements."

AN 5.56

AN 5.56
Mentor
Upajjhāyasutta

Then a mendicant went up to his own mentor, and said, “Now, sir, my body feels like it’s drugged. I’m disorientated, the teachings don’t spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness fill my mind. I lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, and have doubts about the teachings.”

Then that mendicant took his pupil to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, this mendicant says this: ‘Now, sir, my body feels like it’s drugged. I’m disorientated, the teachings don’t spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness fill my mind. I lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, and have doubts about the teachings.’”

“That’s how it is, mendicant, when your sense doors are unguarded, you eat too much, you’re not dedicated to wakefulness, you’re unable to discern skillful qualities, and you don’t pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn. Your body feels like it’s drugged. You’re disorientated, the teachings don’t spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness fill your mind. You lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, and have doubts about the teachings.

So you should train like this: ‘I will guard my sense doors, eat in moderation, be dedicated to wakefulness, discern skillful qualities, and pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn.’ That’s how you should train.”

When that mendicant had been given this advice by the Buddha, he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

Then that mendicant, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And that mendicant became one of the perfected.

When that mendicant had attained perfection, he went up to his own mentor, and said, “Now, sir, my body doesn’t feel like it’s drugged. I’m not disorientated, the teachings spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness don’t fill my mind. I lead the spiritual life satisfied, and have no doubts about the teachings.”

Then that mendicant took his pupil to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, this mendicant says this: ‘Now, sir, my body doesn’t feel like it’s drugged. I’m not disorientated, the teachings spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness don’t fill my mind. I lead the spiritual life satisfied, and have no doubts about the teachings.’”

“That’s how it is, mendicant, when your sense doors are guarded, you’re moderate in eating, you’re dedicated to wakefulness, you’re able to discern skillful qualities, and you pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn. Your body doesn’t feel like it’s drugged. You’re not disorientated, the teachings spring to mind, and dullness and drowsiness don’t fill your mind. You lead the spiritual life satisfied, and have no doubts about the teachings.

So you should train like this: ‘We will guard our sense doors, eat in moderation, be dedicated to wakefulness, discern skillful qualities, and pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 5.57

AN 5.57
Subjects for Regular Reviewing Abhiṇhapaccavekkhitabbaṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, a woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate should often review these five subjects. What five?

‘I am liable to grow old, I am not exempt from old age.’ A woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate should often review this.

‘I am liable to get sick, I am not exempt from sickness.’ …

‘I am liable to die, I am not exempt from death.’ …

‘I must be parted and separated from all I hold dear and beloved.’ …

‘I am the owner of my deeds and heir to my deeds. Deeds are my womb, my relative, and my refuge.

I shall be the heir of whatever deeds I do, whether good or bad.’ A woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate should often review this.

What is the advantage for a woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to grow old, I am not exempt from old age’? There are sentient beings who, intoxicated with the vanity of youth, do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. Reviewing this subject often, they entirely give up the vanity of youth, or at least reduce it. This is the advantage for a woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to grow old, I am not exempt from old age’.

What is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to get sick, I am not exempt from sickness’? There are sentient beings who, drunk on the vanity of health, do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. Reviewing this subject often, they entirely give up the vanity of health, or at least reduce it. This is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to get sick, I am not exempt from sickness’.

What is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to die, I am not exempt from death’? There are sentient beings who, drunk on the vanity of life, do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. Reviewing this subject often, they entirely give up the vanity of life, or at least reduce it. This is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I am liable to die, I am not exempt from death’.

What is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I must be parted and separated from all I hold dear and beloved’? There are sentient beings who, aroused by desire and lust for their dear and beloved, do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. Reviewing this subject often, they entirely give up desire and lust for their dear and beloved, or at least reduce it. This is the advantage of often reviewing this: ‘I must be parted and separated from all I hold dear and beloved’.

What is the advantage of often reviewing like this: ‘I am the owner of my deeds and heir to my deeds. Deeds are my womb, my relative, and my refuge. I shall be the heir of whatever deeds I do, whether good or bad’? There are sentient beings who do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. Reviewing this subject often, they entirely give up bad conduct, or at least reduce it. This is the advantage for a woman or a man, a layperson or a renunciate of often reviewing like this: ‘I am the owner of my deeds and heir to my deeds. Deeds are my womb, my relative, and my refuge. I shall be the heir of whatever deeds I do, whether good or bad.’

Then that noble disciple reflects: ‘It’s not just me who is liable to grow old, not being exempt from old age. For all sentient beings grow old according to their nature, as long as they come and go, pass away and are reborn.’ When they review this subject often, the path is born in them. They cultivate, develop, and make much of it. By doing so, they give up the fetters and eliminate the underlying tendencies.

‘It’s not just me who is liable to get sick, not being exempt from sickness. For all sentient beings get sick according to their nature, as long as they come and go, pass away and are reborn.’ When they review this subject often, the path is born in them. They cultivate, develop, and make much of it. By doing so, they give up the fetters and eliminate the underlying tendencies.

‘It’s not just me who is liable to die, not being exempt from death. For all sentient beings die according to their nature, as long as they come and go, pass away and are reborn.’ When they review this subject often, the path is born in them. They cultivate, develop, and make much of it. By doing so, they give up the fetters and eliminate the underlying tendencies.

‘It’s not just me who must be parted and separated from all I hold dear and beloved. For all sentient beings must be parted and separated from all they hold dear and beloved, as long as they come and go, pass away and are reborn.’ When they review this subject often, the path is born in them. They cultivate, develop, and make much of it. By doing so, they give up the fetters and eliminate the underlying tendencies.

‘It’s not just me who shall be the owner of my deeds and heir to my deeds. For all sentient beings shall be the owners of their deeds and heirs to their deeds, as long as they come and go, pass away and are reborn.’ When they review this subject often, the path is born in them. They cultivate, develop, and make much of it. By doing so, they give up the fetters and eliminate the underlying tendencies.

For others, sickness is natural, and so are old age and death. Though this is how their nature is, ordinary people feel disgusted.

If I were to be disgusted with creatures whose nature is such, it would not be appropriate for me, since my life is just the same.

Living in such a way, I understood the truth without attachments. I mastered all vanities—of health, of youth, and even of life—seeing renunciation as sanctuary. Zeal sprang up in me as I looked to extinguishment.

Now I’m unable to indulge in sensual pleasures; there’s no turning back, I’m committed to the spiritual life.”

AN 5.58

AN 5.58
The Licchavi Youths
Licchavikumārakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for alms. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, he plunged deep into the Great Wood and sat at the root of a tree for the day's meditation.

Now at that time several Licchavi youths took strung bows and, escorted by a pack of hounds, were going for a walk in the Great Wood when they saw the Buddha seated at the root of a tree. When they saw him, they put down their strung bows, tied their hounds up to one side, and went up to him. They bowed and silently paid homage to the Buddha with joined palms.

Now at that time Mahānāma the Licchavi was going for a walk in the Great Wood when he saw those Licchavi youths silently paying homage to the Buddha with joined palms. Seeing this, he went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and expressed this heartfelt sentiment, "They will become Vajjis! They will become Vajjis!"

"But Mahānāma, why do you say that they will become Vajjis?"

"Sir, these Licchavi youths are violent, harsh, and brash. Whenever sweets are left out for families—sugar-cane, jujube fruits, pancakes, pies, or fritters—they filch them and eat them up. And they hit women and girls of good families on their backs. But now they're silently paying homage to the Buddha with joined palms."

"Mahānāma, you can expect only growth, not decline, when you find five qualities in any gentleman—whether he's an anointed aristocratic king, an appointed or hereditary official, an army general, a village chief, a guild chief, or a ruler of his own clan.

What five?

Firstly, a gentleman uses his legitimate wealth—earned by his efforts and initiative, built up with his own hands, gathered by the sweat of the brow—to honor, respect, esteem, and venerate his mother and father. Honored in this way, his mother and father love him with a good heart, wishing: 'Live long! Stay alive for a long time!' When a gentleman is loved by his mother and father, you can expect only growth, not decline.

Furthermore, a gentleman uses his legitimate wealth to honor, respect, esteem, and venerate his wives and children, bondservants, workers, and staff. Honored in this way, his wives and children, bondservants, workers, and staff love him with a good heart, wishing:

‘Live long! Stay alive for a long time!’ When a gentleman is loved by his wives and children, bondservants, workers, and staff, you can expect only growth, not decline.

Furthermore, a gentleman uses his legitimate wealth to honor, respect, esteem, and venerate those who work the neighboring fields, and those he does business with. Honored in this way, those who work the neighboring fields, and those he does business with love him with a good heart, wishing: ‘Live long! Stay alive for a long time!’ When a gentleman is loved by those who work the neighboring fields, and those he does business with, you can expect only growth, not decline.

Furthermore, a gentleman uses his legitimate wealth to honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the deities who receive spirit-offerings. Honored in this way, the deities who receive spirit-offerings love him with a good heart, wishing: ‘Live long! Stay alive for a long time!’ When a gentleman is loved by the deities, you can expect only growth, not decline.

Furthermore, a gentleman uses his legitimate wealth to honor, respect, esteem, and venerate ascetics and brahmins. Honored in this way, ascetics and brahmins love him with a good heart, wishing: ‘Live long! Stay alive for a long time!’ When a gentleman is loved by ascetics and brahmins, you can expect only growth, not decline.

You can expect only growth, not decline, when you find these five qualities in any gentleman—whether he’s an anointed aristocratic king, an appointed or hereditary official, an army general, a village chief, a guild chief, or a ruler of his own clan.

He’s always dutiful to his mother and father, and for the good of his wives and children. He looks after those in his household, and those dependent on him for their livelihood.

A kind and ethical person looks after the welfare of relatives—both those who have passed away, and those alive at present.

While living at home, an astute person uses legitimate means to give rise to joy for ascetics, brahmins, and also the gods.

Having done good, he’s venerable and praiseworthy. They praise him in this life, and he departs to rejoice in heaven.”

AN 5.59

AN 5.59
Gone Forth When Old (1st)
Paṭhamavuḍḍhapabbajitasutta

“Mendicants, it’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who has five qualities. What five? It’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who is sophisticated, well-presented, and learned, who can teach Dhamma, and has memorized the monastic law. It’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who has these five qualities.”

AN 5.60

AN 5.60
Gone Forth When Old (2nd)
Dutiyavuḍḍhapabbajitasutta

“Mendicants, it’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who has five qualities. What five? It’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who is easy to admonish, retains what they learn, and learns respectfully, who can teach the Dhamma, and has memorized the monastic law. It’s hard to find someone gone forth when old who has these five qualities.”

AN 5.61

AN 5.61
Perceptions (1st)
Paṭhamasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these five perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What five? The perceptions of ugliness, death, drawbacks, repulsiveness of food, and dissatisfaction with the whole world. These five perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 5.62

AN 5.62
Perceptions (2nd)
Dutiyasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these five perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What five? The perceptions of impermanence, not-self, death, repulsiveness of food, and dissatisfaction with the whole world. These five perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 5.63

AN 5.63
Growth (1st)
Paṭhamavaḍḍhisutta

“Mendicants, a male noble disciple who grows in five ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life. What five? He grows in faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. A male noble disciple who grows in these five ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life.

He who grows in faith and ethics, wisdom, and both generosity and learning—a good man such as he sees clearly, and takes on what is essential for himself in this life.”

AN 5.64

AN 5.64
Growth (2nd)
Dutiyavaḍḍhisutta

“Mendicants, a female noble disciple who grows in five ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life. What five? She grows in faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. A female noble disciple who grows in these five ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life.

She who grows in faith and ethics, wisdom, and both generosity and learning—a virtuous laywoman such as she takes on what is essential for herself in this life.”

AN 5.65

AN 5.65
Discussion
Sākacchasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is fit to hold a discussion with their spiritual companions. What five?

A mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, and answers questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in ethics.

They’re personally accomplished in immersion, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in immersion.

They’re personally accomplished in wisdom, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in wisdom.

They’re personally accomplished in freedom, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in freedom.

They’re personally accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

A mendicant with these five qualities is fit to hold a discussion with their spiritual companions.”

AN 5.66

AN 5.66
Sharing Life
Sājīvasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is fit to share their life with their spiritual companions. What five?

A mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, and answers questions posed when discussing accomplishment in ethics.

They’re personally accomplished in immersion, and they answer questions posed when discussing accomplishment in immersion.

They’re personally accomplished in wisdom, and they answer questions posed when discussing accomplishment in wisdom.

They’re personally accomplished in freedom, and they answer questions posed when discussing accomplishment in freedom.

They’re personally accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom, and they answer questions posed when discussing accomplishment in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

A mendicant with these five qualities is fit to share their life with their spiritual companions.”

AN 5.67

AN 5.67
Bases of Psychic Power (1st)
Paṭhamaiddhipādasutta

“Mendicants, any monk or nun who develops and cultivates five qualities can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.

What five?

A mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to enthusiasm, and active effort …

A mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to energy, and active effort …

A mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to mental development, and active effort …

A mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to inquiry, and active effort.

And the fifth is sheer vigor.

Any monk or nun who develops and cultivates these five qualities can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

AN 5.68

AN 5.68
Bases of Psychic Power (2nd)
Dutiyaiddhipādasutta

“Mendicants, before my awakening—when I was still not awake but intent on awakening—I developed and cultivated five things. What five?

The basis of psychic power that has immersion due to enthusiasm, and active effort … the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to energy, and active effort … the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to mental development, and active effort … the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to inquiry, and active effort. And the fifth is sheer vigor.

When I had developed and cultivated these five things, with vigor as fifth, I became capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which I extended the mind, in each and every case.

If I wished: ‘May I multiply myself and become one again … controlling the body as far as the Brahmā realm.’ I was capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

If I wished: … ‘May I realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with my own insight due to the ending of defilements.’ I was capable of realizing it, in each and every case.”

AN 5.69

AN 5.69
Disillusionment
Nibbidāsutta

“Mendicants, these five things, when developed and cultivated, lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment.

What five? A mendicant meditates observing the ugliness of the body, perceives the repulsiveness of food, perceives dissatisfaction with the whole world, observes the impermanence of all conditions, and has well established the perception of their own death.

These five things, when developed and cultivated, lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment.”

AN 5.70

AN 5.70
The Ending of Defilements
Āsavakkhayasutta

“Mendicants, these five things, when developed and cultivated, lead to the ending of defilements. What five? A mendicant meditates observing the ugliness of the body, perceives the repulsiveness of food, perceives dissatisfaction with the whole world, observes the impermanence of all conditions, and has well established the perception of their own death. These five things, when developed and cultivated, lead to the ending of defilements.”

AN 5.71

AN 5.71
Freedom of Heart is the Fruit (1st)
Paṭhamacetovimuttiphalasutta

“Mendicants, these five things, when developed and cultivated, have freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as their fruit and benefit.

What five? A mendicant meditates observing the ugliness of the body, perceives the repulsiveness of food, perceives dissatisfaction with the whole world, observes the impermanence of all conditions, and has well established the perception of their own death. These five things, when developed and cultivated, have freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as their fruit and benefit. When a mendicant has freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom, such a mendicant is one who is called ‘one who has lifted the cross-bar’, ‘one who has filled in the moat’, ‘one who has pulled up the pillar’, ‘one who is unbarred’, and also ‘a noble one with banner lowered and burden dropped, detached’.

And how has a mendicant lifted the cross-bar? It’s when a mendicant has given up ignorance, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant has lifted the cross-bar.

And how has a mendicant filled in the moat? It’s when a mendicant has given up transmigrating through births in future lives, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant has filled in the moat.

And how has a mendicant pulled up the pillar? It’s when a mendicant has given up craving, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant has pulled up the pillar.

And how is a mendicant unbarred? It’s when a mendicant has given up the five lower fetters, cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so they’re unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant is unbarred.

And how is a mendicant a noble one with with banner lowered and burden dropped, detached? It’s when a mendicant has given up the conceit ‘I am’, cut it off at the root, made it like a palm stump, obliterated it, so it’s unable to arise in the future. That’s how a mendicant is a noble one with banner lowered and burden dropped, detached.”

AN 5.72

AN 5.72
Freedom of Heart is the Fruit (2nd)
Dutiyacetovimuttiphalasutta

“Mendicants, these five things, when developed and cultivated, have freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as their fruit and benefit. What five?

The perception of impermanence, the perception of suffering in impermanence, the perception of not-self in suffering, the perception of giving up, and the perception of fading away.

These five things, when developed and cultivated, have freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom as their fruit and benefit.

When a mendicant has freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom, Such a mendicant is one who is called ‘one who has lifted the cross-bar’, ‘one who has filled in the moat’, ‘one who has pulled up the pillar’, ‘one who is unbarred’, and also ‘a noble one with banner lowered and burden dropped, detached’. …”

AN 5.73

AN 5.73
One Who Lives by the Teaching (1st)
Paṭhamadhammavihārīsutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, they speak of ‘one who lives by the teaching’. How is a mendicant who lives by the teaching defined?”

“Mendicant, take a mendicant who memorizes the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. They spend too much time studying that teaching. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. That mendicant is called one who studies a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches Dhamma in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. They spend too much time advocating that teaching. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. That mendicant is called one who advocates a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant recites the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. They spend too much time reciting that teaching. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. That mendicant is called one who recites a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant thinks about and considers the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. They spend too much time thinking about that teaching. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. That mendicant is called one who thinks a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Take a mendicant who memorizes the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. They don’t spend too much time studying that teaching. They don’t neglect retreat, and they’re committed to internal serenity of heart. That’s how a mendicant is one who lives by the teaching.

So, mendicant, I’ve taught you the one who studies a lot, the one who advocates a lot, the one who recites a lot, the one who thinks a lot, and the one who lives by the teaching. Out of compassion, I’ve done what a teacher should do who wants what’s best for their disciples. Here are these roots of trees, and here are these empty huts. Practice absorption, mendicant! Don’t be negligent! Don’t regret it later! This is my instruction to you.”

AN 5.74

AN 5.74
One Who Lives by the Teaching (2nd)
Dutiyadhammavihārīsutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, they speak of ‘one who lives by the teaching’. How is a mendicant who lives by the teaching defined?”

“Mendicant, take a mendicant who memorizes the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. But they don’t understand the higher meaning. That mendicant is called one who studies a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches Dhamma in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. But they don’t understand the higher meaning. That mendicant is called one who advocates a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant recites the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. But they don’t understand the higher meaning. That mendicant is called one who recites a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Furthermore, a mendicant thinks about and considers the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. But they don’t understand the higher meaning. That mendicant is called one who thinks a lot, not one who lives by the teaching.

Take a mendicant who memorizes the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. And they do understand the higher meaning. That’s how a mendicant is one who lives by the teaching.

So, mendicant, I’ve taught you the one who studies a lot, the one who advocates a lot, the one who recites a lot, the one who thinks a lot, and the one who lives by the teaching. Out of compassion, I’ve done what a teacher should do who wants what’s best for their disciples. Here are these roots of trees, and here are these empty huts. Practice absorption, mendicant! Don’t be negligent! Don’t regret it later! This is my instruction to you.”

AN 5.75

AN 5.75
Warriors (1st)
Paṭhamayodhājīvasutta

“Mendicants, these five warriors are found in the world. What five?

Firstly, one warrior falters and founders at the mere sight of a cloud of dust. He doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. Some warriors are like that. This is the first warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior can prevail over a cloud of dust, but he falters and founders at the mere sight of a banner’s crest. He doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. Some warriors are like that. This is the second warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner’s crest, but he falters and founders at the mere sound of turmoil. He doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. Some warriors are like that. This is the third warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner’s crest and turmoil, but he’s killed or injured when blows are struck. Some warriors are like that. This is the fourth warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner’s crest and turmoil and being struck. He wins victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle. Some warriors are like that. This is the fifth warrior found in the world.

These are the five warriors found in the world.

In the same way, these five people similar to warriors are found among the monks. What five?

Firstly, one monk falters and founders at the mere sight of a cloud of dust. He doesn’t stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. What is his ‘cloud of dust’? It’s when a monk hears: ‘In such and such a village or town there’s a women or a girl who is attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty.’ Hearing this, he falters and founders. He doesn’t stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. This is his ‘cloud of dust’.

I say that this person is like the warrior who falters and founders at the mere sight of a cloud of dust. Some people are like that. This is the first person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, one monk can prevail over a cloud of dust, but at the mere sight of a banner's crest he falters and founders. He doesn't stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. What is his 'banner's crest'? It's when a monk doesn't hear: 'In such and such a village or town there's a women or a girl who is attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty.' But he sees for himself a women or a girl who is attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty. Seeing her, he falters and founders. He doesn't stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. This is his 'banner's crest'.

I say that this person is like the warrior who can prevail over a cloud of dust, but he falters and founders at the mere sight of a banner's crest. Some people are like that. This is the second person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, one monk can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest, but he falters and founders at the mere sound of turmoil. He doesn't stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. What is his 'turmoil'? It's when a mendicant who has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut is approached by a female. She smiles, chats, laughs, and teases him. He falters and founders. He doesn't stay firm, and fails to keep up the spiritual life. Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life. This is his 'turmoil'.

I say that this person is like the warrior who can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest, but he falters and founders at the mere sound of turmoil. Some people are like that. This is the third person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, one monk can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest and turmoil, but he's killed or injured when blows are struck. What is his 'blows are struck'? It's when a mendicant who has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut is approached by a female. She sits right by him, lies down, or embraces him. Without resigning the training and declaring his inability to continue, he has sex. This is his 'blows are struck'.

I say that this person is like the warrior who can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest and turmoil, but is killed or injured when blows are struck. Some people are like that. This is the fourth person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, one monk can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest and turmoil, and being struck. He wins victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle. What is his 'victory in battle'? It's when a mendicant who has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut is approached by a female. She sits right by him, lies down, or embraces him. But he disentangles and frees himself, and goes wherever he wants. He frequents a secluded lodging—a wilderness, the root of a tree, a hill, a ravine, a mountain cave, a charnel ground, a forest, the open air, a heap of straw.

Gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, he sits down cross-legged, sets his body straight, and establishes mindfulness in his presence. Giving up covetousness for the world, he meditates with a heart rid of covetousness, cleansing the mind of covetousness. Giving up ill will and malevolence, he meditates with a mind rid of ill will, full of compassion for all living beings, cleansing the mind of ill will. Giving up dullness and drowsiness, he meditates with a mind rid of dullness and drowsiness, perceiving light, mindful and aware, cleansing the mind of dullness and drowsiness. Giving up restlessness and remorse, he meditates without restlessness, his mind peaceful inside, cleansing the mind of restlessness and remorse. Giving up doubt, he meditates having gone beyond doubt, not undecided about skillful qualities, cleansing the mind of doubt. He gives up these five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. Then, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, he enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption.

When his mind has become immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—he extends it toward knowledge of the ending of defilements. He truly understands: 'This is suffering' … 'This is the origin of suffering' … 'This is the cessation of suffering' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering'. He truly understands: 'These are defilements' … 'This is the origin of defilements' … 'This is the cessation of defilements' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of defilements'. Knowing and seeing like this, his mind is freed from the defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. When it is freed, he knows it is freed.

He understands: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.' This is his 'victory in battle'.

I say that this person is like the warrior who can prevail over a cloud of dust and a banner's crest and turmoil and being struck. He wins victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle. Some people are like that. This is the fifth person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

These five people similar to warriors are found among the monks."

AN 5.76

AN 5.76
Warriors (2nd)
Dutiyayodhājīvasutta

“Mendicants, these five warriors are found in the world. What five?

Firstly, one warrior dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He strives and struggles in the battle, but his foes kill him and finish him off. Some warriors are like that. This is the first warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He strives and struggles in the battle, but his foes wound him. He’s carried off and taken to his relatives, but he dies on the road before he reaches them. Some warriors are like that. This is the second warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He strives and struggles in the battle, but his foes wound him. He’s carried off and taken to his relatives, who nurse him and care for him. But he dies of his injuries while in their care. Some warriors are like that. This is the third warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He strives and struggles in the battle, but his foes wound him. He’s carried off and taken to his relatives, who nurse him and care for him. And while in their care, he recovers from his injuries. Some warriors are like that. This is the fourth warrior found in the world.

Furthermore, one warrior dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He wins victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle. Some warriors are like that. This is the fifth warrior found in the world. These are the five warriors found in the world.

In the same way, these five people similar to warriors are found among the monks. What five? Firstly, a mendicant lives supported by a town or village. He robes up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, enters a village or town for alms without guarding body, speech, and mind, without establishing mindfulness, and without restraining the sense faculties. There he sees a female scantily clad, with revealing clothes. Lust infects his mind, and, without resigning the training and declaring his inability to continue, he has sex.

I say that this person is like the warrior who is killed and finished off by his foes. Some people are like that. This is the first person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives supported by a town or village. He robes up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, enters a village or town for alms without guarding body, speech, and mind, without establishing mindfulness, and without restraining the sense faculties. There he sees a female scantily clad, with revealing clothes. Lust infects his mind, and his body and mind burn with it. He thinks: 'Why don't I visit the monastery and tell the monks:

"Reverends, I am overcome with lust, mired in lust. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life."' But while traveling on the road, before he reaches the monastery he declares his inability to continue training. He rejects it and returns to a lesser life.

I say that this person is like the warrior who is taken to his relatives for care, but he dies on the road before he reaches them. Some people are like that. This is the second person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives supported by a town or village. He robes up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, enters a village or town for alms without guarding body, speech, and mind, without establishing mindfulness, and without restraining the sense faculties. There he sees a female scantily clad, with revealing clothes. Lust infects his mind, and his body and mind burn with it. He thinks: 'Why don't I visit the monastery and tell the monks:

"Reverends, I am overcome with lust, mired in lust. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life."' He goes to the monastery and tells the monks: 'Reverends, I am overcome with lust, mired in lust. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life.'

His spiritual companions advise and instruct him: 'Reverend, the Buddha says that sensual pleasures give little gratification and much suffering and distress, and they are all the more full of drawbacks. With the similes of a skeleton … a scrap of meat … a grass torch … a pit of glowing coals … a dream … borrowed goods … fruit on a tree … a butcher's knife and chopping board … a staking sword … a snake's head, the Buddha says that sensual pleasures give little gratification and much suffering and distress, and they are all the more full of drawbacks. Be happy with the spiritual life. Venerable, please don't declare your inability to continue training, reject it and return to a lesser life.'

When thus advised and instructed by his spiritual companions, he says: 'Reverends, even though the Buddha says that sensual pleasures give little gratification and much suffering and distress, and they are all the more full of drawbacks, I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life.' Declaring his inability to continue training, he rejects it and returns to a lesser life.

I say that this person is like the warrior who dies of his injuries while in the care of his relatives. Some people are like that. This is the third person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives supported by a town or village. He robes up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, enters a village or town for alms without guarding body, speech, and mind, without establishing mindfulness, and without restraining the sense faculties. There he sees a female scantily clad, with revealing clothes. Lust infects his mind, and his body and mind burn with it. He thinks: 'Why don't I visit the monastery and tell the monks:

"Reverends, I am overcome with lust, mired in lust. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life."' He goes to the monastery and tells the monks: 'Reverends, I am overcome with lust, mired in lust. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I declare my inability to continue training. I reject it and will return to a lesser life.'

His spiritual companions advise and instruct him: 'Reverend, the Buddha says that sensual pleasures give little gratification and much suffering and distress, and they are all the more full of drawbacks. With the simile of a skeleton … a scrap of meat … a grass torch … a pit of glowing coals … a dream … borrowed goods … fruit on a tree … a butcher's knife and chopping board … a staking sword … a snake's head, the Buddha says that sensual pleasures give little gratification and much suffering and distress, and they are all the more full of drawbacks. Be happy with the spiritual life. Venerable, please don't declare your inability to continue training, reject it and return to a lesser life.'

When thus advised and instructed by his spiritual companions, he says: 'I'll try, reverends, I'll struggle, I'll be happy. I won't now declare my inability to continue training, reject it and return to a lesser life.'

I say that this person is like the warrior who recovers from his injuries while in the care of his relatives. Some people are like that. This is the fourth person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives supported by a town or village. He robes up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, enters a village or town, guarding body, speech, and mind, establishing mindfulness, and restraining the sense faculties. Seeing a sight with his eyes, he doesn't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of sight were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, he practices restraint, protecting the faculty of sight, and achieving restraint over it. Hearing a sound with his ears … Smelling an odor with his nose … Tasting a flavor with his tongue … Feeling a touch with his body … Knowing an idea with his mind, he doesn't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of mind were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, he practices restraint, protecting the faculty of mind, and achieving restraint over it. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, he frequents a secluded lodging—a wilderness, the root of a tree, a hill, a ravine, a mountain cave, a charnel ground, a forest, the open air, a heap of straw. Gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, he sits down cross-legged, sets his body straight, and establishes mindfulness in his presence. He gives up these five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. Then, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, he enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption.

When his mind has become immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—he extends it toward knowledge of the ending of defilements. He truly understands: ‘This is suffering’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering’. He truly understands: ‘These are defilements’ … ‘This is the origin of defilements’ … ‘This is the cessation of defilements’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of defilements’. Knowing and seeing like this, his mind is freed from the defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. When freed, he knows ‘it is freed’. He understands: ‘Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.’

I say that this person is like the warrior who dons his sword and shield, fastens his bow and arrows, and plunges into the thick of battle. He wins victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle. Some people are like that. This is the fifth person similar to a warrior found among the monks.

These five people similar to warriors are found among the monks.”

AN 5.77

AN 5.77
Future Perils (1st)
Paṭhamaanāgatabhayasutta

“Mendicants, seeing these five future perils is quite enough for a wilderness mendicant to meditate diligently, keenly, and resolutely for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.

What five? Firstly, a wilderness mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m living alone in a wilderness. While living here alone I might get bitten by a snake, a scorpion, or a centipede. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. I’d better rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ This is the first future peril …

Furthermore, a wilderness mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m living alone in a wilderness. While living here alone I might stumble off a cliff, or get food poisoning, or suffer a disturbance of bile, phlegm, or piercing winds. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. I’d better rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ This is the second future peril …

Furthermore, a wilderness mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m living alone in a wilderness. While living here alone I might encounter wild beasts—a lion, a tiger, a leopard, a bear, or a hyena—which might take my life. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. I’d better rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ This is the third future peril …

Furthermore, a wilderness mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m living alone in a wilderness. While living here alone I might encounter youths escaping a crime or on their way to commit one, and they might take my life. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. I’d better rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ This is the fourth future peril …

Furthermore, a wilderness mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m living alone in a wilderness. But in a wilderness there are savage monsters who might take my life. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. I’d better rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ This is the fifth future peril …

These are the five future perils, seeing which is quite enough for a wilderness mendicant to meditate diligently, keenly, and resolutely for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.”

AN 5.78

AN 5.78
Future Perils (2nd)
Dutiyaanāgatabhayasutta

“Mendicants, seeing these five future perils is quite enough for a mendicant to meditate diligently, keenly, and resolutely for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. What five?

A mendicant reflects: ‘Currently I’m a youth, young, with pristine black hair, blessed with youth, in the prime of life. But there will come a time when this body is struck with old age. When you’re old, overcome by old age, it’s not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas, and it’s not easy to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. Before that unlikable, undesirable, and disagreeable thing happens, I’d better preempt it by rousing up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. That way, when it happens, I’ll live comfortably even though I’m old.’ This is the first future peril …

Furthermore, a mendicant reflects: ‘Currently, I’m rarely ill or unwell. My stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation. But there will come a time when this body is struck with sickness. When you’re sick, overcome by sickness, it’s not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas, and it’s not easy to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. Before that unlikable, undesirable, and disagreeable thing happens, I’d better preempt it by rousing up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. That way, when it happens, I’ll live comfortably even though I’m sick.’ This is the second future peril …

Furthermore, a mendicant reflects: ‘Currently, there’s plenty of food, a good harvest, so it’s easy to get almsfood, and easy to keep going by collecting alms. But there will come a time of famine, a bad harvest, when it’s hard to get almsfood, and not easy to keep going by collecting alms. In a time of famine, people move to where there’s plenty of food, where they live crowded and cramped together. When you live crowded and cramped together, it’s not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas, and it’s not easy to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. Before that unlikable, undesirable, and disagreeable thing happens, I’d better preempt it by rousing up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. That way, when it happens, I’ll live comfortably even though there’s a famine.’ This is the third future peril …

Furthermore, a mendicant reflects: ‘Currently, people live in harmony, appreciating each other, without quarreling, blending like milk and water, and regarding each other with kindly eyes. But there will come a time of peril due to turmoil in the wilds, so the countryfolk mount their vehicles and flee everywhere. In a time of peril, people move to where there's sanctuary, where they live crowded and cramped together. When you live crowded and cramped together, it's not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas, and it's not easy to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. Before that unlikable, undesirable, and disagreeable thing happens, I'd better preempt it by rousing up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. That way, when it happens, I'll live comfortably even in a time of peril.' This is the fourth future peril …

Furthermore, a mendicant reflects: 'Currently, the Saṅgha lives comfortably, in harmony, appreciating each other, without quarreling, with one recitation. But there will come a time of schism in the Saṅgha. When there is schism in the Saṅgha, it's not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas, and it's not easy to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. Before that unlikable, undesirable, and disagreeable thing happens, I'd better preempt it by rousing up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. That way, when it happens, I'll live comfortably even though there's schism in the Saṅgha.' This is the fifth future peril …

These are the five future perils, seeing which is quite enough for a mendicant to meditate diligently, keenly, and resolutely for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized."

AN 5.79

AN 5.79
Future Perils (3rd)
Tatiyaanāgatabhayasutta

“Mendicants, these five future perils have not currently arisen, but they will arise in the future. You should look out for them and try to give them up.

What five? In a future time there will be mendicants who have not developed their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. They will ordain others, but be unable to guide them in the higher ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will not develop their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will ordain others, but be unable to guide them in the higher ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will not develop their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. And that is how corrupt training comes from corrupt teachings, and corrupt teachings come from corrupt training. This is the first future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who have not developed their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. They will give dependence to others, but be unable to guide them in the higher ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will not develop their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will give dependence to others, but be unable to guide them in the higher ethics, mind, and wisdom. They too will not develop their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. And that is how corrupt training comes from corrupt teachings, and corrupt teachings come from corrupt training. This is the second future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who have not developed their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. In discussion about the teachings and elaborations they’ll fall into dark ideas without realizing it. And that is how corrupt training comes from corrupt teachings, and corrupt teachings come from corrupt training. This is the third future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who have not developed their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. When discourses spoken by the Realized One—deep, profound, transcendent, dealing with emptiness—are being recited they won’t want to listen. They won’t actively listen or try to understand, nor will they think those teachings are worth learning and memorizing. But when discourses composed by poets—poetry, with fancy words and phrases, composed by outsiders or spoken by disciples—are being recited they will want to listen. They’ll actively listen and try to understand, and they’ll think those teachings are worth learning and memorizing. And that is how corrupt training comes from corrupt teachings, and corrupt teachings come from corrupt training. This is the fourth future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who have not developed their physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom. The senior mendicants will be indulgent and slack, leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion, not rousing energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. Those who come after them will follow their example. They too will become indulgent and slack, leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion, not rousing energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. And that is how corrupt training comes from corrupt teachings, and corrupt teachings come from corrupt training. This is the fifth future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

These are the five future perils that have not currently arisen, but will arise in the future. You should look out for them, and try to give them up."

AN 5.80

AN 5.80
Future Perils (4th)
Catutthaanāgatabhayasutta

“Mendicants, these five future perils have not currently arisen, but they will arise in the future. You should look out for them and try to give them up.

What five? In a future time there will be mendicants who like nice robes. They will neglect the practice of wearing rag robes and the practice of frequenting remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. They will come down to the villages, towns, and capital cities and make their homes there. And they will try to get robes in many kinds of wrong and inappropriate ways. This is the first future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who like nice almsfood. They will neglect the practice of walking for almsfood and the practice of frequenting remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. They will come down to the villages, towns, and capital cities and make their homes there. And they will try to get almsfood in many kinds of wrong and inappropriate ways. This is the second future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who like nice lodgings. They will neglect the practice of staying at the root of a tree and the practice of frequenting remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. They will come down to the villages, towns, and capital cities and make their homes there. And they will try to get lodgings in many kinds of wrong and inappropriate ways. This is the third future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who mix closely with nuns, trainee nuns, and novice nuns. In such conditions, it can be expected that they will lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, or commit one of the corrupt offenses, or reject the training and return to a lesser life. This is the fourth future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

Furthermore, in a future time there will be mendicants who mix closely with monastery attendants and novices. In such conditions it can be expected that they will engage in storing up goods for their own use, and making obvious hints about digging the earth and cutting plants. This is the fifth future peril that has not currently arisen, but will arise in the future …

These are the five future perils that have not currently arisen, but will arise in the future. You should look out for them and try to give them up.”

AN 5.81

AN 5.81
Desirable
Rajanīyasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What five? They desire the desirable, they hate the hateful, they’re deluded by the delusory, they’re annoyed by the annoying, and they’re intoxicated by the intoxicating. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is unlikable and unlovable by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They don’t desire the desirable, they don’t hate the hateful, they’re not deluded by the delusory, they’re not annoyed by the annoying, and they’re not intoxicated by the intoxicating. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.82

AN 5.82
Free of Greed
Vītarāgasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What five? They’re not free of greed, hate, and delusion; they are offensive and contemptuous. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They’re free of greed, hate, and delusion; they’re not offensive and contemptuous. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.83

AN 5.83
Deceiver
Kuhakasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What five? They use deceit, flattery, hinting, and belittling, and they use material possessions to chase after other material possessions. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They don’t use deceit, flattery, hinting, or belittling, and they don’t use material possessions to chase after other material possessions. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.84

AN 5.84
Faithless
Assaddhasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What five? They’re faithless, shameless, imprudent, lazy, and witless. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They’re faithful, conscientious, prudent, energetic, and wise. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.85

AN 5.85
Cannot Endure
Akkhamasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What five? They can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is unlikable and unlovable to their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.86

AN 5.86
Attaining the Methods of Textual Analysis
Paṭisambhidāpattasutta

“A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five? They have attained the textual analysis of meaning, text, terminology, and eloquence. And they are deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties for their spiritual companions, understanding how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.87

AN 5.87
Ethical Sīlavantasutta

“A senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five?

They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They’re a good speaker, with a polished, clear, and articulate voice that expresses the meaning.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.88

AN 5.88
Senior Mendicants
Therasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant who has five qualities is acting for the hurt and unhappiness of the people, for the harm, hurt, and suffering of gods and humans.

What five?

They are senior and have long gone forth.

They’re well-known, famous, with a large following that includes both laypeople and renunciates.

They receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

But they have wrong view and distorted perspective. They draw many people away from the true teaching and establish them in false teachings.

People follow their example, thinking that the senior mendicant is senior and has long gone forth. Or that they’re well-known, famous, with a large following that includes both laypeople and renunciates. Or that they receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Or that they’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. A senior mendicant who has these five qualities is acting for the hurt and unhappiness of the people, for the harm, hurt, and suffering of gods and humans.

A senior mendicant who has five qualities is acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

What five?

They are senior and have long gone forth.

They’re well-known, famous, with a large following, including both laypeople and renunciates.

They receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

And they have right view and an undistorted perspective. They draw many people away from false teachings and establish them in the true teaching.

People follow their example, thinking that the senior mendicant is senior and has long gone forth. Or that they’re well-known, famous, with a large following that includes both laypeople and renunciates. Or that they receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Or that they’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. A senior mendicant who has these five qualities is acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.”

AN 5.89

AN 5.89
A Trainee (1st)
Paṭhamasekhasutta

“These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What five? They relish work, talk, sleep, and company. And they don’t review the extent of their mind’s freedom. These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What five? They don’t relish work, talk, sleep, and company. And they review the extent of their mind’s freedom. These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.”

AN 5.90

AN 5.90
A Trainee (2nd)
Dutiyasekhasutta

“These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant trainee has many duties and responsibilities, and is competent in many tasks. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the first thing that leads to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee spends too much time doing trivial work. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the second thing that leads to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee mixes closely with laypeople and renunciates, socializing inappropriately like a layperson. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the third thing that leads to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee enters the town at the wrong time, and returns too late in the day. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the fourth thing that leads to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee doesn’t get to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. They neglect retreat, and are not committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the fifth thing that leads to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant trainee doesn’t have many duties and responsibilities, even though they are competent in many tasks. They don’t neglect retreat, and are committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the first thing that doesn’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee doesn’t waste their day doing trivial work. They don’t neglect retreat, and are committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the second thing that doesn’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee doesn’t mix closely with laypeople and renunciates, socializing inappropriately like a layperson. They don’t neglect retreat, and are committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the third thing that doesn’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee doesn’t enter the village too early or return too late in the day. They don’t neglect retreat, and are committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the fourth thing that doesn’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

Furthermore, a mendicant trainee gets to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. They don’t neglect retreat, and are committed to internal serenity of heart. This is the fifth thing that doesn't lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.”

AN 5.91

AN 5.91
Accomplishments (1st)
Paṭhamasampadāsutta

“Mendicants, there are five accomplishments. What five? Accomplishment in faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. These are the five accomplishments.”

AN 5.92

AN 5.92
Accomplishment (2nd)
Dutiyasampadāsutta

“Mendicants, there are five accomplishments. What five? Accomplishment in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. These are the five accomplishments.”

AN 5.93

AN 5.93
Declarations
Byākaraṇasutta

“Mendicants, there are five ways of declaring enlightenment. What five? One declares enlightenment out of stupidity and folly. Or because of corrupt wishes, being of wishful temperament. Or because of madness and mental disorder. Or out of overestimation. Or one declares enlightenment rightly. These are the five ways of declaring enlightenment.”

AN 5.94

AN 5.94
Living Comfortably
Phāsuvihārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five ways of living comfortably. What five? It’s when a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. As the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, they enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption … They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. These are the five ways of living comfortably.”

AN 5.95

AN 5.95
Unshakable
Akuppasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has five things will soon penetrate the unshakable. What five? It’s when a mendicant has attained the textual analysis of meaning, text, terminology, and eloquence, and they review the extent of their mind’s freedom. A mendicant who has these five things will soon penetrate the unshakable.”

AN 5.96

AN 5.96
Remembering What You've Learned
Sutadharasutta

"Mendicants, a mendicant cultivating mindfulness of breathing who has five things will soon penetrate the unshakable. What five?

It's when a mendicant has few requirements and duties, and is unburdensome and contented with life's necessities.

They eat little, not devoted to filling their stomach.

They are rarely drowsy, and are dedicated to wakefulness.

They're very learned, remembering and keeping what they've learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They review the extent of their mind's freedom.

A mendicant cultivating mindfulness of breathing who has these five things will soon penetrate the unshakable."

AN 5.97

AN 5.97
Talk
Kathāsutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant developing mindfulness of breathing who has five things will soon penetrate the unshakable. What five?

It’s when a mendicant has few requirements and duties, and is unburdensome and contented with life’s necessities.

They eat little, not devoted to filling their stomach.

They are rarely drowsy, and are dedicated to wakefulness.

They get to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, keeping your distance, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom.

They review the extent of their mind’s freedom.

A mendicant developing mindfulness of breathing who has these five things will soon penetrate the unshakable.”

AN 5.98

AN 5.98
In the Wilderness
Āraññakasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant practicing mindfulness of breathing who has five things will soon penetrate the unshakable. What five? It’s when a mendicant has few requirements and duties, and is unburdensome and contented with life’s necessities. They eat little, not devoted to filling their stomach. They are rarely drowsy, and are dedicated to wakefulness. They live in the wilderness, in remote lodgings. They review the extent of their mind’s freedom. A mendicant practicing mindfulness of breathing who has these five things will soon penetrate the unshakable.”

AN 5.99

AN 5.99
The Lion
Sīhasutta

“Mendicants, towards evening the lion, king of beasts, emerges from his den, yawns, looks all around the four quarters, and roars his lion’s roar three times. Then he sets out on the hunt. If he strikes an elephant, he does it carefully, not carelessly. If he strikes a buffalo … a cow … a leopard … or any smaller creatures—even a hare or a cat—he does it carefully, not carelessly. Why is that? Thinking: ‘May I not lose my way.’

‘Lion’ is a term for the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. When the Realized One teaches Dhamma to an assembly, this is his lion’s roar. When the Realized One teaches the monks … nuns … laymen … laywomen … or ordinary people—even food-carriers and hunters—he teaches them carefully, not carelessly. Why is that? Because the Realized One has respect and reverence for the teaching.”

AN 5.100

AN 5.100
With Kakudha
Kakudhatherasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery.

At that time the Koliyan named Kakudha—Venerable Mahāmoggallāna's supporter—had recently passed away and been reborn in a certain host of mind-made gods. He was reincarnated in a life-form that was two or three times the size of a Magadhan village with its fields. But with that life-form he didn't obstruct himself or others.

Then the god Kakudha went up to Venerable Mahāmoggallāna, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, "Sir, this fixed desire arose in Devadatta: 'I shall lead the mendicant Saṅgha.' And as that thought arose, Devadatta lost that psychic power."

That's what the god Kakudha said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled Mahāmoggallāna, keeping him on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Then Mahāmoggallāna went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"But Moggallāna, did you comprehend the god Kakudha's mind, and know that everything he says is correct and not otherwise?"

"Indeed I did, sir."

"Mark these words, Moggallāna! Mark these words! Now that silly man Devadatta will expose himself by his own deeds.

Moggallāna, there are these five teachers found in the world. What five?

Firstly, some teacher with impure conduct claims: 'I am pure in ethics. My ethical conduct is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' But their disciples know: 'This teacher has impure ethical conduct, but claims to be ethically pure. They wouldn't like it if we were to tell the laypeople. And how could we treat them in a way that they don't like? But they consent to robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. A person will be recognized by their own deeds.' The disciples of such a teacher cover up their teacher's conduct, and the teacher expects them to do so.

Furthermore, some teacher with impure livelihood claims: 'I am pure in livelihood. My livelihood is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' But their disciples know: 'This teacher has impure livelihood, but claims to have pure livelihood. They wouldn't like it if we were to tell the laypeople. And how could we treat them in a way that they don't like? But they consent to robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. A person will be recognized by their own deeds.' The disciples of such a teacher cover up their teacher's livelihood, and the teacher expects them to do so.

Furthermore, some teacher with impure teaching claims: 'I am pure in teaching. My teaching is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' But their disciples know: 'This teacher has impure teaching, but claims to have pure teaching. They wouldn't like it if we were to tell the laypeople. And how could we treat them in a way that they don't like? But they consent to robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. A person will be recognized by their own deeds.' The disciples of such a teacher cover up their teacher's teaching, and the teacher expects them to do so.

Furthermore, some teacher with impure answers claims: 'I am pure in how I answer. My answers are pure, bright, uncorrupted.' But their disciples know: 'This teacher has impure answers, but claims to have pure answers. They wouldn't like it if we were to tell the laypeople. And how could we treat them in a way that they don't like? But they consent to robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. A person will be recognized by their own deeds.' The disciples of such a teacher cover up their teacher's answers, and the teacher expects them to do so.

Furthermore, some teacher with impure knowledge and vision claims: 'I am pure in knowledge and vision. My knowledge and vision are pure, bright, uncorrupted.' But their disciples know: 'This teacher has impure knowledge and vision, but claims to have pure knowledge and vision. They wouldn't like it if we were to tell the laypeople. And how could we treat them in a way that they don't like? But they consent to robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. A person will be recognized by their own deeds.' The disciples of such a teacher cover up their teacher's knowledge and vision, and the teacher expects them to do so. These are the five teachers found in the world.

But Moggallāna, I have pure ethical conduct, and I claim: 'I am pure in ethical conduct. My ethical conduct is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' My disciples don't cover up my conduct, and I don't expect them to. I have pure livelihood, and I claim: 'I am pure in livelihood. My livelihood is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' My disciples don't cover up my livelihood, and I don't expect them to. I have pure teaching, and I claim: 'I am pure in teaching. My teaching is pure, bright, uncorrupted.' My disciples don't cover up my teaching, and I don't expect them to. I have pure answers, and I claim: 'I am pure in how I answer. My answers are pure, bright, uncorrupted.' My disciples don't cover up my answers, and I don't expect them to. I have pure knowledge and vision, and I claim: 'I am pure in knowledge and vision. My knowledge and vision are pure, bright, uncorrupted.' My disciples don't cover up my knowledge and vision, and I don't expect them to."

AN 5.101

AN 5.101
Assurance
Sārajjasutta

“Mendicants, these five qualities make a trainee assured. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, ethical, learned, energetic, and wise.

A person of faith doesn’t have the insecurities of someone who lacks faith. So this quality makes a trainee assured.

An ethical person doesn’t have the insecurities of someone who is unethical. So this quality makes a trainee assured.

A learned person doesn’t have the insecurities of a person of little learning. So this quality makes a trainee assured.

An energetic person doesn’t have the insecurities of a lazy person. So this quality makes a trainee assured.

A wise person doesn’t have the insecurities of someone who is witless. So this quality makes a trainee assured.

These are the five qualities that make a trainee assured.”

AN 5.102

AN 5.102
Suspected
Ussaṅkitasutta

“Mendicants, even if a monk is of impeccable character, he might be suspected and distrusted as a ‘bad monk’ for five reasons.

What five? It’s when a monk frequently collects alms from prostitutes, widows, voluptuous girls, eunuchs, or nuns.

Even if a monk is of impeccable character, he might be suspected and distrusted as a ‘bad monk’ for these five reasons.”

AN 5.103

AN 5.103
A Master Thief
Mahācorasutta

“Mendicants, a master thief with five factors breaks into houses, plunders wealth, steals from isolated buildings, and commits highway robbery. What five? A master thief relies on rough ground, on thick cover, and on powerful individuals; they pay bribes, and they act alone.

And how does a master thief rely on rough ground? It’s when a master thief relies on inaccessible riverlands or rugged mountains. That’s how a master thief relies on rough ground.

And how does a master thief rely on thick cover? It’s when a master thief relies on thick grass, thick trees, a blind spot, or a large dense wood. That’s how a master thief relies on thick cover.

And how does a master thief rely on powerful individuals? It’s when a master thief relies on rulers or their ministers. They think: ‘If anyone accuses me of anything, these rulers or their ministers will speak in my defense in the case.’ And that’s exactly what happens. That’s how a master thief relies on powerful individuals.

And how does a master thief pay bribes? It’s when a master thief is rich, affluent, and wealthy. They think: ‘If anyone accuses me of anything, I’ll settle it with a bribe.’ And that’s exactly what happens. That’s how a master thief pays bribes.

And how does a master thief act alone? It’s when a master thief carries out robbery all alone. Why is that? So that their secret plans are not leaked to others. That’s how a master thief acts alone.

A master thief with these five factors breaks into houses, plunders wealth, steals from isolated buildings, and commits highway robbery.

In the same way, when a bad mendicant has five qualities, they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness. What five? A bad mendicant relies on rough ground, on thick cover, and on powerful individuals; they pay bribes, and they act alone.

And how does a bad mendicant rely on rough ground? It’s when a bad mendicant has unethical conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. That’s how a bad mendicant relies on rough ground.

And how does a bad mendicant rely on thick cover? It’s when a bad mendicant has wrong view, he’s attached to an extremist view. That’s how a bad mendicant relies on thick cover.

And how does a bad mendicant rely on powerful individuals? It's when a bad mendicant relies on rulers or their ministers. They think: 'If anyone accuses me of anything, these rulers or their ministers will speak in my defense in the case.' And that's exactly what happens. That's how a bad mendicant relies on powerful individuals.

And how does a bad mendicant pay bribes? It's when a bad mendicant receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. They think: 'If anyone accuses me of anything, I'll settle it with a bribe.' And that's exactly what happens. That's how a bad mendicant pays bribes.

And how does a bad mendicant act alone? It's when a bad mendicant dwells alone in the borderlands. They visit families there to get material possessions. That's how a bad mendicant acts alone.

When a bad mendicant has these five qualities, they keep themselves broken and damaged. They deserve to be blamed and criticized by sensible people, and they create much wickedness."

AN 5.104

AN 5.104
An Exquisite Ascetic of Ascetics
Samaṇasukhumālasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is an exquisite ascetic of ascetics.

What five?

It’s when a mendicant usually uses only what they’ve been invited to accept—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—rarely using them without invitation.

When living with other spiritual practitioners, they usually treat them agreeably by way of body, speech, and mind, and rarely disagreeably. And they usually present them with agreeable things, rarely with disagreeable ones.

They’re healthy, so the various unpleasant feelings—stemming from disorders of bile, phlegm, wind, or their conjunction; or caused by change in weather, by not taking care of themselves, by overexertion, or as the result of past deeds—usually don’t come up.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

And they realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these five qualities is an exquisite ascetic of ascetics.

And if anyone should be rightly called an exquisite ascetic of ascetics, it’s me. For I usually use only what I’ve been invited to accept. When living with other spiritual practitioners, I usually treat them agreeably. And I usually present them with agreeable things. I’m healthy. I get the four absorptions when I want, without trouble or difficulty. And I’ve realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. So if anyone should be rightly called an exquisite ascetic of ascetics, it’s me.”

AN 5.105

AN 5.105
Living Comfortably
Phāsuvihārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five ways of living comfortably. What five?

It’s when a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with kindness by way of body, speech, and mind, both in public and in private.

They live according to the precepts shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. Those precepts are unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion.

They live according to the view shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. That view is noble and emancipating, and brings one who practices it to the complete ending of suffering.

These are the five ways of living comfortably.”

AN 5.106

AN 5.106
With Ānanda
Ānandasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery.

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, how could a mendicant live comfortably while staying in a monastic community?"

"It's when a mendicant is accomplished in their own ethical conduct, but they don't urge others to be ethical. That's how a mendicant could live comfortably while staying in a monastic community."

"But sir, could there be another way for a mendicant to live comfortably while staying in a monastic community?"

"There could, Ānanda. It's when a mendicant is accomplished in their own ethical conduct, but they don't urge others to be ethical. And they watch themselves, but don't watch others. That's how a mendicant could live comfortably while staying in a monastic community."

"But sir, could there be another way for a mendicant to live comfortably while staying in a monastic community?"

"There could, Ānanda. It's when a mendicant is accomplished in their own ethical conduct, but they don't urge others to be ethical. And they watch themselves, but don't watch others. And they're not well-known, but aren't bothered by that. That's how a mendicant could live comfortably while staying in a monastic community."

"But sir, could there be another way for a mendicant to live comfortably while staying in a monastic community?"

"There could, Ānanda. It's when a mendicant is accomplished in their own ethical conduct, but they don't urge others to be ethical. And they watch themselves, but don't watch others. And they're not well-known, but aren't bothered by that. And they get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That's how a mendicant could live comfortably while staying in a monastic community."

"But sir, might there be another way for a mendicant to live comfortably while staying in a monastic community?"

“There could, Ānanda. It’s when a mendicant is accomplished in their own ethical conduct, but they don’t urge others to be ethical. And they watch themselves, but don’t watch others. And they’re not well-known, but aren’t bothered by that. And they get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. And they realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. That’s how a mendicant could live comfortably while staying in a monastic community.

And I say that there is no better or finer way of living comfortably than this.”

AN 5.107

AN 5.107
Ethics
Sīlasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.

What five? It’s when a mendicant is accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom.

A mendicant with these five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 5.108

AN 5.108
An adept
Asekhasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.

What five? It’s when they have the entire spectrum of the master’s ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and knowledge and vision of freedom. A mendicant with these five qualities … is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 5.109

AN 5.109
All Four Quarters
Cātuddisasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is at ease in any quarter. What five?

It’s when mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They’re content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these five qualities is at ease in any quarter.”

AN 5.110

AN 5.110
Wilderness
Araññasutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has five qualities they’re ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. What five?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They live with energy roused up. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

When a mendicant has these five qualities they’re ready to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.”

AN 5.111

AN 5.111
Visiting Families
Kulūpakasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities who visits families is unlikable and unlovable, not respected or admired. What five? They act as though they're close to people they hardly know. They give away things they don’t own. They over-associate with close friends. They whisper in the ear. And they ask for too much. A mendicant with these five qualities who visits families is unlikable and unlovable, not respected or admired.

A mendicant with five qualities who visits families is dear and beloved, respected and admired. What five? They don’t act as though they're close to people they hardly know. They don’t give away things they don’t own. They don’t over-associate with close friends. They don’t whisper in the ear. And they don’t ask for too much. A mendicant with these five qualities who visits families is dear and beloved, respected and admired.”

AN 5.112

AN 5.112
An Ascetic to Follow Behind on Almsround
Pacchāsamaṇasutta

“Mendicants, you shouldn’t take an ascetic with five qualities to follow behind on almsround. What five? They walk too far away or too close behind. They don’t take your bowl when it’s full. They don’t warn you when your speech is bordering on an offense. They keep on interrupting while you’re speaking. And they’re witless, dull, and stupid. You shouldn’t take an ascetic with these five qualities to follow behind on almsround.

You should take an ascetic with five qualities to follow behind on almsround. What five? They don’t walk too far away or too close behind. They take your bowl when it is full. They warn you when your speech is bordering on an offense. They don’t interrupt while you’re speaking. And they’re wise, bright, and clever. You should take an ascetic with these five qualities to follow behind on almsround.”

AN 5.113

AN 5.113
Right Immersion
Sammāsamādhisutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has five qualities can’t enter and remain in right immersion. What five? It’s when a mendicant can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A mendicant who has these five qualities can’t enter and remain in right immersion.

A mendicant who has five qualities can enter and remain in right immersion. What five? It’s when a mendicant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A mendicant who has these five qualities can enter and remain in right immersion.”

AN 5.114

AN 5.114
At Andhakavinda
Andhakavindasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Magadhans at Andhakavinda. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Ānanda, those mendicants who are junior, recently gone forth, newly come to this teaching and training should be encouraged, supported, and established in five things. What five?

They should be encouraged, supported, and established in restraint in the monastic code: ‘Reverends, please be ethical. Live restrained in the monastic code, conducting yourselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, keep the rules you’ve undertaken.’

They should be encouraged, supported, and established in sense restraint: ‘Reverends, please live with sense doors guarded, mindfully alert and on guard, with protected mind, having a heart protected by mindfulness.’

They should be encouraged, supported, and established in limiting their speech: ‘Reverends, please speak little. Put a limit on your speech.’

They should be encouraged, supported, and established in retreat: ‘Reverends, please live in the wilderness. Frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.’

They should be encouraged, supported, and established in right perspective: ‘Reverends, please hold right view and have right perspective.’

Those mendicants who are junior, recently gone forth, newly come to this teaching and training should be encouraged, supported, and established in these five things.”

AN 5.115

AN 5.115
Stingy
Maccharinīsutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? She is stingy with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teaching. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? She is not stingy with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, or the teaching. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.116

AN 5.116
Praise
Vaṇṇanāsutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, she praises those deserving of criticism, and criticizes those deserving of praise. She arouses faith in things that are dubious, and doesn’t arouse faith in things that are inspiring. And she wastes gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, she criticizes those deserving of criticism, and praises those deserving of praise. She doesn’t arouse faith in things that are dubious, and does arouse faith in things that are inspiring. And she doesn’t waste gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.117

AN 5.117
Jealous
Issukinīsutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, she praises those deserving of criticism, and criticizes those deserving of praise. She is jealous, stingy, and wastes gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, she criticizes those deserving of criticism, and praises those deserving of praise. She is not jealous, or stingy, and doesn’t waste gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.118

AN 5.118
Having Wrong View
Micchādiṭṭhikasutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, she praises those deserving of criticism, and criticizes those deserving of praise. She has wrong view and wrong thought, and wastes gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, she criticizes those deserving of criticism, and praises those deserving of praise. She has right view and right thought, and doesn’t waste gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.119

AN 5.119
Wrong Speech
Micchāvācāsutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, she praises those deserving of criticism, and criticizes those deserving of praise. She has wrong speech and wrong action, and wastes gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, she criticizes those deserving of criticism, and praises those deserving of praise. She has right speech and right action, and doesn’t waste gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.120

AN 5.120
Wrong Effort
Micchāvāyāmasutta

“Mendicants, a nun with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, she praises those deserving of criticism, and criticizes those deserving of praise. She has wrong effort and wrong mindfulness, and wastes gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A nun with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, she criticizes those deserving of criticism, and praises those deserving of praise. She has right effort and right mindfulness, and doesn’t waste gifts given in faith. A nun with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.121

AN 5.121
Sick
Gilānasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the infirmary, where he saw a certain mendicant who was weak and sick. He sat down on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants:

“Mendicants, if a weak and sick mendicant does not neglect five things, it can be expected that they will soon realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

What five? It’s when a mendicant meditates observing the ugliness of the body, perceives the repulsiveness of food, perceives dissatisfaction with the whole world, observes the impermanence of all conditions, and has well established the perception of their own death. If a weak and sick mendicant does not neglect these five things, it can be expected that they will soon realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.”

AN 5.122

AN 5.122
Mindfulness Well Established
Satisūpaṭṭhitasutta

“Mendicants, any monk or nun who develops and cultivates five qualities can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.

What five? It’s when a mendicant has well established mindfulness inside themselves in order to understand the arising and passing away of phenomena, meditates observing the ugliness of the body, perceives the repulsiveness of food, perceives dissatisfaction with the whole world, and observes the impermanence of all conditions. Any monk or nun who develops and cultivates these five qualities can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

AN 5.123

AN 5.123
A Carer (1st)
Paṭhamaupaṭṭhākasutta

“Mendicants, a patient with five qualities is hard to care for. What five? They do what is unsuitable. They don’t know moderation in what is suitable. They don’t take their medicine. Though their carer wants what’s best for them, they don’t accurately report their symptoms by saying when they’re getting worse, getting better, or staying the same. And they cannot endure physical pain—sharp, severe, acute, unpleasant, disagreeable, and life-threatening. A patient with these five qualities is hard to care for.

A patient with five qualities is easy to care for. What five? They do what is suitable. They know moderation in what is suitable. They take their medicine. Because their carer wants what’s best for them, they accurately report their symptoms by saying when they’re getting worse, getting better, or staying the same. And they can endure physical pain—sharp, severe, acute, unpleasant, disagreeable, and life-threatening. A patient with these five qualities is easy to care for.”

AN 5.124

AN 5.124
A Carer (2nd)
Dutiyaupaṭṭhākasutta

“Mendicants, a carer with five qualities is not competent to care for a patient. What five? They’re unable to prepare medicine. They don’t know what is suitable and unsuitable, so they supply what is unsuitable and remove what is suitable. They care for the sick for the sake of material benefits, not out of love. They’re disgusted to remove feces, urine, vomit, or spit. They’re unable to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire the patient with a Dhamma talk from time to time. A carer with these five qualities is not competent to care for a patient.

A carer with five qualities is competent to care for a patient. What five? They’re able to prepare medicine. They know what is suitable and unsuitable, so they remove what is unsuitable and supply what is suitable. They care for the sick out of love, not for the sake of material benefits. They’re not disgusted to remove feces, urine, vomit, or spit. They’re able to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire the patient with a Dhamma talk from time to time. A carer with these five qualities is competent to care for a patient.”

AN 5.125

AN 5.125
Longevity (1st)
Paṭhamaanāyussāsutta

“Mendicants, these five things impede longevity. What five? Doing what is unsuitable, not knowing moderation in what is suitable, eating food unfit for consumption, activity at unsuitable times, and unchastity. These are the five things that impede longevity.

These five things promote longevity. What five? Doing what is suitable, knowing moderation in what is suitable, eating food fit for consumption, activity at suitable times, and celibacy. These are the five things that promote longevity.”

AN 5.126

AN 5.126
Longevity (2nd)
Dutiyaanāyussāsutta

“Mendicants, these five things impede longevity. What five? Doing what is unsuitable, not knowing moderation in what is suitable, eating food unfit for consumption, unethical behavior, and bad friends. These are the five things that impede longevity.

These five things promote longevity. What five? Doing what is suitable, knowing moderation in what is suitable, eating food fit for consumption, ethical conduct, and good friends. These are the five things that promote longevity.”

AN 5.127

AN 5.127
Living Apart
Vapakāsasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is not fit to live apart from a Saṅgha community. What five? It’s when a mendicant is not content with any kind of robe, almsfood, lodging, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they have a lot of sensual thoughts. A mendicant with these five qualities is not fit to live apart from a Saṅgha community.

A mendicant with five qualities is fit to live apart from a Saṅgha community. What five? It’s when a mendicant is content with any kind of robe, almsfood, lodging, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they think a lot about renunciation. A mendicant with these five qualities is fit to live apart from a Saṅgha community.”

AN 5.128

AN 5.128
An Ascetic's Happiness
Samaṇasukhasutta

"Mendicants, there are these five kinds of suffering for an ascetic. What five? It's when a mendicant is not content with any kind of robe, almsfood, lodging, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they lead the spiritual life dissatisfied. These are five kinds of suffering for an ascetic.

There are these five kinds of happiness for an ascetic. What five? It's when a mendicant is content with any kind of robe, almsfood, lodging, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they lead the spiritual life satisfied. These are five kinds of happiness for an ascetic."

AN 5.129

AN 5.129
Fatal Wounds
Parikuppasutta

“Mendicants, these five fatal wounds lead to a place of loss, to hell. What five? Murdering your mother or father or a perfected one; maliciously shedding the blood of a Realized One; and causing a schism in the Saṅgha. These five fatal wounds lead to a place of loss, to hell.”

AN 5.130

AN 5.130
Loss
Byasanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five losses. What five? Loss of relatives, wealth, health, ethics, and view. It is not because of loss of relatives, wealth, or health that sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. It is because of loss of ethics or view that sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five losses.

There are these five endowments. What five? Endowment with relatives, wealth, health, ethics, and view. It is not because of endowment with relatives, wealth, or health that sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. It is because of endowment with ethics or view that sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five endowments.”

AN 5.131

AN 5.131
Wielding Power (1st)
Paṭhamacakkānuvattanasutta

“Mendicants, possessing five factors a wheel-turning monarch wields power only in a principled manner. And this power cannot be undermined by any human enemy.

What five? A wheel-turning monarch knows what is right, knows principle, knows moderation, knows the right time, and knows the assembly. A wheel-turning monarch who possesses these five factors wields power only in a principled manner. And this power cannot be undermined by any human enemy.

In the same way, possessing five qualities a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha rolls forth the supreme Wheel of Dhamma only in a principled manner. And that wheel cannot be rolled back by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.

What five? A Realized One knows what is right, knows principle, knows moderation, knows the right time, and knows the assembly. Possessing these five qualities a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha rolls forth the supreme Wheel of Dhamma only in a principled manner. And that wheel cannot be rolled back by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.”

AN 5.132

AN 5.132
Wielding Power (2nd)
Dutiyacakkānuvattanasutta

“Mendicants, possessing five factors a wheel-turning monarch’s eldest son continues to wield the power set in motion by his father only in a principled manner. And this power cannot be undermined by any human enemy.

What five? A wheel-turning monarch’s oldest son knows what is right, knows principle, knows moderation, knows the right time, and knows the assembly. A wheel-turning monarch’s oldest son who possesses these five factors continues to wield the power set in motion by his father only in a principled manner. And this power cannot be undermined by any human enemy.

In the same way, possessing five qualities Sāriputta rightly keeps rolling the supreme Wheel of Dhamma that was rolled forth by the Realized One. And that wheel cannot be turned back by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.

What five? Sāriputta knows what is right, knows principle, knows moderation, knows the right time, and knows the assembly. Possessing these five qualities Sāriputta rightly keeps rolling the supreme Wheel of Dhamma that was rolled forth by the Realized One. And that wheel cannot be turned back by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world.”

AN 5.133

AN 5.133
A Principled King
Dhammarājāsutta

“Mendicants, even a wheel-turning monarch, a just and principled king, does not wield power without having their own king.”

When he said this, one of the mendicants asked the Buddha, “But who is the king of the wheel-turning monarch, the just and principled king?”

“It is principle, monk,” said the Buddha.

“Monk, a wheel-turning monarch provides just protection and security for his court, relying only on principle—honoring, respecting, and venerating principle, having principle as his flag, banner, and authority.

He provides just protection and security for his aristocrats, vassals, troops, brahmins and householders, people of town and country, ascetics and brahmins, beasts and birds. When he has done this, he wields power only in a principled manner. And this power cannot be undermined by any human enemy.

In the same way, monk, a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha, a just and principled king, provides just protection and security for the monks, relying only on principle—honoring, respecting, and venerating principle, having principle as his flag, banner, and authority. ‘This kind of bodily action should be cultivated. This kind of bodily action should not be cultivated. This kind of verbal action should be cultivated. This kind of verbal action should not be cultivated. This kind of mental action should be cultivated. This kind of mental action should not be cultivated. This kind of livelihood should be cultivated. This kind of livelihood should not be cultivated. This kind of market town should be cultivated. This kind of market town should not be cultivated.’

In the same way, monk, a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha, a just and principled king, provides just protection and security for the nuns … laymen … laywomen, relying only on principle—honoring, respecting, and venerating principle, having principle as his flag, banner, and authority. ‘This kind of bodily action should be cultivated. This kind of bodily action should not be cultivated. This kind of verbal action should be cultivated. This kind of verbal action should not be cultivated. This kind of mental action should be cultivated. This kind of mental action should not be cultivated. This kind of livelihood should be cultivated. This kind of livelihood should not be cultivated. This kind of market town should be cultivated. This kind of market town should not be cultivated.’

When a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha has provided just protection and security for the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen, he rolls forth the supreme Wheel of Dhamma only in a principled manner. And that wheel cannot be rolled back by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world."

AN 5.134

AN 5.134
In Whatever Region
Yassaṁdisaṁsutta

“Mendicants, with five factors an anointed aristocratic king lives in his own realm, no matter what region he lives in.

What five?

An anointed aristocratic king is well born on both his mother’s and father’s side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation.

He is rich, affluent, and wealthy, with a full treasury and storehouses.

He is powerful, having an army of four divisions that is obedient and carries out instructions.

He has a counselor who is astute, competent, and intelligent, able to think issues through as they bear upon the past, future, and present.

These four things bring his fame to fruition.

With these five qualities, including fame, an anointed aristocratic king lives in his own realm, no matter what direction he lives in. Why is that? Because that is how it is for victors.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities lives with mind freed, no matter what region they live in. What five?

It’s when mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. This is like the anointed aristocratic king’s impeccable birth.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. This is like the anointed aristocratic king being rich, affluent, and wealthy, with full treasury and storehouses.

They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is like the anointed aristocratic king having power.

They’re wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is like the anointed aristocratic king having a counselor.

These four qualities bring their freedom to fruition.

With these five qualities, including freedom, they live in their own realm, no matter what region they live in. Why is that? Because that is how it is for those whose mind is free.”

AN 5.135

AN 5.135
Aspiration (1st)
Paṭhamapatthanāsutta

“Mendicants, an anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son with five factors aspires to kingship. What five?

It’s when an anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son is well born on both his mother’s and father’s side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation.

He is attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty.

He is dear and beloved to his parents.

He is dear and beloved to the people of town and country.

He is trained and skilled in the arts of anointed aristocratic kings, such as elephant riding, horse riding, driving a chariot, archery, and swordsmanship.

He thinks: ‘I’m well born on both my mother’s and father’s side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation. Why shouldn’t I aspire to kingship? I’m attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty. Why shouldn’t I aspire to kingship? I’m dear and beloved to my parents. Why shouldn’t I aspire to kingship? I’m dear and beloved to the people of town and country. Why shouldn’t I aspire to kingship? I’m trained and skilled in the arts of anointed aristocratic kings, such as elephant riding, horse riding, driving a chariot, archery, and swordsmanship. Why shouldn’t I aspire to kingship?’ An anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son with these five factors aspires to kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities aspires to end the defilements. What five?

It’s when a mendicant has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’

They are rarely ill or unwell. Their stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation.

They’re not devious or deceitful. They reveal themselves honestly to the Teacher or sensible spiritual companions.

They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They're strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities.

They're wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering.

They think: 'I am a person of faith; I have faith in the Realized One's awakening … Why shouldn't I aspire to end the defilements? I'm rarely ill or unwell. My stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation. Why shouldn't I aspire to end the defilements? I'm not devious or deceitful. I reveal myself honestly to the Teacher or sensible spiritual companions. Why shouldn't I aspire to end the defilements? I live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. I'm strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. Why shouldn't I aspire to end the defilements? I'm wise. I have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. Why shouldn't I aspire to end the defilements?'

A mendicant with these five qualities aspires to end the defilements."

AN 5.136

AN 5.136
Aspiration (2nd)
Dutiyapatthanāsutta

“Mendicants, an anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son with five factors aspires to become a viceroy. What five?

It’s when an anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son is well born on both his mother’s and father’s side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation.

He is attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty.

He is dear and beloved to his parents.

He is dear and beloved to the armed forces.

He is astute, competent, and intelligent, able to think issues through as they bear upon the past, future, and present.

He thinks: ‘I’m well born … attractive … dear and beloved to my parents … dear and beloved to the armed forces … I’m astute, competent, and intelligent, able to think issues through as they bear upon the past, future, and present. Why shouldn’t I aspire to become a viceroy?’ An anointed aristocratic king’s eldest son with these five factors aspires to become a viceroy.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities aspires to end the defilements. What five?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

Their mind is firmly established in the four kinds of mindfulness meditation.

They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities.

They’re wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering.

They think: ‘I’m ethical … learned … mindful … energetic … wise. I have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. Why shouldn’t I aspire to end the defilements?’ A mendicant with these five qualities aspires to end the defilements.”

AN 5.137

AN 5.137
Little Sleep
Appaṁsupatisutta

“Mendicants, these five sleep little at night, staying mostly awake. What five? A woman longing for a man. A man longing for a woman. A thief longing for their loot. A king busy with his duties. A mendicant longing for freedom from the yoke. These five sleep little at night, staying mostly awake.”

AN 5.138

AN 5.138
Eating Food
Bhattādakasutta

“Mendicants, a royal bull elephant with five factors eats food, takes up space, drops dung, and takes a ticket, yet is still considered to be a royal bull elephant. What five? It’s when a royal bull elephant can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A royal bull elephant with these five factors eats food, takes up space, drops dung, and takes a ticket, yet is still considered to be a royal bull elephant.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities eats food, takes up space, tramples beds and chairs, and takes a ticket, yet is still considered to be a mendicant. What five? It’s when a mendicant can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. A mendicant with these five qualities eats food, takes up space, tramples beds and chairs, and takes a ticket, yet is still considered to be a mendicant.”

AN 5.139

AN 5.139
Cannot Endure
Akkhamasutta

“Mendicants, a royal bull elephant with five factors is not worthy of a king, not fit to serve a king, and is not considered a factor of kingship. What five? It’s when a royal bull elephant can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can’t endure sights? It’s when a royal bull elephant gone to battle falters and founders at the sight of a division of elephants, of cavalry, of chariots, or of infantry. It doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. That’s how a royal bull elephant can’t endure sights.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can’t endure sounds? It’s when a royal bull elephant gone to battle falters and founders at the sound of a division of elephants, of cavalry, of chariots, or of infantry, or the thunder of the drums, kettledrums, horns, and cymbals. It doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. That’s how a royal bull elephant can’t endure sounds.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can’t endure smells? It’s when a royal bull elephant gone to battle falters and founders when it smells the odor of the feces and urine of battle-hardened, pedigree royal bull elephants. It doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. That’s how a royal bull elephant can’t endure smells.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can’t endure tastes? It’s when a royal bull elephant gone to battle falters and founders when it misses a meal of grass and water, or it misses two, three, four, or five meals. It doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. That’s how a royal bull elephant can’t endure tastes.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can’t endure touches? It’s when a royal bull elephant gone to battle falters and founders when struck by a swift arrow, or by two, three, four, or five swift arrows. It doesn’t stay firm, and fails to plunge into battle. That’s how a royal bull elephant can’t endure touches.

A royal bull elephant with these five factors is not worthy of a king, not fit to serve a king, and is not considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities is not worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, not worthy of hospitality, not worthy of a religious donation, not worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is not the supreme field of merit for the world. What five? It’s when a mendicant can’t endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

And how is it that a mendicant can't endure sights? It's when a mendicant, seeing a sight with their eyes, is aroused by a desirable sight, so is not able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can't endure sights.

And how is it that a mendicant can't endure sounds? It's when a mendicant, hearing a sound with their ears, is aroused by a desirable sound, so is not able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can't endure sounds.

And how is it that a mendicant can't endure smells? It's when a mendicant, smelling an odor with their nose, is aroused by a desirable smell, so is not able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can't endure smells.

And how is it that a mendicant can't endure tastes? It's when a mendicant, tasting a flavor with their tongue, is aroused by desirable tastes, so is not able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can't endure tastes.

And how is it that a mendicant can't endure touches? It's when a mendicant, feeling a touch with their body, is aroused by a desirable touch, so is not able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can't endure touches.

A mendicant with these five qualities is not worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, not worthy of hospitality, not worthy of a religious donation, not worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is not the supreme field of merit for the world.

A royal bull elephant with five factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship. What five? It's when a royal bull elephant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can endure sights? It's when a royal bull elephant gone to battle does not falter or founder at the sight of a division of elephants, of cavalry, of chariots, or of infantry. It stays firm, and plunges into battle. That's how a royal bull elephant can endure sights.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can endure sounds? It's when a royal bull elephant does not falter or founder at the sound of a division of elephants, of cavalry, of chariots, or of infantry, or the thunder of the drums, kettledrums, horns, and cymbals. It stays firm, and plunges into battle. That's how a royal bull elephant can endure sounds.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can endure smells? It's when a royal bull elephant gone to battle does not falter or founder when it smells the odor of the feces and urine of battle-hardened, pedigree royal bull elephants. It stays firm, and plunges into battle. That's how a royal bull elephant can endure smells.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can endure tastes? It's when a royal bull elephant gone to battle does not falter or founder when it misses a meal of grass and water, or it misses two, three, four, or five meals. It stays firm, and plunges into battle. That's how a royal bull elephant can endure tastes.

And how is it that a royal bull elephant can endure touches? It's when a royal bull elephant gone to battle does not falter or founder when struck by a swift arrow, or by two, three, four, or five swift arrows. It stays firm, and plunges into battle. That's how a royal bull elephant can endure touches.

A royal bull elephant with these five factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What five? It's when a mendicant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

And how is it that a mendicant can endure sights? It's when a mendicant, seeing a sight with their eyes, is not aroused by a desirable sight, so is able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can endure sights.

And how is it that a mendicant can endure sounds? It's when a mendicant, hearing a sound with their ears, is not aroused by desirable sounds, so is able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can endure sounds.

And how is it that a mendicant can endure smells? It's when a mendicant, smelling an odor with their nose, is not aroused by a desirable smell, so is able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can endure smells.

And how is it that a mendicant can endure tastes? It's when a mendicant, tasting a flavor with their tongue, is not aroused by desirable tastes, so is able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can endure tastes.

And how is it that a mendicant can endure touches? It's when a mendicant, feeling a touch with their body, is not aroused by a desirable touch, so is able to still the mind. That's how a mendicant can endure touches.

A mendicant with these five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world."

AN 5.140

AN 5.140
A Listener
Sotasutta

“Mendicants, a royal bull elephant with five factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship. What five? A royal bull elephant listens, destroys, protects, endures, and goes fast.

And how does a royal bull elephant listen? It’s when a royal bull elephant pays attention, applies the mind, concentrates wholeheartedly, and actively listens to whatever task the elephant trainer has it do, whether or not it has done it before. That’s how a royal bull elephant listens.

And how does a royal bull elephant destroy? It’s when a royal bull elephant in battle destroys elephants with their riders, horses with their riders, chariots and charioteers, and foot soldiers. That’s how a royal bull elephant destroys.

And how does a royal bull elephant protect? It’s when a royal bull elephant in battle protects its fore-quarters and hind-quarters, its fore-feet and hind-feet, and its head, ears, tusks, trunk, tail, and rider. That’s how a royal bull elephant protects.

And how does a royal bull elephant endure? It’s when a royal bull elephant in battle endures being struck by spears, swords, arrows, and axes; it endures the thunder of the drums, kettledrums, horns, and cymbals. That’s how a royal bull elephant endures.

And how does a royal bull elephant go fast? It’s when a royal bull elephant swiftly goes in whatever direction the elephant trainer sends it, whether or not it has been there before. That’s how a royal bull elephant goes fast.

A royal bull elephant with these five factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What five? A mendicant listens, destroys, protects, endures, and goes fast.

And how does a mendicant listen? It’s when a mendicant pays attention, applies the mind, concentrates wholeheartedly, and actively listens when the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One is being taught. That’s how a mendicant listens.

And how does a mendicant destroy? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t tolerate a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought. They don’t tolerate any bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen, but give them up, get rid of them, calm them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. That's how a mendicant destroys.

And how does a mendicant protect? When a mendicant sees a sight with the eyes, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of sight were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of sight, and achieving restraint over it. Hearing a sound with the ears … Smelling an odor with the nose … Tasting a flavor with the tongue … Feeling a touch with the body … Knowing an idea with the mind, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of mind were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of mind, and achieving restraint over it. That's how a mendicant protects.

And how does a mendicant endure? It's when a mendicant endures cold, heat, hunger, and thirst; the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles; rude and unwelcome criticism; and puts up with physical pain—sharp, severe, acute, unpleasant, disagreeable, and life-threatening. That's how a mendicant endures.

And how does a mendicant go fast? It's when a mendicant swiftly goes in the direction they've never gone before in all this long time; that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment. That's how a mendicant goes fast.

A mendicant with these five qualities … is the supreme field of merit for the world."

AN 5.141

AN 5.141
Scorn
Avajānātisutta

“Mendicants, these five people are found in the world. What five? One gives then scorns, one lives together then scorns, one is gullible for gossip, one is impulsive, and one is dull and stupid.

And how does a person give then scorn? It’s when a person gives someone robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. They think: ‘I give; this one receives.’ They give to that person, then they scorn them. That’s how a person gives then scorns.

And how does a person live together then scorn? It’s when a person lives with someone else for two or three years. They live together with that person, then they scorn them. That’s how a person live together then scorns.

And how is a person gullible for gossip? It’s when they’re very quick to believe what a certain person says in praise or criticism of another. That’s how a person is gullible for gossip.

And how is a person impulsive? It’s when a certain person is fickle in faith, devotion, fondness, and confidence. That’s how a person is impulsive.

And how is a person dull and stupid? It’s when they don’t know the difference between qualities that are skillful and unskillful, blameworthy and blameless, inferior and superior, and those on the side of dark and bright. That’s how a person is dull and stupid.

These are the five people found in the world.”

AN 5.142

AN 5.142
Transgression
Ārabhatisutta

“Mendicants, these five people are found in the world. What five?

One person transgresses and regrets it. And they don’t truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where those arisen bad, unskillful qualities cease without anything left over.

One person transgresses and doesn’t regret it. And they don’t understand …

One person doesn’t transgress yet still feels regret. And they don’t understand …

One person neither transgresses nor regrets. But they don’t understand …

One person neither transgresses nor regrets. And they do understand where those arisen bad, unskillful qualities cease without anything left over.

Take the case of the person who transgresses and regrets it. And they don’t truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where those arisen bad, unskillful qualities cease without anything left over. They should be told: ‘Venerable, the defilements born of transgression are found in you, and the defilements born of regret grow. You would do well to give up the defilements born of transgression and get rid of the defilements born of regret, and then develop the mind and wisdom. In this way you’ll become just like the fifth person.’

Take the case of the person who transgresses and doesn’t regret it. And they don’t understand… They should be told: ‘Venerable, the defilements born of transgression are found in you, but the defilements born of regret don’t grow. You would do well to give up the defilements born of transgression, and then develop the mind and wisdom. In this way you’ll become just like the fifth person.’

Take the case of the person who doesn’t transgress yet feels regret. And they don’t understand… They should be told: ‘Venerable, the defilements born of transgression are not found in you, yet the defilements born of regret grow. You would do well to get rid of the defilements born of regret, and then develop the mind and wisdom. In this way you’ll become just like the fifth person.’

Take the case of the person who neither transgresses nor regrets. But they don’t understand… They should be told: ‘Venerable, the defilements born of transgression are not found in you, and the defilements born of regret don’t grow. You would do well to develop the mind and wisdom. In this way you’ll become just like the fifth person.’

And so, mendicants, when these four people are advised and instructed by comparison with the fifth person, they gradually attain the ending of defilements.”

AN 5.143

AN 5.143
At Sārandada
Sārandadasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for alms.

Now at that time around five hundred Licchavis were sitting together at the Sārandada shrine, and this discussion came up among them, “The appearance of five treasures is rare in the world. What five? The elephant-treasure, the horse-treasure, the jewel-treasure, the woman-treasure, and the householder-treasure. The appearance of these five treasures is rare in the world.”

Then those Licchavis sent a man out on to the road, saying, “Mister, please tell us when you see the Buddha.”

That man saw the Buddha coming off in the distance. He went to the Licchavis and said, “Sirs, the Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha is coming. Please go at your convenience.”

Then those Licchavis went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, “Please go to the Sārandada shrine, out of compassion.” The Buddha consented with silence.

Then the Buddha went up to the Sārandada shrine, where he sat on the seat spread out, and said to the Licchavis, “Licchavis, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?”

“Well, Mister Gotama, this discussion came up among us while we were sitting together: ‘The appearance of five treasures is rare in the world. …’”

“You Licchavis are so fixated on sensual pleasures, that’s the only discussion that came up! Licchavis, the appearance of five treasures is rare in the world. What five?

The appearance of a Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha.

A person who explains the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One.

A person who understands the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One.

A person who practices in line with the teaching.

A person who is grateful and thankful.

The appearance of these five treasures is rare in the world.”

AN 5.144

AN 5.144
At Tikaṇḍakī
Tikaṇḍakīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāketa, in Tikaṇḍakī Wood. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, a mendicant would do well to meditate from time to time perceiving the following: the repulsive in the unrepulsive, the unrepulsive in the repulsive, the repulsive in both the unrepulsive and the repulsive, and the unrepulsive in both the repulsive and the unrepulsive.

A mendicant would do well to meditate from time to time staying equanimous, mindful and aware, rejecting both the repulsive and the unrepulsive.

For what reason should a mendicant meditate perceiving the repulsive in the unrepulsive? ‘May greed not arise in me for things that arouse greed.’ A mendicant should meditate perceiving the repulsive in the unrepulsive for this reason.

For what reason should a mendicant meditate perceiving the unrepulsive in the repulsive? ‘May hate not arise in me for things that provoke hate.’ …

For what reason should a mendicant meditate perceiving the repulsive in both the unrepulsive and the repulsive? ‘May greed not arise in me for things that arouse greed. May hate not arise in me for things that provoke hate.’ …

For what reason should a mendicant meditate perceiving the unrepulsive in both the repulsive and the unrepulsive? ‘May hate not arise in me for things that provoke hate. May greed not arise in me for things that arouse greed.’ …

For what reason should a mendicant meditate staying equanimous, mindful and aware, rejecting both the repulsive and the unrepulsive? ‘May no greed for things that arouse greed, hate for things that provoke hate, or delusion for things that promote delusion arise in me in any way at all.’ For this reason a mendicant should meditate staying equanimous, mindful and aware, rejecting both the repulsive and the unrepulsive.”

AN 5.145

AN 5.145
Hell
Nirayasutta

“Mendicants, someone with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. Someone with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with five qualities is raised up to heaven What five? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. Someone with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.146

AN 5.146
A Friend
Mittasutta

“Mendicants, you shouldn’t associate with a mendicant friend who has five qualities. What five? They start up work projects. They take up disciplinary issues. They conflict with leading mendicants. They like long and aimless wandering. They’re unable to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire you from time to time with a Dhamma talk. Mendicants, you shouldn’t associate with a mendicant friend who has these five qualities.

You should associate with a mendicant friend who has five qualities. What five? They don’t start up work projects. They don’t take up disciplinary issues. They don’t conflict with leading mendicants. They don’t like long and aimless wandering. They’re able to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire you from time to time with a Dhamma talk. You should associate with a mendicant friend who has these five qualities.”

AN 5.147

AN 5.147
Gifts of an Untrue Person
Asappurisadānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five gifts of an untrue person. What five? They give carelessly. They give thoughtlessly. They don’t give with their own hand. They give the dregs. They give without consideration for consequences. These are the five gifts of an untrue person.

There are these five gifts of a true person. What five? They give carefully. They give thoughtfully. They give with their own hand. They don’t give the dregs. They give with consideration for consequences. These are the five gifts of a true person.”

AN 5.148

AN 5.148
Gifts of a True Person
Sappurisadānasutta

“There are these five gifts of a true person. What five? They give a gift out of faith. They give a gift carefully. They give a gift at the right time. They give a gift with no strings attached. They give a gift without hurting themselves or others.

Having given a gift out of faith, in whatever place the result of that gift manifests they become rich, affluent, and wealthy. And they’re attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty.

Having given a gift carefully, in whatever place the result of that gift manifests they become rich, affluent, and wealthy. And their children, wives, bondservants, servants, and workers want to listen. They actively listen and try to understand.

Having given a gift at the right time, in whatever place the result of that gift manifests they become rich, affluent, and wealthy. And when the time is right, they get all that they need.

Having given a gift with no strings attached, in whatever place the result of that gift manifests they become rich, affluent, and wealthy. And their mind tends to enjoy the five refined kinds of sensual stimulation.

Having given a gift without hurting themselves or others, in whatever place the result of that gift manifests they become rich, affluent, and wealthy. And no damage comes to their property from anywhere, whether fire, flood, rulers, bandits, or unloved heirs.

These are the five gifts of a true person.”

AN 5.149

AN 5.149
Temporarily Free (1st)
Paṭhamasamayavimuttasutta

“Mendicants, these five things lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free. What five? They relish work, talk, sleep, and company. And they don’t review the extent of their mind’s freedom. These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free.

These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free. What five? They don’t relish work, talk, sleep, and company. And they review the extent of their mind’s freedom. These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free.”

AN 5.150

AN 5.150
Temporarily Free (2nd)
Dutiyasamayavimuttasutta

“Mendicants, these five things lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free. What five? They relish work, talk, and sleep. They don’t guard the sense doors and they eat too much. These five things lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free.

These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free. What five? They don’t relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They guard the sense doors and they have moderation in eating. These five things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant who is temporarily free.”

AN 5.151

AN 5.151
Surety in the Right Way (1st)
Paṭhamasammattaniyāmasutta

“Mendicants, someone with five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What five? They disparage the talk, the speaker, or themselves. They listen with scattered and scattered mind. They apply the mind irrationally. Someone with these five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities, even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What five? They don’t disparage the talk, the speaker, or themselves. They listen with unscattered and unified mind. They apply the mind rationally. Someone with these five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 5.152

AN 5.152
Surety in the Right Way (2nd)
Dutiyasammattaniyāmasutta

“Mendicants, someone with five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What five? They disparage the talk, the speaker, or themselves. They’re witless, dull, and stupid. They think they know what they don’t know. Someone with these five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities, even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What five? They don’t disparage the talk, the speaker, or themselves. They’re wise, bright, and clever. They don’t think they know what they don’t know. Someone with these five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 5.153

AN 5.153
Surety in the Right Way (3rd)
Tatiyasammattaniyāmasutta

“Mendicants, someone with five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What five? They listen to the teaching bent only on putting it down. They listen to the teaching with a hostile, fault-finding mind. They’re antagonistic to the teacher, planning to attack them. They’re witless, dull, and stupid. And they think they know what they don’t know. Someone with these five qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What five? They don’t listen to the teaching bent only on putting it down. They don’t listen to the teaching with a hostile, fault-finding mind. They’re not antagonistic to the teacher, and not planning to attack them. They’re wise, bright, and clever. And they don’t think they know what they don’t know. Someone with these five qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 5.154

AN 5.154
The Decline of the True Teaching (1st)
Paṭhamasaddhammasammosasutta

“Mendicants, these five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching. What five? It’s when mendicants don’t carefully listen to the teachings, memorize them, and remember them. They don’t carefully examine the meaning of teachings that they remember. And they don’t carefully practice in line with the meaning and the teaching they’ve understood. These five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching. What five? It’s when mendicants carefully listen to the teachings, memorize them, and remember them. They carefully examine the meaning of teachings that they remember. And they carefully practice in line with the meaning and the teaching they’ve understood. These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching.”

AN 5.155

AN 5.155
The Decline of the True Teaching (2nd)
Dutiyasaddhammasammosasutta

“Mendicants, these five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching. What five?

It’s when the mendicants don’t memorize the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. This is the first thing that leads to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

Furthermore, the mendicants don’t explain the teaching in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants don’t make others recite the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants don’t recite the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants don’t think about and consider the teaching in their hearts, examining it with their minds as they learned and memorized it. This is the fifth thing that leads to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching. What five?

It’s when the mendicants memorize the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. This is the first thing that leads to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching.

Furthermore, the mendicants explain the teaching in detail to others as they learned and memorized it. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants make others recite the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants recite the teaching in detail as they learned and memorized it. This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants think about and consider the teaching in their hearts, examining it with their minds as they learned and memorized it. This is the fifth thing that leads to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching."

AN 5.156

AN 5.156
The Decline of the True Teaching (3rd)
Tatiyasaddhammasammosasutta

“Mendicants, these five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching. What five?

It’s when the mendicants memorize discourses that they learned incorrectly, with misplaced words and phrases. When the words and phrases are misplaced, the meaning is misinterpreted. This is the first thing that leads to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

Furthermore, the mendicants are hard to admonish, having qualities that make them hard to admonish. They’re impatient, and don’t take instruction respectfully. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants who are very learned—inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines—don’t carefully make others recite the discourses. When they pass away, the discourses are cut off at the root, with no-one to preserve them. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, the senior mendicants are indulgent and slack, leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion, not rousing energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. Those who come after them follow their example. They too are indulgent and slack … This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, there’s a schism in the Saṅgha. When the Saṅgha is split, they abuse, insult, block, and reject each other. This doesn’t inspire confidence in those without it, and it causes some with confidence to change their minds. This is the fifth thing that leads to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the decline and disappearance of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching. What five? It’s when the mendicants memorize discourses that have been learned correctly, with well placed words and phrases. When the words and phrases are well organized, the meaning is correctly interpreted. This is the first thing that leads to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching.

Furthermore, the mendicants are easy to admonish, having qualities that make them easy to admonish. They’re patient, and take instruction respectfully. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, the mendicants who are very learned—inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines—carefully make others recite the discourses. When they pass away, the discourses aren't cut off at the root, and they have someone to preserve them. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, the senior mendicants are not indulgent and slack, leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion. They rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. Those who come after them follow their example. They too are not indulgent or slack … This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, the Saṅgha lives comfortably, in harmony, appreciating each other, without quarreling, with one recitation. When the Saṅgha is in harmony, they don't abuse, insult, block, or reject each other. This inspires confidence in those without it, and increases confidence in those who have it. This is the fifth thing that leads to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching.

These five things lead to the continuation, persistence, and enduring of the true teaching."

AN 5.157

AN 5.157
Inappropriate Talk
Dukkathāsutta

“Mendicants, it is inappropriate to speak to five kinds of person by comparing that person with someone else. What five?

It’s inappropriate to talk to an unfaithful person about faith. It’s inappropriate to talk to an unethical person about ethics. It’s inappropriate to talk to an unlearned person about learning. It’s inappropriate to talk to a stingy person about generosity. It’s inappropriate to talk to a witless person about wisdom.

And why is it inappropriate to talk to an unfaithful person about faith? When an unfaithful person is spoken to about faith they lose their temper, becoming annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, and displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness. Why is that? Not seeing that faith in themselves, they don’t get the rapture and joy that faith brings. That’s why it’s inappropriate to talk to an unfaithful person about faith.

And why is it inappropriate to talk to an unethical person about ethics? When an unethical person is spoken to about ethics they lose their temper … Why is that? Not seeing that ethical conduct in themselves, they don’t get the rapture and joy that ethical conduct brings. That’s why it’s inappropriate to talk to an unethical person about ethics.

And why is it inappropriate to talk to an unlearned person about learning? When an unlearned person is spoken to about learning they lose their temper … Why is that? Not seeing that learning in themselves, they don’t get the rapture and joy that learning brings. That’s why it’s inappropriate to talk to an unlearned person about learning.

And why is it inappropriate to talk to a stingy person about generosity? When an stingy person is spoken to about generosity they lose their temper … Why is that? Not seeing that generosity in themselves, they don’t get the rapture and joy that generosity brings. That’s why it’s inappropriate to talk to a stingy person about generosity.

And why is it inappropriate to talk to a witless person about wisdom? When a witless person is spoken to about wisdom they lose their temper, becoming annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, and displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness. Why is that? Not seeing that wisdom in themselves, they don’t get the rapture and joy that wisdom brings. That’s why it’s inappropriate to talk to a witless person about wisdom.

It is inappropriate to speak to these five kinds of person by comparing that person with someone else.

It is appropriate to speak to five kinds of person by comparing that person with someone else. What five?

It's appropriate to talk to a faithful person about faith. It's appropriate to talk to an ethical person about ethical conduct. It's appropriate to talk to a learned person about learning. It's appropriate to talk to a generous person about generosity. It's appropriate to talk to a wise person about wisdom.

And why is it appropriate to talk to a faithful person about faith? When a faithful person is spoken to about faith they don't lose their temper, they don't get annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, or display annoyance, hate, and bitterness. Why is that? Seeing that faith in themselves, they get the rapture and joy that faith brings. That's why it's appropriate to talk to a faithful person about faith.

And why is it appropriate to talk to an ethical person about ethical conduct? When an ethical person is spoken to about ethical conduct they don't lose their temper … Why is that? Seeing that ethical conduct in themselves, they get the rapture and joy that ethical conduct brings. That's why it's appropriate to talk to an ethical person about ethical conduct.

And why is it appropriate to talk to a learned person about learning? When a learned person is spoken to about learning they don't lose their temper … Why is that? Seeing that learning in themselves, they get the rapture and joy that learning brings. That's why it's appropriate to talk to a learned person about learning.

And why is it appropriate to talk to a generous person about generosity? When a generous person is spoken to about generosity they don't lose their temper … Why is that? Seeing that generosity in themselves, they get the rapture and joy that generosity brings. That's why it's appropriate to talk to a generous person about generosity.

And why is it appropriate to talk to a wise person about wisdom? When a wise person is spoken to about wisdom they don't lose their temper, they don't get annoyed, hostile, and hard-hearted, or display annoyance, hate, and bitterness. Why is that? Seeing that wisdom in themselves, they get the rapture and joy that wisdom brings. That's why it's appropriate to talk to a wise person about wisdom.

It is appropriate to speak to these five kinds of person by comparing that person with someone else."

AN 5.158

AN 5.158
Timidity
Sārajjasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five qualities is overcome by timidity. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithless, unethical, with little learning, lazy, and witless. A mendicant with these five qualities is overcome by timidity.

A mendicant with five qualities is self-assured. What five? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, ethical, learned, energetic, and wise. A mendicant with these five qualities is self-assured.”

AN 5.159

AN 5.159
With Udāyī
Udāyīsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. Now, at that time Venerable Udāyī was sitting teaching Dhamma, surrounded by a large assembly of laypeople. Seeing this, Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, Venerable Udāyī is teaching Dhamma, surrounded by a large assembly of laypeople."

"Ānanda, it's not easy to teach Dhamma to others. You should establish five things in yourself before teaching Dhamma to others. What five?

You should teach Dhamma to others thinking: 'I will teach step by step.' …

'I will teach showing my method.' …

'I will teach out of kindness.' …

'I will not teach while secretly hoping to profit.' …

'I will teach without hurting myself or others.'

It's not easy to teach Dhamma to others. You should establish these five things in yourself before teaching Dhamma to others."

AN 5.160

AN 5.160
Hard to Get Rid Of Duppaṭivinodayasutta

“Mendicants, these five things are hard to get rid of once they’ve arisen. What five? Greed, hate, delusion, the feeling of being inspired to speak out, and thoughts of traveling. These five things are hard to get rid of once they’ve arisen.”

AN 5.161

AN 5.161
Getting Rid of Resentment (1st)
Paṭhamaāghātapaṭivinayasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant should use these five methods to completely get rid of resentment when it has arisen toward anyone. What five?

You should develop love for a person you resent. That’s how to get rid of resentment for that person.

You should develop compassion for a person you resent. …

You should develop equanimity for a person you resent. …

You should disregard a person you resent, paying no attention to them. …

You should apply the concept that we are the owners of our deeds to that person: ‘This venerable is the owner of their deeds and heir to their deeds. Deeds are their womb, their relative, and their refuge. They shall be the heir of whatever deeds they do, whether good or bad.’ That’s how to get rid of resentment for that person.

A mendicant should use these five methods to completely get rid of resentment when it has arisen toward anyone.”

AN 5.162

AN 5.162
Getting Rid of Resentment (2nd)
Dutiyaāghātapaṭivinayasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“Reverends, a mendicant should use these five methods to completely get rid of resentment when it has arisen toward anyone. What five?

In the case of a person whose behavior by way of body is impure, but whose behavior by way of speech is pure, you should get rid of resentment for that kind of person.

In the case of a person whose behavior by way of speech is impure, but whose behavior by way of body is pure, …

In the case of a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is impure, but who gets an openness and clarity of heart from time to time, …

In the case of a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is impure, and who doesn’t get an openness and clarity of heart from time to time, …

In the case of a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is pure, and who gets an openness and clarity of heart from time to time, you should get rid of resentment for that kind of person.

How should you get rid of resentment for a person whose behavior by way of body is impure, but whose behavior by way of speech is pure? Suppose a mendicant wearing rag robes sees a rag by the side of the road. They’d hold it down with the left foot, spread it out with the right foot, tear out what was intact, and take it away with them. In the same way, at that time you should ignore that person’s impure behavior by way of body and focus on their pure behavior by way of speech. That’s how to get rid of resentment for that person.

How should you get rid of resentment for a person whose behavior by way of speech is impure, but whose behavior by way of body is pure? Suppose there was a lotus pond covered with moss and aquatic plants. Then along comes a person struggling in the oppressive heat, weary, thirsty, and parched. They’d plunge into the lotus pond, sweep apart the moss and aquatic plants, drink from their cupped hands, and be on their way. In the same way, at that time you should ignore that person’s impure behavior by way of speech and focus on their pure behavior by way of body. That’s how to get rid of resentment for that person.

How should you get rid of resentment for a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is impure, but who gets an openness and clarity of heart from time to time? Suppose there was a little water in a cow's hoofprint. Then along comes a person struggling in the oppressive heat, weary, thirsty, and parched. They might think: 'This little bit of water is in a cow's hoofprint. If I drink it with my cupped hands or a bowl, I'll stir it and disturb it, making it undrinkable. Why don't I get down on all fours and drink it up like a cow, then be on my way?' So that's what they do. In the same way, at that time you should ignore that person's impure behavior by way of speech and body, and focus on the fact that they get an openness and clarity of heart from time to time. That's how to get rid of resentment for that person.

How should you get rid of resentment for a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is impure, and who doesn't get an openness and clarity of heart from time to time? Suppose a person was traveling along a road, and they were sick, suffering, gravely ill. And it was a long way to a village, whether ahead or behind. And they didn't have any suitable food or medicine, or a competent carer, or someone to bring them within a village. Then another person traveling along the road sees them, and thinks of them with nothing but compassion, kindness, and sympathy: 'Oh, may this person get suitable food or medicine, or a competent carer, or someone to bring them within a village. Why is that? So that they don't come to ruin right here.' In the same way, at that time you should ignore that person's impure behavior by way of speech and body, and the fact that they don't get an openness and clarity of heart from time to time, and think of them with nothing but compassion, kindness, and sympathy: 'Oh, may this person give up bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and develop good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. Why is that? So that, when their body breaks up, after death, they're not reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.' That's how to get rid of resentment for that person.

How should you get rid of resentment for a person whose behavior by way of body and speech is pure, and who gets an openness and clarity of heart from time to time? Suppose there was a lotus pond with clear, sweet, cool water, clean, with smooth banks, delightful, and shaded by many trees. Then along comes a person struggling in the oppressive heat, weary, thirsty, and parched. They'd plunge into the lotus pond to bathe and drink. And after emerging they'd sit or lie down right there in the shade of the trees.

In the same way, at that time you should focus on that person's pure behavior by way of body and speech, and on the fact that they get an openness and clarity of heart from time to time. That's how to get rid of resentment for that person. Relying on a person who is impressive all around, the mind becomes confident.

A mendicant should use these five methods to completely get rid of resentment when it has arisen toward anyone."

AN 5.163

AN 5.163
Discussions
Sākacchasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“A mendicant with five qualities is fit to hold a discussion with their spiritual companions. What five?

A mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, and answers questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in ethics.

They’re personally accomplished in immersion, …

They’re personally accomplished in wisdom, …

They’re personally accomplished in freedom, …

They’re personally accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

A mendicant with these five qualities is fit to hold a discussion with their spiritual companions.”

AN 5.164

AN 5.164
Sharing a Way of Life
Sājīvasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“A mendicant with five qualities is fit to share their life with their spiritual companions. What five?

A mendicant is personally accomplished in ethics, and answers questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in ethics.

They’re personally accomplished in immersion, …

They’re personally accomplished in wisdom, …

They’re personally accomplished in freedom, …

They’re personally accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom, and they answer questions that come up when discussing accomplishment in the knowledge and vision of freedom.

A mendicant with these five qualities is fit to share their life with their spiritual companions.”

AN 5.165

AN 5.165
Asking Questions
Pañhapucchāsutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: … “Whoever asks a question of another, does so for one or other of these five reasons. What five? Someone asks a question of another from stupidity and folly. Or they ask from corrupt wishes, being of wishful temperament. Or they ask in order to disparage. Or they ask wanting to understand. Or they ask with the thought, ‘If they correctly answer the question I ask it’s good. If not, I’ll correctly answer it for them.’ Whoever asks a question of another, does so for one or other of these five reasons. As for myself, I ask with the thought, ‘If they correctly answer the question I ask it’s good. If not, I’ll correctly answer it for them.’”

AN 5.166

AN 5.166
Cessation
Nirodhasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“Reverends, take a mendicant who is accomplished in ethics, immersion, and wisdom. They might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. That is possible. If they don’t reach enlightenment in this very life, then, surpassing the company of gods that consume solid food, they’re reborn in a certain host of mind-made gods. There they might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. That is possible.”

When he said this, Venerable Udāyī said to him, “This is not possible, Reverend Sāriputta, it cannot happen!”

But for a second … and a third time Sāriputta repeated his statement.

And for a third time, Udāyī said to him, “This is not possible, Reverend Sāriputta, it cannot happen!”

Then Venerable Sāriputta thought, “Venerable Udāyī disagrees with me three times, and not one mendicant agrees with me. Why don’t I go to see the Buddha?”

Then Sāriputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to the mendicants:

“Reverends, take a mendicant who is accomplished in ethics, immersion, and wisdom. They might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. There is such a possibility. If they don’t reach enlightenment in this very life, they’re reborn in the company of a certain host of mind-made gods, who surpass the gods that consume solid food. There they might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. That is possible.”

When he said this, Udāyī said to him, “This is not possible, Reverend Sāriputta, it cannot happen!”

But for a second … and a third time Sāriputta repeated his statement.

And for a third time, Udāyī said to him, “This is not possible, Reverend Sāriputta, it cannot happen!”

Then Venerable Sāriputta thought, “Even in front of the Buddha Venerable Udāyī disagrees with me three times, and not one mendicant agrees with me. I’d better stay silent.” Then Sāriputta fell silent.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Udāyī, “But Udāyī, do you believe in a mind-made body?”

“For those gods, sir, who are formless, made of perception.”

“Udāyī, what has an incompetent fool like you got to say? How on earth could you imagine you’ve got something worth saying!”

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, “Ānanda! How can you just watch while a senior mendicant is being harassed? Don’t you have any compassion for a senior mendicant who is being harassed?”

Then the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

“Mendicants, take a mendicant who is accomplished in ethics, immersion, and wisdom. They might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. That is possible. If they don’t reach enlightenment in this very life, they’re reborn in the company of a certain host of mind-made gods, who surpass the gods that consume solid food. There they might enter into and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling. That is possible.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Then, not long after the Buddha had left, Venerable Ānanda went to Venerable Upavāna and said to him, “Reverend Upavāna, they’ve been harassing other senior mendicants, but I didn’t question them. I wouldn’t be surprised if the Buddha brings this up when he comes out of retreat later this afternoon. He might even call upon Venerable Upavāna himself. And right now I feel timid.”

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall, where he sat on the seat spread out, and said to Upavāna, “Upavāna, how many qualities should a senior mendicant have to be dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired?”

“Sir, a senior mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They're a good speaker, with a polished, clear, and articulate voice that expresses the meaning.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired."

"Good, good, Upavāna! A senior mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. If these five qualities are not found in a senior mendicant, why would their spiritual companions honor, respect, revere, or venerate them? Because of their broken teeth, gray hair, and wrinkled skin? But since these five qualities are found in a senior mendicant, their spiritual companions honor, respect, revere, or venerate them."

AN 5.167

AN 5.167
Accusation
Codanāsutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should first establish five things in themselves.

What five? I will speak at the right time, not at the wrong time. I will speak truthfully, not falsely. I will speak gently, not harshly. I will speak beneficially, not harmfully. I will speak lovingly, not from secret hate. A mendicant who wants to accuse another should first establish these five things in themselves.

Take a case where I see a certain person being accused at the wrong time, not being disturbed at the right time. They’re accused falsely, not disturbed truthfully. They’re accused harshly, not disturbed gently. They’re accused harmfully, not disturbed beneficially. They’re accused with secret hate, not disturbed lovingly.

The mendicant who is accused improperly should be reassured in five ways. ‘Venerable, you were accused at the wrong time, not at the right time. There’s no need for you to feel remorse. You were accused falsely, not truthfully. … You were accused harshly, not gently. … You were accused harmfully, not beneficially. … You were accused with secret hate, not lovingly. There’s no need for you to feel remorse.’ A mendicant who is accused improperly should be reassured in these five ways.

The mendicant who makes improper accusations should be chastened in five ways. ‘Reverend, you made an accusation at the wrong time, not at the right time. There’s a reason for you to feel remorse. You made an accusation falsely, not truthfully. … You made an accusation harshly, not gently. … You made an accusation harmfully, not beneficially. … You made an accusation with secret hate, not lovingly. There’s a reason for you to feel remorse.’ The mendicant who makes improper accusations should be chastened in these five ways. Why is that? So that another mendicant wouldn’t think to make a false accusation.

Take a case where I see a certain person being accused at the right time, not being disturbed at the wrong time. They’re accused truthfully, not disturbed falsely. They’re accused gently, not disturbed harshly. They’re accused beneficially, not disturbed harmfully. They’re accused lovingly, not disturbed with secret hate.

The mendicant who is accused properly should be chastened in five ways. ‘Venerable, you were accused at the right time, not at the wrong time. There’s a reason for you to feel remorse. You were accused truthfully, not falsely. … You were accused gently, not harshly. … You were accused beneficially, not harmfully. … You were accused lovingly, not with secret hate. There's a reason for you to feel remorse.' The mendicant who is accused properly should be chastened in these five ways.

The mendicant who makes proper accusations should be reassured in five ways. 'Reverend, you made an accusation at the right time, not at the wrong time. There's no need for you to feel remorse. You made an accusation truthfully, not falsely. … You made an accusation gently, not harshly. … You made an accusation beneficially, not harmfully. … You made an accusation lovingly, not with secret hate. There's no need for you to feel remorse.' The mendicant who makes proper accusations should be reassured in these five ways. Why is that? So that another mendicant would think to make a true accusation.

A person who is accused should ground themselves in two things: truth and an even temper. Even if others accuse me—at the right time or the wrong time, truthfully or falsely, gently or harshly, beneficially or harmfully, lovingly or with secret hate—I will still ground myself in two things: truth and an even temper. If I know that that quality is found in me, I will tell them that it is. If I know that that quality is not found in me, I will tell them that it is not."

"Even when you speak like this, Sāriputta, there are still some foolish people here who do not respectfully take it up."

"Sir, there are those faithless people who went forth from the lay life to homelessness not out of faith but to earn a livelihood. They're devious, deceitful, and sneaky. They're restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, and loose-tongued. They do not guard their sense doors or eat in moderation, and they are not dedicated to wakefulness. They don't care about the ascetic life, and don't keenly respect the training. They're indulgent and slack, leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion, lazy, and lacking energy. They're unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying minds, witless and stupid. When I speak to them like this, they don't respectfully take it up.

Sir, there are those gentlemen who went forth from the lay life to homelessness out of faith. They're not devious, deceitful, and sneaky. They're not restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, and loose-tongued. They guard their sense doors and eat in moderation, and they are dedicated to wakefulness. They care about the ascetic life, and keenly respect the training. They're not indulgent or slack, nor are they leaders in backsliding, neglecting seclusion. They're energetic and determined. They're mindful, with situational awareness, immersion, and unified minds; wise, not stupid. When I speak to them like this, they do respectfully take it up."

"Sāriputta, those faithless people who went forth from the lay life to homelessness not out of faith but to earn a livelihood … Leave them be.

But those gentlemen who went forth from the lay life to homelessness out of faith … You should speak to them. Sāriputta, you should advise your spiritual companions! You should instruct your spiritual companions! Thinking: 'I will draw my spiritual companions away from false teachings and ground them in true teachings.' That's how you should train."

AN 5.168

AN 5.168
Ethics
Sīlasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“Reverends, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness. In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion.

When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.”

AN 5.169

AN 5.169
Quick-witted
Khippanisantisutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to him:

“Reverend Sāriputta, how are we to define a mendicant who is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings, who learns well, learns much, and does not forget what they’ve learned?”

“Well, Venerable Ānanda, you’re very learned. Why don’t you clarify this yourself?”

“Well then, Reverend Sāriputta, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, reverend,” Sāriputta replied. Venerable Ānanda said this:

“It’s when a mendicant is skilled in the meaning, skilled in the teaching, skilled in terminology, skilled in phrasing, and skilled in sequence. That is how to define a mendicant who is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings, who learns well, learns much, and does not forget what they’ve learned.”

“It’s incredible, it’s amazing! How well this was said by Venerable Ānanda! And we will remember Venerable Ānanda as someone who has these five qualities: ‘Reverend Ānanda is skilled in the meaning, skilled in the teaching, skilled in terminology, skilled in phrasing, and skilled in sequence.’”

AN 5.170

AN 5.170
With Bhaddaji
Bhaddajisutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. Then Venerable Bhaddaji went up to Venerable Ānanda, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side, and Venerable Ānanda said to him:

"Reverend Bhaddaji, what is the best sight, the best sound, the best happiness, the best perception, and the best state of existence?"

"Reverend, there is this Brahmā, the vanquisher, the unvanquished, the universal seer, the wielder of power. When you see Brahmā, that's the best sight. There are the gods called 'of streaming radiance', who are drenched and steeped in pleasure. Every so often they feel inspired to exclaim: 'Oh, what bliss! Oh, what bliss!' When you hear that, it's the best sound. There are the gods called 'replete with glory'. Since they're truly content, they experience pleasure. This is the best happiness. There are the gods reborn in the dimension of nothingness. This is the best perception. There are the gods reborn in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. This is the best state of existence."

"So, Venerable Bhaddaji, do you agree with what most people say about this?"

"Well, Venerable Ānanda, you're very learned. Why don't you clarify this yourself?"

"Well then, Reverend Bhaddaji, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, reverend," Bhaddaji replied. Ānanda said this:

"What you see when the defilements end in the present life is the best sight. What you hear when the defilements end in the present life is the best sound. The happiness you feel when the defilements end in the present life is the best happiness. What you perceive when the defilements end in the present life is the best perception. The state of existence in which the defilements end in the present life is the best state of existence."

AN 5.171

AN 5.171
Timidity
Sārajjasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"A lay follower with five qualities is overcome by timidity. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower with these five qualities is overcome by timidity.

A lay follower with five qualities is self-assured. What five? They don't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower with these five qualities is self-assured."

AN 5.172

AN 5.172
Assured
Visāradasutta

“A lay follower living at home with five qualities is not self-assured. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower living at home with these five qualities is not self-assured.

A lay follower living at home with these five qualities is self-assured. What five? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower living at home with these five qualities is self-assured.”

AN 5.173

AN 5.173
Hell
Nirayasutta

“Mendicants, a lay follower with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A lay follower with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A lay follower with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.174

AN 5.174
Threats
Verasutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Householder, unless these five dangers and threats are given up, one is said to be unethical, and is reborn in hell. What five? Killing living creatures, stealing, committing sexual misconduct, lying, and using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. Unless these five dangers and threats are given up, one is said to be unethical, and is reborn in hell.

Once these five dangers and threats are given up, one is said to be ethical, and is reborn in heaven. What five? Killing living creatures, stealing, committing sexual misconduct, lying, and using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. Once these five dangers and threats are given up, one is said to be ethical, and is reborn in heaven.

Anyone who kills living creatures creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from killing living creatures creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from killing living creatures.

Anyone who steals …

Anyone who commits sexual misconduct …

Anyone who lies …

Anyone who uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence.

Take anyone in this world who kills living creatures, speaks falsely, steals, commits adultery, and indulges in drinking alcohol and liquor.

Unless they give up these five threats, they’re said to be unethical. When their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.

A person in the world doesn’t kill living creatures, speak falsely, steal, commit adultery, or indulge in drinking alcohol and liquor.

Giving up these five threats, they’re said to be ethical. When their body breaks up, that wise person is reborn in a good place.”

AN 5.175

AN 5.175
Corpse-worker
Caṇḍālasutta

“Mendicants, a lay follower with five qualities is a corpse-worker, a stain, and a reject among lay followers. What five? They’re faithless. They’re unethical. They follow boisterous superstitious rites, believing in omens rather than deeds. They seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations. And they make offerings there first. A lay follower with these five qualities is a corpse-worker, a stain, and a reject among lay followers.

A lay follower with five qualities is a gem, a pink lotus, and a white lotus among lay followers. What five? They’re faithful. They’re ethical. They don’t practice noisy, superstitious rites, and believe in deeds rather than omens. They don’t seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations. And they don’t make offerings there first. A lay follower with these five qualities is a gem, a pink lotus, and a white lotus among lay followers.”

AN 5.176

AN 5.176
Rapture
Pītisutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, escorted by around five hundred lay followers, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Householders, you have supplied the mendicant Saṅgha with robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But you should not be content with just this much. So you should train like this: ‘How can we, from time to time, enter and dwell in the rapture of seclusion?’ That’s how you should train.”

When he said this, Venerable Sāriputta said to the Buddha, “It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! How well said this was by the Buddha: ‘Householders, you have supplied the mendicant Saṅgha with robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But you should not be content with just this much. So you should train like this: “How can we, from time to time, enter and dwell in the rapture of seclusion?” That’s how you should train.’

At a time when a noble disciple enters and dwells in the rapture of seclusion, five things aren’t present in him. The pain and sadness connected with sensual pleasures. The pleasure and happiness connected with sensual pleasures. The pain and sadness connected with the unskillful. The pleasure and happiness connected with the unskillful. The pain and sadness connected with the skillful. At a time when a noble disciple enters and dwells in the rapture of seclusion, these five things aren’t present in him.”

“Good, good, Sāriputta! At a time when a noble disciple enters and dwells in the rapture of seclusion, five things aren’t present in him. The pain and sadness connected with sensual pleasures. The pleasure and happiness connected with sensual pleasures. The pain and sadness connected with the unskillful. The pleasure and happiness connected with the unskillful. The pain and sadness connected with the skillful. At a time when a noble disciple enters and dwells in the rapture of seclusion, these five things aren’t present in him.”

AN 5.177

AN 5.177
Trades
Vaṇijjāsutta

“Mendicants, a lay follower should not engage in these five trades. What five? Trade in weapons, living creatures, meat, intoxicants, and poisons. A lay follower should not engage in these five trades.”

AN 5.178

AN 5.178
Kings
Rājāsutta

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a person who has given up killing living creatures, and then the kings have them arrested for that, and execute, imprison, or banish them, or do what the case requires?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Rather, the kings are informed of someone’s bad deed: ‘This person has murdered a man or a woman.’ Then the kings have them arrested for killing, and execute, imprison, or banish them, or do what the case requires. Have you ever seen or heard of such a case?”

“Sir, we have seen it and heard of it, and we will hear of it again.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a person who has given up stealing, and then the kings have them arrested for that …?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Rather, the kings are informed of someone’s bad deed: ‘This person took something from a village or wilderness, with the intention to commit theft.’ Then the kings have them arrested for stealing … Have you ever seen or heard of such a case?”

“Sir, we have seen it and heard of it, and we will hear of it again.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a person who has given up sexual misconduct, and then the kings have them arrested for that …?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Rather, the kings are informed of someone’s bad deed: ‘This person had sexual relations with women or maidens under someone else’s protection.’ Then the kings have them arrested for that … Have you ever seen or heard of such a case?”

“Sir, we have seen it and heard of it, and we will hear of it again.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a person who has given up lying, and then the kings have them arrested for that …?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Rather, the kings are informed of someone’s bad deed: ‘This person has ruined a householder or householder’s child by lying.’ Then the kings have them arrested for that … Have you ever seen or heard of such a case?”

“Sir, we have seen it and heard of it, and we will hear of it again.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a person who has given up alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, and then the kings have them arrested for that, and execute, imprison, or banish them, or do what the case requires?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Rather, the kings are informed of someone’s bad deed: ‘While under the influence of alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, this person murdered a woman or a man. Or they stole something from a village or wilderness. Or they had sexual relations with women or maidens under someone else’s protection. Or they ruined a householder or householder’s child by lying.’ Then the kings have them arrested for being under the influence of alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, and execute, imprison, or banish them, or do what the case requires. Have you ever seen or heard of such a case?”

“Sir, we have seen it and heard of it, and we will hear of it again.”

AN 5.179

AN 5.179
A Layperson
Gihisutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, escorted by around five hundred lay followers, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Then the Buddha said to Venerable Sāriputta:

"You should know this, Sāriputta, about those white-clothed laypeople whose actions are restrained in the five precepts, and who get four blissful meditations in the present life belonging to the higher mind when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They may, if they wish, declare of themselves: 'I've finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I've finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I'm not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.'

And what are the five precepts in which their actions are restrained? It's when a noble disciple doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five precepts in which their actions are restrained.

And what are the four blissful meditations in the present life belonging to the higher mind that they get when they want, without trouble or difficulty?

It's when a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the Buddha: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' This is the first blissful meditation in the present life belonging to the higher mind, which they achieve in order to purify the unpurified mind and cleanse the unclean mind.

Furthermore, a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the teaching: 'The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.' This is the second blissful meditation …

Furthermore, a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the Saṅgha: 'The Saṅgha of the Buddha's disciples is practicing the way that's good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha's disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.' This is the third blissful meditation …

Furthermore, a noble disciple's ethical conduct is loved by the noble ones, unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. This is the fourth blissful meditation in the present life belonging to the higher mind, which they achieve in order to purify the unpurified mind and cleanse the unclean mind. These are the four blissful meditations in the present life belonging to the higher mind that they get when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

You should know this, Sāriputta, about those white-clothed laypeople whose actions are restrained in the five precepts, and who get four blissful meditations in the present life belonging to the higher mind when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They may, if they wish, declare of themselves: 'I've finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I've finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I'm not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.'

Seeing the peril in the hells, you should shun bad deeds. Taking up the teaching of the noble ones, an astute person should shun them.

You shouldn't harm living beings, so long as strength is found. Nor should you knowingly speak falsehood, or take what is not given.

Content with your own partners, you should stay away from the partners of others. A man shouldn't drink liquor or wine, as they confuse the mind.

You should recollect the Buddha, and reflect on the teaching. You should develop a harmless mind of welfare, which leads to the realms of gods.

When suitable gifts to give are available to someone who seeks and needs merit, a religious donation is abundant if given first to the peaceful ones.

I will tell of the peaceful ones, Sāriputta, listen to me. Cows may be black or white, red or tawny, mottled or uniform, or pigeon-colored. But when one is born among them, the bull that's tamed—a behemoth, powerful, well-paced in pulling forward—they yoke the load just to him, regardless of his color.

So it is for humans, wherever they may be born—among aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, menials, or corpse-workers and scavengers—but when one is born among them, tamed, true to their vows. Firm in principle, accomplished in ethical conduct, truthful, conscientious, they've given up birth and death, and have completed the spiritual journey. With burden put down, detached, they've completed the task and are free of defilements.

Gone beyond all things, they’re extinguished by not grasping. In that flawless field, a religious donation is abundant.

Fools who don’t understand—stupid, unlearned—give their gifts to those outside, and don’t attend the peaceful ones.

But those who do attend the peaceful ones—wise, esteemed as sages—and whose faith in the Holy One has roots planted deep, they go to the realm of the gods, or are born here in a good family. Gradually those astute ones reach extinguishment.”

AN 5.180

AN 5.180
About Gavesī
Gavesīsutta

At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants. While traveling along a road the Buddha saw a large sal grove in a certain spot. He left the road, went to the sal grove, and plunged deep into it. And at a certain spot he smiled.

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “What is the cause, what is the reason why the Buddha smiled? Realized Ones do not smile for no reason.”

So Venerable Ānanda said to the Buddha, “What is the cause, what is the reason why the Buddha smiled? Realized Ones do not smile for no reason.”

“Once upon a time, Ānanda, there was a city in this spot that was successful and prosperous, populous, full of people. And Kassapa, a blessed one, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha, lived supported by that city.

He had a lay follower called Gavesī who had not fulfilled all the precepts. And the five hundred lay followers who were taught and advised by Gavesī also had not fulfilled all the precepts. Then Gavesī thought: ‘I’m the helper, leader, and adviser of these five hundred lay followers, yet neither I nor they have fulfilled the precepts. We’re the same, I’m in no way better. So let me do better.’

Then Gavesī went to those five hundred lay followers and said to them: ‘From this day forth may the venerables remember me as one who has fulfilled the precepts.’ Then those five hundred lay followers thought: ‘The venerable Gavesī is our helper, leader, and adviser, and now he will fulfill the precepts. Why don’t we do the same?’ Then those five hundred lay followers went to Gavesī and said to him: ‘From this day forth may Venerable Gavesī remember these five hundred lay followers as having fulfilled the precepts.’

Then Gavesī thought: ‘I’m the helper, leader, and adviser of these five hundred lay followers, and both I and they have fulfilled the precepts. We’re the same, I’m in no way better. So let me do better.’

Then Gavesī went to those five hundred lay followers and said to them: ‘From this day forth may the venerables remember me as one who is celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex.’ Then those five hundred lay followers did the same. …

Then Gavesī thought: ‘These five hundred lay followers … are celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. We’re the same, I’m in no way better. So let me do better.’

Then Gavesī went to those five hundred lay followers and said to them: ‘From this day forth may the venerables remember me as one who eats in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night, and from food at the wrong time.’ Then those five hundred lay followers did the same. …

Then Gavesī thought: ‘These five hundred lay followers … eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night, and food at the wrong time. We’re the same, I’m in no way better. So let me do better.’

Then the lay follower Gavesī went up to the blessed one Kassapa, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha and said to him: ‘Sir, may I receive the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha’s presence?’ And he received the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha’s presence. Not long after his ordination, the mendicant Gavesī, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: ‘Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.’ And the mendicant Gavesī became one of the perfected.

Then those five hundred lay followers thought: ‘Venerable Gavesī is our helper, leader, and adviser, He has shaved off his hair and beard, dressed in ocher robes, and gone forth from the lay life to homelessness. Why don’t we do the same?’ Then those five hundred lay followers went up to the blessed one Kassapa, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha and said to him: ‘Sir, may we receive the going forth and ordination in the Buddha’s presence?’ And they did receive the going forth and ordination in the Buddha’s presence.

Then the mendicant Gavesī thought: ‘I get the supreme bliss of freedom whenever I want, without trouble or difficulty. Oh, may these five hundred mendicants do the same!’ Then those five hundred mendicants, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. They lived having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

They understood: ‘Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.’

And so, Ānanda, those five hundred mendicants headed by Gavesī, trying to go higher and higher, better and better, realized the supreme bliss of freedom. So you should train like this: ‘Trying to go higher and higher, better and better, we will realize the supreme bliss of freedom.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 5.181

AN 5.181
Wilderness Dwellers
Āraññikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of wilderness dwellers. What five? A person may be wilderness dweller because of stupidity and folly. Or because of corrupt wishes, being of wishful temperament. Or because of madness and mental disorder. Or because it is praised by the Buddhas and their disciples. Or for the sake of having few wishes, for the sake of contentment, self-effacement, seclusion, and simplicity. These are the five kinds of wilderness dwellers. But the person who dwells in the wilderness for the sake of having few wishes is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the five.

From a cow comes milk, from milk comes curds, from curds come butter, from butter comes ghee, and from ghee comes cream of ghee. And the cream of ghee is said to be the best of these. In the same way, the person who dwells in the wilderness for the sake of having few wishes is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the five.”

AN 5.182

AN 5.182
Robes
Cīvarasutta

“Mendicants there are these five kinds of people who wear rag robes. What five? A person may wear rag robes because of stupidity … corrupt wishes … madness … because it is praised by the Buddhas … or for the sake of having few wishes … These are the five kinds of people who wear rag robes.”

AN 5.183

AN 5.183
Dwelling at the Root of a Tree
Rukkhamūlikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of people who dwell at the root of a tree. What five? A person may dwell at the root of a tree because of stupidity … corrupt wishes … madness … because it is praised by the Buddhas … or for the sake of having few wishes … These are the five kinds of people who dwell at the root of a tree.”

AN 5.184

AN 5.184
Charnel Ground Dwellers
Sosānikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of people who dwell in a charnel ground. What five? A person may dwell in a charnel ground because of stupidity … corrupt wishes … madness … because it is praised by the Buddhas … or for the sake of having few wishes … These are the five kinds of people who dwell in a charnel ground.”

AN 5.185

AN 5.185
Open Air Dwellers
Abbhokāsikasutta

“There are these five kinds of people who dwell in the open air. …”

AN 5.186

AN 5.186
Those Who Never Lie Down
Nesajjikasutta

“There are these five kinds of people who never lie down. …”

AN 5.187

AN 5.187
Those Who Sleep Wherever a Mat is Laid Yathāsanthatikasutta

“There are these five kinds of people who sleep wherever they lay their mat. …”

AN 5.188

AN 5.188
Those Who Eat in One Sitting Ekāsanikasutta

“There are these five kinds of people who eat in one sitting per day. …”

AN 5.189

AN 5.189
Refusers of Late Food
Khalupacchābhattikasutta

“There are these five kinds of people who refuse to accept food offered after the meal has begun. …”

AN 5.190

AN 5.190
Those Who Eat Only From the Almsbowl
Pattapiṇḍikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of people who eat only from the almsbowl. What five? A person may eat only from the almsbowl because of stupidity and folly. Or because of corrupt wishes, being of wishful temperament. Or because of madness and mental disorder. Or because it is praised by the Buddhas and their disciples. Or for the sake of having few wishes, for the sake of contentment, self-effacement, seclusion, and simplicity. These are the five kinds of people who eat only from the almsbowl. But the person who eats only from the almsbowl for the sake of having few wishes is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the five.

From a cow comes milk, from milk comes curds, from curds come butter, from butter comes ghee, and from ghee comes cream of ghee. And the cream of ghee is said to be the best of these. In the same way, the person who eats only from the almsbowl for the sake of having few wishes is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the five.”

AN 5.191

AN 5.191
Dogs
Soṇasutta

“Mendicants, these five ancient traditions of the brahmins are exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins. What five?

In the past brahmins had sex only with brahmin women, not with others. These days brahmins have sex with both brahmin women and others. But these days dogs have sex only with female dogs, not with other species. This is the first ancient tradition of the brahmins exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.

In the past brahmins had sex only with brahmin women in the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle, not at other times. These days brahmins have sex with brahmin women both in the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle and at other times. But these days dogs have sex only with female dogs when they are in heat, not at other times. This is the second ancient tradition of the brahmins exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.

In the past brahmins neither bought nor sold brahmin women. They lived together because they loved each other and wanted their family line to continue. These days brahmins both buy and sell brahmin women. They live together whether they love each other or not and they want their family line to continue. But these days dogs neither buy nor sell female dogs. They live together because they’re attracted to each other and want their family line to continue. This is the third ancient tradition of the brahmins exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.

In the past brahmins did not store up money, grain, silver, or gold. These days brahmins do store up money, grain, silver, and gold. But these days dogs don’t store up money, grain, silver, or gold. This is the fourth ancient tradition of the brahmins exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.

In the past brahmins went looking for almsfood for dinner in the evening, and for breakfast in the morning. These days brahmins eat as much as they like until their bellies are full, then take away the leftovers. But these days dogs go looking for dinner in the evening, and for breakfast in the morning. This is the fifth ancient tradition of the brahmins exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.

These five ancient traditions of the brahmins are exhibited these days among dogs, but not among brahmins.”

AN 5.192

AN 5.192
With the Brahmin Doṇa
Doṇabrāhmaṇasutta

Then Doṇa the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Doṇa sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, I have heard that the ascetic Gotama doesn’t bow to old brahmins, the elderly and senior, who are advanced in years and have reached the final stage of life; nor does he rise in their presence or offer them a seat. And this is indeed the case, for Mister Gotama does not bow to old brahmins, elderly and senior, who are advanced in years and have reached the final stage of life; nor does he rise in their presence or offer them a seat. This is not appropriate, Mister Gotama.”

“Doṇa, do you too claim to be a brahmin?”

“Mister Gotama, if anyone should be rightly called a brahmin, it’s me. For I am well born on both my mother’s and father’s side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation. I recite and remember the hymns, and have mastered the three Vedas, together with their vocabularies, ritual, phonology and etymology, and the testament as fifth. I know philology and grammar, and am well versed in cosmology and the marks of a great man.”

“Doṇa, the ancient brahmin seers were Aṭṭhaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva, Vessāmitta, Yamadaggi, Aṅgīrasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kassapa, and Bhagu. They were the authors and propagators of the hymns, whose hymnal was sung and propagated and compiled in ancient times. These days, brahmins continue to sing and chant it. They continue chanting what was chanted, reciting what was recited, and teaching what was taught. Those seers described five kinds of brahmins. A brahmin who is equal to Brahmā, one who is equal to a god, one who toes the line, one who crosses the line, and the fifth is a brahmin corpse-worker. Which one of these are you, Doṇa?”

“Mister Gotama, we don’t know about these five kinds of brahmins. We just know the word ‘brahmin’. Mister Gotama, please teach me this matter so I can learn about these five brahmins.”

“Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes sir,” Doṇa replied. The Buddha said this:

“Doṇa, how is a brahmin equal to Brahmā?

It’s when a brahmin is well born on both the mother’s and the father’s sides, coming from a clean womb back to the seventh paternal generation, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy. For forty-eight years he leads the boy’s spiritual life studying the hymns. Then he seeks a fee for his teacher, but only by legitimate means, not illegitimate.

In this context, Doṇa, what is legitimate? Not by farming, trade, raising cattle, archery, government service, or one of the professions, but solely by living on alms, not scorning the alms bowl. Having offered the fee to his teacher, he shaves off his hair and beard, dresses in ocher robes, and goes forth from the lay life to homelessness.

Then they meditate spreading a heart full of love to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of love to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. They meditate spreading a heart full of compassion … rejoicing … equanimity to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of equanimity to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Having developed these four divine meditations, when the body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a divine realm of Brahmā.

That’s how a brahmin is equal to Brahmā.

And how is a brahmin equal to a god?

It’s when a brahmin is well born on both the mother’s and the father’s sides … Having offered the fee to his teacher, he seeks a wife, but only by legitimate means, not illegitimate.

In this context, Doṇa, what is legitimate? Not by buying or selling, he only accepts a brahmin woman by the pouring of water. He has sex only with a brahmin woman. He does not have sex with a woman from a family of aristocrats, peasants, menials, corpse-workers, hunters, bamboo-workers, chariot-makers, or scavengers. Nor does he have sex with women who are pregnant, breastfeeding, or outside the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle.

And why does the brahmin not have sex with a pregnant woman? If a brahmin had sex with a pregnant woman, the boy or girl would be born in too much filth. That’s why the brahmin doesn’t have sex with a pregnant woman.

And why does the brahmin not have sex with a breastfeeding woman? If a brahmin had sex with a breastfeeding woman, the boy or girl would drink back the semen. That’s why the brahmin doesn’t have sex with a breastfeeding woman.

And why does the brahmin not have sex outside the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle? Because his brahmin wife is not there for sensual pleasure, fun, and enjoyment, but only for procreation. Having ensured his progeny through sex, he shaves off his hair and beard, dresses in ocher robes, and goes forth from the lay life to homelessness.

When he has gone forth, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, he enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. Having developed these four absorptions, when the body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

That's how a brahmin is equal to god.

And how does a brahmin toe the line?

It's when a brahmin is well born on both the mother's and the father's sides …

Not by buying or selling, he only accepts a brahmin woman by the pouring of water. Having ensured his progeny through sex, his child makes him happy. Because of this attachment he stays in his family property, and does not go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

As far as the line of the ancient brahmins extends, he doesn't cross over it. That's why he's called a brahmin who toes the line.

That's how a brahmin toes the line.

And how does a brahmin cross the line?

It's when a brahmin is well born on both the mother's and the father's sides …

Having offered a fee for his teacher, he seeks a wife by both legitimate and illegitimate means. That is, by buying or selling, as well as accepting a brahmin woman by the pouring of water. He has sex with a brahmin woman, as well as with a woman from a family of aristocrats, peasants, menials, corpse-workers, hunters, bamboo workers, chariot-makers, or scavengers. And he has sex with women who are pregnant, breastfeeding, or outside the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle. His brahmin wife is there for sensual pleasure, fun, and enjoyment, as well as for procreation.

As far as the line of the ancient brahmins extends, he crosses over it. That's why he's called a brahmin who crosses the line.

That's how a brahmin crosses the line.

And how is a brahmin a brahmin corpse-worker?

It's when a brahmin is well born on both the mother's and the father's sides, coming from a clean womb back to the seventh paternal generation, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy. For forty-eight years he leads the virginal spiritual life studying the hymns. Then he seeks a fee for his teacher by legitimate means and illegitimate means. By farming, trade, raising cattle, archery, government service, or one of the professions, not solely by living on alms, not scorning the alms bowl.

Having offered a fee for his teacher, he seeks a wife by both legitimate and illegitimate means. That is, by buying or selling, as well as accepting a brahmin woman by the pouring of water. He has sex with a brahmin woman, as well as with a woman from a family of aristocrats, peasants, menials, corpse-workers, hunters, bamboo workers, chariot-makers, or scavengers. And he has sex with women who are pregnant, breastfeeding, or outside the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle. His brahmin wife is there for sensual pleasure, fun, and enjoyment, as well as for procreation.

He earns a living by any kind of work. The brahmins say to him, ‘My good man, why is it that you claim to be a brahmin, but you earn a living by any kind of work?’

He says, ‘It’s like a fire that burns both pure and filthy substances, but doesn’t become corrupted by them. In the same way, my good man, if a brahmin earns a living by any kind of work, he is not corrupted by that.’

A brahmin is called a brahmin corpse-worker because he earns a living by any kind of work.

That’s how a brahmin is a brahmin corpse-worker.

Doṇa, the ancient brahmin seers were Aṭṭhaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva, Vessāmitta, Yamadaggi, Aṅgīrasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kassapa, and Bhagu. They were the authors and propagators of the hymns, whose hymnal was sung and propagated and compiled in ancient times. These days, brahmins continue to sing and chant it. They continue chanting what was chanted, reciting what was recited, and teaching what was taught.

Those seers described five kinds of brahmins. A brahmin who is equal to Brahmā, one who is equal to a god, one who toes the line, one who crosses the line, and the fifth is a brahmin corpse-worker. Which one of these are you, Doṇa?”

“This being so, Mister Gotama, I don’t even qualify as a brahmin corpse-worker.

Excellent, Mister Gotama! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 5.193

AN 5.193
With Saṅgārava
Saṅgāravasutta

Then Saṅgārava the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Saṅgārava sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“What is the cause, Mister Gotama, what is the reason why sometimes even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced? And why is it that sometimes even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced?”

“Brahmin, there’s a time when your heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire and you don’t truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. At that time you don’t truly know or see what is good for yourself, good for another, or good for both. Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that was mixed with dye such as red lac, turmeric, indigo, or rose madder. Even a person with clear eyes checking their own reflection wouldn’t truly know it or see it. In the same way, when your heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is overcome and mired in ill will … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that was heated by fire, boiling and bubbling. Even a person with clear eyes checking their own reflection wouldn’t truly know it or see it. In the same way, when your heart is overcome and mired in ill will … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is overcome and mired in dullness and drowsiness … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water overgrown with moss and aquatic plants. Even a person with clear eyes checking their own reflection wouldn’t truly know it or see it. In the same way, when your heart is overcome and mired in dullness and drowsiness … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is overcome and mired in restlessness and remorse … Even hymns that are long-practiced don’t spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water stirred by the wind, churning, swirling, and rippling. Even a person with clear eyes checking their own reflection wouldn’t truly know it or see it. In the same way, when your heart is overcome and mired in restlessness and remorse …

Even hymns that are long-practiced don't spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is overcome and mired in doubt … Even hymns that are long-practiced don't spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that was cloudy, murky, and muddy, hidden in the darkness. Even a person with clear eyes checking their own reflection wouldn't truly know it or see it. In the same way, there's a time when your heart is overcome and mired in doubt and you don't truly understand the escape from doubt that has arisen. At that time you don't truly know or see what is good for yourself, good for another, or good for both. Even hymns that are long-practiced don't spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced.

There's a time when your heart is not overcome and mired in sensual desire and you truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. At that time you truly know and see what is good for yourself, good for another, and good for both. Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that was not mixed with dye such as red lac, turmeric, indigo, or rose madder. A person with clear eyes checking their own reflection would truly know it and see it. In the same way, when your heart is not overcome and mired in sensual desire … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is not overcome and mired in ill will … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that's not heated by a fire, boiling and bubbling. A person with clear eyes checking their own reflection would truly know it and see it. In the same way, when your heart is not overcome and mired in ill will … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is not overcome and mired in dullness and drowsiness … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that's not overgrown with moss and aquatic plants. A person with clear eyes checking their own reflection would truly know it and see it. In the same way, when your heart is not overcome and mired in dullness and drowsiness … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is not overcome and mired in restlessness and remorse … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that's not stirred by the wind, churning, swirling, and rippling. A person with clear eyes checking their own reflection would truly know it and see it. In the same way, when your heart is not overcome and mired in restlessness and remorse … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced.

Furthermore, when your heart is not overcome and mired in doubt … Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced. Suppose there was a bowl of water that's transparent, clear, and unclouded, brought into the light. A person with clear eyes checking their own reflection would truly know it and see it. In the same way, there's a time when your heart is not overcome and mired in doubt and you truly understand the escape from doubt that has arisen. At that time you truly know and see what is good for yourself, good for another, and good for both. Even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced.

This is the cause, brahmin, this is the reason why sometimes even hymns that are long-practiced don't spring to mind, let alone those that are not practiced. And this is why sometimes even hymns that are long-unpracticed spring to mind, let alone those that are practiced."

"Excellent, Mister Gotama! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 5.194

AN 5.194
With Kāraṇapālī
Kāraṇapālīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Now at that time the brahmin Kāraṇapālī was working for the Licchavis. He saw the brahmin Piṅgiyānī coming off in the distance and said to him, “So, Piṅgiyānī, where are you coming from in the middle of the day?”

“I’m coming, my good man, from the presence of the ascetic Gotama.”

“What do you think of the ascetic Gotama’s lucidity of wisdom? Do you think he’s astute?”

“My good man, who am I to judge the ascetic Gotama’s lucidity of wisdom? You’d really have to be on the same level to judge his lucidity of wisdom.”

“Mister Piṅgiyānī praises the ascetic Gotama with magnificent praise indeed.”

“Who am I to praise the ascetic Gotama? He is praised by the praised as the first among gods and humans.”

“But for what reason are you so devoted to the ascetic Gotama?”

“Suppose a person was completely satisfied by the best tasting food. They wouldn’t be attracted to anything that tasted inferior. In the same way, when you hear the ascetic Gotama’s teaching—whatever it may be, whether statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, or amazing stories—then you’re not attracted to the doctrines of the various ascetics and brahmins.

Suppose a person who was weak with hunger was to obtain a honey-cake. Wherever they taste it, they would enjoy a sweet, delicious flavor. In the same way, when you hear the ascetic Gotama’s teaching—whatever it may be, whether statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, or amazing stories—then you get a sense of uplift, a confidence of the heart.

Suppose a person were to obtain a piece of sandalwood, whether yellow or red. Wherever they smelled it—whether at the root, the middle, or the top—they’d enjoy a delicious fragrance. In the same way, when you hear the ascetic Gotama’s teaching—whatever it may be, whether statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, or amazing stories—then you become filled with joy and happiness.

Suppose there was a person who was sick, suffering, gravely ill. A good doctor would cure them on the spot. In the same way, when you hear the ascetic Gotama's teaching—whatever it may be, whether statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, or amazing stories—then you make an end of sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress.

Suppose there was a lotus pond with clear, sweet, cool water, clean, with smooth banks, delightful. Then along comes a person struggling in the oppressive heat, weary, thirsty, and parched. They'd plunge into the lotus pond to bathe and drink. And all their stress, weariness, and heat exhaustion would die down. In the same way, when you hear the ascetic Gotama's teaching—whatever it may be, whether statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, or amazing stories—then all your stress, weariness, and exhaustion die down."

When this was said, the brahmin Kāraṇapālī got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, knelt on his right knee, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and expressed this heartfelt sentiment three times:

"Homage to that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!

Homage to that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!

Homage to that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!

Excellent, Mister Piṅgiyānī! Excellent! As if he were righting the overturned, or revealing the hidden, or pointing out the path to the lost, or lighting a lamp in the dark so people with clear eyes can see what's there, Mister Piṅgiyānī has made the teaching clear in many ways. I go for refuge to Mister Gotama, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. From this day forth, may Mister Piṅgiyānī remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 5.195

AN 5.195
Piṅgiyānī
Piṅgiyānīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Now at that time around five hundred Licchavis were visiting the Buddha. Some of the Licchavis were in blue, of blue color, clad in blue, adorned with blue. And some were similarly colored in yellow, red, or white. But the Buddha outshone them all in beauty and glory.

Then the brahmin Piṅgīyānī got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and said, “I feel inspired to speak, Blessed One! I feel inspired to speak, Holy One!”

“Then speak as you feel inspired,” said the Buddha. So the brahmin Piṅgīyānī extolled the Buddha in his presence with a fitting verse.

“Like a fragrant pink lotus that blooms in the morning, its fragrance unfaded—see Aṅgīrasa shine, bright as the sun in the sky!”

Then those Licchavis clothed Piṅgiyānī with five hundred upper robes. And Piṅgiyānī clothed the Buddha with them.

Then the Buddha said to the Licchavis:

“Licchavis, the appearance of five treasures is rare in the world. What five? A Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha. A person who explains the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One. A person who understands the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One. A person who practices in line with the teaching. A person who is grateful and thankful. The appearance of these five treasures is rare in the world.”

AN 5.196

AN 5.196
The Great Dreams
Mahāsupinasutta

“Mendicants, before his awakening five great dreams appeared to the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, when he was still not awake but intent on awakening. What five?

This great earth was his bed. Himalaya, king of mountains, was his pillow. His left hand was laid down in the eastern sea. His right hand was laid down in the western sea. And both his feet were laid down in the southern sea. This is the first great dream that appeared to the Realized One before his awakening.

Next, a kind of grass called ‘the crosser’ grew up from his navel and stood pushing against the cloudy sky. This is the second great dream that appeared to the Realized One before his awakening.

Next, white caterpillars with black heads crawled up from his feet and covered his knees. This is the third great dream that appeared to the Realized One before his awakening.

Next, four birds of different colors came from the four quarters. They fell at his feet, turning pure white. This is the fourth great dream that appeared to the Realized One before his awakening.

Next, he walked back and forth on top of a huge mountain of filth while remaining unsoiled. This is the fifth great dream that appeared to the Realized One before his awakening.

Now, as to when, before his awakening, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha was still not awake but intent on awakening. This great earth was his bed. Himalaya, king of mountains, was his pillow. His left hand was laid down in the eastern sea. His right hand was laid down in the western sea. And both his feet were laid down in the southern sea. This was fulfilled when the Buddha awakened to the perfect awakening. This was the first great dream that appeared to him while he was still not awakened.

As to when a kind of grass called ‘the crosser’ grew up from his navel and stood pushing against the cloudy sky. This was fulfilled when, after the Buddha had awakened to the noble eightfold path, it was well proclaimed wherever there are gods and humans. This was the second great dream that appeared to him while he was still not awakened.

As to when white caterpillars with black heads crawled up from his feet and covered his knees. This was fulfilled when many white-clothed laypeople went for refuge to him for life. This was the third great dream that appeared to him while he was still not awakened.

As to when four birds of different colors came from the four quarters. They fell at his feet, turning pure white. This was fulfilled when members of the four classes—aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials—went forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One and realized supreme freedom. This was the fourth great dream that appeared to him while he was still not awakened.

As to when he walked back and forth on top of a huge mountain of filth while remaining unsoiled. This was fulfilled when the Realized One received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And he used them untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape. This was the fifth great dream that appeared to him while he was still not awakened.

Before his awakening these five great dreams appeared to the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, when he was still not awake but intent on awakening."

AN 5.197

AN 5.197
Obstacles to Rain
Vassasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five obstacles to rain, which the forecasters don’t know, and which their vision does not traverse. What five?

In the upper atmosphere the fire element flares up, which disperses the clouds. This is the first obstacle to rain, which the forecasters don’t know, and which their vision does not traverse.

Furthermore, in the upper atmosphere the air element flares up, which disperses the clouds. This is the second obstacle to rain …

Furthermore, Rāhu, lord of titans, receives water in his hand and tosses it in the ocean. This is the third obstacle to rain …

Furthermore, the gods of the rain clouds become negligent. This is the fourth obstacle to rain …

Furthermore, humans become unprincipled. This is the fifth obstacle to rain, which the forecasters don’t know, and which their vision does not traverse.

These are the five obstacles to rain, which the forecasters don’t know, and which their vision does not traverse.”

AN 5.198

AN 5.198
Well-Spoken Words
Vācāsutta

“Mendicants, speech that has five factors is well spoken, not poorly spoken. It’s blameless and is not criticized by sensible people. What five? It is speech that is timely, true, gentle, beneficial, and loving. Speech with these five factors is well spoken, not poorly spoken. It’s blameless and is not criticized by sensible people.”

AN 5.199

AN 5.199
Families
Kulasutta

“When ethical renunciates come to a family, the people create much merit for five reasons. What five?

When they see ethical renunciates coming to their family, the people bring up confidence in their hearts. At that time the family is practicing a path leading to heaven.

When ethical renunciates come to their family, the people rise from their seats, bow down, and offer them a seat. At that time the family is practicing a path leading to a birth in an eminent family.

When ethical renunciates come to their family, the people get rid of the stain of stinginess. At that time the family is practicing a path leading to being illustrious.

When ethical renunciates come to their family, the people share what they have as best they can. At that time the family is practicing a path leading to great wealth.

When ethical renunciates come to their family, the people ask questions and listen to the teachings. At that time the family is practicing a path leading to great wisdom.

When ethical renunciates come to a family, the people create much merit for these five reasons.”

AN 5.200

AN 5.200
Elements of Escape
Nissāraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five elements of escape. What five?

Take a case where a mendicant focuses on sensual pleasures, but their mind isn’t secure, confident, settled, and decided about them. But when they focus on renunciation, their mind is secure, confident, settled, and decided about it. Their mind is in a good state, well developed, well risen, well freed, and well detached from sensual pleasures. They’re freed from the distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of sensual pleasures, so they don’t experience that kind of feeling. This is how the escape from sensual pleasures is explained.

Take another case where a mendicant focuses on ill will, but their mind isn’t secure … But when they focus on good will, their mind becomes secure … Their mind is in a good state … well detached from ill will. They’re freed from the distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of ill will, so they don’t experience that kind of feeling. This is how the escape from ill will is explained.

Take another case where a mendicant focuses on harming, but their mind isn’t secure … But when they focus on compassion, their mind is eager … Their mind is in a good state … well detached from harming. They’re freed from the distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of harming, so they don’t experience that kind of feeling. This is how the escape from harming is explained.

Take another case where a mendicant focuses on form, but their mind isn’t secure … But when they focus on the formless, their mind becomes secure … Their mind is in a good state … well detached from forms. They’re freed from the distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of form, so they don’t experience that kind of feeling. This is how the escape from forms is explained.

Take a case where a mendicant focuses on substantial reality, but their mind isn’t secure, confident, settled, and decided about it. But when they focus on the ending of substantial reality, their mind is secure, confident, settled, and decided about it. Their mind is in a good state, well developed, well risen, well freed, and well detached from substantial reality. They’re freed from the distressing and feverish defilements that arise because of substantial reality, so they don’t experience that kind of feeling. This is how the escape from substantial reality is explained.

Delight in sensual pleasures, ill will, harming, form, and substantial reality don’t linger within them. That’s why they’re called a mendicant who is without underlying tendencies, who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering. These are the five elements of escape."

AN 5.201

AN 5.201
With Kimbila
Kimilasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kimbilā in the Freshwater Mangrove Wood. Then Venerable Kimbila went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen lack respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, and each other after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen maintain respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, and each other after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

AN 5.202

AN 5.202
Listening to the Teaching
Dhammassavanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five benefits of listening to the teaching. What five? You learn new things, clarify what you’ve learned, get over uncertainty, correct your views, and inspire confidence in your mind. These are the five benefits of listening to the teaching.”

AN 5.203

AN 5.203
A Thoroughbred
Assājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with five factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

What five? Integrity, speed, gentleness, patience, and sweetness. A fine royal thoroughbred with these five factors is worthy of a king. … In the same way, a mendicant with five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.

What five? Integrity, speed, gentleness, patience, and sweetness. A mendicant with these five qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 5.204

AN 5.204
Powers
Balasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five powers. What five? Faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom. These are the five powers.”

AN 5.205

AN 5.205
Emotional Barrenness
Cetokhilasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of emotional barrenness. What five? Firstly, a mendicant has doubts about the Teacher. They’re uncertain, undecided, and lacking confidence. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first kind of emotional barrenness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has doubts about the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … A mendicant is angry and upset with their spiritual companions, resentful and closed off. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth kind of emotional barrenness. These are the five kinds of emotional barrenness.”

AN 5.206

AN 5.206
Shackles
Vinibandhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five emotional shackles. What five? Firstly, a mendicant isn’t free of greed, desire, fondness, thirst, passion, and craving for sensual pleasures. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first emotional shackle.

Furthermore, a mendicant isn’t free of greed for the body … They’re not free of greed for form … They eat as much as they like until their belly is full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing … They lead the spiritual life hoping to be reborn in one of the orders of gods, thinking: ‘By this precept or observance or fervent austerity or spiritual life, may I become one of the gods!’ This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth emotional shackle. These are the five emotional shackles.”

AN 5.207

AN 5.207
Porridge
Yāgusutta

“Mendicants, there are these five benefits of porridge. What five? It wards off hunger, quenches thirst, settles the wind, cleans the bladder, and helps digestion. These are the five benefits of porridge.”

AN 5.208

AN 5.208
Chew Sticks
Dantakaṭṭhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of not using chew sticks. What five? It’s not good for your eyes, you get bad breath, your taste-buds aren’t cleaned, bile and phlegm cover your food, and you lose your appetite. These are the five drawbacks of not using chew sticks.

There are these five benefits of using chew sticks. What five? It’s good for your eyes, you don’t get bad breath, your taste-buds are cleaned, bile and phlegm don’t cover your food, and food agrees with you. These are the five benefits of using chew sticks.”

AN 5.209

AN 5.209
The Sound of Singing
Gītassarasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in reciting with a drawn-out singing voice. What five? You relish the sound of your own voice. Others relish the sound of your voice. Householders complain: ‘These ascetics, followers of the Sakyan, sing just like us!’ When you’re enjoying the melody, your immersion breaks up. Those who come after follow your example. These are the five drawbacks in reciting with a drawn-out singing voice.”

AN 5.210

AN 5.210
Unmindful
Muṭṭhassatisutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of falling asleep unmindful and unaware. What five? You sleep badly and wake miserably. You have bad dreams. The deities don’t protect you. And you emit semen. These are the five drawbacks of falling asleep unmindful and unaware.

There are these five benefits of falling asleep mindful and aware. What five? You sleep at ease and wake happily. You don’t have bad dreams. The deities protect you. And you don’t emit semen. These are the five benefits of falling asleep mindful and aware.”

AN 5.211

AN 5.211
An Abuser
Akkosakasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, can expect these five drawbacks. What five? They’re expelled, cut off, shut out; or they commit a corrupt offense; or they contract a severe illness. They feel lost when they die. And when their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. A mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, can expect these five drawbacks.”

AN 5.212

AN 5.212
Starting Arguments
Bhaṇḍanakārakasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who starts arguments, quarrels, disputes, debates, and disciplinary issues in the Saṅgha can expect five drawbacks. What five? They don’t achieve the unachieved. What they have achieved falls away. They get a bad reputation. They feel lost when they die. And when their body breaks up, after death, they are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. A mendicant who starts arguments, quarrels, disputes, debates, and disciplinary issues in the Saṅgha can expect these five drawbacks.”

AN 5.213

AN 5.213
Ethics
Sīlasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for an unethical person because of their failure in ethics. What five?

Firstly, an unethical person loses substantial wealth on account of negligence. This is the first drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person gets a bad reputation. This is the second drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person enters any kind of assembly timid and embarrassed, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. This is the third drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person feels lost when they die. This is the fourth drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person, when their body breaks up, after death, is reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. This is the fifth drawback. These are the five drawbacks for an unethical person because of their failure in ethics.

There are these five benefits for an ethical person because of their accomplishment in ethics. What five? Firstly, an ethical person gains substantial wealth on account of diligence. This is the first benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person gets a good reputation. This is the second benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person enters any kind of assembly bold and self-assured, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. This is the third benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person dies not feeling lost. This is the fourth benefit.

Furthermore, when an ethical person’s body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. This is the fifth benefit.

These are the five benefits for an ethical person because of their accomplishment in ethics.”

AN 5.214

AN 5.214
Someone Who Talks a Lot
Bahubhāṇisutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for a person who talks a lot. What five? They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, and nonsensical. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five drawbacks for a person who talks a lot.

There are these five benefits for a person who talks thoughtfully. What five? They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, and nonsensical. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits for a person who talks thoughtfully.”

AN 5.215

AN 5.215
Intolerance (1st)
Paṭhamaakkhantisutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of intolerance. What five? Most people find you unlikable and unlovable. You have lots of enmity and many faults. You feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five drawbacks to intolerance.

There are these five benefits of tolerance. What five? Most people find you dear and lovable. You have little enmity and few faults. You don’t feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits of tolerance.”

AN 5.216

AN 5.216
Intolerance (2nd)
Dutiyaakkhantisutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of intolerance. What five? Most people find you unlikable and unlovable. You’re cruel and remorseful. You feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five drawbacks to intolerance.

There are these five benefits of tolerance. What five? Most people find you likable and lovable. You’re neither cruel nor remorseful. You don’t feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits of tolerance.”

AN 5.217

AN 5.217
Uninspiring Conduct (1st)
Paṭhamaapāsādikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of uninspiring conduct. What five? You blame yourself. After examination, sensible people criticize you. You get a bad reputation. You feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five drawbacks of uninspiring conduct.

There are these five benefits of inspiring conduct. What five? You don’t blame yourself. After examination, sensible people praise you. You get a good reputation. You don’t feel lost when you die. And when the body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits of inspiring conduct.”

AN 5.218

AN 5.218
Uninspiring Conduct (2nd)
Dutiyaapāsādikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of uninspiring conduct. What five? You don’t inspire confidence in those without it. You cause some with confidence to change their minds. You don’t follow the Teacher’s instructions. Those who come after you follow your example. And your mind doesn’t become clear. These are the five drawbacks of uninspiring conduct.

There are these five benefits of inspiring conduct. What five? You inspire confidence in those without it. You increase confidence in those who have it. You follow the Teacher’s instructions. Those who come after you follow your example. And your mind becomes clear. These are the five benefits of inspiring conduct.”

AN 5.219

AN 5.219
Fire
Aggisutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of a fire. What five? It’s bad for your eyes. It’s bad for your complexion. It makes you weak. It draws in groups. And it encourages low talk. These are the five drawbacks of a fire.”

AN 5.220

AN 5.220
About Madhurā
Madhurāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of Madhurā. What five? The ground is uneven and dusty, the dogs are fierce, the native spirits are vicious, and it’s hard to get almsfood. These are the five drawbacks of Madhurā.”

AN 5.221

AN 5.221
Long Wandering (1st)
Paṭhamadīghacārikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for someone who likes long and aimless wandering. What five? You don’t learn new things. You don’t clarify what you’ve learned. You lack confidence in some things you have learned. You contract a severe illness. You don’t have any friends. These are the five drawbacks for someone who likes long and aimless wandering.

There are these five benefits of a reasonable amount of wandering. What five? You learn new things. You clarify what you’ve learned. You have confidence in some things you have learned. You don’t contract severe illness. You have friends. These are the five benefits of a reasonable amount of wandering.”

AN 5.222

AN 5.222
Long Wandering (2nd)
Dutiyadīghacārikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for someone who likes long and aimless wandering. What five? You don’t achieve the unachieved. What you have achieved falls away. You lose confidence in some things you’ve achieved. You contract a severe illness. You don’t have any friends. These are the five drawbacks for someone who likes long and aimless wandering.

There are these five benefits of a reasonable amount of wandering. What five? You achieve the unachieved. What you have achieved doesn’t fall away. You’re confident in some things you’ve achieved. You don’t contract severe illness. You have friends. These are the five benefits of a reasonable amount of wandering.”

AN 5.223

AN 5.223
Overstaying
Atinivāsasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of overstaying. What five? You have a lot of stuff and store it up. You have a lot of medicine and store it up. You have a lot of duties and responsibilities, and become capable in whatever needs to be done. You mix closely with laypeople and renunciates, socializing inappropriately like a layperson. And when you leave that monastery, you miss it. These are the five drawbacks of overstaying.

There are these five benefits of staying for a reasonable length of time. What five? You don’t have a lot of stuff and store it up. You don’t have a lot of medicine and store it up. You don’t have a lot of duties and responsibilities, or become capable in whatever needs to be done. You don’t mix closely with laypeople and renunciates, socializing inappropriately like a layperson. And when you leave that monastery, you don’t miss it. These are the five benefits of staying for a reasonable length of time.”

AN 5.224

AN 5.224
Stingy
Maccharīsutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of overstaying. What five? You become stingy with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teaching. These are the five drawbacks of overstaying.

There are these five benefits of staying for a reasonable length of time. What five? You’re not stingy with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teaching. These are the five benefits of staying for a reasonable length of time.”

AN 5.225

AN 5.225
Visiting Families (1st)
Paṭhamakulūpakasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of visiting families. What five? You fall into an offense for wandering without leave. You fall into an offense for sitting in a private place with someone of the opposite sex. You fall into an offense for sitting in a hidden place with someone of the opposite sex. You fall into an offense for teaching more than five or six sentences to someone of the opposite sex. You have a lot of sensual thoughts. These are the five drawbacks of visiting families.”

AN 5.226

AN 5.226
Visiting Families (2nd)
Dutiyakulūpakasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for a mendicant who visits families for too long, mixing closely with them. What five? You often see members of the opposite sex. Seeing them, you become close. Being so close, you become intimate. Being intimate, lust overcomes you. When your mind is swamped by lust, you can expect that you will lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, or commit one of the corrupt offenses, or resign the training and return to a lesser life. These are the five drawbacks for a mendicant who visits families for too long, mixing closely with them.”

AN 5.227

AN 5.227
Riches
Bhogasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of riches. What five? Fire, water, kings, thieves, and unloved heirs all take a share. These are the five drawbacks of riches.

There are these five benefits of riches. What five? Riches enable you to make yourself happy and pleased, to make your mother and father; your children, partners, bondservants, workers, and staff, and your friends and colleagues happy and pleased, and to keep them all happy. And they enable you to establish an uplifting religious donation for ascetics and brahmins that’s conducive to heaven, ripens in happiness, and leads to heaven. These are the five benefits of riches.”

AN 5.228

AN 5.228
Eating Late
Ussūrabhattasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks for a family who takes their meals late in the day. What five? When guests visit, they are not served on time. The deities who accept spirit-offerings are not served on time. Ascetics and brahmins who eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night, and from food at the wrong time are not served on time. Bondservants, workers, and staff do their duties neglectfully. A meal eaten during the wrong period is not nutritious. These are the five drawbacks for a family who takes their meals late in the day.

There are these five benefits for a family who takes their meals at a proper time. What five? When guests visit, they are served on time. The deities who accept spirit-offerings are served on time. Ascetics and brahmins who eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night, and from food at the wrong time are served on time. Bondservants, workers, and staff do their duties attentively. A meal eaten during the proper period is nutritious. These are the five benefits for a family who takes their meals at a proper time.”

AN 5.229

AN 5.229
Black Snakes (1st)
Paṭhamakaṇhasappasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of a black snake. What five? It’s filthy, stinking, cowardly, frightening, and treacherous. These are the five dangers of a black snake.

In the same way there are five drawbacks of a female. What five? She’s filthy, stinking, cowardly, frightening, and treacherous. These are the five drawbacks of a female.”

AN 5.230

AN 5.230
Black Snakes (2nd)
Dutiyakaṇhasappasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of a black snake. What five? It’s irritable, hostile, venomous, fork-tongued, and treacherous. These are the five dangers of a black snake.

In the same way there are five drawbacks of a female. What five? She’s irritable, hostile, venomous, fork-tongued, and treacherous. This is a female’s venom: usually she’s very lustful. This is a female’s forked tongue: usually she speaks divisively. This is a female’s treachery: usually she’s an adulteress. These are the five drawbacks of a female.”

AN 5.231

AN 5.231
A Resident Mendicant
Āvāsikasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is not admirable. What five? They’re not accomplished in being well-presented and doing their duties. They’re not very learned and don’t remember what they’ve learned. They’re not self-effacing and don’t enjoy self-effacement. They’re not a good speaker and don’t speak well. They’re witless, dull, and stupid. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is not admirable.

A resident mendicant with these five qualities is admirable. What five? They’re accomplished in being well-presented and doing their duties. They’re very learned and remember what they’ve learned. They’re self-effacing and enjoy self-effacement. They’re a good speaker and speak well. They’re wise, bright, and clever. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is admirable.”

AN 5.232

AN 5.232
Liked
Piyasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What five?

They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They’re a good speaker, with a polished, clear, and articulate voice that expresses the meaning.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A resident mendicant with these five qualities is dear and beloved to their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 5.233

AN 5.233
Beautification
Sobhanasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities beautifies the monastery. What five?

They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They’re a good speaker, with a polished, clear, and articulate voice that expresses the meaning.

They’re able to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire those who approach them with a Dhamma talk.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

A resident mendicant with these five qualities beautifies the monastery.”

AN 5.234

AN 5.234
Very Helpful
Bahūpakārasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is very helpful to the monastery. What five?

They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They repair what is decayed and damaged.

When a large mendicant Saṅgha is arriving with mendicants from abroad, they go to the lay people and announce:

‘A large mendicant Saṅgha is arriving with mendicants from abroad. Make merit! Now is the time to make merit!’

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

A resident mendicant with these five qualities is very helpful to the monastery.”

AN 5.235

AN 5.235
A Compassionate Mendicant
Anukampasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities shows compassion to the lay people. What five? They encourage them in higher ethics. They equip them to see the truth of the teachings. When they are sick, they go to them and prompt their mindfulness, saying: ‘Establish your mindfulness, good sirs, in what is worthy.’ When a large mendicant Saṅgha is arriving with mendicants from abroad, they go to the lay people and announce: ‘A large mendicant Saṅgha is arriving with mendicants from abroad. Make merit! Now is the time to make merit!’ And they eat whatever food they give them, coarse or fine, not wasting a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities shows compassion to the lay people.”

AN 5.236

AN 5.236
Deserving Criticism (1st)
Paṭhamaavaṇṇārahasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, they praise those deserving of criticism, and they criticize those deserving of praise. Without examining or scrutinizing, they arouse faith in things that are dubious, and they don’t arouse faith in things that are inspiring. And they waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A resident mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, they criticize those deserving of criticism, and they praise those deserving of praise. They don’t arouse faith in things that are dubious, and they do arouse faith in things that are inspiring. And they don’t waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.237

AN 5.237
Deserving Criticism (2nd)
Dutiyaavaṇṇārahasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, they praise those deserving of criticism, and they criticize those deserving of praise. They’re stingy and avaricious regarding monasteries. They’re stingy and avaricious regarding families. And they waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A resident mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, they criticize those deserving of criticism, and they praise those deserving of praise. They’re not stingy and avaricious regarding monasteries. They’re not stingy and avaricious regarding families. And they don’t waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.238

AN 5.238
Deserving Criticism (3rd)
Tatiyaavaṇṇārahasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? Without examining or scrutinizing, they praise those deserving of criticism, and they criticize those deserving of praise. They’re stingy regarding monasteries, families, and material possessions. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A resident mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? After examining and scrutinizing, they criticize those deserving of criticism, and they praise those deserving of praise. They’re not stingy regarding monasteries, families, and material possessions. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.239

AN 5.239
Stinginess (1st)
Paṭhamamacchariyasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They’re stingy regarding monasteries, families, material possessions, and praise. And they waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A resident mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? They’re not stingy regarding monasteries, families, material possessions, and praise. And they don’t waste a gift given in faith. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.240

AN 5.240
Stinginess (2nd)
Dutiyamacchariyasutta

“Mendicants, a resident mendicant with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They’re stingy regarding monasteries, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A resident mendicant with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? They’re not stingy regarding monasteries, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. A resident mendicant with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.241

AN 5.241
Bad Conduct (1st)
Paṭhamaduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of bad conduct. What five? You blame yourself. After examination, sensible people criticize you. You get a bad reputation. You feel lost when you die. And when your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These are the five drawbacks of bad conduct.

There are these five benefits of good conduct. What five? You don’t blame yourself. After examination, sensible people praise you. You get a good reputation. You don’t feel lost when you die. When your body breaks up, after death, you’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. These are the five benefits of good conduct.”

AN 5.242

AN 5.242
Bad Bodily Conduct (1st)
Paṭhamakāyaduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad bodily conduct … benefits in good bodily conduct …”

AN 5.243

AN 5.243
Bad Verbal Conduct (1st)
Paṭhamavacīduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad verbal conduct … benefits in good verbal conduct …”

AN 5.244

AN 5.244
Bad Mental Conduct (1st)
Paṭhamamanoduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad mental conduct … benefits in good mental conduct …”

AN 5.245

AN 5.245
Bad Conduct (2nd)
Dutiyaduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of bad conduct. What five? You blame yourself. After examination, sensible people criticize you. You get a bad reputation. You drift away from true teachings. You settle on untrue teachings. These are the five drawbacks of bad conduct.

There are these five benefits of good conduct. What five? You don’t blame yourself. After examination, sensible people praise you. You get a good reputation. You drift away from untrue teachings. You settle on true teachings. These are the five benefits of good conduct.”

AN 5.246

AN 5.246
Bad Bodily Conduct (2nd)
Dutiyakāyaduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad bodily conduct … benefits in good bodily conduct …”

AN 5.247

AN 5.247
Bad Verbal Conduct (2nd)
Dutiyavacīduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad verbal conduct … benefits in good verbal conduct …”

AN 5.248

AN 5.248
Bad Mental Conduct (2nd)
Dutiyamanoduccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks in bad mental conduct … benefits in good mental conduct …”

AN 5.249

AN 5.249
A Charnel Ground
Sivathikasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks to a charnel ground. What five?

It’s filthy, stinking, frightening, a gathering place for savage monsters, and a weeping place for many people. These are the five drawbacks of a charnel ground.

In the same way there are five drawbacks of a person like a charnel ground. What five? To start with, some person has filthy conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. This is how they’re filthy, I say. That person is just as filthy as a charnel ground.

Because of their filthy conduct, they get a bad reputation. This is how they’re stinky, I say. That person is just as stinky as a charnel ground.

Because of their filthy conduct, good-hearted spiritual companions avoid them from afar. That’s how they’re frightening, I say. That person is just as frightening as a charnel ground.

Because of their filthy conduct, they live together with people of a similar character. This is how they gather with savage monsters, I say. That person is just as much a gathering place of savage monsters as a charnel ground.

Because of their filthy conduct, when good-hearted spiritual companions see them they complain: ‘Oh, it’s so painful for us to have to live together with such as these.’ This is how there’s weeping, I say. This person is just as much a weeping place for many people as a charnel ground.

These are the five drawbacks of a person like a charnel ground.”

AN 5.250

AN 5.250
Faith in Individuals
Puggalappasādasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five drawbacks of placing faith in an individual. What five?

The individual to whom a person is devoted falls into an offense such that the Saṅgha suspends them. It occurs to them: ‘This person dear and beloved to me has been suspended by the Saṅgha.’ They lose much of their faith in mendicants. So they don’t frequent other mendicants, they don’t hear the true teaching, and they fall away from the true teaching. This is the first drawback in placing faith in an individual.

Furthermore, the individual to whom a person is devoted falls into an offense such that the Saṅgha makes them sit at the end of the line. … This is the second drawback in placing faith in an individual.

Furthermore, the individual to whom a person is devoted departs for another region … disrobes … passes away. It occurs to them: ‘This person dear and beloved to me has passed away.’ So they don’t frequent other mendicants, they don’t hear the true teaching, and they fall away from the true teaching. This is the fifth drawback in placing faith in an individual.

These are the five drawbacks of placing faith in an individual.”

AN 5.251

AN 5.251
Who Should Give Ordination
Upasampādetabbasutta

“Mendicants, ordination should be given by a mendicant with five qualities. What five? It’s a mendicant who has the entire spectrum of an adept’s ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. Ordination should be given by a mendicant with these five qualities.”

AN 5.252

AN 5.252
Who Should Give Dependence
Nissayasutta

“Mendicants, dependence should be given by a mendicant with five qualities. What five? It’s a mendicant who has the entire spectrum of an adept’s ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. Dependence should be given by a mendicant with these five qualities.”

AN 5.253

AN 5.253
Who Should Have a Novice as Attendant
Sāmaṇerasutta

“Mendicants, a novice should attend on a mendicant with five qualities. What five? It’s a mendicant who has the entire spectrum of an adept’s ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. A novice should attend on a mendicant with these five qualities.”

AN 5.254

AN 5.254
Five Kinds of Stinginess
Pañcamacchariyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of stinginess. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. These are the five kinds of stinginess. The most contemptible of these five kinds of stinginess is stinginess with the teachings.”

AN 5.255

AN 5.255
Giving Up Stinginess
Macchariyappahānasutta

“Mendicants, the spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these five kinds of stinginess. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. The spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these five kinds of stinginess.”

AN 5.256

AN 5.256
The First Absorption
Paṭhamajhānasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. Without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption.

But after giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. After giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption.”

AN 5.257-263

AN 5.257–263
The Second Absorption, Etc.
Dutiyajhānasuttādisattaka

“Mendicants, without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption … or realize the fruit of stream-entry … the fruit of once-return … the fruit of non-return … perfection. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. Without giving up these five qualities you can’t realize perfection.

But after giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption … and realize the fruit of stream-entry … the fruit of once-return … the fruit of non-return … perfection. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teachings. After giving up these five qualities you can realize perfection.”

AN 5.264

AN 5.264
Another Discourse on the First Absorption Aparapaṭhamajhānasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and lack of gratitude and thankfulness. Without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption.

But after giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and lack of gratitude and thankfulness. After giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption.”

AN 5.265-271

AN 5.265–271
Another Discourse on the Second Absorption, Etc.
Aparadutiyajhānasuttādi

“Mendicants, without giving up these five qualities you can’t enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption … or realize the fruit of stream-entry … the fruit of once-return … the fruit of non-return … perfection. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and lack of gratitude and thankfulness. Without giving up these five qualities you can’t realize perfection.

But after giving up these five qualities you can enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption … and realize the fruit of stream-entry … the fruit of once-return … the fruit of non-return … perfection. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and lack of gratitude and thankfulness. After giving up these five qualities you can realize perfection.”

AN 5.272

AN 5.272
A Meal Designator
Bhattuddesakasutta

“Mendicants, a person with five qualities should not be appointed as meal designator. What five? They make decisions prejudiced by favoritism, hostility, stupidity, and cowardice. And they don’t know if a meal has been assigned or not. A person with these five qualities should not be appointed as meal designator.

A person with five qualities should be appointed as meal designator. What five? They don’t make decisions prejudiced by favoritism, hostility, stupidity, and cowardice. And they know if a meal has been assigned or not. A person with these five qualities should be appointed as meal designator.

A person with five qualities who has been appointed as meal designator should not be called upon … should be called upon … should be known as a fool … should be known as astute … they keep themselves broken and damaged … they keep themselves unbroken and undamaged … is cast down to hell … is raised up to heaven. What five? They don’t make decisions prejudiced by favoritism, hostility, stupidity, and cowardice. And they know if a meal has been assigned or not. A meal designator with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.273-285

AN 5.273–285
A Lodgings Assigner
Senāsanapaññāpakasuttādi

“Mendicants, a person with five qualities should not be appointed as lodgings assigner … they don’t know if a lodging has been assigned or not … A person with five qualities should be appointed as lodgings assigner … they know if a lodging has been assigned or not …

A person should not be appointed as lodgings allocator … they don’t know if a lodging has been allocated or not … A person should be appointed as lodgings allocator … they know if a lodging has been allocated or not …

A person should not be appointed as storeperson … they don’t know if stores are protected or not … A person should be appointed as storeperson … they know if stores are protected or not …

… robe receiver …

… robe distributor …

… porridge distributor …

… fruit distributor …

… cake distributor …

… dispenser of minor accessories …

… allocator of bathing cloths …

… bowl allocator …

… supervisor of monastery staff …

… supervisor of novices …

What five? They don’t make decisions prejudiced by favoritism, hostility, stupidity, and cowardice. And they know if a novice has been supervised or not. A supervisor of novices with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.286

AN 5.286
A Monk
Bhikkhusutta

“Mendicants, a monk with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? He kills living creatures, steals, has sex, lies, and uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A monk with these five qualities is cast down to hell.

A monk with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? He doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, have sex, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. A monk with these five qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.287-292

AN 5.287–292
A Nun
Bhikkhunīsuttādi

“A nun … trainee nun … novice monk … novice nun … layman … laywoman … with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. With these five qualities they’re cast down to hell.

A nun … trainee nun … novice monk … novice nun … layman … laywoman … with five qualities is raised up to heaven. What five? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. With these five qualities they’re raised up to heaven.”

AN 5.293

AN 5.293
An Ājīvaka
Ājīvakasutta

“Mendicants, an Ājīvaka ascetic with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, have sex, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. An Ājīvaka ascetic with these five qualities is cast down to hell.”

AN 5.294-302

AN 5.294–302
A Jain Ascetic, Etc.
Nigaṇṭhasuttādi

“A Jain ascetic … disciple of the shavelings … a matted-hair ascetic … a wanderer … a follower of Māgaṇḍiya … a trident-bearing ascetic … a follower of the unobstructed … a follower of Gotama … one who performs rituals for the gods … with five qualities is cast down to hell. What five? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. With these five qualities they’re cast down to hell.”

AN 5.303

AN 5.303
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“For insight into greed, five things should be developed. What five? The perceptions of ugliness, death, drawbacks, repulsiveness of food, and dissatisfaction with the whole world. For insight into greed, these five things should be developed.”

AN 5.304

AN 5.304
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)
~

“For insight into greed, five things should be developed. What five? The perceptions of impermanence, not-self, death, repulsiveness of food, and dissatisfaction with the whole world. For insight into greed, these five things should be developed.”

AN 5.305

AN 5.305
Untitled Discourse on Greed (3rd)

~

“For insight into greed, five things should be developed. What five? The perception of impermanence, the perception of suffering in impermanence, the perception of not-self in suffering, the perception of giving up, and the perception of fading away. For insight into greed, these five things should be developed.”

AN 5.306

AN 5.306
Untitled Discourse on Greed (4th)

~

“For insight into greed, five things should be developed. What five? The faculties of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. For insight into greed, these five things should be developed.”

AN 5.307

AN 5.307
Untitled Discourse on Greed (5th)

~

“For insight into greed, five things should be developed. What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. For insight into greed, these five things should be developed.”

AN 5.308-1152

AN 5.308–1152
Untitled Discourses on Greed, Etc.

~

“For the complete understanding … finishing … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of greed, five things should be developed.”

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceit … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … negligence … for insight … complete understanding … finishing … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go … five things should be developed.

What five? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. For the letting go of negligence, these five things should be developed.”

The Book of the Fives is finished.

AN 6.1

AN 6.1
Worthy of Offerings (1st)
Paṭhamaāhuneyyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six?

It's a mendicant who, when they see a sight with their eyes, is neither happy nor sad. They remain equanimous, mindful and aware.

When they hear a sound with their ears …

When they smell an odor with their nose …

When they taste a flavor with their tongue …

When they feel a touch with their body …

When they know an idea with their mind, they're neither happy nor sad. They remain equanimous, mindful and aware.

A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world."

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

AN 6.2

AN 6.2
Worthy of Offerings (2nd)
Dutiyaāhuneyyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six?

It’s a mendicant who wields the many kinds of psychic power: multiplying themselves and becoming one again; appearing and disappearing; going unimpeded through a wall, a rampart, or a mountain as if through space; diving in and out of the earth as if it were water; walking on water as if it were earth; flying cross-legged through the sky like a bird; touching and stroking with the hand the sun and moon, so mighty and powerful. They control the body as far as the Brahmā realm.

With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, they hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.

They understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with their own mind. They understand mind with greed as ‘mind with greed’, and mind without greed as ‘mind without greed’. They understand mind with hate … mind without hate … mind with delusion … mind without delusion … constricted mind … scattered mind … expansive mind … unexpansive mind … mind that is not supreme … mind that is supreme … mind immersed in samādhi … mind not immersed in samādhi … freed mind … They understand unfreed mind as ‘unfreed mind’.

They recollect many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ And so they recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details.

With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds: ‘These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.' And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world."

AN 6.3

AN 6.3
Faculties
Indriyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six? The faculties of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. And they realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 6.4

AN 6.4
Powers
Balasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six? The powers of faith, energy, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. And they realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 6.5

AN 6.5
The Thoroughbred (1st)
Paṭhamaājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

What six? It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. And it’s beautiful. A fine royal thoroughbred with these six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six? It’s when a mendicant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas. A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 6.6

AN 6.6
The Thoroughbred (2nd)
Dutiyaājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship. What six? It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. And it’s strong. A fine royal thoroughbred with these six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six? It’s when a mendicant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas. A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 6.7

AN 6.7
The Thoroughbred (3rd)
Tatiyaājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship. What six? It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. And it’s fast. A fine royal thoroughbred with these six factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and is considered a factor of kingship.

In the same way, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six? It’s when a mendicant can endure sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas. A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 6.8

AN 6.8
Unsurpassable
Anuttariyasutta

“Mendicants, these six things are unsurpassable. What six? The unsurpassable seeing, listening, acquisition, training, service, and recollection. These are the six unsurpassable things.”

AN 6.9

AN 6.9
Topics for Recollection
Anussatiṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these six topics for recollection. What six? The recollection of the Buddha, the teaching, the Saṅgha, ethics, generosity, and the deities. These are the six topics for recollection.”

AN 6.10

AN 6.10
With Mahānāma
Mahānāmasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Then Mahānāma the Sakyan went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, when a noble disciple has reached the fruit and understood the instructions, what kind of meditation do they frequently practice?”

“Mahānāma, when a noble disciple has reached the fruit and understood the instructions they frequently practice this kind of meditation.

Firstly, a noble disciple recollects the Realized One: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Realized One their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the Realized One. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When they’re joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, they feel bliss. And when they’re blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They’ve entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of the Buddha.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the teaching: ‘The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.’ When a noble disciple recollects the teaching their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They’ve entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of the teaching.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha: ‘The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is practicing the way that’s good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of the Saṅgha.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own ethical conduct, which is unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. When a noble disciple recollects their ethical conduct their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of ethics.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own generosity: 'I'm so fortunate, so very fortunate! Among people full of the stain of stinginess I live at home rid of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.' When a noble disciple recollects their own generosity their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of generosity.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the deities: 'There are the Gods of the Four Great Kings, the Gods of the Thirty-Three, the Gods of Yama, the Joyful Gods, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others, the Gods of Brahmā's Host, and gods even higher than these. When those deities passed away from here, they were reborn there because of their faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. I, too, have the same kind of faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom.' When a noble disciple recollects the faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom of both themselves and the deities their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the deities. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When you're joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, you feel bliss. And when you're blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and develop the recollection of the deities.

When a noble disciple has reached the fruit and understood the instructions this is the kind of meditation they frequently practice."

AN 6.11

AN 6.11
Warm-hearted (1st)
Paṭhamasāraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these six warm-hearted qualities. What six?

Firstly, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with bodily kindness, both in public and in private. This is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with verbal kindness, both in public and in private. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with mental kindness …

Furthermore, a mendicant shares without reservation any material possessions they have gained by legitimate means, even the food placed in the alms-bowl, using them in common with their ethical spiritual companions. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives according to the precepts shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. Those precepts are unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives according to the view shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. That view is noble and emancipating, and delivers one who practices it to the complete ending of suffering. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

These are the six warm-hearted qualities.”

AN 6.12

AN 6.12
Warm-hearted (2nd)
Dutiyasāraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, these six warm-hearted qualities make for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling. What six?

Firstly, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with bodily kindness, both in public and in private. This warm-hearted quality makes for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling.

Furthermore, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with verbal kindness …

Furthermore, a mendicant consistently treats their spiritual companions with mental kindness …

Furthermore, a mendicant shares without reservation any material possessions they have gained by legitimate means, even the food placed in the alms-bowl, using them in common with their ethical spiritual companions. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives according to the precepts shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. Those precepts are unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. This too is a warm-hearted quality.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives according to the view shared with their spiritual companions, both in public and in private. That view is noble and emancipating, and delivers one who practices it to the complete ending of suffering. This warm-hearted quality makes for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling.

These six warm-hearted qualities make for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling.”

AN 6.13

AN 6.13
Elements of Escape
Nissāraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these six elements of escape. What six?

Take a mendicant who says: ‘I’ve developed the heart’s release by love. I’ve cultivated it, made it my vehicle and my basis, kept it up, consolidated it, and properly implemented it. Yet somehow ill will still occupies my mind.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! Don’t say that. Don’t misrepresent the Buddha, for misrepresentation of the Buddha is not good. And the Buddha would not say that. It’s impossible, reverend, it cannot happen that the heart’s release by love has been developed and properly implemented, yet somehow ill will still occupies the mind. For it is the heart’s release by love that is the escape from ill will.’

Take another mendicant who says: ‘I’ve developed the heart’s release by compassion. I’ve cultivated it, made it my vehicle and my basis, kept it up, consolidated it, and properly implemented it. Yet somehow the thought of harming still occupies my mind.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! … For it is the heart’s release by compassion that is the escape from thoughts of harming.’

Take another mendicant who says: ‘I’ve developed the heart’s release by rejoicing. I’ve cultivated it, made it my vehicle and my basis, kept it up, consolidated it, and properly implemented it. Yet somehow discontent still occupies my mind.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! … For it is the heart’s release by rejoicing that is the escape from discontent.’

Take another mendicant who says: ‘I’ve developed the heart’s release by equanimity. I’ve cultivated it, made it my vehicle and my basis, kept it up, consolidated it, and properly implemented it. Yet somehow desire still occupies my mind.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! … For it is the heart’s release by equanimity that is the escape from desire.’

Take another mendicant who says: ‘I’ve developed the signless release of the heart. I’ve cultivated it, made it my vehicle and my basis, kept it up, consolidated it, and properly implemented it. Yet somehow my consciousness still follows after signs.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! … For it is the signless release of the heart that is the escape from all signs.’

Take another mendicant who says: ‘I’m rid of the conceit “I am”. And I don’t regard anything as “I am this”. Yet somehow the dart of doubt and indecision still occupies my mind.’ They should be told, ‘Not so, venerable! Don’t say that. Don’t misrepresent the Buddha, for misrepresentation of the Buddha is not good. And the Buddha would not say that. It’s impossible, reverend, it cannot happen that the conceit “I am” has been done away with, and nothing is regarded as “I am this”, yet somehow the dart of doubt and indecision still occupies the mind. For it is the uprooting of the conceit “I am” that is the escape from the dart of doubt and indecision.’

These are the six elements of escape.”

AN 6.14

AN 6.14
A Good Death
Bhaddakasutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“A mendicant lives life so as to not have a good death. And how do they live life so as to not have a good death?

Take a mendicant who relishes work, talk, sleep, company, closeness, and proliferation. They love these things and like to relish them. A mendicant who lives life like this does not have a good death. This is called a mendicant who enjoys substantial reality, who hasn’t given up substantial reality to rightly make an end of suffering.

A mendicant lives life so as to have a good death. And how do they live life so as to have a good death?

Take a mendicant who doesn’t relish work, talk, sleep, company, closeness, and proliferation. They don’t love these things or like to relish them. A mendicant who lives life like this has a good death. This is called a mendicant who delights in extinguishment, who has given up substantial reality to rightly make an end of suffering.

A beast who likes to proliferate, enjoying proliferation, fails to win extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

But one who gives up proliferation, enjoying the state of non-proliferation, wins extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

AN 6.15

AN 6.15
Regret
Anutappiyasutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“As a mendicant makes their bed, so they must lie in it, and die tormented by regrets. And how do they die tormented by regrets?

Take a mendicant who relishes work, talk, sleep, company, closeness, and proliferation. They love these things and like to relish them. A mendicant who makes their bed like this must lie in it, and die tormented by regrets. This is called a mendicant who enjoys substantial reality, who hasn’t given up substantial reality to rightly make an end of suffering.

As a mendicant makes their bed, so they must lie in it, and die free of regrets. And how do they die free of regrets?

Take a mendicant who doesn’t relish work, talk, sleep, company, closeness, and proliferation. They don’t love these things or like to relish them. A mendicant who makes their bed like this must lie in it, and die free of regrets. This is called a mendicant who delights in extinguishment, who has given up substantial reality to rightly make an end of suffering.

A beast who likes to proliferate, enjoying proliferation, fails to win extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

But one who gives up proliferation, enjoying the state of non-proliferation, wins extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

AN 6.16

AN 6.16
Nakula's Father
Nakulapitusutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. Now at that time the householder Nakula's father was sick, suffering, gravely ill. Then the housewife Nakula's mother said to him:

"Householder, don't pass away with concerns. Such concern is suffering, and it's criticized by the Buddha. Householder, you might think: 'When I've gone, the housewife Nakula's mother won't be able to provide for the children and keep up the household carpets.' But you should not see it like this. I'm skilled at spinning cotton and carding wool. I'm able to provide for the children and keep up the household carpets. So householder, don't pass away with concerns …

Householder, you might think: 'When I've gone, the housewife Nakula's mother will take another husband.' But you should not see it like this. Both you and I know that we have remained celibate while at home for the past sixteen years. So householder, don't pass away with concerns …

Householder, you might think: 'When I've gone, the housewife Nakula's mother won't want to see the Buddha and his Saṅgha of mendicants.' But you should not see it like this. When you've gone, I'll want to see the Buddha and his mendicant Saṅgha even more. So householder, don't pass away with concerns …

Householder, you might think: 'The housewife Nakula's mother won't fulfill ethics.' But you should not see it like this. I am one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who fulfills their ethics. Whoever doubts this can go and ask the Buddha. He is staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. So householder, don't pass away with concerns …

Householder, you might think: 'The housewife Nakula's mother doesn't have internal serenity of heart.' But you should not see it like this. I am one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who has internal serenity of heart. Whoever doubts this can go and ask the Buddha. He is staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. So householder, don't pass away with concerns …

Householder, you might think: 'The housewife Nakula's mother has not gained a basis, a firm basis, and solace in this teaching and training. She has not gone beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and gained assurance. And she's not independent of others in the Teacher's instructions.' But you should not see it like this. I am one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who has gained a basis, a firm basis, and solace in this teaching and training. I have gone beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and gained assurance. And I am independent of others in the Teacher's instructions. Whoever doubts this can go and ask the Buddha. He is staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. So householder, don't pass away with concerns. Such concern is suffering, and it's criticized by the Buddha."

And then, as Nakula's mother was giving this advice to Nakula's father, his illness died down on the spot. And that's how Nakula's father recovered from that illness. Soon after recovering, leaning on a staff he went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"You're fortunate, householder, so very fortunate, to have the housewife Nakula's mother advise and instruct you out of kindness and compassion.

She is one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who fulfills their ethics.

She is one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who has internal serenity of heart.

She is one of those white-robed disciples of the Buddha who has gained a basis, a firm basis, and solace in this teaching and training. She has gone beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and gained assurance. And she is independent of others in the Teacher's instructions.

You're fortunate, householder, so very fortunate, to have the housewife Nakula's mother advise and instruct you out of kindness and compassion."

AN 6.17

AN 6.17
Sleep
Soppasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat, went to the assembly hall, and sat down on the seat spread out. Venerable Sāriputta also came out of retreat, went to the assembly hall, bowed to the Buddha and sat down to one side. Venerables Mahāmoggallāna, Mahākassapa, Mahākaccāna, Mahākoṭṭhita, Mahācunda, Mahākappina, Anuruddha, Revata, and Ānanda did the same. The Buddha spent much of the night sitting in meditation, then got up from his seat and entered his dwelling. And soon after the Buddha left those venerables each went to their own dwelling.

But those mendicants who were junior, recently gone forth, newly come to this teaching and training slept until the sun came up, snoring. The Buddha saw them doing this, with his clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman. He went to the assembly hall, sat down on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants:

"Mendicants, where is Sāriputta? Where are Mahāmoggallāna, Mahākassapa, Mahākaccāna, Mahākoṭṭhita, Mahācunda, Mahākappina, Anuruddha, Revata, and Ānanda? Where have these senior disciples gone?"

"Soon after the Buddha left those venerables each went to their own dwelling."

"So, mendicants, when the senior mendicants left, why did you sleep until the sun came up, snoring?

What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of an anointed aristocratic king who rules his whole life, dear and beloved to the country, while indulging in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing as much as he likes?"

"No, sir."

"Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing.

What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of an appointed official … a hereditary official … a general … a village chief … or a guild head who runs the guild his whole life, dear and beloved to the guild, while indulging in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing as much as he likes?"

"No, sir."

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing.

What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of an ascetic or brahmin who indulges in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing as much as they like? Their sense doors are unguarded, they eat too much, they’re not dedicated to wakefulness, they’re unable to discern skillful qualities, and they don’t pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn. Yet they realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing.

So you should train like this: ‘We will guard our sense doors, eat in moderation, be dedicated to wakefulness, discern skillful qualities, and pursue the development of the qualities that lead to awakening in the evening and toward dawn.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 6.18

AN 6.18
A Fish Dealer
Macchabandhasutta

At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants.

While walking along the road he saw a fish dealer in a certain spot selling fish that he had killed himself. Seeing this he left the road, sat at the root of a tree on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants, do you see that fish dealer selling fish that he killed himself?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a fish dealer selling fish that he killed himself who, by means of that work and livelihood, got to travel by elephant, horse, chariot, or vehicle, or to enjoy wealth, or to live off a large fortune?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Why is that? Because when the fish are led to the slaughter he regards them with bad intentions.

What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a butcher of cattle selling cattle that he killed himself who, by means of that work and livelihood, got to travel by elephant, horse, chariot, or vehicle, or to enjoy wealth, or to live off a large fortune?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Why is that? Because when the cattle are led to the slaughter he regards them with bad intentions.

What do you think, mendicants? Have you ever seen or heard of a butcher of sheep … a butcher of pigs … a butcher of poultry … or a deer-hunter selling deer which he killed himself who, by means of that work and livelihood, got to travel by elephant, horse, chariot, or vehicle, or to enjoy wealth, or to live off a large fortune?”

“No, sir.”

“Good, mendicants! I too have never seen or heard of such a thing. Why is that? Because when the deer are led to the slaughter he regards them with bad intentions.

By regarding even animals led to the slaughter with bad intentions he did not get to travel by elephant, horse, chariot, or vehicle, or to enjoy wealth, or to live off a large fortune.

How much worse is someone who regards human beings brought to the slaughter with bad intentions! This will be for their lasting harm and suffering. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.”

AN 6.19

AN 6.19
Mindfulness of Death (1st)
Paṭhamamaraṇassatisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, when mindfulness of death is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death. But do you develop mindfulness of death?”

When he said this, one of the mendicants said to the Buddha, “Sir, I develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live for another day and night, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live for another day, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to eat a meal of almsfood, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to chew and swallow four or five mouthfuls, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to chew and swallow a single mouthful, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to breathe out after breathing in, or to breathe in after breathing out, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

When this was said, the Buddha said to those mendicants:

“As to the mendicants who develop mindfulness of death by wishing to live for a day and night … or to live for a day … or to live as long as it takes to eat a meal of almsfood … or to live as long as it takes to chew and swallow four or five mouthfuls—these are called mendicants who live negligently. They slackly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.

But as to the mendicants who develop mindfulness of death by wishing to live as long as it takes to chew and swallow a single mouthful … or to live as long as it takes to breathe out after breathing in, or to breathe in after breathing out—these are called mendicants who live diligently. They keenly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.

So you should train like this: ‘We will live diligently. We will keenly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 6.20

AN 6.20
Mindfulness of Death (2nd)
Dutiyamaraṇassatisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

“Mendicants, when mindfulness of death is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death. And how is mindfulness of death developed and cultivated to be very fruitful and beneficial, to culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death?

As day passes by and night draws close, a mendicant reflects: ‘I might die of many causes. A snake might bite me, or a scorpion or centipede might sting me. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to me. Or I might stumble off a cliff, or get food poisoning, or suffer a disturbance of bile, phlegm, or piercing winds. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. ’ That mendicant should reflect: ‘Are there any bad, unskillful qualities that I haven’t given up, which might be an obstacle to my progress if I die tonight?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are such bad, unskillful qualities. Then in order to give them up they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you’d apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are no such bad, unskillful qualities. Then that mendicant should meditate with rapture and joy, training day and night in skillful qualities.

Or else, as night passes by and day draws close, a mendicant reflects: ‘I might die of many causes. A snake might bite me, or a scorpion or centipede might sting me. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. Or I might stumble off a cliff, or get food poisoning, or suffer a disturbance of bile, phlegm, or piercing winds. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. ’ That mendicant should reflect: ‘Are there any bad, unskillful qualities that I haven’t given up, which might be an obstacle to my progress if I die today?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are such bad, unskillful qualities. Then in order to give them up they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you’d apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are no such bad, unskillful qualities. Then that mendicant should meditate with rapture and joy, training day and night in skillful qualities.

Mindfulness of death, when developed and cultivated in this way, is very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death."

AN 6.21

AN 6.21
At Sāma Village
Sāmakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans near the little village of Sāma, by a lotus pond.

Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire lotus pond, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, “Sir, three qualities lead to the decline of a mendicant. What three? Relishing work, talk, and sleep. These three qualities lead to the decline of a mendicant.”

That’s what that deity said, and the teacher approved. Then that deity, knowing that the teacher approved, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened, adding:

“It’s unfortunate for those of you who even the deities know are declining in skillful qualities. I will teach you three more qualities that lead to decline. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, are three qualities that lead to decline? Enjoyment of company, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. These three qualities lead to decline.

Whether in the past, future, or present, all those who decline in skillful qualities do so because of these six qualities.”

AN 6.22

AN 6.22
Non-decline
Aparihāniyasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you these six principles that prevent decline. … And what, mendicants, are the six principles that prevent decline? Not relishing work, talk, sleep, and company, being easy to admonish, and having good friends. These six qualities prevent decline.

Whether in the past, future, or present, all those who have not declined in skillful qualities do so because of these six qualities.”

AN 6.23

AN 6.23
Dangers
Bhayasutta

“‘Danger’, mendicants, is a term for sensual pleasures. ‘Suffering’, ‘disease’, ‘boil’, ‘snare’, and ‘bog’ are terms for sensual pleasures.

And why is ‘danger’ a term for sensual pleasures? Someone who is besotted by sensual greed and shackled by lustful desire is not freed from dangers in the present life or in lives to come. That is why ‘danger’ is a term for sensual pleasures.

And why are ‘suffering’, ‘disease’, ‘boil’, ‘snare’, and ‘bog’ terms for sensual pleasures? Someone who is besotted by sensual greed and shackled by lustful desire is not freed from suffering, disease, boils, chains, or bogs in the present life or in lives to come. That is why these are terms for sensual pleasures.

Danger, suffering, disease, boils, and snares and bogs both. These describe the sensual pleasures to which ordinary people are attached.

Seeing the danger in grasping, the origin of birth and death, the unattached are freed with the ending of birth and death.

Happy, they’ve come to a safe place, extinguished in this very life. They’ve gone beyond all threats and dangers, and risen above all suffering.”

AN 6.24

AN 6.24
The Himalaya
Himavantasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has six qualities could shatter Himalaya, the king of mountains, let alone this wretched ignorance! What six? It’s when a mendicant is skilled in entering immersion, skilled in remaining in immersion, skilled in emerging from immersion, skilled in gladdening the mind for immersion, skilled in the meditation subjects for immersion, and skilled in projecting the mind purified by immersion. A mendicant who has these six qualities could shatter Himalaya, the king of mountains, let alone this wretched ignorance!”

AN 6.25

AN 6.25
Topics for Recollection
Anussatiṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these six topics for recollection. What six?

Firstly, a noble disciple recollects the Realized One: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Realized One their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving. They’ve left behind greed; they’re free of it and have risen above it. ‘Greed’ is a term for the five kinds of sensual stimulation. Relying on this, some sentient beings are purified in this way.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the teaching: ‘The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.’ When a noble disciple recollects the teaching their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha: ‘The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is practicing the way that’s good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own ethical precepts, which are unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. When a noble disciple recollects their ethical precepts their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own generosity: ‘I’m so fortunate, so very fortunate! Among people full of the stain of stinginess I live at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.’ When a noble disciple recollects their generosity their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the deities: ‘There are the Gods of the Four Great Kings, the Gods of the Thirty-Three, the Gods of Yama, the Joyful Gods, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others, the Gods of Brahmā’s Host, and gods even higher than these. When those deities passed away from here, they were reborn there because of their faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. I, too, have the same kind of faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom.'

When a noble disciple recollects the faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom of both themselves and the deities their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving. They've left behind greed; they're free of it and have risen above it. 'Greed' is a term for the five kinds of sensual stimulation. Relying on this, some sentient beings are purified in this way.

These are the six topics for recollection."

AN 6.26

AN 6.26
With Mahākaccāna
Mahākaccānasutta

There Mahākaccāna addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Venerable Mahākaccāna said this:

“It’s incredible, reverends, it’s amazing! How this Blessed One who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, has found an opportunity amid confinement; that is, the six topics for recollection. They are in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment. What six?

Firstly, a noble disciple recollects the Realized One: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Realized One their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving. They’ve left behind greed; they’re free of it and have risen above it. ‘Greed’ is a term for the five kinds of sensual stimulation. That noble disciple meditates with a heart just like space, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Relying on this, some sentient beings become pure in this way.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the teaching: ‘The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.’ When a noble disciple recollects the teaching their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha: ‘The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is practicing the way that’s good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.’ When a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own ethical precepts, which are unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. When a noble disciple recollects their ethical precepts their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own generosity: ‘I’m so fortunate, so very fortunate! Among people full of the stain of stinginess I live at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.’ When a noble disciple recollects their own generosity their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. …

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects the deities: ‘There are the Gods of the Four Great Kings, the Gods of the Thirty-Three, the Gods of Yama, the Joyful Gods, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others, the Gods of Brahmā’s Host, and gods even higher than these. When those deities passed away from here, they were reborn there because of their faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. I, too, have the same kind of faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom.’ When a noble disciple recollects the faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom of both themselves and the deities their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving. They’ve left behind greed; they’re free of it and have risen above it. ‘Greed’ is a term for the five kinds of sensual stimulation. That noble disciple meditates with a heart just like space, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Relying on this, some sentient beings become pure in this way.

It’s incredible, reverends, it’s amazing! How this Blessed One who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, has found an opportunity amid confinement; that is, the six topics for recollection. They are in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment.”

AN 6.27

AN 6.27
Proper Occasions (1st)
Paṭhamasamayasutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, how many occasions are there for going to see an esteemed mendicant?”

“Mendicant, there are six occasions for going to see an esteemed mendicant. What six?

Firstly, there’s a time when a mendicant’s heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire, and they don’t truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. On that occasion they should go to an esteemed mendicant and say: ‘My heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire, and I don’t truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. Venerable, please teach me how to give up sensual desire.’ Then that esteemed mendicant teaches them how to give up sensual desire. This is the first occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there’s a time when a mendicant’s heart is overcome and mired in ill will … This is the second occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there’s a time when a mendicant’s heart is overcome and mired in dullness and drowsiness … This is the third occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there’s a time when a mendicant’s heart is overcome and mired in restlessness and remorse … This is the fourth occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there’s a time when a mendicant’s heart is overcome and mired in doubt … This is the fifth occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there’s a time when a mendicant doesn’t understand what kind of meditation they need to focus on in order to end the defilements in the present life. On that occasion they should go to an esteemed mendicant and say: ‘I don’t understand what kind of meditation to focus on in order to end the defilements in the present life. Venerable, please teach me how to end the defilements.’ Then that esteemed mendicant teaches them how to end the defilements. This is the sixth occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

These are the six occasions for going to see an esteemed mendicant.”

AN 6.28

AN 6.28
Proper Occasions (2nd)
Dutiyasamayasutta

At one time several senior mendicants were staying near Varanasi, in the deer park at Isipatana. Then after the meal, on their return from almsround, this discussion came up among them while sitting together in the pavilion.

“Reverends, how many occasions are there for going to see an esteemed mendicant?”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Reverends, there’s a time after an esteemed mendicant’s meal when they return from almsround. Having washed their feet they sit down cross-legged, set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence. That is the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to that mendicant:

“Reverend, that’s not the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant. For at that time the fatigue from walking and from eating has not faded away. There’s a time late in the afternoon when an esteemed mendicant comes out of retreat. They sit cross-legged in the shade of their porch , set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence. That is the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to that mendicant:

“Reverend, that’s not the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant. For at that time they are still practicing the same meditation subject as a foundation of immersion that they focused on during the day. There’s a time when an esteemed mendicant has risen at the crack of dawn. They sit down cross-legged, set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence. That is the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to that mendicant:

“Reverend, that’s not the proper occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant. For at that time their body is full of vitality and they find it easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas.”

When this was said, Venerable Mahākaccāna said to those senior mendicants:

“Reverends, I have heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: ‘Mendicants, there are six occasions for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

What six? Firstly, there's a time when a mendicant's heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire, and they don't truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. On that occasion they should go to an esteemed mendicant and say:

"My heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire, and I don't truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. Venerable, please teach me how to give up sensual desire." Then that esteemed mendicant teaches them how to give up sensual desire. This is the first occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.

Furthermore, there's a time when a mendicant's heart is overcome and mired in ill will … dullness and drowsiness … restlessness and remorse … doubt …

Furthermore, there's a time when a mendicant doesn't understand what kind of meditation they need to focus on in order to end the defilements in the present life. On that occasion they should go to an esteemed mendicant and say, "I don't understand what kind of meditation to focus on in order to end the defilements in the present life. Venerable, please teach me how to end the defilements." Then that esteemed mendicant teaches them how to end the defilements. This is the sixth occasion for going to see an esteemed mendicant.'

Reverends, I have heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: 'These are the six occasions for going to see an esteemed mendicant.'"

AN 6.29

AN 6.29
With Udāyī
Udāyīsutta

Then the Buddha said to Udāyī, “Udāyī, how many topics for recollection are there?”

When he said this, Udāyī kept silent.

And a second time … and a third time, the Buddha said to him, “Udāyī, how many topics for recollection are there?”

And a second time and a third time Udāyī kept silent.

Then Venerable Ānanda said to Venerable Udāyī, “Reverend Udāyī, the teacher is addressing you.”

“Reverend Ānanda, I hear the Buddha.

It’s when a mendicant recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ And so they recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. This is a topic for recollection.”

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda: “Ānanda, I know that this silly man Udāyī is not committed to the higher mind. Ānanda, how many topics for recollection are there?”

“Sir, there are five topics for recollection. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption. When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to blissful meditation in this very life.

Furthermore, a mendicant focuses on the perception of light, concentrating on the perception of day regardless of whether it’s night or day. And so, with an open and unenveloped heart, they develop a mind that’s full of radiance. When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to knowledge and vision.

Furthermore, a mendicant examines their own body up from the soles of the feet and down from the tips of the hairs, wrapped in skin and full of many kinds of filth. ‘In this body there is head hair, body hair, nails, teeth, skin, flesh, sinews, bones, bone marrow, kidneys, heart, liver, diaphragm, spleen, lungs, intestines, mesentery, undigested food, feces, bile, phlegm, pus, blood, sweat, fat, tears, grease, saliva, snot, synovial fluid, urine.’ When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to giving up sensual desire.

Furthermore, suppose a mendicant were to see a corpse thrown in a charnel ground. And it had been dead for one, two, or three days, bloated, livid, and festering. They’d compare it with their own body: ‘This body is also of that same nature, that same kind, and cannot go beyond that.’

Or suppose they were to see a corpse thrown in a charnel ground being devoured by crows, hawks, vultures, dogs, jackals, and many kinds of little creatures. They’d compare it with their own body: ‘This body is also of that same nature, that same kind, and cannot go beyond that.’

Furthermore, suppose they were to see a corpse thrown in a charnel ground, a skeleton with flesh and blood, held together by sinews … A skeleton without flesh but smeared with blood, and held together by sinews … A skeleton rid of flesh and blood, held together by sinews … Bones rid of sinews scattered in every direction. Here a hand-bone, there a foot-bone, here a shin-bone, there a thigh-bone, here a hip-bone, there a rib-bone, here a back-bone, there an arm-bone, here a neck-bone, there a jaw-bone, here a tooth, there the skull … White bones, the color of shells … Decrepit bones, heaped in a pile … Bones rotted and crumbled to powder. They’d compare it with their own body: ‘This body is also of that same nature, that same kind, and cannot go beyond that.’ When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to uprooting the conceit ‘I am’.

Furthermore, a mendicant, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, enters and remains in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to the penetration of many elements. These are the five topics for recollection.”

“Good, good, Ānanda. Well then, Ānanda, you should also remember this sixth topic for recollection. In this case, a mendicant goes out mindfully, returns mindfully, stands mindfully, sits mindfully, lies down mindfully, and applies themselves to work mindfully. When this topic of recollection is developed and cultivated in this way it leads to mindfulness and situational awareness.”

AN 6.30

AN 6.30
Unsurpassable
Anuttariyasutta

“Mendicants, these six things are unsurpassable. What six? The unsurpassable seeing, listening, acquisition, training, service, and recollection.

And what is the unsurpassable seeing? Some people go to see an elephant-treasure, a horse-treasure, a jewel-treasure, or a diverse spectrum of sights; or ascetics and brahmins of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such a seeing, I don’t deny it. That seeing is low, crude, ordinary, ignoble, and pointless. It doesn’t lead to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. The unsurpassable seeing is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, goes to see a Realized One or their disciple. This is in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment. This is called the unsurpassable seeing. Such is the unsurpassable seeing.

But what of the unsurpassable hearing? Some people go to hear the sound of drums, arched harps, singing, or a diverse spectrum of sounds; or ascetics and brahmins of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such a hearing, I don’t deny it. That hearing … doesn’t lead to extinguishment. The unsurpassable hearing is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, goes to hear the teaching of a Realized One or one of his disciples. … This is called the unsurpassable hearing. Such is the unsurpassable seeing and hearing.

But what of the unsurpassable acquisition? Some people acquire a child, a wife, wealth, or a diverse spectrum of things; or they acquire faith in an ascetic or brahmin of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such an acquisition, I don’t deny it. That acquisition … doesn’t lead to extinguishment. The unsurpassable acquisition is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, acquires faith in a Realized One or their disciple. … This is called the unsurpassable acquisition. Such is the unsurpassable seeing, hearing, and acquisition.

But what of the unsurpassable training? Some people train in elephant riding, horse riding, chariot driving, archery, swordsmanship, or a diverse spectrum of things; or they train under an ascetic or brahmin of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such a training, I don’t deny it. That training … doesn’t lead to extinguishment. The unsurpassable training is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, trains in the higher ethics, the higher mind, and the higher wisdom in the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One. … This is called the unsurpassable training. Such is the unsurpassable seeing, hearing, acquisition, and training.

But what of the unsurpassable service? Some people serve an aristocrat, a brahmin, a householder, or a diverse spectrum of people; or they serve ascetics and brahmins of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such service, I don't deny it. That service … doesn't lead to extinguishment. The unsurpassable service is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, serves a Realized One or their disciple. … This is called the unsurpassable service. Such is the unsurpassable seeing, listening, acquisition, training, and service.

But what of the unsurpassable recollection? Some people recollect a child, a wife, wealth, or a diverse spectrum of things; or they recollect an ascetic or brahmin of wrong view and wrong practice. There is such recollection, I don't deny it. That recollection is low, crude, ordinary, ignoble, and pointless. It doesn't lead to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. The unsurpassable recollection is when someone with settled faith and love, sure and devoted, recollects a Realized One or their disciple. … This is called the unsurpassable recollection.

These are the six unsurpassable things.

They've gained the unsurpassed seeing, the unsurpassed hearing, and the unsurpassable acquisition. They enjoy the unsurpassable training and serve with care. Then they develop recollection connected with seclusion, which is safe, and leads to freedom from death.

They rejoice in diligence, alert and ethically restrained. And in time they arrive at the place where suffering ceases."

AN 6.31

AN 6.31
A Trainee
Sekhasutta

“These six things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What six? They relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They don’t guard the sense doors, and they eat too much. These six things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These six things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What six? They don’t relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They guard the sense doors, and they don’t eat too much. These six things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.”

AN 6.32

AN 6.32
Non-decline (1st)
Paṭhamaaparihānasutta

Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, these six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant. What six? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for diligence, and for hospitality. These six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant."

That's what that deity said, and the teacher approved. Then that deity, knowing that the teacher approved, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened, adding:

"Respect for the Teacher and the teaching, and keen respect for the Saṅgha; a mendicant who respects diligence and hospitality can't decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment."

AN 6.33

AN 6.33
Non-decline (2nd)
Dutiyaaparihānasutta

“Tonight, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta’s Grove, came to me, bowed, stood to one side, and said to me: ‘Sir, these six things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant. What six? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for conscience, and for prudence. These six things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant.’

That is what that deity said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled me, keeping me on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Respect for the Teacher and the teaching, and keen respect for the Saṅgha; having both conscience and prudence, reverential and respectful, such a one can’t decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment.”

AN 6.34

AN 6.34
With Mahāmoggallāna
Mahāmoggallānasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then as Venerable Mahāmoggallāna was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "Which gods know that they are stream-enterers, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening?"

Now, at that time a monk called Tissa had recently passed away and been reborn in a Brahmā realm. There they knew that Tissa the Brahmā was very mighty and powerful.

And then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from Jeta's Grove and reappeared in that Brahmā realm.

Tissa saw Moggallāna coming off in the distance, and said to him, "Come, my good Moggallāna! Welcome, my good Moggallāna! It's been a long time since you took the opportunity to come here. Sit, my good Moggallāna, this seat is for you." Moggallāna sat down on the seat spread out. Then Tissa bowed to Moggallāna and sat to one side.

Moggallāna said to him, "Tissa, which gods know that they are stream-enterers, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening?"

"The gods of the Four Great Kings know this."

"But do all of them know this?"

"No, my good Moggallāna, not all of them. Those who lack experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and lack the ethics loved by the noble ones, do not know that they are stream-enterers. But those who have experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and have the ethics loved by the noble ones, do know that they are stream-enterers."

"But Tissa, is it only the gods of the Four Great Kings who know that they are stream-enterers, or do the gods of the Thirty-Three … the Gods of Yama … the Joyful Gods … the Gods Who Love to Imagine … and the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others know that they are stream-enterers, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening?"

"The gods of these various classes know this."

"But do all of them know this?"

“No, my good Moggallāna, not all of them. Those who lack experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and lack the ethics loved by the noble ones, do not know that they are stream-enterers. But those who have experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and have the ethics loved by the noble ones, do know that they are stream-enterers.”

Moggallāna approved and agreed with what Tissa the Brahmā said. Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from that Brahmā realm and reappeared in Jeta’s Grove.

AN 6.35

AN 6.35
Things That Play a Part in Realization
Vijjābhāgiyasutta

“These six things play a part in realization. What six? The perception of impermanence, the perception of suffering in impermanence, the perception of not-self in suffering, the perception of giving up, the perception of fading away, and the perception of cessation. These are the six things that play a part in realization.”

AN 6.36

AN 6.36
Roots of Arguments
Vivādamūlasutta

“Mendicants, there are these six roots of arguments. What six? Firstly, a mendicant is irritable and hostile. Such a mendicant lacks respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and they don’t fulfill the training. They create a dispute in the Saṅgha, which is for the hurt and unhappiness of the people, for the harm, hurt, and suffering of gods and humans. If you see such a root of arguments in yourselves or others, you should try to give up this bad thing. If you don’t see it, you should practice so that it doesn’t come up in the future. That’s how to give up this bad root of arguments, so it doesn’t come up in the future.

Furthermore, a mendicant is offensive and contemptuous … They’re jealous and stingy … devious and deceitful … with corrupt wishes and wrong view … They’re attached to their own views, holding them tight, and refusing to let go. Such a mendicant lacks respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and they don’t fulfill the training. They create a dispute in the Saṅgha, which is for the hurt and unhappiness of the people, for the harm, hurt, and suffering of gods and humans. If you see such a root of arguments in yourselves or others, you should try to give up this bad thing. If you don’t see it, you should practice so that it doesn’t come up in the future. That’s how to give up this bad root of arguments, so it doesn’t come up in the future. These are the six roots of arguments.”

AN 6.37

AN 6.37
A Gift With Six Factors
Chaḷaṅgadānasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time Veḷukaṇṭakī, Nanda's mother, was preparing a religious donation with six factors for the mendicant Saṅgha headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna. The Buddha saw her doing this, with his clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, and he addressed the mendicants:

"This Veḷukaṇṭakī, Nanda's mother, is preparing a religious donation with six factors for the mendicant Saṅgha headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna.

And how does a religious donation have six factors? Three factors apply to the donor and three to the recipients.

What three factors apply to the donor? It's when a donor is in a good mood before giving, while giving they feel confident, and after giving they're uplifted. These three factors apply to the donor.

What three factors apply to the recipients? It's when the recipients are free of greed, hate, and delusion, or practicing to be free of them. These three factors apply to the recipients.

Thus three factors apply to the donor and three to the recipients. That's how a religious donation has six factors.

It's not easy to grasp the merit of such a six-factored donation by saying that this is the extent of their overflowing merit, overflowing goodness that nurtures happiness and is conducive to heaven, ripening in happiness and leading to heaven. And it leads to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, to welfare and happiness. It's simply reckoned as an incalculable, immeasurable, great mass of merit.

It's like trying to grasp how much water is in the ocean. It's not easy to say how many gallons, how many hundreds, thousands, hundreds of thousands of gallons there are. It's simply reckoned as an incalculable, immeasurable, great mass of water. In the same way, it's not easy to grasp the merit of such a six-factored donation …

A good mood before giving, confidence while giving, feeling uplifted after giving: this is the perfect sacrifice.

Free of greed, free of hate, free of delusion, undefiled; this is the field for the perfect sacrifice, the disciplined spiritual practitioners.

After rinsing, you give with your own hands. This sacrifice is very fruitful for both yourself and others.

When an intelligent, faithful person, sacrifices like this, with a mind of letting go, that astute one is reborn in a happy, pleasing world."

AN 6.38

AN 6.38
One's Own Volition
Attakārīsutta

Then a certain brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

"Mister Gotama, this is my doctrine and view: One does not act of one's own volition, nor does one act of another's volition."

"Brahmin, may I never see or hear of anyone holding such a doctrine or view! How on earth can someone who comes and goes on his own say that one does not act of one's own volition, nor does one act of another's volition?

What do you think, brahmin, is there an element of initiative?"

"Yes, sir."

"Since this is so, do we find sentient beings who initiate activity?"

"Yes, sir."

"Since there is an element of initiative, and sentient beings who initiate activity are found, sentient beings act of their own volition or that of another.

What do you think, brahmin, is there an element of persistence … exertion … strength … endurance … energy?"

"Yes, sir."

"Since this is so, do we find sentient beings who have energy?"

"Yes, sir."

"Since there is an element of energy, and sentient beings who have energy are found, sentient beings act of their own volition or that of another.

Brahmin, may I never see or hear of anyone holding such a doctrine or view! How on earth can someone who comes and goes on his own say that one does not act of one's own volition, nor does one act of another's volition?"

"Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 6.39

AN 6.39
Sources
Nidānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three sources that give rise to deeds. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion are sources that give rise to deeds. Greed doesn’t give rise to contentment. Rather, greed just gives rise to greed. Hate doesn’t give rise to love. Rather, hate just gives rise to hate. Delusion doesn’t give rise to understanding. Rather, delusion just gives rise to delusion. It’s not because of deeds born of greed, hate, and delusion that gods, humans, or those in any other good places are found. Rather, it’s because of deeds born of greed, hate, and delusion that hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, or any other bad places are found. These are three sources that give rise to deeds.

Mendicants, there are these three sources that give rise to deeds. What three? Contentment, love, and understanding are sources that give rise to deeds. Contentment doesn’t give rise to greed. Rather, contentment just gives rise to contentment. Love doesn’t give rise to hate. Rather, love just gives rise to love. Understanding doesn’t give rise to delusion. Rather, understanding just gives rise to understanding. It’s not because of deeds born of contentment, love, and understanding that hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, or any other bad places are found. Rather, it’s because of deeds born of contentment, love, and understanding that gods, humans, or those in any other good places are found. These are three sources that give rise to deeds.”

AN 6.40

AN 6.40
With Kimbila
Kimilasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kimbilā in the Freshwater Mangrove Wood. Then Venerable Kimbila went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen lack respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, diligence, and hospitality after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen maintain respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, diligence, and hospitality after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

AN 6.41

AN 6.41
A Tree Trunk
Dārukkhandhasutta

So I have heard. At one time Venerable Sāriputta was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain.

Then Venerable Sāriputta robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, descended the Vulture's Peak together with several mendicants. At a certain spot he saw a large tree trunk, and he addressed the mendicants, "Reverends, do you see this large tree trunk?"

"Yes, reverend."

"If they wanted to, a mendicant with psychic powers who has mastered their mind could determine this tree trunk to be nothing but earth. Why is that? Because the earth element exists in the tree trunk. Relying on that a mendicant with psychic powers could determine it to be nothing but earth. If they wanted to, a mendicant with psychic powers who has mastered their mind could determine this tree trunk to be nothing but water. … Or they could determine it to be nothing but fire … Or they could determine it to be nothing but air … Or they could determine it to be nothing but beautiful … Or they could determine it to be nothing but ugly. Why is that? Because the element of ugliness exists in the tree trunk. Relying on that a mendicant with psychic powers could determine it to be nothing but ugly."

AN 6.42

AN 6.42
With Nāgita
Nāgitasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a village of the Kosalan brahmins named Icchānaṅgala. He stayed in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. The brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala heard:

“It seems the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—has arrived at Icchānaṅgala. He is staying in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. He has this good reputation: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ He has realized with his own insight this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—and he makes it known to others. He teaches Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased; and he explains a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. It’s good to see such perfected ones.” Then, when the night had passed, they took many fresh and cooked foods and went to the forest near Icchānaṅgala, where they stood outside the gates making a dreadful racket.

Now, at that time Venerable Nāgita was the Buddha’s attendant. Then the Buddha said to Nāgita, “Nāgita, who’s making that dreadful racket? You’d think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!”

“Sir, it’s these brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala. They’ve brought many fresh and cooked foods, and they’re standing outside the gates wanting to offer it specially to the Buddha and the mendicant Saṅgha.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.”

“Sir, may the Blessed One please relent now! May the Holy One relent! Now is the time for the Buddha to relent. Wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. It’s like when it rains heavily and the water flows downhill. In the same way, wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. Why is that? Because of the Buddha’s ethics and wisdom.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.

Take a mendicant living within a village who I see sitting immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: ‘Now a monastery worker, a novice, or a fellow practitioner will make this venerable fall from immersion.’ So I’m not pleased that that mendicant is living within a village.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting nodding in meditation. I think to myself: ‘Now this venerable, having dispelled that sleepiness and weariness, will focus just on the unified perception of wilderness.’ So I’m pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting without being immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: ‘Now if this venerable’s mind is not immersed in samādhi they will immerse it, or if it is immersed in samādhi, they will preserve it.’ So I’m pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: ‘Now this venerable will free the unfreed mind or preserve the freed mind.’ So I’m pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant who I see living within a village receiving robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Enjoying possessions, honor, and popularity they neglect retreat, and they neglect remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. They come down to villages, towns, and capital cities and make their home there. So I’m not pleased that that mendicant is living within a village.

Take a mendicant who I see in the wilderness receiving robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Fending off possessions, honor, and popularity they don’t neglect retreat, and they don’t neglect remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. So I’m pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Nāgita, when I’m walking along a road and I don’t see anyone ahead or behind I feel relaxed, even if I need to urinate or defecate.”

AN 6.43

AN 6.43
The Giant
Nāgasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, on his return from almsround, he addressed Venerable Ānanda, "Come, Ānanda, let's go to the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother for the day's meditation."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied.

So the Buddha went with Ānanda to the Eastern Monastery. In the late afternoon the Buddha came out of retreat and addressed Ānanda, "Come, Ānanda, let's go to the eastern gate to bathe."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied. So the Buddha went with Ānanda to the eastern gate to bathe. When he had bathed and emerged from the water he stood in one robe drying himself.

Now, at that time King Pasenadi had a giant bull elephant called "White". It emerged from the eastern gate to the beating and playing of musical instruments.

When people saw it they said, "The royal giant is so handsome! The royal giant is so good-looking! The royal giant is so lovely! The royal giant has such a huge body!"

When they said this, Venerable Udāyī said to the Buddha, "Sir, is it only when they see elephants with such a huge, formidable body that people say: 'A giant, such a giant'? Or do they say it when they see any other creatures with huge, formidable bodies?"

"Udāyī, when they see elephants with such a huge, formidable body people say: 'A giant, such a giant!'

And also when they see a horse with a huge, formidable body …

When they see a bull with a huge, formidable body …

When they see a serpent with a huge, formidable body …

When they see a tree with a huge, formidable body …

And when they see a human being with such a huge, formidable body people say: 'A giant, such a giant!'

But Udāyī, one who does nothing monstrous by way of body, speech, and mind is who I call a ‘giant’ in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.”

“It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! How well said this was by the Buddha: ‘But Udāyī, one who does nothing monstrous by way of body, speech, and mind is who I call a “giant” in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.’ And I celebrate the well-spoken words of the Buddha with these verses:

Awakened as a human being, self-tamed and immersed in samādhi, following the spiritual path, he loves peace of mind.

Revered by people, gone beyond all things, even the gods revere him; so I’ve heard from the perfected one.

He has transcended all fetters and escaped from entanglements. Delighting to renounce sensual pleasures, he’s freed like gold from stone.

That giant outshines all, like the Himalaya beside other mountains. Of all those named ‘giant’, he is truly named, supreme.

I shall extol the giant for you, for he does nothing monstrous. Gentleness and harmlessness are two feet of the giant.

Fervor and celibacy are his two other feet. Faith is the giant’s trunk, and equanimity his white tusks.

Mindfulness is his neck, his head is wisdom—inquiry and thinking about principles. His belly is the sacred hearth of the Dhamma, and his tail is seclusion.

Practicing absorption, enjoying the breath, he is serene within. The giant is serene when walking, the giant is serene when standing, the giant is serene when lying down, and when sitting, the giant is serene. The giant is restrained everywhere: this is the accomplishment of the giant.

He eats blameless things, he doesn’t eat blameworthy things. When he gets food and clothes, he avoids storing them up.

Having severed all bonds, fetters large and small, wherever he goes, he goes without concern.

A white lotus, fragrant and delightful, sprouts in water and grows there, but water does not stick to it.

Just so the Buddha is born in the world, and lives in the world, but the world does not stick to him, as water does not stick to the lotus.

A great blazing fire dies down when the fuel runs out. When the coals have gone out it's said to be 'extinguished'.

This simile is taught by the discerning to express the meaning clearly. Great giants will understand what the giant taught the giant.

Free of greed, free of hate, free of delusion, undefiled; the giant, giving up his body, being undefiled, will be fully extinguished."

AN 6.44

AN 6.44
With Migasālā
Migasālāsutta

Then Venerable Ānanda robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the laywoman Migasālā, where he sat on the seat spread out.

Then the laywoman Migasālā went up to Ānanda, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Honorable Ānanda, how on earth are we supposed to understand the teaching taught by the Buddha, when the chaste and the unchaste are both reborn in exactly the same place in the next life?

My father Purāṇa was celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. When he passed away the Buddha declared that, since he was a once-returner, he was reborn in the host of Joyful Gods.

But my uncle Isidatta was not celibate; he lived content with his wife. When he passed away the Buddha declared that, since he was also a once-returner, he was reborn in the host of Joyful Gods.

How on earth are we supposed to understand the teaching taught by the Buddha, when the chaste and the unchaste are both reborn in exactly the same place in the next life?”

“You’re right, sister, but that’s how the Buddha declared it.”

Then Ānanda, after receiving almsfood at Migasālā’s home, rose from his seat and left. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, Ānanda went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

“Ānanda, who is this laywoman Migasālā, a foolish incompetent aunty, with an aunty’s wit? And who is it that knows how to assess individuals? These six people are found in the world. What six?

Take a certain person who is sweet-natured and pleasant to be with. And spiritual companions enjoy living together with them. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take another person who is sweet-natured and pleasant to be with. And spiritual companions enjoy living together with them. And they’ve listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a higher place, not a lower. They’re going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them, saying: ‘This one has just the same qualities as the other, so why is one worse and one better?’ This will be for their lasting harm and suffering.

In this case, the person who is sweet-natured … and has listened, learned, comprehended theoretically, and found temporary freedom is better and finer than the other person. Why is that? Because the stream of the teaching carries them along. But who knows the difference between them except a Realized One?

So, Ānanda, don’t be judgmental about people. Don’t pass judgment on people. Those who pass judgment on people harm themselves. I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take another person who is angry and conceited, and from time to time has greedy thoughts. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take another person who is angry and conceited, and from time to time has greedy thoughts. … Because the stream of the teaching carries them along. … When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a higher place, not a lower. They’re going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them …

I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take another person who is angry and conceited, and from time to time has the impulse to speak inappropriately. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take another person who is angry and conceited, and from time to time has the impulse to speak inappropriately. But they’ve listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a higher place, not a lower. They’re going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them, saying: ‘This one has just the same qualities as the other, so why is one worse and one better?’ This will be for their lasting harm and suffering.

In this case, the person who is angry and conceited, but has listened, learned, comprehended theoretically, and found temporary freedom is better and finer than the other person. Why is that? Because the stream of the teaching carries them along. But who knows the difference between them except a Realized One?

So, Ānanda, don’t be judgmental about people. Don’t pass judgment on people. Those who pass judgment on people harm themselves. I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Who is this laywoman Migasālā, a foolish incompetent aunty, with an aunty's wit? And who is it that knows how to assess individuals? These six people are found in the world.

If Isidatta had achieved Purāṇa's level of ethical conduct, Purāṇa could not have even known Isidatta's destination. And if Purāṇa had achieved Isidatta's level of wisdom, Isidatta could not have even known Purāṇa's destination. So both individuals were lacking in one respect."

AN 6.45

AN 6.45
Debt
Iṇasutta

“Mendicants, isn’t poverty suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When a poor, penniless person falls into debt, isn’t being in debt also suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When a poor person who has fallen into debt agrees to pay interest, isn’t the interest also suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When a poor person who has fallen into debt and agreed to pay interest fails to pay it when it falls due, they get a warning. Isn’t being warned suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When a poor person fails to pay after getting a warning, they’re prosecuted. Isn’t being prosecuted suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When a poor person fails to pay after being prosecuted, they’re imprisoned. Isn’t being imprisoned suffering in the world for a person who enjoys sensual pleasures?”

“Yes, sir.”

“So mendicants, poverty, debt, interest, warnings, prosecution, and imprisonment are suffering in the world for those who enjoy sensual pleasures. In the same way, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities is called poor and penniless in the training of the Noble One.

Since they have no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, or wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities, they do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. This is how they’re in debt, I say.

In order to conceal the bad things they do by way of body, speech, and mind they harbour corrupt wishes. They wish, plan, speak, and act with the thought: ‘May no-one find me out!’ This is how they pay interest, I say.

Good-hearted spiritual companions say this about them: ‘This venerable acts like this, and behaves like that.’ This is how they’re warned, I say.

When they go to a wilderness, the root of a tree, or an empty hut, they’re beset by remorseful, unskillful thoughts. This is how they’re prosecuted, I say.

That poor, penniless person has done bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re trapped in the prison of hell or the animal realm. I don’t see a single prison that’s as brutal, as vicious, and such an obstacle to reaching the supreme sanctuary from the yoke as the prison of hell or the animal realm.

Poverty is said to be suffering in the world, and so is being in debt. A poor person who has fallen into debt frets even when spending the loan.

And then they’re prosecuted, or even thrown in jail. Such imprisonment is true suffering for someone who prays for pleasure and possessions.

In the same way, in the noble one’s training whoever has no faith, no conscience or prudence, contemplates bad deeds.

After doing bad things by way of body, speech, and mind, they wish, ‘May no-one find me out!’

Their behavior is creepy by body, speech, and mind. They pile up bad deeds on and on, life after life.

That stupid evildoer, knowing their own misdeeds, is a poor person who has fallen into debt, and frets even when spending the loan.

And when in village or wilderness they’re prosecuted by painful mental plans, which are born of remorse.

That stupid evildoer, knowing their own misdeeds, goes to one of the animal realms, or is trapped in hell.

Such imprisonment is true suffering, from which a wise one is released. With confident heart, they give with wealth that is properly earned.

That faithful householder holds a perfect hand on both counts: welfare and benefit in this life, and happiness in the next. This is how, for a householder, merit grows by generosity.

In the same way, in the noble one’s training, whoever is grounded in faith, with conscience and prudence, wise, and ethically restrained, is said to live happily in the noble one's training. After gaining pleasure not of the flesh, they concentrate on equanimity.

They give up the five hindrances, constantly energetic, and enter the absorptions, unified, alert, and mindful.

Truly knowing in this way the end of all fetters, by not grasping in any way, their mind is rightly freed.

To that poised one, rightly freed with the end of the fetters of rebirth, the knowledge comes: 'My freedom is unshakable.'

This is the ultimate knowledge. This is the supreme happiness. Sorrowless, stainless, secure: this is the highest freedom from debt."

AN 6.46

AN 6.46
By Mahācunda
Mahācundasutta

So I have heard. At one time Venerable Mahācunda was staying in the land of the Cetis at Sahajāti. There he addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Venerable Mahācunda said this:

“Take a case where mendicants who practice discernment of principles rebuke mendicants who practice absorption meditation: ‘They say, “We practice absorption meditation! We practice absorption meditation!” And they meditate and concentrate and contemplate and ruminate. Why do they practice absorption meditation? In what way do they practice absorption meditation? How do they practice absorption meditation?’ In this case the mendicants who practice discernment of principles are not inspired, and the mendicants who practice absorption meditation are not inspired. And they’re not acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

Now, take a case where mendicants who practice absorption meditation rebuke mendicants who practice discernment of principles: ‘They say, “We practice discernment of principles! We practice discernment of principles!” But they’re restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, loose-tongued, unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying minds and undisciplined faculties. Why do they practice discernment of principles? In what way do they practice discernment of principles? How do they practice discernment of principles?’ In this case the mendicants who practice absorption meditation are not inspired, and the mendicants who practice discernment of principles are not inspired. And they’re not acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

Now, take a case where mendicants who practice discernment of principles praise only others like them, not mendicants who practice absorption meditation. In this case the mendicants who practice discernment of principles are not inspired, and the mendicants who practice absorption meditation are not inspired. And they’re not acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

And take a case where mendicants who practice absorption meditation praise only others like them, not mendicants who practice discernment of principles. In this case the mendicants who practice absorption meditation are not inspired, and the mendicants who practice discernment of principles are not inspired. And they’re not acting for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

So you should train like this: ‘As mendicants who practice discernment of principles, we will praise mendicants who practice absorption meditation.’ That’s how you should train.

Why is that? Because it's incredibly rare to find individuals in the world who have direct meditative experience of the element free of death.

So you should train like this: 'As mendicants who practice absorption meditation, we will praise mendicants who practice discernment of principles.' That's how you should train. Why is that? Because it's incredibly rare to find individuals in the world who see the meaning of a deep saying with penetrating wisdom."

AN 6.47

AN 6.47
Apparent in This Very Life (1st)
Paṭhamasandiṭṭhikasutta

And then the wanderer Moḷiyasīvaka went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Sir, they speak of ‘a teaching apparent in the present life’. In what way is the teaching apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves?”

“Well then, Sīvaka, I’ll ask you about this in return, and you can answer as you like. What do you think, Sīvaka? When there’s greed in you, do you understand ‘I have greed in me’? And when there’s no greed in you, do you understand ‘I have no greed in me’?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Since you know this, this is how the teaching is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.

What do you think, Sīvaka? When there’s hate … delusion … greedy ideas … hateful ideas … When there are delusional ideas in you, do you understand ‘I have delusional ideas in me’? And when there are no delusional ideas in you, do you understand ‘I have no delusional ideas in me’?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Since you know this, this is how the teaching is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.”

“Excellent, sir! Excellent! From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 6.48

AN 6.48
Apparent in This Very Life (2nd)
Dutiyasandiṭṭhikasutta

Then a certain brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, they speak of ‘a teaching apparent in the present life’. In what way is the teaching apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves?”

“Well then, brahmin, I’ll ask you about this in return, and you can answer as you like. What do you think, brahmin? When there’s greed in you, do you understand ‘I have greed in me’? And when there’s no greed in you, do you understand ‘I have no greed in me’?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Since you know this, this is how the teaching is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.

What do you think, brahmin? When there’s hate … delusion … corruption that leads to physical deeds … corruption that leads to speech … When there’s corruption that leads to mental deeds in you, do you understand ‘I have corruption that leads to mental deeds in me’? And when there’s no corruption that leads to mental deeds in you, do you understand ‘I have no corruption that leads to mental deeds in me’?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Since you know this, this is how the teaching is apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.”

“Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 6.49

AN 6.49
With Khema
Khemasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time Venerable Khema and Venerable Sumana were staying near Sāvatthī in the Dark Forest. Then they went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Venerable Khema said to the Buddha:

"Sir, a mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—does not think: 'There is someone better than me, or equal to me, or worse than me.'"

That is what Khema said, and the teacher approved. Then Khema, knowing that the teacher approved, got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

And then, not long after Khema had left, Sumana said to the Buddha:

"Sir, a mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—does not think: 'There is no-one better than me, or equal to me, or worse than me.'"

That is what Sumana said, and the teacher approved. Then Sumana, knowing that the teacher approved, got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

And then, soon after Khema and Sumana had left, the Buddha addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, this is how gentlemen declare enlightenment. The goal is spoken of, but the self is not involved. But it seems that there are some foolish people here who declare enlightenment as a joke. Later they will fall into anguish.

They don't represent themselves as being among superiors, inferiors, or equals. Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed. They live freed from fetters."

AN 6.50

AN 6.50
Sense Restraint
Indriyasaṁvarasutta

“Mendicants, when there is no sense restraint, one who lacks sense restraint has destroyed a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is no ethical conduct, one who lacks ethics has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is no sense restraint, one who lacks sense restraint has destroyed a vital condition for ethical conduct. … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

When there is sense restraint, one who has sense restraint has fulfilled a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is ethical conduct, one who has fulfilled ethical conduct has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would all grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is sense restraint, one who has fulfilled sense restraint has fulfilled a vital condition for ethical conduct. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.”

AN 6.51

AN 6.51
With Ānanda
Ānandasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Ānanda sat down to one side, and said to Sāriputta:

“Reverend Sāriputta, how does a mendicant get to hear a teaching they haven’t heard before? How do they remember those teachings they have heard? How do they keep rehearsing the teachings they’ve already got to know? And how do they come to understand what they haven’t understood before?”

“Well, Venerable Ānanda, you’re very learned. Why don’t you clarify this yourself?”

“Well then, Reverend Sāriputta, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, reverend,” Sāriputta replied. Ānanda said this:

“Reverend Sāriputta, take a mendicant who memorizes the teaching—statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations.

Then, just as they learned and memorized it, they teach others in detail, make them recite in detail, practice reciting in detail, and think about and consider the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind.

They enter the rains retreat in a monastery with senior mendicants who are very learned, inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines. From time to time they go up to those mendicants and ask them questions: ‘Why, sir, does it say this? What does that mean?’ Those venerables clarify what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters.

This is how a mendicant gets to hear a teaching they haven’t heard before. It’s how they remember those teachings they have heard. It’s how they keep rehearsing the teachings they’ve already got to know. And it’s how they come to understand what they haven’t understood before.”

“It’s incredible, reverend, it’s amazing! How well said this was by Venerable Ānanda! And we will remember Venerable Ānanda as someone who has these six qualities.

For Ānanda memorizes the teaching … statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. Those venerables clarify to Ānanda what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters.”

AN 6.52

AN 6.52
Aristocrats
Khattiyasutta

And then the brahmin Jāṇussoṇi went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Aristocrats, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Aristocrats, brahmin, have wealth as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with wisdom. They’re dedicated to power. They insist on territory. Their ultimate goal is authority.”

“Brahmins, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Brahmins have wealth as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with wisdom. They’re dedicated to the hymns. They insist on sacrifice. Their ultimate goal is the Brahmā realm.”

“Householders, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Householders have wealth as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with wisdom. They’re dedicated to their profession. They insist on work. Their ultimate goal is to complete their work.”

“Women, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Women have a man as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with adornments. They’re dedicated to their children. They insist on being without a co-wife. Their ultimate goal is authority.”

“Bandits, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Bandits have theft as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with a hiding place. They’re dedicated to their sword. They insist on darkness. Their ultimate goal is invisibility.”

“Ascetics, Mister Gotama, have what as their ambition? What is their preoccupation? What are they dedicated to? What do they insist on? What is their ultimate goal?”

“Ascetics have patience and gentleness as their ambition. They’re preoccupied with wisdom. They’re dedicated to ethical conduct. They insist on owning nothing. Their ultimate goal is extinguishment.”

“It’s incredible, Mister Gotama, it’s amazing! Mister Gotama knows the ambition, preoccupation, dedication, insistence, and ultimate goal of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, women, bandits, and ascetics. Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 6.53

AN 6.53
Diligence
Appamādasutta

Then a certain brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, is there one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures benefits for both the present life and lives to come?”

“There is, brahmin.”

“So what is it?”

“Diligence, brahmin, is one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures benefits for both the present life and lives to come.

The footprints of all creatures that walk can fit inside an elephant’s footprint. So an elephant’s footprint is said to be the biggest of them all. In the same way, diligence is one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures benefits for both the present life and lives to come.

The rafters of a bungalow all lean to the peak, slope to the peak, and meet at the peak, so the peak is said to be the topmost of them all. In the same way, diligence is one thing …

A reed-cutter, having cut the reeds, grabs them at the top and shakes them down, shakes them about, and shakes them off. In the same way, diligence is one thing …

When the stalk of a bunch of mangoes is cut, all the mangoes attached to the stalk will follow along. In the same way, diligence is one thing …

All lesser rulers are vassals of a wheel-turning monarch, so the wheel-turning monarch is said to be the foremost of them all. In the same way, diligence is one thing …

The radiance of all the stars is not worth a sixteenth part of the moon’s radiance, so the moon’s radiance is said to be the best of them all. In the same way, diligence is one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures benefits for both the present life and lives to come.

This is the one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures benefits for both the present life and lives to come.”

“Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 6.54

AN 6.54
About Dhammika
Dhammikasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain.

Now at that time Venerable Dhammika was a resident in all seven monasteries of his native land. There he abused visiting mendicants; he insulted, harmed, attacked, and harassed them. The visiting mendicants who were treated in this way did not stay. They left, abandoning the monastery.

Then the local lay followers thought to themselves, "We have supplied the mendicant Saṅgha with robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But the visiting mendicants don't stay. They leave, abandoning the monastery. What is the cause, what is the reason for this?"

Then the local lay followers thought to themselves, "This Venerable Dhammika abuses visiting mendicants; he insults, harms, attacks, and harasses them. The visiting mendicants who were treated in this way do not stay. They leave, abandoning the monastery. Why don't we banish Venerable Dhammika?"

Then the local lay followers went up to Venerable Dhammika and said to him, "Sir, please leave this monastery. You've stayed here long enough."

Then Venerable Dhammika left and went to another monastery. There he abused visiting mendicants; he insulted, harmed, attacked, and harassed them. The visiting mendicants who were treated in this way did not stay. They left, abandoning the monastery.

Then the local lay followers thought to themselves: …

They said to Venerable Dhammika, "Sir, please leave this monastery. You've stayed here long enough."

Then Venerable Dhammika left and went to another monastery. There he abused visiting mendicants; he insulted, harmed, attacked, and harassed them. The visiting mendicants who were treated in this way did not stay. They left, abandoning the monastery.

Then the local lay followers thought to themselves, "Why don't we banish Venerable Dhammika from all seven monasteries in our native land?"

Then the local lay followers went up to Venerable Dhammika and said to him, "Sir, please leave all seven monasteries in our native land."

Then Venerable Dhammika thought, “I’ve been banished by the local lay followers from all seven monasteries in my native land. Where am I to go now?” He thought, “Why don’t I go to see the Buddha?”

Then Venerable Dhammika took his bowl and robe and set out for Rājagaha. Eventually he came to Rājagaha and the Vulture’s Peak. He went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, “So, Brahmin Dhammika, where have you come from?”

“Sir, I’ve been banished by the local lay followers from all seven monasteries in my native land.”

“Enough, Brahmin Dhammika, what’s that to you? Now that you’ve been banished from all of those places, you have come to me.

Once upon a time, some sea-merchants set sail for the ocean deeps, taking with them a land-spotting bird. When their ship was out of sight of land, they released the bird. It flew right away to the east, the west, the north, the south, upwards, and in-between. If it saw land on any side, it went there and stayed. But if it saw no land on any side it returned to the ship. In the same way, now that you’ve been banished from all of those places, you have come to me.

Once upon a time, King Koravya had a royal banyan tree with five trunks called ‘Well Planted’. It was shady and lovely. Its canopy spread over twelve leagues, while the network of roots spread for five leagues. Its fruits were as large as a rice pot. And they were as sweet as pure wild honey. The king and harem made use of one trunk, the troops another, the people of town and country another, ascetics and brahmins another, and beasts and birds another. No-one guarded the fruit, yet no-one damaged another’s fruits.

Then a certain person ate as much as he liked of the fruit, then broke off a branch and left. Then the deity haunting the royal banyan tree thought, ‘Oh, how incredible, how amazing! How wicked this person is, to eat as much as they like, then break off a branch and leave! Why don’t I make sure that the royal banyan tree gives no fruit in future?’ Then the royal banyan tree gave no more fruit.

Then King Koravya went up to Sakka, lord of gods, and said to him, ‘Please sir, you should know that the royal banyan tree called Well Planted gives no fruit.’ Then Sakka used his psychic powers to will that a violent storm come. And it felled and uprooted the royal banyan tree. Then the deity haunting the tree stood to one side, miserable and sad, weeping, with a tearful face.

Then Sakka went up to that deity, and said, ‘Why, god, are you standing to one side, miserable and sad, weeping, with a tearful face?’

‘Because, my good sir, a violent storm came and felled and uprooted my home.’

‘Well, did you stand by your tree’s duty when the storm came?’

‘But my good sir, how does a tree stand by its duty?’

‘It’s when those who need the tree’s roots, bark, leaves, flowers, or fruit take what they need. Yet the deity is not displeased or upset because of this. This is how a tree stands by its duty.’

‘I was not standing by a tree’s duty when the storm came and felled and uprooted my home.’

‘God, if you were to stand by a tree’s duty, your home may be as it was before.’

‘I will stand by a tree’s duty! May my home be as it was before!’

Then Sakka used his psychic power to will that a violent storm come. And it raised up that mighty banyan tree and the bark of the roots was healed.

In the same way, Brahmin Dhammika, were you standing by an ascetic’s duty when the local lay followers banished you from all seven of the monasteries in your native land?”

“But sir, how do I stand by an ascetic’s duty?”

“When someone abuses, annoys, or argues with an ascetic, the ascetic doesn’t abuse, annoy, or argue back at them. That’s how an ascetic stands by an ascetic’s duty.”

“I was not standing by an ascetic’s duty when the local lay followers banished me from all seven of the monasteries in my native land.”

“Once upon a time, there was a Teacher called Sunetta. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples. He taught them the path to rebirth in the company of Brahmā. Those lacking confidence in Sunetta were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. Those full of confidence in Sunetta were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

Once upon a time there was a teacher called Mūgapakkha … Aranemi … Kuddālaka … Hatthipāla … Jotipāla. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples. He taught them the way to rebirth in the company of Brahmā. Those lacking confidence in Jotipāla were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. Those full of confidence in Jotipāla were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

What do you think, Brahmin Dhammika? If someone with malicious intent were to abuse and insult these six teachers with their hundreds of followers, would they not create much wickedness?”

“Yes, sir.”

“They would indeed. But someone who abuses and insults a single person accomplished in view with malicious intent creates even more wickedness. Why is that? Brahmin Dhammika, I say that any injury done by those outside of the Buddhist community does not compare with what is done to one's own spiritual companions. So you should train like this: 'We will have no malicious intent for those who we want to have as our spiritual companions.' That is how you should train.

Sunetta and Mūgapakkha, and Aranemi the brahmin, Hatthipāla the student, and Kuddālaka were Teachers.

And Jotipāla Govinda was priest for seven kings. These six famous teachers, harmless ones of the past, were free of putrefaction, compassionate, gone beyond the fetter of sensuality. Detached from sensual desire, they were reborn in the Brahmā realm.

Many hundreds of their disciples were also free of putrefaction-stench, compassionate, gone beyond the fetter of sensuality. Detached from sensual desire, they were reborn in the Brahmā realm.

One who insults with malicious intent these non-Buddhist seers, free of desire, immersed in samādhi; such a man creates much wickedness.

But one who insults with malicious intent a single person accomplished in view, a mendicant disciple of the Buddha; that man creates even more wickedness.

You shouldn't attack a holy person, who has given up the grounds for views. This person is called the seventh of the noble Saṅgha.

They're not free of desire for sensual pleasures, and their faculties are still immature: faith, mindfulness, and energy, serenity and discernment.

If you attack such a mendicant, you first hurt yourself. Having hurt yourself, you harm the other.

But if you protect yourself, the other is also protected. So you should protect yourself. An astute person is always uninjured."

AN 6.55

AN 6.55
With Soṇa
Soṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain.

Now at that time Venerable Soṇa was staying near Rājagaha in the Cool Grove. Then as he was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "I am one of the Buddha's most energetic disciples. Yet my mind is not freed from defilements by not grasping. But my family has wealth. I could enjoy that wealth and make merit. Why don't I resign the training and return to a lesser life, so I can enjoy my wealth and make merit?"

Then the Buddha knew what Venerable Soṇa was thinking. As easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from the Vulture's Peak and reappeared in the Cool Grove in front of Soṇa, and sat on the seat spread out. Soṇa bowed to the Buddha and sat down to one side.

The Buddha said to him, "Soṇa, as you were in private retreat didn't this thought come to your mind: 'I am one of the Buddha's most energetic disciples. Yet my mind is not freed from defilements by not grasping. But my family has wealth. I could enjoy that wealth and make merit. Why don't I resign the training and return to a lesser life, so I can enjoy my wealth and make merit?'"

"Yes, sir."

"What do you think, Soṇa? When you were still a layman, weren't you a good player of the arched harp?"

"Yes, sir."

"When your harp's strings were tuned too tight, was it resonant and playable?"

"No, sir."

"When your harp's strings were tuned too slack, was it resonant and playable?"

"No, sir."

"But when your harp's strings were tuned neither too tight nor too slack, but fixed at an even tension, was it resonant and playable?"

"Yes, sir."

“In the same way, Soṇa, when energy is too forceful it leads to restlessness. When energy is too slack it leads to laziness. So, Soṇa, you should apply yourself to energy and serenity, find a balance of the faculties, and learn the pattern of this situation.”

“Yes, sir,” Soṇa replied.

After advising Soṇa like this, the Buddha, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from the Cool Grove and reappeared on the Vulture’s Peak.

After some time Soṇa applied himself to energy and serenity, found a balance of the faculties, and learned the pattern of this situation. Then Soṇa, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And Venerable Soṇa became one of the perfected.

Then, when Soṇa had attained perfection, he thought, “Why don’t I go to the Buddha and declare my enlightenment in his presence?” Then Soṇa went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, a mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—is dedicated to six things. They are dedicated to renunciation, seclusion, kindness, the ending of craving, the ending of grasping, and mental clarity.

It may be, sir, that one of the venerables here thinks: ‘Maybe this venerable is dedicated to renunciation solely out of mere faith.’ But it should not be seen like this. A mendicant with defilements ended does not see in themselves anything more to do, or anything that needs improvement. They’re dedicated to renunciation because they’re free of greed, hate, and delusion with the end of greed, hate, and delusion.

It may be, sir, that one of the venerables here thinks: ‘Maybe this venerable is dedicated to seclusion because they enjoy possessions, honor, and popularity.’ But it should not be seen like this. …

It may be, sir, that one of the venerables here thinks: ‘Maybe this venerable is dedicated to kindness because they believe that adhering to precepts and observances is essential.’ But it should not be seen like this. …

They’re dedicated to the ending of craving because they’re free of greed, hate, and delusion with the end of greed, hate, and delusion.

They’re dedicated to the ending of grasping because they’re free of greed, hate, and delusion with the end of greed, hate, and delusion.

They’re dedicated to clarity of mind because they’re free of greed, hate, and delusion with the end of greed, hate, and delusion.

When a mendicant’s mind is rightly freed like this, even if compelling sights come into the range of vision they don’t overcome their mind. The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance. Even if compelling sounds … smells … tastes … touches … and ideas come into the range of the mind they don’t overcome the mind. The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance.

Suppose there was a mountain that was one solid mass of rock, without cracks or holes. Even if violent storms were to blow up out of the east, the west, the north, and the south, they couldn’t make it shake or rock or tremble.

In the same way, when a mendicant’s mind is rightly freed like this, even if compelling sights come into the range of vision they don’t overcome their mind. … The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance.

When you’re dedicated to renunciation and seclusion of the heart; when you’re dedicated to kindness and the end of grasping;

when you’re dedicated to the ending of craving and clarity of heart; and you’ve seen the arising of the senses, your mind is rightly freed.

For that one, rightly freed, a mendicant with peaceful mind, there’s nothing to be improved, and nothing more to do.

As the wind cannot stir a solid mass of rock, so too sights, tastes, sounds, smells, and touches—the lot—and ideas, whether liked or disliked, don’t disturb the poised one. Their mind is steady and free as they observe disappearance.”

AN 6.56

AN 6.56
With Phagguna
Phaggunasutta

Now at that time Venerable Phagguna was sick, suffering, gravely ill. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, Venerable Phagguna is sick. Sir, please go to Venerable Phagguna out of compassion.” The Buddha consented with silence.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to Venerable Phagguna. Venerable Phagguna saw the Buddha coming off in the distance and tried to rise on his cot.

The Buddha said to him, “It’s all right, Phagguna, don’t get up. There are some seats spread out by others, I will sit there.”

He sat on the seat spread out and said to Venerable Phagguna: “I hope you’re keeping well, Phagguna; I hope you’re getting by. And I hope the pain is fading, not growing, that its fading is evident, not its growing.”

“Sir, I’m not keeping well, I’m not getting by. The pain is terrible and growing, not fading; its growing is evident, not its fading.

The winds piercing my head are so severe, it feels like a strong man drilling into my head with a sharp point. I’m not keeping well.

The pain in my head is so severe, it feels like a strong man tightening a tough leather strap around my head. I’m not keeping well.

The winds slicing my belly are so severe, like a deft butcher or their apprentice were slicing open a cows’s belly with a meat cleaver. I’m not keeping well.

The burning in my body is so severe, it feels like two strong men grabbing a weaker man by the arms to burn and scorch him on a pit of glowing coals. I’m not keeping well, I’m not getting by. The pain is terrible and growing, not fading; its growing is evident, not its fading.”

Then the Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired Venerable Phagguna with a Dhamma talk, after which he got up from his seat and left.

Not long after the Buddha left, Venerable Phagguna passed away. At the time of his death, his faculties were bright and clear. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, soon after the Buddha left, Venerable Phagguna died. At the time of his death, his faculties were bright and clear.”

“And why shouldn’t his faculties be bright and clear? The mendicant Phagguna’s mind was not freed from the five lower fetters. But when he heard that teaching his mind was freed from them.

Ānanda, there are these six benefits to hearing the teaching at the right time and examining the meaning at the right time. What six?

Firstly, take the case of a mendicant whose mind is not freed from the five lower fetters. At the time of death they get to see the Realized One. The Realized One teaches them Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. When they hear that teaching their mind is freed from the five lower fetters. This is the first benefit of listening to the teaching.

Next, take the case of another mendicant whose mind is not freed from the five lower fetters. At the time of death they don’t get to see the Realized One, but they get to see a Realized One’s disciple. The Realized One’s disciple teaches them Dhamma … When they hear that teaching their mind is freed from the five lower fetters. This is the second benefit of listening to the teaching.

Next, take the case of another mendicant whose mind is not freed from the five lower fetters. At the time of death they don’t get to see the Realized One, or to see a Realized One’s disciple. But they think about and consider the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. As they do so their mind is freed from the five lower fetters. This is the third benefit of listening to the teaching.

Next, take the case of a mendicant whose mind is freed from the five lower fetters, but not with the supreme ending of attachments. At the time of death they get to see the Realized One. The Realized One teaches them Dhamma … When they hear that teaching their mind is freed with the supreme ending of attachments. This is the fourth benefit of listening to the teaching.

Next, take the case of another mendicant whose mind is freed from the five lower fetters, but not with the supreme ending of attachments. At the time of death they don’t get to see the Realized One, but they get to see a Realized One’s disciple. The Realized One’s disciple teaches them Dhamma … When they hear that teaching their mind is freed with the supreme ending of attachments. This is the fifth benefit of listening to the teaching.

Next, take the case of another mendicant whose mind is freed from the five lower fetters, but not with the supreme ending of attachments. At the time of death they don’t get to see the Realized One, or to see a Realized One’s disciple. But they think about and consider the teaching in their heart, examining it with the mind as they learned and memorized it. As they do so their mind is freed with the supreme ending of attachments. This is the sixth benefit of listening to the teaching.

These are the six benefits to hearing the teaching at the right time and examining the meaning at the right time.”

AN 6.57

AN 6.57
The Six Classes of Rebirth
Chaḷabhijātisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, Pūraṇa Kassapa describes six classes of rebirth: black, blue, red, yellow, white, and ultimate white.

The black class of rebirth consists of slaughterers of sheep, pigs, poultry, or deer, hunters or fishers, bandits, executioners, butchers of cattle, jailers, and any others with a cruel livelihood.

The blue class of rebirth consists of mendicants whose life is thorny, and any others who teach the efficacy of deeds and action.

The red class of rebirth consists of the Jain ascetics who wear one cloth.

The yellow class of rebirth consists of the lay people dressed in white who are disciples of the naked ascetics.

The white class of rebirth consists of male and female Ājīvaka ascetics.

And the ultimate white class of rebirth consists of Nanda Vaccha, Kisa Saṅkicca, and the bamboo-staffed ascetic Gosāla.

These are the six classes of rebirth that Pūraṇa Kassapa describes."

"But Ānanda, did the whole world authorize Pūraṇa Kassapa to describe these six classes of rebirth?"

"No, sir."

"It's as if they were to force a chop on a poor, penniless person, telling them, "Eat this meat and pay for it!". In the same way, Pūraṇa Kassapa has described these six classes of rebirth without the consent of those ascetics and brahmins. And he has done so in a foolish, incompetent, unskilled way, lacking common sense.

I, however, also describe six classes of rebirth. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, Ānanda, are the six classes of rebirth? Someone born into a dark class gives rise to a dark result. Someone born into a dark class gives rise to a bright result. Someone born into a dark class gives rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright. Someone born into a bright class gives rise to a dark result. Someone born into a bright class gives rise to a bright result. Someone born into a bright class gives rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright.

And how does someone born into a dark class give rise to a dark result? It’s when someone is reborn in a low family—a family of corpse-workers, bamboo-workers, hunters, chariot-makers, or scavengers—poor, with little to eat or drink, where life is tough, and food and shelter are hard to find. And they’re ugly, unsightly, deformed, sickly—one-eyed, crippled, lame, or half-paralyzed. They don’t get to have food, drink, clothes, and vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; or bed, house, and lighting. And they do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. That’s how someone born into a dark class gives rise to a dark result.

And how does someone born into a dark class give rise to a bright result? It’s when some person is reborn in a low family … But they do good things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. That’s how someone born into a dark class gives rise to a bright result.

And how does someone born into a dark class give rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright? It’s when some person is reborn in a low family … They shave off their hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness. They give up the five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. They firmly establish their mind in the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. They truly develop the seven awakening factors. And then they give rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright. That’s how someone born in a dark class gives rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright.

And how does someone born into a bright class give rise to a dark result? It’s when some person is reborn in an eminent family—a well-to-do family of aristocrats, brahmins, or householders—rich, affluent, and wealthy, with lots of gold and silver, lots of property and assets, and lots of money and grain. And they’re attractive, good-looking, lovely, of surpassing beauty. They get to have food, drink, clothes, and vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. But they do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. That’s how someone born into a bright class gives rise to a dark result.

And how does someone born into a bright class give rise to a bright result? It’s when some person is reborn in an eminent family … And they do good things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. That’s how someone born into a bright class give rise to a bright result.

And how does someone born into a bright class give rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright? It’s when some person is reborn in an eminent family … They shave off their hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness. They give up the five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. They firmly establish their mind in the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. They truly develop the seven awakening factors. And then they give rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright. That's how someone born into a bright class gives rise to extinguishment, which is neither dark nor bright.

These are the six classes of rebirth."

AN 6.58

AN 6.58
Defilements
Āsavasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What six?

It’s a mendicant who, by restraint, has given up the defilements that should be given up by restraint. By using, they’ve given up the defilements that should be given up by using. By enduring, they’ve given up the defilements that should be given up by enduring. By avoiding, they’ve given up the defilements that should be given up by avoiding. By getting rid, they’ve given up the defilements that should be given up by getting rid. By developing, they’ve given up the defilements that should be given up by developing.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by restraint? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, lives restraining the eye faculty. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without restraint of the eye faculty do not arise when there is such restraint. Reflecting rationally, they live restraining the ear faculty … the nose faculty … the tongue faculty … the body faculty … the mind faculty. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without restraint of the mind faculty do not arise when there is such restraint. These are called the defilements that should be given up by restraint.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by using? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, makes use of robes: ‘Only for the sake of warding off cold and heat; for warding off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles; and for covering up the private parts.’ Reflecting rationally, they make use of almsfood: ‘Not for fun, indulgence, adornment, or decoration, but only to sustain this body, to avoid harm, and to support spiritual practice. In this way, I shall put an end to old discomfort and not give rise to new discomfort, and I will live blamelessly and at ease.’ Reflecting rationally, they make use of lodgings: ‘Only for the sake of warding off cold and heat; for warding off the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles; to shelter from harsh weather and to enjoy retreat.’ Reflecting rationally, they make use of medicines and supplies for the sick: ‘Only for the sake of warding off the pains of illness and to promote good health.’ For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without using these things do not arise when they are used. These are called the defilements that should be given up by using.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by enduring? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, endures cold, heat, hunger, and thirst. They endure the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles. They endure rude and unwelcome criticism. And they put up with physical pain—sharp, severe, acute, unpleasant, disagreeable, and life-threatening. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without enduring these things do not arise when they are endured. These are called the defilements that should be given up by enduring.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by avoiding? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, avoids a wild elephant, a wild horse, a wild ox, a wild dog, a snake, a stump, thorny ground, a pit, a cliff, a swamp, and a sewer. Reflecting rationally, they avoid sitting on inappropriate seats, walking in inappropriate neighborhoods, and mixing with bad friends—whatever sensible spiritual companions would believe to be a bad setting. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without avoiding these things do not arise when they are avoided. These are called the defilements that should be given up by avoiding.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by getting rid? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, doesn't tolerate a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought that has arisen. They don't tolerate any bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen, but give them up, get rid of them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without getting rid of these things do not arise when they are gotten rid of. These are called the defilements that should be given up by getting rid.

And what are the defilements that should be given up by developing? Take a mendicant who, reflecting rationally, develops the awakening factors of mindfulness, investigation of principles, energy, rapture, tranquility, immersion, and equanimity, which rely on seclusion, fading away, and cessation, and ripen as letting go. For the distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without developing these things do not arise when they are developed. These are called the defilements that should be given up by developing.

A mendicant with these six qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world."

AN 6.59

AN 6.59
With Dārukammika
Dārukammikasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house.

Then the householder Dārukammika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, “Householder, I wonder whether your family gives gifts?”

“It does, sir. Gifts are given to those mendicants who are perfected or on the path to perfection; they live in the wilderness, eat only almsfood, and wear rag robes.”

“Householder, as a layman enjoying sensual pleasures, living at home with your children, using sandalwood imported from Kāsi, wearing garlands, fragrance, and makeup, and accepting gold and money, it’s hard for you to know who is perfected or on the path to perfection.

If a mendicant living in the wilderness is restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, loose-tongued, unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying mind and undisciplined faculties, then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant living in the wilderness is not restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, or loose-tongued, but has established mindfulness, situational awareness and immersion, with unified mind and restrained faculties, then in this respect they’re praiseworthy.

If a mendicant who lives within a village is restless … then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant who lives within a village is not restless … then in this respect they’re praiseworthy.

If a mendicant who eats only almsfood is restless … then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant who eats only almsfood is not restless … then in this respect they’re praiseworthy.

If a mendicant who accepts invitations is restless … then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant who accepts invitations is not restless … then in this respect they’re praiseworthy.

If a mendicant who wears rag robes is restless … then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant who wears rag robes is not restless … then in this respect they’re praiseworthy.

If a mendicant who wears robes offered by householders is restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, loose-tongued, unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying mind and undisciplined faculties, then in this respect they’re reprehensible. If a mendicant who wears robes offered by householders is not restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, or loose-tongued, but has established mindfulness, situational awareness and immersion, with unified mind and restrained faculties, then in this respect they're praiseworthy.

Go ahead, householder, give gifts to the Saṅgha. Your mind will become bright and clear, and when your body breaks up, after death, you'll be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm."

"Sir, from this day forth I will give gifts to the Saṅgha."

AN 6.60

AN 6.60
With Hatthisāriputta
Hatthisāriputtasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Varanasi, in the deer park at Isipatana.

Now at that time several senior mendicants, after the meal, on their return from almsround, sat together in the pavilion talking about the teachings. Venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta interrupted them while they were talking.

Then Venerable Mahākoṭṭhita said to Venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta, "Venerable, please don't interrupt the senior mendicants while they're talking about the teachings. Wait until the end of the discussion."

When he said this, Citta Hatthisāriputta's companions said to Mahākoṭṭhita, "Venerable, please don't rebuke Citta Hatthisāriputta. He is astute, and quite capable of talking about the teachings with the senior mendicants."

"It's not easy to know this, reverends, for those who don't comprehend another's mind.

Take a person who is the sweetest of the sweet, the most even-tempered of the even-tempered, the calmest of the calm, so long as they live relying on the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher's role. But when they're separated from the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher's role, they mix closely with monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; with rulers and their ministers, and with monastics of other religions and their disciples. As they mix closely, they become intimate and loose, spending time chatting, and so lust infects their mind. They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose an ox fond of crops was tied up or shut in a pen. Would it be right to say that that ox will never again invade the crops?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it's quite possible that that ox will snap the ropes or break out of the pen, and then invade the crops."

"In the same way, take a person who is the sweetest of the sweet … As they mix closely, they become intimate and loose, spending time chatting, and so lust infects their mind. They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Take the case of a person who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. Thinking, 'I get the first absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose it was raining heavily at the crossroads so that the dust vanished and mud appeared. Would it be right to say that now dust will never appear at this crossroad again?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it is quite possible that people or cattle and so on will cross over the crossroad, or that the wind and sun will evaporate the moisture so that the dust appears again."

"In the same way, take the case of a person who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. Thinking, 'I get the first absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Take another case of a person who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled … enters and remains in the second absorption. Thinking, 'I get the second absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose there was a large pond not far from a town or village. After it rained heavily there the clams and mussels, and pebbles and gravel would vanish. Would it be right to say that now the clams and mussels, and pebbles and gravel will never appear here again?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it's quite possible that people or cattle and so on will drink from the pond, or that the wind and sun will evaporate it so that the clams and mussels, and pebbles and gravel appear again."

"In the same way, take another case of a person who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled … enters and remains in the second absorption. Thinking, 'I get the second absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Take the case of another person who, with the fading away of rapture … enters and remains in the third absorption. Thinking, 'I get the third absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose a person had finished a delicious meal. They'd have no appetite for leftovers. Would it be right to say that now food will never appeal to this person again?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it's quite possible that other food won't appeal to that person as long as the nourishment is still present. But when the nourishment vanishes food will appeal again."

"In the same way, take the case of a person who, with the fading away of rapture … enters and remains in the third absorption. Thinking, 'I get the third absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Take the case of another person who, giving up pleasure and pain … enters and remains in the fourth absorption. Thinking, 'I get the fourth absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose that in a mountain glen there was a lake, unruffled and free of waves. Would it be right to say that now waves will never appear in this lake again?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it is quite possible that a violent storm could blow up out of the east, west, north, or south, and stir up waves in that lake."

"In the same way, take the case of a person who, giving up pleasure and pain … enters and remains in the fourth absorption. Thinking, 'I get the fourth absorption!' they mix closely with monks … They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Take the case of another person who, not focusing on any signs, enters and remains in the signless immersion of the heart. Thinking, 'I get the signless immersion of the heart!' they mix closely with monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; with rulers and their ministers, and with monastics of other religions and their disciples. As they mix closely, they become intimate and loose, spending time chatting, and so lust infects their mind. They resign the training and return to a lesser life.

Suppose a ruler or their minister, while walking along the road with an army of four divisions, was to arrive at a forest grove where they set up camp for the night. There, because of the noise of the elephants, horses, chariots, soldiers, and the drums, kettledrums, horns, and cymbals, the chirping of crickets would vanish. Would it be right to say that now the chirping of crickets will never be heard in this woodland grove again?"

"No it would not, reverend. For it is quite possible that the ruler or their minister will depart from that woodland grove so that the chirping of crickets will be heard there again."

"In the same way, take the case of a person who, not focusing on any signs, enters and remains in the signless immersion of the heart … They resign the training and return to a lesser life."

Then after some time Venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta resigned the training and returned to a lesser life. Then the mendicants who were his companions went up to Venerable Mahākoṭṭhita and said, "Did Venerable Mahākoṭṭhita comprehend Citta Hatthisāriputta's mind and know that he had gained such and such meditative attainments, yet he would still resign the training and return to a lesser life? Or did deities tell you about it?"

"Reverends, I comprehended his mind and knew this. And deities also told me."

Then the mendicants who were Citta Hatthisāriputta's companions went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, Citta Hatthisāriputta, who had gained such and such meditative attainments, has still resigned the training and returned to a lesser life."

"Mendicants, soon Citta will remember renunciation."

And not long after Citta Hatthisāriputta shaved off his hair and beard, dressed in ocher robes, and went forth from the lay life to homelessness. Then Citta Hatthisāriputta, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And Venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta became one of the perfected.

AN 6.61

AN 6.61
In the Middle Majjhesutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Varanasi, in the deer park at Isipatana.

Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several senior mendicants sat together in the pavilion and this discussion came up among them, “Reverends, this was said by the Buddha in ‘The Way to the Far Shore’, in ‘The Questions of Metteyya’:

‘The thoughtful one who has known both ends, and is not stuck in the middle: he is a great man, I declare, he has escaped the seamstress here.’

But what is one end? What’s the second end? What’s the middle? And who is the seamstress?” When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Contact, reverends, is one end. The origin of contact is the second end. The cessation of contact is the middle. And craving is the seamstress, for craving weaves one to being reborn in one state of existence or another. That’s how a mendicant directly knows what should be directly known and completely understands what should be completely understood. Knowing and understanding thus they make an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“The past, reverends, is one end. The future is the second end. The present is the middle. And craving is the seamstress … That’s how a mendicant directly knows … an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Pleasant feeling, reverends, is one end. Painful feeling is the second end. Neutral feeling is the middle. And craving is the seamstress … That’s how a mendicant directly knows … an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Name, reverends, is one end. Form is the second end. Consciousness is the middle. And craving is the seamstress … That’s how a mendicant directly knows … an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“The six interior sense fields, reverends, are one end. The six exterior sense fields are the second end. Consciousness is the middle. And craving is the seamstress … That’s how a mendicant directly knows … an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Substantial reality, reverends, is one end. The origin of substantial reality is the second end. The cessation of substantial reality is the middle. And craving is the seamstress, for craving weaves one to being reborn in one state of existence or another. That’s how a mendicant directly knows what should be directly known and completely understands what should be completely understood. Knowing and understanding thus they make an end of suffering in this very life.”

When this was said, one of the mendicants said to the senior mendicants:

“Each of us has spoken from the heart. Come, reverends, let’s go to the Buddha, and inform him about this. As he answers, so we’ll remember it.”

“Yes, reverend,” those senior mendicants replied. Then those senior mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and informed the Buddha of all they had discussed. They asked, “Sir, who has spoken well?”

“Mendicants, you’ve all spoken well in a way. However, this is what I was referring to in ‘The Way to the Far Shore’, in ‘The Questions of Metteyya’ when I said:

‘The sage has known both ends, and is not stuck in the middle. He is a great man, I declare, he has escaped the seamstress here.’

Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Contact, mendicants, is one end. The origin of contact is the second end. The cessation of contact is the middle. And craving is the seamstress, for craving weaves one to being reborn in one state of existence or another. That’s how a mendicant directly knows what should be directly known and completely understands what should be completely understood. Knowing and understanding thus they make an end of suffering in this very life.”

AN 6.62

AN 6.62
Knowledge of the Faculties of Persons
Purisindriyañāṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a town of the Kosalans named Daṇḍakappaka. The Buddha left the road and sat at the root of a tree on the seat spread out. The mendicants entered Daṇḍakappaka to look for a guest house.

Then Venerable Ānanda together with several mendicants went to the Aciravati River to bathe. When he had bathed and emerged from the water he stood in one robe drying himself.

Then a certain mendicant went up to Venerable Ānanda, and said to him, “Reverend Ānanda, when the Buddha declared that Devadatta was going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable, did he do so after wholeheartedly deliberating, or was this just a way of speaking?”

“You’re right, reverend, that’s how the Buddha declared it.”

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

“Ānanda, that mendicant must be junior, recently gone forth, or else a foolish, incompetent senior mendicant. How on earth can he take something that I have declared categorically to be ambiguous? I do not see a single other person about whom I have given such whole-hearted deliberation before making a declaration as I did in the case of Devadatta.

As long as I saw even a fraction of a hair’s tip of goodness in Devadatta I did not declare that he was going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. But when I saw that there was not even a fraction of a hair’s tip of goodness in Devadatta I declared that he was going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable.

Suppose there was a sewer deeper than a man’s height, full to the brim with feces, and someone was sunk into it over their head. Then along comes a person who wants to help make them safe, who wants to lift them out of that sewer. But circling all around the sewer they couldn’t see even a fraction of a hair’s tip of that person that was not smeared with feces.

In the same way, when I saw that there was not even a fraction of a hair’s tip of goodness in Devadatta I declared that he was going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. Ānanda, if only you would all listen to the Realized One's analysis of the knowledges of the faculties of individuals."

"Now is the time, Blessed One! Now is the time, Holy One! Let the Buddha analyze the faculties of persons. The mendicants will listen and remember it."

"Well then, Ānanda, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied. The Buddha said this:

"Ānanda, when I've comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: 'Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.' After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: 'The skillful qualities of this person have vanished, but the unskillful qualities are still present. Nevertheless, their skillful root is unbroken, and from that the skillful will appear. So this person is not liable to decline in the future.' Suppose some seeds were intact, unspoiled, not weather-damaged, fertile, and well-kept. They're sown in a well-prepared, productive field. Wouldn't you know that those seeds would grow, increase, and mature?"

"Yes, sir."

"In the same way, when I've comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … This person is not liable to decline in the future … This is how another individual is known to the Realized One by comprehending their mind. And this is how the Realized One knows a person's faculties by comprehending their mind. And this is how the Realized One knows the future origination of a person's qualities by comprehending their mind.

When I've comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: 'Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.' After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: 'The unskillful qualities of this person have vanished, but the skillful qualities are still present. Nevertheless, their unskillful root is unbroken, and from that the unskillful will appear. So this person is still liable to decline in the future.' Suppose some seeds were intact, unspoiled, not weather-damaged, fertile, and well-kept. And they were sown on a broad rock. Wouldn't you know that those seeds would not grow, increase, and mature?"

"Yes, sir."

"In the same way, when I've comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … This person is still liable to decline in the future … This is how another individual is known to the Realized One …

When I've comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: 'Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.' After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: 'This person has not even a fraction of a hair's tip of goodness. They have exclusively dark, unskillful qualities. When their body breaks up, after death, they will be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.' Suppose some seeds were broken, spoiled, weather-damaged. They're sown in a well-prepared, productive field. Wouldn't you know that those seeds would not grow, increase, and mature?"

“Yes, sir.”

“In the same way, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … ‘This person has not even a fraction of a hair’s tip of goodness. They have exclusively dark, unskillful qualities. When their body breaks up, after death, they will be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.’ …”

When he said this, Venerable Ānanda said to the Buddha, “Sir, can you describe three other persons who are counterparts of these three?”

“I can, Ānanda,” said the Buddha. “Ānanda, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: ‘Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.’ After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: ‘The skillful qualities of this person have vanished, but the unskillful qualities are still present. Nevertheless, their skillful root is unbroken, but it’s about to be totally destroyed. So this person is still liable to decline in the future.’ Suppose that there were some burning coals, blazing and glowing. And they were placed on a broad rock. Wouldn’t you know that those coals would not grow, increase, and spread?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Or suppose it was the late afternoon and the sun was going down. Wouldn’t you know that the light was about to vanish and darkness appear?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Or suppose that it’s nearly time for the midnight meal. Wouldn’t you know that the light had vanished and the darkness appeared?”

“Yes, sir.”

“In the same way, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … This person is still liable to decline in the future …

When I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: ‘Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.’ After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: ‘The unskillful qualities of this person have vanished, but the skillful qualities are still present. Nevertheless, their unskillful root is unbroken, but it’s about to be totally destroyed. So this person is not liable to decline in the future.’ Suppose that there were some burning coals, blazing and glowing. They were placed on a pile of grass or timber. Wouldn’t you know that those coals would grow, increase, and spread?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Suppose it’s the crack of dawn and the sun is rising. Wouldn’t you know that the dark will vanish and the light appear?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Or suppose that it’s nearly time for the midday meal. Wouldn’t you know that the dark had vanished and the light appeared?”

“Yes, sir.”

“In the same way, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … This person is not liable to decline in the future …

When I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand: ‘Both skillful and unskillful qualities are found in this person.’ After some time I comprehend their mind and understand: ‘This person has not even a fraction of a hair’s tip of unskillful qualities. They have exclusively bright, blameless qualities. They will become extinguished in this very life.’ Suppose that there were some cool, extinguished coals. They were placed on a pile of grass or timber. Wouldn’t you know that those coals would not grow, increase, and spread?”

“Yes, sir.”

“In the same way, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person, I understand … ‘This person has not even a fraction of a hair’s tip of unskillful qualities. They have exclusively bright, blameless qualities. They will become extinguished in this very life.’ This is how another individual is known to the Realized One by comprehending their mind. And this is how the Realized One knows a person’s faculties by comprehending their mind. And this is how the Realized One knows the future origination of a person’s qualities by comprehending their mind.

And so, Ānanda, of the first three people one is not liable to decline, one is liable to decline, and one is bound for a place of loss, hell. And of the second three people, one is liable to decline, one is not liable to decline, and one is bound to become extinguished.”

AN 6.63

AN 6.63
Penetrative
Nibbedhikasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you a penetrative exposition of the teaching. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, what is the penetrative exposition of the teaching? Sensual pleasures should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.

Feelings should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.

Perceptions should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.

Defilements should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.

Deeds should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.

Suffering should be known. And its source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to its cessation should be known.

‘Sensual pleasures should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? There are these five kinds of sensual stimulation. Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. However, these are not sensual pleasures. In the training of the Noble One they’re called ‘kinds of sensual stimulation’.

Greedy intention is a person’s sensual pleasure. The world’s pretty things aren’t sensual pleasures. Greedy intention is a person’s sensual pleasure. The world’s pretty things stay just as they are, but a wise one removes desire for them.

And what is the source of sensual pleasures? Contact is their source.

And what is the diversity of sensual pleasures? The sensual desire for sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches are all different. This is called the diversity of sensual pleasures.

And what is the result of sensual pleasures? When one who desires sensual pleasures creates a corresponding incarnation, with the attributes of either good or bad deeds—this is called the result of sensual pleasures.

And what is the cessation of sensual pleasures? When contact ceases, sensual pleasures cease. The practice that leads to the cessation of sensual pleasures is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands sensual pleasures in this way—and understands their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation—they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of sensual pleasures. ‘Sensual pleasures should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘Feelings should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? There are these three feelings: pleasant, painful, and neutral.

And what is the source of feelings? Contact is their source.

And what is the diversity of feelings? There are pleasant feelings of the flesh, pleasant feelings not of the flesh, painful feelings of the flesh, painful feelings not of the flesh, neutral feelings of the flesh, and neutral feelings not of the flesh. This is called the diversity of feelings.

And what is the result of feelings? When one who feels creates a corresponding incarnation, with the attributes of either good or bad deeds—this is called the result of feelings.

And what is the cessation of feelings? When contact ceases, feelings cease. The practice that leads to the cessation of feelings is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands feelings in this way … they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of feelings. ‘Feelings should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘Perceptions should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? There are these six perceptions: perceptions of sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas.

And what is the source of perceptions? Contact is their source.

And what is the diversity of perceptions? The perceptions of sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas are all different. This is called the diversity of perceptions.

And what is the result of perceptions? Communication is the result of perception, I say. You communicate something in whatever manner you perceive it, saying ‘That’s what I perceived.’ This is called the result of perceptions.

And what is the cessation of perception? When contact ceases, perception ceases. The practice that leads to the cessation of perceptions is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands perception in this way … they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of perception. ‘Perceptions should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘Defilements should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? There are these three defilements: the defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance.

And what is the source of defilements? Ignorance is the source of defilements.

And what is the diversity of defilements? There are defilements that lead to rebirth in hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, the human world, and the world of the gods. This is called the diversity of defilements.

And what is the result of defilements? When one who is ignorant creates a corresponding incarnation, with the attributes of either good or bad deeds—this is called the result of defilements.

And what is the cessation of defilements? When ignorance ceases, defilements cease. The practice that leads to the cessation of defilements is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands defilements in this way … they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of defilements. ‘Defilements should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘Deeds should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It is intention that I call deeds. For after making a choice one acts by way of body, speech, and mind.

And what is the source of deeds? Contact is their source.

And what is the diversity of deeds? There are deeds that lead to rebirth in hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, the human world, and the world of the gods. This is called the diversity of deeds.

And what is the result of deeds? The result of deeds is threefold, I say: in this very life, on rebirth in the next life, or at some later time. This is called the result of deeds.

And what is the cessation of deeds? When contact ceases, deeds cease. The practice that leads to the cessation of deeds is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands deeds in this way … they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of deeds. 'Deeds should be known. And their source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation should be known.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'Suffering should be known. And its source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to its cessation should be known.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Rebirth is suffering; old age is suffering; illness is suffering; death is suffering; sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are suffering; not getting what you wish for is suffering. In brief, the five grasping aggregates are suffering.

And what is the source of suffering? Craving is the source of suffering.

And what is the diversity of suffering? There is suffering that is severe, mild, slow to fade, and quick to fade. This is called the diversity of suffering.

And what is the result of suffering? It's when someone who is overcome and overwhelmed by suffering sorrows and wails and laments, beating their breast and falling into confusion. Or else, overcome by that suffering, they begin an external search, wondering: 'Who knows one or two phrases to stop this suffering?' The result of suffering is either confusion or a search, I say. This is called the result of suffering.

And what is the cessation of suffering? When craving ceases, suffering ceases. The practice that leads to the cessation of suffering is simply this noble eightfold path, that is: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

When a noble disciple understands suffering in this way … they understand that this penetrative spiritual life is the cessation of suffering. 'Suffering should be known. And its source, diversity, result, cessation, and the practice that leads to its cessation should be known.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

This is the penetrative exposition of the teaching."

AN 6.64

AN 6.64
The Lion's Roar
Sīhanādasutta

"Mendicants, the Realized One possesses six powers of a Realized One. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel. What six?

Firstly, the Realized One truly understands the possible as possible and the impossible as impossible. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. Relying on this he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel.

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the result of deeds undertaken in the past, future, and present in terms of grounds and causes. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands corruption, cleansing, and emergence regarding the absorptions, liberations, immersions, and attainments. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. He remembers: 'There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.' And so he recollects his many kinds of past lives, with features and details. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Realized One sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And he lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. Relying on this he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel. These are the six powers of a Realized One that the Realized One possesses. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of the possible as possible and the impossible as impossible, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of the result of deeds undertaken in the past, future, and present in terms of grounds and causes, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of corruption, cleansing, and emergence regarding the absorptions, liberations, immersions, and attainments, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of recollection of past lives, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of passing away and rebirth of sentient beings, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

If others come to the Realized One and ask questions about his true knowledge of the ending of defilements, the Realized One answers them in whatever manner he has truly known it.

And I say that true knowledge of the possible as possible and the impossible as impossible is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion. And true knowledge of the result of deeds undertaken in the past, future, and present in terms of grounds and causes is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion. And true knowledge of corruption, cleansing, and emergence regarding the absorptions, liberations, immersions, and attainments is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion. And true knowledge of the recollection of past lives is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion. And true knowledge of the passing away and rebirth of sentient beings is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion. And true knowledge of the ending of defilements is for those with immersion, not for those without immersion.

And so, mendicants, immersion is the path. No immersion is the wrong path."

AN 6.65

AN 6.65
The Fruit of Non-Return
Anāgāmiphalasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six things you can’t realize the fruit of non-return. What six? Lack of faith, conscience, and prudence; laziness, unmindfulness, and witlessness. Without giving up these six things you can’t realize the fruit of non-return.

After giving up six things you can realize the fruit of non-return. What six? Lack of faith, conscience, and prudence; laziness, unmindfulness, and witlessness. After giving up these six things you can realize the fruit of non-return.”

AN 6.66

AN 6.66
Perfection
Arahattasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six things you can’t realize perfection. What six? Dullness, drowsiness, restlessness, remorse, lack of faith, and negligence. Without giving up these six things you can’t realize perfection.

After giving up six things you can realize perfection. What six? Dullness, drowsiness, restlessness, remorse, lack of faith, and negligence. After giving up these six things you can realize perfection.”

AN 6.67

AN 6.67
Friends
Mittasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible that a mendicant with bad friends, companions, and associates, while frequenting, accompanying, and attending, and following their example, will fulfill the practice dealing with the supplementary regulations. Without fulfilling the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s impossible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Without fulfilling the practice of a trainee, it’s impossible to fulfill ethics. Without fulfilling ethics, it’s impossible give up sensual desire, or desire to be reborn in the realm of luminous form or in the formless realm.

It’s quite possible that a mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates, while frequenting, accompanying, and attending, and following their example, will fulfill the practice dealing with the supplementary regulations. Having fulfilled the practice dealing with supplementary regulations, it’s possible to fulfill the practice of a trainee. Having fulfilled the practice of a trainee, it’s possible to fulfill ethics. Having fulfilled ethics, it’s possible give up sensual desire, and desire to be reborn in the realm of luminous form and in the formless realm.”

AN 6.68

AN 6.68
Enjoying Company
Saṅgaṇikārāmasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible that a mendicant who enjoys company and groups, who loves them and likes to enjoy them, should take pleasure in being alone in seclusion. Without taking pleasure in being alone in seclusion, it’s impossible to learn the patterns of the mind. Without learning the patterns of the mind, it’s impossible to fulfill right view. Without fulfilling right view, it’s impossible to fulfill right immersion. Without fulfilling right immersion, it’s impossible to give up the fetters. Without giving up the fetters, it’s impossible to realize extinguishment.

It’s quite possible that a mendicant who doesn’t enjoy company and groups, who doesn’t love them and like to enjoy them, should take pleasure in being alone in seclusion. For someone who takes pleasure in being alone in seclusion, it’s possible to learn the patterns of the mind. For someone who learns the patterns of the mind, it’s possible to fulfill right view. Having fulfilled right view, it’s possible to fulfill right immersion. Having fulfilled right immersion, it’s possible to give up the fetters. Having given up the fetters, it’s possible to realize extinguishment.”

AN 6.69

AN 6.69
A God
Devatāsutta

Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, these six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant. What six? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training; being easy to admonish, and good friendship. These six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant."

That's what that deity said, and the teacher approved. Then that deity, knowing that the teacher approved, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

"Tonight, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, came to me, bowed, stood to one side, and said to me: 'Sir, these six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant. What six? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training; being easy to admonish, and good friendship. These six things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant.'

That is what that deity said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled me, keeping me on his right side, before vanishing right there."

When he said this, Venerable Sāriputta said to the Buddha:

"Sir, this is how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha's brief statement. It's when a mendicant personally respects the Teacher and praises such respect. And they encourage other mendicants who lack such respect to respect the Teacher. And they praise other mendicants who respect the Teacher at the right time, truthfully and correctly. They personally respect the teaching … They personally respect the Saṅgha … They personally respect the training … They are personally easy to admonish … They personally have good friends, and praise such friendship. And they encourage other mendicants who lack good friends to develop good friendship. And they praise other mendicants who have good friends at the right time, truthfully and correctly. That's how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha's brief statement."

"Good, good, Sāriputta! It's good that you understand the detailed meaning of what I've said in brief like this.

It's when a mendicant personally respects the Teacher … They personally respect the teaching … They personally respect the Saṅgha … They personally respect the training …

They are personally easy to admonish … They personally have good friends, and praise such friendship. And they encourage other mendicants who lack good friends to develop good friendship. And they praise other mendicants who have good friends at the right time, truthfully and correctly. This is how to understand the detailed meaning of what I said in brief."

AN 6.70

AN 6.70
Immersion
Samādhisutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible that a mendicant without immersion that is peaceful, refined, tranquil, and unified will wield the many kinds of psychic power: multiplying themselves and becoming one again; appearing and disappearing; going unimpeded through a wall, a rampart, or a mountain as if through space; diving in and out of the earth as if it were water; walking on water as if it were earth; flying cross-legged through the sky like a bird; touching and stroking with the hand the sun and moon, so mighty and powerful. They control the body as far as the Brahmā realm.

It’s impossible that with clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, they’ll hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.

It’s impossible that they’ll understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with their own mind, understanding mind with greed as ‘mind with greed’ … and freed mind as ‘freed mind’.

It’s impossible that they’ll recollect many kinds of past lives, with features and details.

It’s impossible that with clairvoyance that is purified and surpasses the human, they’ll understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

It’s impossible that they’ll realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

But it’s quite possible that a mendicant who has immersion that is peaceful, refined, tranquil, and unified will wield the many kinds of psychic power …

It’s possible that with clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, they’ll hear both kinds of sounds …

It’s possible that they’ll understand the minds of other beings …

It’s possible that they’ll recollect many kinds of past lives, with features and details.

It’s possible that with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they’ll understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

It’s possible that they’ll realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.”

AN 6.71

AN 6.71
Capable of Realizing Sakkhibhabbasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is incapable of realizing anything that can be realized, in each and every case. What six? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t truly understand which qualities make things worse, which keep things steady, which lead to distinction, and which lead to penetration. And they don’t practice carefully or do what’s suitable. A mendicant with these six qualities is incapable of realizing anything that can be realized, in each and every case.

A mendicant with six qualities is capable of realizing anything that can be realized, in each and every case. What six? It’s when a mendicant truly understands which qualities make things worse, which keep things steady, which lead to distinction, and which lead to penetration. And they practice carefully and do what’s suitable. A mendicant with these six qualities is capable of realizing anything that can be realized, in each and every case.”

AN 6.72

AN 6.72
Strength
Balasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has six qualities can’t attain strength in immersion. What six? It’s when a mendicant is not skilled in entering immersion, skilled in remaining in immersion, or skilled in emerging from immersion. And they don’t practice carefully and persistently, and they don’t do what’s suitable. A mendicant who has these six qualities can’t attain strength in immersion.

A mendicant who has six qualities can attain strength in immersion. What six? It’s when a mendicant is skilled in entering immersion, skilled in remaining in immersion, and skilled in emerging from immersion. And they practice carefully and persistently, and do what’s suitable. A mendicant who has these six qualities can attain strength in immersion.”

AN 6.73

AN 6.73
First Absorption (1st)
Paṭhamatajjhānasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up these six qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption. What six? Desire for sensual pleasures, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. And the drawbacks of sensual pleasures haven’t been truly seen clearly with right wisdom. Without giving up these six qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption.

But after giving up these six qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption. What six? Desire for sensual pleasures, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. And the drawbacks of sensual pleasures have been truly seen clearly with right wisdom. After giving up these six qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption.”

AN 6.74

AN 6.74
First Absorption (2nd)
Dutiyatajjhānasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up these six qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption. What six? Sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts; and sensual, malicious, and cruel perceptions. Without giving up these six qualities you can’t enter and remain in the first absorption.

But after giving up these six qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption. What six? Sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts; and sensual, malicious, and cruel perceptions. After giving up these six qualities you can enter and remain in the first absorption.”

AN 6.75

AN 6.75
Suffering
Dukkhasutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has six qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth. What six? Sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts; and sensual, malicious, and cruel perceptions. When a mendicant has these six qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth.

When a mendicant has six qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, or fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth. What six? Thoughts of renunciation, good will, and harmlessness. And perceptions of renunciation, good will, and harmlessness. When a mendicant has these six qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, or fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth.”

AN 6.76

AN 6.76
Perfection
Arahattasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six things you can’t realize perfection. What six? Conceit, inferiority complex, superiority complex, overestimation, obstinacy, and groveling. Without giving up these six qualities you can’t realize perfection.

After giving up six things you can realize perfection. What six? Conceit, inferiority complex, superiority complex, overestimation, obstinacy, and groveling. After giving up these six things you can realize perfection.”

AN 6.77

AN 6.77
Superhuman States
Uttarimanussadhammasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six qualities you can’t realize a superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones. What six? Lack of mindfulness and situational awareness, not guarding the sense doors, eating too much, deceit, and flattery. Without giving up these six qualities you can’t realize a superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones.

But after giving up six qualities you can realize a superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones. What six? Lack of mindfulness and situational awareness, not guarding the sense doors, eating too much, deceit, and flattery. After giving up these six qualities you can realize a superhuman distinction in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones.”

AN 6.78

AN 6.78
Joy and Happiness
Sukhasomanassasutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has six things they’re full of joy and happiness in the present life, and they have laid the groundwork for ending the defilements. What six? It’s when a mendicant enjoys the teaching, meditation, giving up, seclusion, kindness, and non-proliferation. When a mendicant has these six things they’re full of joy and happiness in the present life, and they have laid the groundwork for ending the defilements.”

AN 6.79

AN 6.79
Achievement
Adhigamasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has six qualities is unable to acquire more skillful qualities or to increase the skillful qualities they’ve already acquired. What six? It’s when a mendicant is not skilled in profit, skilled in loss, and skilled in means. They don’t generate enthusiasm to achieve skillful qualities not yet achieved. They don’t protect skillful qualities they have achieved. And they don’t try to persevere in the task. A mendicant who has these six qualities is unable to acquire more skillful qualities or to increase the skillful qualities they’ve already acquired.

A mendicant who has six qualities is able to acquire more skillful qualities or to increase the skillful qualities they’ve already acquired. What six? It’s when a mendicant is skilled in profit, skilled in loss, and skilled in means. They generate enthusiasm to achieve skillful qualities not yet achieved. They protect skillful qualities they have achieved. And they try to persevere in the task. A mendicant who has these six qualities is able to acquire more skillful qualities or to increase the skillful qualities they’ve already acquired.”

AN 6.80

AN 6.80
Greatness
Mahantattasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities soon acquires great and abundant good qualities. What six? It’s when a mendicant is full of light, full of practice, full of inspiration, and full of eagerness. They don’t slack off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. They reach further. A mendicant who has these six qualities soon acquires great and abundant good qualities.”

AN 6.81

AN 6.81
Hell (1st)
Paṭhamanirayasutta

“Mendicants, someone with six qualities is cast down to hell. What six? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, and lie. And they have corrupt wishes and wrong view. Someone with these six qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with six qualities is raised up to heaven. What six? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or lie. And they have few desires and right view. Someone with these six qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 6.82

AN 6.82
Hell (2nd)
Dutiyanirayasutta

“Mendicants, someone with six qualities is cast down to hell. What six? They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, and lie. And they’re greedy and rude. Someone with these six qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with six qualities is raised up to heaven. What six? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or lie. And they’re not greedy or rude. Someone with these six qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 6.83

AN 6.83
The Best Thing
Aggadhammasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities can’t realize the best thing, perfection. What six? It’s when a mendicant is faithless, shameless, imprudent, lazy, and witless. And they’re concerned with their body and their life. A mendicant with these six qualities can’t realize the best thing, perfection.

A mendicant with six qualities can realize the best thing, perfection. What six? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, conscientious, prudent, energetic, and wise. And they have no concern for their body and their life. A mendicant with these six qualities can realize the best thing, perfection.”

AN 6.84

AN 6.84
Day and Night
Rattidivasasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. What six? It’s when a mendicant has many desires—they’re frustrated and not content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they’re faithless, unethical, unmindful, and witless. A mendicant with these six qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A mendicant with six qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. What six? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t have many desires—they’re not frustrated but content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And they’re faithful, ethical, mindful, and wise. A mendicant with these six qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.”

AN 6.85

AN 6.85
Coolness
Sītibhāvasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities can’t realize supreme coolness. What six? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t keep their mind in check when they should. They don’t exert their mind when they should. They don’t encourage the mind when they should. They don’t watch over the mind with equanimity when they should. They have bad convictions. They delight in substantial reality. A mendicant with these six qualities can’t realize supreme coolness.

A mendicant with six qualities can realize supreme coolness. What six? It’s when a mendicant keeps their mind in check when they should. They exert their mind when they should. They encourage the mind when they should. They watch over the mind with equanimity when they should. They have excellent convictions. They delight in extinguishment. A mendicant with these six qualities can realize supreme coolness.”

AN 6.86

AN 6.86
Obstacles
Āvaraṇasutta

“Mendicants, someone with six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What six? They’re obstructed by deeds, defilements, or results. And they’re faithless, unenthusiastic, and witless. Someone with these six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities, even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What six? They’re not obstructed by deeds, defilements, or results. And they’re faithful, enthusiastic, and wise. Someone with these six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 6.87

AN 6.87
A Murderer
Voropitasutta

“Mendicants, someone with six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What six? They murder their mother or father or a perfected one. They maliciously shed the blood of a Realized One. They cause a schism in the Saṅgha. They’re witless, dull, and stupid. Someone with these six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities, even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What six? They don’t murder their mother or father or a perfected one. They don’t maliciously shed the blood of a Realized One. They don’t cause a schism in the Saṅgha. They’re wise, bright, and clever. Someone with these six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 6.88

AN 6.88
Wanting to Listen
Sussūsatisutta

“Mendicants, someone with six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities even when listening to the true teaching. What six? When the teaching and practice proclaimed by the Realized One is being taught they don’t want to listen. They don’t actively listen or try to understand. They learn the incorrect meaning and reject the correct meaning. They accept views that contradict the teaching. Someone with these six qualities is unable to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities, even when listening to the true teaching.

Someone with six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching. What six? When the teaching and practice proclaimed by the Realized One is being taught they want to listen. They actively listen and try to understand. They learn the correct meaning and reject the incorrect meaning. They accept views that conform with the teaching. Someone with these six qualities is able to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities when listening to the true teaching.”

AN 6.89

AN 6.89
Not Giving Up
Appahāyasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six things you can’t become accomplished in view. What six? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, and forms of greed, hate, and delusion that lead to rebirth in places of loss. Without giving up these six things you can’t become accomplished in view.

After giving up six things you can become accomplished in view. What six? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, and forms of greed, hate, and delusion that lead to rebirth in places of loss. After giving up these six things you can become accomplished in view.”

AN 6.90

AN 6.90
Given Up
Pahīnasutta

“Mendicants, a person accomplished in view has given up six things. What six? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, and forms of greed, hate, and delusion that lead to rebirth in places of loss. A person accomplished in view has given up these six things.”

AN 6.91

AN 6.91
Can’t Give Rise
Abhabbasutta

“Mendicants, a person accomplished in view can’t give rise to six things. What six? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, and forms of greed, hate, and delusion that lead to rebirth in places of loss. A person accomplished in view can’t give rise to these six things.”

AN 6.92

AN 6.92
Things That Can’t Be Done (1st)
Paṭhamaabhabbaṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, these six things can’t be done. What six? A person accomplished in view can’t live disrespectful and irreverent toward the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, or the training. They can’t establish their belief on unreliable grounds. And they can’t generate an eighth rebirth. These are the six things that can’t be done.”

AN 6.93

AN 6.93
Things That Can’t Be Done (2nd)
Dutiyaabhabbaṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, these six things can’t be done. What six? A person accomplished in view can’t take conditions to be permanent, happiness, or self. They can’t do deeds with fixed result in the next life. They can’t fall back on purification through noisy, superstitious rites. They can’t seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations. These are the six things that can’t be done.”

AN 6.94

AN 6.94
Things That Can’t Be Done (3rd)
Tatiyaabhabbaṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, these six things can’t be done. What six? A person accomplished in view can’t murder their mother or father or a perfected one. They can’t maliciously shed the blood of the Realized One. They can’t cause a schism in the Saṅgha. They can’t dedicate themselves to another teacher. These are the six things that can’t be done.”

AN 6.95

AN 6.95
Things That Can’t Be Done (4th)
Catutthaabhabbaṭṭhānasutta

“Mendicants, these six things can’t be done. What six? A person accomplished in view can’t fall back on the idea that pleasure and pain are made by oneself, or that they’re made by another, or that they’re made by both. Nor can they fall back on the idea that pleasure and pain arise by chance, not made by oneself, by another, or by both. Why is that? It is because a person accomplished in view has clearly seen causes and the phenomena that arise from causes. These are the six things that can’t be done.”

AN 6.96

AN 6.96
Appearance
Pātubhāvasutta

“Mendicants, the appearance of six things is rare in the world. What six? A Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha. A person who teaches the teaching and training proclaimed by a Realized One. Rebirth in a civilized region. Unimpaired sense faculties. Being bright and clever. Enthusiasm for skillful qualities. The appearance of these six things is rare in the world.”

AN 6.97

AN 6.97
Benefit
Ānisaṁsasutta

“Mendicants, these are the six benefits of realizing the fruit of stream-entry. What six? You’re bound for the true teaching. You’re not liable to decline. You suffer only for a limited period. You have unshared knowledge. You’ve clearly seen causes and the phenomena that arise from causes. These are the six benefits of realizing the fruit of stream-entry.”

AN 6.98

AN 6.98
Impermanence
Aniccasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a mendicant who regards any condition as permanent to accept views that conform with the teaching. Without accepting views that conform with the teaching, it’s impossible to enter the sure path with regards to skillful qualities. Without entering the sure path, it’s impossible to realize the fruit of stream-entry, once-return, non-return, or perfection.

It’s quite possible for a mendicant who regards all conditions as impermanent to accept views that conform with the teaching. Having accepted views that conform with the teaching, it’s possible to enter the sure path. Having entered the sure path, it’s possible to realize the fruit of stream-entry, once-return, non-return, or perfection.”

AN 6.99

AN 6.99
Suffering
Dukkhasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a mendicant who regards any condition as pleasurable to accept views that agree with the teaching. … It’s quite possible for a mendicant who regards all conditions as suffering to accept views that agree with the teaching. …”

AN 6.100

AN 6.100
Not-Self
Anattasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a mendicant who regards any condition as self to accept views that agree with the teaching. … It’s quite possible for a mendicant who regards all things as not-self to accept views that agree with the teaching. …”

AN 6.101

AN 6.101
Extinguished
Nibbānasutta

“Mendicants, it’s quite impossible for a mendicant who regards extinguishment as suffering to accept views that conform with the teaching. …

It’s quite possible for a mendicant who regards extinguishment as pleasurable to accept views that conform with the teaching. …”

AN 6.102

AN 6.102
Transience
Anavatthitasutta

“Mendicants, seeing six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of impermanence in all conditions without qualification. What six? ‘All conditions will appear to me as transient.’ ‘My mind will not delight anywhere in the world.’ ‘My mind will rise above the whole world.’ ‘My mind will incline to extinguishment.’ ‘My fetters will be given up.’ ‘I will achieve the ultimate goal of the ascetic life.’ Seeing these six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of impermanence in all conditions without qualification.”

AN 6.103

AN 6.103
With a Drawn Sword
Ukkhittāsikasutta

“Mendicants, seeing six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of suffering in all conditions without qualification. What six? ‘Perception of disillusionment will be established in me for all conditions, like a killer with a drawn sword.’ ‘My mind will rise above the whole world.’ ‘I will see extinguishment as peaceful.’ ‘My underlying tendencies will be uprooted.’ ‘I will fulfill my duty.’ ‘I will have served my Teacher with love.’ Seeing these six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of suffering in all conditions without qualification.”

AN 6.104

AN 6.104
Not Determined by Anything
Atammayasutta

“Mendicants, seeing six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of not-self in all things without qualification. What six? ‘I will not be determined by anything in the world.’ ‘My I-making will stop.’ ‘My mine-making will stop.’ ‘I will have unshared knowledge.’ ‘I will clearly see causes and the phenomena that arise from causes.’ Seeing these six benefits is quite enough to establish the perception of not-self in all things without qualification.”

AN 6.105

AN 6.105
States of Existence
Bhavasutta

“Mendicants, you should give up these three states of existence. And you should train in three trainings. What are the three states of existence you should give up? Existence in the sensual realm, the realm of luminous form, and the formless realm. These are the three states of existence you should give up. What are the three trainings you should train in? The training in the higher ethics, the higher mind, and the higher wisdom. These are the three trainings you should train in. When a mendicant has given up these three states of existence and has trained in these three trainings they’re called a mendicant who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

AN 6.106

AN 6.106
Craving
Taṇhāsutta

“Mendicants, you should give up these three cravings and three conceits. What three cravings should you give up? Craving for sensual pleasures, craving for continued existence, and craving to end existence. These are the three cravings you should give up. What three conceits should you give up? Conceit, inferiority complex, and superiority complex. These are the three conceits you should give up. When a mendicant has given up these three cravings and these three conceits they’re called a mendicant who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

AN 6.107

AN 6.107
Greed
Rāgasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop the perception of ugliness to give up greed, love to give up hate, and wisdom to give up delusion. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.108

AN 6.108
Bad Conduct
Duccaritasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop good bodily conduct to give up bad bodily conduct, good verbal conduct to give up bad verbal conduct, and good mental conduct to give up bad mental conduct. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.109

AN 6.109
Thoughts
Vitakkasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop thoughts of renunciation to give up sensual thoughts, thoughts of good will to give up malicious thoughts, and thoughts of harmlessness to give up cruel thoughts. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.110

AN 6.110
Perceptions
Saññāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Sensual, malicious, and cruel perceptions. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop perceptions of renunciation to give up sensual perceptions, perceptions of good will to give up malicious perceptions, and perceptions of harmlessness to give up cruel perceptions. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.111

AN 6.111
Elements
Dhātusutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? The elements of sensuality, malice, and cruelty. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop the element of renunciation to give up the element of sensuality, the element of good will to give up the element of malice, and the element of harmlessness to give up the element of cruelty. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.112

AN 6.112
Gratification
Assādasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? The view that things are gratifying, the view of self, and wrong view. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop the perception of impermanence to give up the view that things are gratifying; the perception of not-self to give up the view of self; and right view to give up wrong view. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.113

AN 6.113
Discontent
Aratisutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Discontent, cruelty, and unprincipled conduct. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop rejoicing to give up discontent, harmlessness to give up cruelty, and principled conduct to give up unprincipled conduct. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.114

AN 6.114
Contentment
Santuṭṭhitāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Lack of contentment, lack of situational awareness, and having many wishes. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop contentment to give up lack of contentment, situational awareness to give up lack of situational awareness, and having few wishes to give up having many wishes. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.115

AN 6.115
Hard to Admonish
Dovacassatāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Being hard to admonish, bad friendship, and a scattered mind. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop being easy to admonish to give up being hard to admonish, good friendship to give up bad friendship, and mindfulness of breathing to give up a scattered mind. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.116

AN 6.116
Restlessness
Uddhaccasutta

“Mendicants, there are these three things. What three? Restlessness, lack of restraint, and negligence. These are the three things. To give up these three things you should develop three things. What three? You should develop serenity to give up restlessness, restraint to give up lack of restraint, and diligence to give up negligence. These are the three things you should develop to give up those three things.”

AN 6.117

AN 6.117
Observing the Body
Kāyānupassīsutta

“Mendicants, without giving up these six qualities you can’t meditate observing an aspect of the body. What six? Relishing work, talk, sleep, and company, not guarding the sense doors, and eating too much. Without giving up these six qualities you can’t meditate observing an aspect of the body.

But after giving up these six qualities you can meditate observing an aspect of the body. What six? Relishing work, talk, sleep, and company, not guarding the sense doors, and eating too much. After giving up these six qualities you can meditate observing an aspect of the body.”

AN 6.118

AN 6.118
Observing Principles, Etc.
Dhammānupassīsutta

“Mendicants, without giving up six things you can’t meditate observing an aspect of the body internally … body externally … body internally and externally … feelings internally … feelings externally … feelings internally and externally … mind internally … mind externally … mind internally and externally … principles internally … principles externally … principles internally and externally. What six? Relishing work, talk, sleep, and company, not guarding the sense doors, and eating too much. After giving up these six qualities you can meditate observing an aspect of principles internally and externally.”

AN 6.119

AN 6.119
About Tapussa
Tapussasutta

“Mendicants, having six qualities the householder Tapussa is certain about the Realized One, sees freedom from death and lives having realized freedom from death. What six? Experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and noble ethics, knowledge, and freedom. Having these six qualities the householder Tapussa is certain about the Realized One, sees freedom from death and lives having realized freedom from death.”

AN 6.120-139

AN 6.120–139
About Bhallika, Etc.
Bhallikādisutta

“Mendicants, having six qualities the householders Bhallika … Sudatta Anāthapiṇḍika … Citta of Macchikāsaṇḍa … Hatthaka of Āḷavī … Mahānāma the Sakyan … Ugga of Vesālī … Uggata … Sūrambaṭṭha … Jīvaka Komārabhacca … Nakula’s father … Tavakaṇṇika … Pūraṇa … Isidatta … Sandhāna … Vijaya … Vijayamāhita … Meṇḍaka … the lay followers Vāseṭṭha … Ariṭṭha … and Sāragga are certain about the Realized One, see freedom from death and live having realized freedom from death. What six? Experiential confidence in the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, and noble ethics, knowledge, and freedom. Having these six qualities the lay follower Sāragga is certain about the Realized One, sees freedom from death and lives having realized freedom from death.”

AN 6.140

AN 6.140
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“For insight into greed, six things should be developed. What six? The unsurpassable seeing, listening, acquisition, training, service, and recollection. For insight into greed, these six things should be developed.”

AN 6.141

AN 6.141
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)

~

“For insight into greed, six things should be developed. What six? The recollection of the Buddha, the teaching, the Saṅgha, ethics, generosity, and the deities. For insight into greed, these six things should be developed.”

AN 6.142

AN 6.142
Untitled Discourse on Greed (3rd)

~

“For insight into greed, six things should be developed. What six? The perception of impermanence, the perception of suffering in impermanence, the perception of not-self in suffering, the perception of giving up, the perception of fading away, and the perception of cessation. For insight into greed, these six things should be developed.”

AN 6.143-169

AN 6.143–169
Untitled Discourses on Greed, Etc.

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of greed these six things should be developed.”

AN 6.170-649

AN 6.170–649
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for insight into negligence … complete understanding … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of negligence these six things should be developed.”

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

The Book of the Sixes is finished.

AN 7.1

AN 7.1
Pleasing (1st)
Paṭhamapiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What seven? It's when a mendicant desires material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They lack conscience and prudence. They have corrupt wishes and wrong view. A mendicant with these seven qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A mendicant with seven qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What seven? It's when a mendicant doesn't desire material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They have conscience and prudence. They have few desires and right view. A mendicant with these seven qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, respected and admired."

AN 7.2

AN 7.2
Pleasing (2nd)
Dutiyapiyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What seven? It’s when a mendicant desires material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They lack conscience and prudence. They’re jealous and stingy. A mendicant with these seven qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A mendicant with seven qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, respected and admired. What seven? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t desire material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They have conscience and prudence. They’re not jealous or stingy. A mendicant with these seven qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, respected and admired.”

AN 7.3

AN 7.3
Powers in Brief
Saṁkhittabalasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. … "Mendicants, there are these seven powers. What seven? The powers of faith, energy, conscience, prudence, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom. These are the seven powers.

The powers are faith and energy, conscience and prudence, mindfulness and immersion, and wisdom as the seventh power. Empowered by these, an astute mendicant lives happily.

They should examine the teaching rationally, discerning the meaning with wisdom. The liberation of their heart is like a lamp going out."

AN 7.4

AN 7.4
Powers in Detail
Vitthatabalasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven powers. What seven? The powers of faith, energy, conscience, prudence, mindfulness, immersion, and wisdom.

And what is the power of faith? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called the power of faith.

And what is the power of energy? It’s when a noble disciple lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is called the power of energy.

And what is the power of conscience? It’s when a noble disciple has a conscience. They’re conscientious about bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and conscientious about acquiring any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the power of conscience.

And what is the power of prudence? It’s when a noble disciple is prudent. They’re prudent when it comes to bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and prudent when it comes to the acquiring of any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the power of prudence.

And what is the power of mindfulness? It’s when a noble disciple is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. This is called the power of mindfulness.

And what is the power of immersion? It’s when a noble disciple, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. … Giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, they enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. This is called the power of immersion.

And what is the power of wisdom? It’s when a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called the power of wisdom.

These are the seven powers.

The powers are faith and energy, conscience and prudence, mindfulness and immersion, and wisdom as the seventh power. Empowered by these, an astute mendicant lives happily.

They should examine the teaching rationally, discerning the meaning with wisdom. The liberation of their heart is like a lamp going out."

AN 7.5

AN 7.5
Wealth in Brief
Saṁkhittadhanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven kinds of wealth. What seven? The wealth of faith, ethics, conscience, prudence, learning, generosity, and wisdom. These are the seven kinds of wealth.

Faith and ethical conduct are kinds of wealth, as are conscience and prudence, learning and generosity, and wisdom is the seventh kind of wealth.

When a woman or man has these kinds of wealth, they’re said to be prosperous, their life is not in vain.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.”

AN 7.6

AN 7.6
Wealth in Detail
Vitthatadhanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven kinds of wealth. What seven? The wealth of faith, ethics, conscience, prudence, learning, generosity, and wisdom.

And what is the wealth of faith? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening … This is called the wealth of faith.

And what is the wealth of ethical conduct? It’s when a noble disciple doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called the wealth of ethical conduct.

And what is the wealth of conscience? It’s when a noble disciple has a conscience. They’re conscientious about bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and conscientious about having any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the wealth of conscience.

And what is the wealth of prudence? It’s when a noble disciple is prudent. They’re prudent when it comes to bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and prudent when it comes to the acquiring of any bad, unskillful qualities. This is called the wealth of prudence.

And what is the wealth of learning? It’s when a noble disciple is very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. This is called the wealth of learning.

And what is the wealth of generosity? It’s when a noble disciple lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. This is called the wealth of generosity.

And what is the wealth of wisdom? It’s when a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called the wealth of wisdom.

These are the seven kinds of wealth.

Faith and ethical conduct are kinds of wealth, as are conscience and prudence, learning and generosity, and wisdom is the seventh kind of wealth.

When a woman or man has these kinds of wealth, they’re said to be prosperous, their life is not in vain.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.”

AN 7.7

AN 7.7
With Ugga
Uggasutta

Then Ugga the government minister went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! Migāra of Rohaṇa is so rich, so very wealthy.”

“But Ugga, how rich is he?”

“He has a hundred thousand gold coins, not to mention the silver!”

“Well, Ugga, that is wealth, I can’t deny it. But fire, water, rulers, thieves, and unloved heirs all take a share of that wealth. There are these seven kinds of wealth that they can’t take a share of. What seven? The wealth of faith, ethics, conscience, prudence, learning, generosity, and wisdom. There are these seven kinds of wealth that fire, water, rulers, thieves, and unloved heirs can’t take a share of.

Faith and ethical conduct are kinds of wealth, as are conscience and prudence, learning and generosity, and wisdom is the seventh kind of wealth.

When a woman or man has these kinds of wealth, they’re really rich in the world, invincible among gods and humans.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.”

AN 7.8

AN 7.8
Fetters
Saṁyojanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven fetters. What seven? The fetters of attraction, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. These are the seven fetters.”

AN 7.9

AN 7.9
Giving Up
Pahānasutta

“Mendicants, the spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these seven fetters. What seven? The fetters of attraction, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. The spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these seven fetters. When a mendicant has given up the fetters of attraction, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance—cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so they are unable to arise in the future—they’re called a mendicant who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

AN 7.10

AN 7.10
Stinginess
Macchariyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven fetters. What seven? The fetters of attraction, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, jealousy, and stinginess. These are the seven fetters.”

AN 7.11

AN 7.11
Underlying Tendencies (1st)
Paṭhamaanusayasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven underlying tendencies. What seven? The underlying tendencies of sensual desire, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. These are the seven underlying tendencies.”

AN 7.12

AN 7.12
Underlying Tendencies (2nd)
Dutiyaanusayasutta

“Mendicants, the spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these seven underlying tendencies. What seven? The underlying tendencies of sensual desire, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. The spiritual life is lived to give up and cut out these seven underlying tendencies.

When a mendicant has given up the underlying tendencies of sensual desire, repulsion, views, doubt, conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance—cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so they are unable to arise in the future—they’re called a mendicant who has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

AN 7.13

AN 7.13
A Family
Kulasutta

“Mendicants, visiting a family with seven factors is not worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is not worthwhile. What seven? They don’t politely rise, bow, or offer a seat. They hide what they have. Even when they have much they give little. Even when they have refined things they give coarse things. They give carelessly, not carefully. Visiting a family with these seven factors is not worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is not worthwhile.

Visiting a family with seven factors is worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is worthwhile. What seven? They politely rise, bow, and offer a seat. They don’t hide what they have. When they have much they give much. When they have refined things they give refined things. They give carefully, not carelessly. Visiting a family with these seven factors is worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is worthwhile.”

AN 7.14

AN 7.14
Persons
Puggalasutta

“Mendicants, these seven people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What seven? The one freed both ways, the one freed by wisdom, the direct witness, the one attained to view, the one freed by faith, the follower of teachings, and the follower by faith. These are the seven people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 7.15

AN 7.15
A Simile With Water
Udakūpamāsutta

“Mendicants, these seven people found in the world are like those in water.

What seven? One person sinks under once and stays under. One person rises up then sinks under. One person rises up then stays put. One person rises up then sees and discerns. One person rises up then crosses over. One person rises up then finds a footing. One person has risen up, crossed over, and gone beyond, and that brahmin stands on the shore.

And what kind of person sinks under once and stays under? It’s the kind of person who has exclusively dark, unskillful qualities. This kind of person sinks under once and stays under.

And what kind of person rises up then sinks under? It’s the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: ‘It’s good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ However their faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom don’t last or grow, but dwindle away. This kind of person rises up then sinks under.

And what kind of person rises up then stays put? It’s the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: ‘It’s good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ And their faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom lasts, neither dwindling nor growing. This kind of person rises up then stays put.

And what kind of person rises up then sees and discerns? It’s the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: ‘It’s good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ With the ending of three fetters they’re a stream-enterer, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening. This kind of person rises up then sees and discerns.

And what kind of person rises up then crosses over? It’s the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: ‘It’s good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ With the ending of three fetters, and the weakening of greed, hate, and delusion, they’re a once-returner. They come back to this world once only, then make an end of suffering. This kind of person rises up then crosses over.

And what kind of person rises up then finds a footing? It’s the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: ‘It’s good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This kind of person rises up then finds a footing.

And what kind of person has risen up, crossed over, and gone beyond, a brahmin who stands on the shore? It's the kind of person who, rising up, thinks: 'It's good to have faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom regarding skillful qualities.' They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This kind of person has risen up, crossed over, and gone beyond, a brahmin who stands on the shore.

These seven people found in the world are like those in water."

AN 7.16

AN 7.16
Observing Impermanence
Aniccānupassīsutta

“Mendicants, these seven people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What seven?

First, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in all conditions. They perceive impermanence and experience impermanence. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. They’ve realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is the first person.

Next, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in all conditions. Their defilements and their life come to an end at exactly the same time. This is the second person.

Next, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in all conditions. With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished upon landing. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished without extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished with extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. This is the seventh person.

These are the seven people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 7.17

AN 7.17
Observing Suffering
Dukkhānupassīsutta

“Mendicants, these seven people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What seven? First, take a person who meditates observing suffering in all conditions. They perceive suffering and experience suffering. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. …”

AN 7.18

AN 7.18
Observing Not-self
Anattānupassīsutta

“First, take a person who meditates observing not-self in all things. They perceive not-self and experience not-self. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. …”

AN 7.19

AN 7.19
Extinguishment
Nibbānasutta

“First, take a person who meditates observing the happiness in extinguishment. They perceive happiness and experience happiness. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. They’ve realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is the first person worthy of offerings.

Next, take a person who meditates observing the happiness in extinguishment. They perceive happiness and experience happiness. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. Their defilements and their life come to an end at exactly the same time. This is the second person.

Next, take a person who meditates observing the happiness in extinguishment. They perceive happiness and experience happiness. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom.

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished upon landing. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished without extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished with extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. This is the seventh person.

These are the seven people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 7.20

AN 7.20
Qualifications for Graduation
Niddasavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven qualifications for graduation. What seven? It’s when a mendicant has a keen enthusiasm to undertake the training … to examine the teachings … to get rid of desires … for retreat … to rouse up energy … for mindfulness and alertness … to penetrate theoretically. And they don’t lose these desires in the future. These are the seven qualifications for graduation.”

AN 7.21

AN 7.21
At Sārandada
Sārandadasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Sārandada Tree-shrine. Then several Licchavis went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and the Buddha said to these Licchavis:

“Licchavis, I will teach you these seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what are the seven principles that prevent decline? As long as the Vajjis meet frequently and have many meetings, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis meet in harmony, leave in harmony, and carry on their business in harmony, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis don’t make new decrees or abolish existing decrees, but undertake and follow the ancient Vajjian traditions as they have been decreed, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate Vajjian elders, and think them worth listening to, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis don’t forcibly abduct the women or girls of the clans and make them live with them, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the Vajjian shrines, whether inner or outer, not neglecting the proper spirit-offerings that were given and made in the past, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the Vajjis organize proper protection, shelter, and security for perfected ones, so that more perfected ones might come to the realm and those already here may live in comfort, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the Vajjis, and as long as the Vajjis are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline.”

AN 7.22

AN 7.22
With Vassakāra
Vassakārasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain.

Now at that time King Ajātasattu of Magadha, son of the princess of Videha, wanted to invade the Vajjis. He declared: "I shall wipe out these Vajjis, so mighty and powerful! I shall destroy them, and lay ruin and devastation upon them!"

And then King Ajātasattu addressed Vassakāra the brahmin minister of Magadha, "Please, brahmin, go to the Buddha, and in my name bow with your head to his feet. Ask him if he is healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably. And then say: 'Sir, King Ajātasattu of Magadha, son of the princess of Videha, wants to invade the Vajjis. He has declared: "I shall wipe out these Vajjis, so mighty and powerful! I shall destroy them, and lay ruin and devastation upon them!"' Remember well how the Buddha answers and tell it to me. For Realized Ones say nothing that is not so."

"Yes, sir," Vassakāra replied. He went to the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

"Mister Gotama, King Ajātasattu bows with his head to your feet. He asks if you are healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably. King Ajātasattu wants to invade the Vajjis. He has declared: 'I shall wipe out these Vajjis, so mighty and powerful! I shall destroy them, and lay ruin and devastation upon them!'"

Now at that time Venerable Ānanda was standing behind the Buddha fanning him. Then the Buddha said to him: "Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis meet frequently and have many meetings?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis meet frequently and have many meetings, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis meet in harmony, leave in harmony, and carry on their business in harmony?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis meet in harmony, leave in harmony, and carry on their business in harmony, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis don't make new decrees or abolish existing decrees, but proceed having undertaken the ancient Vajjian principles as they have been decreed?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis don't make new decrees or abolish existing decrees, but proceed having undertaken the ancient Vajjian traditions as they have been decreed, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate Vajjian elders, and think them worth listening to?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate Vajjian elders, and think them worth listening to, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis don't forcibly abduct the women or girls of the clans and make them live with them?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis don't forcibly abduct the women or girls of the clans and make them live with them, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the Vajjian shrines, whether inner or outer, not neglecting the proper spirit-offerings that were given and made in the past?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the Vajjian shrines, whether inner or outer, not neglecting the proper spirit-offerings that were given and made in the past, they can expect growth, not decline.

Ānanda, have you heard that the Vajjis organize proper protection, shelter, and security for perfected ones, so that more perfected ones might come to the realm and those already here may live in comfort?"

"I have heard that, sir."

"As long as the Vajjis organize proper protection, shelter, and security for perfected ones, so that more perfected ones might come to the realm and those already here may live in comfort, they can expect growth, not decline."

Then the Buddha said to Vassakāra:

"Brahmin, one time I was staying near Vesālī at the Sārandada woodland shrine. There I taught the Vajjis these principles that prevent decline. As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the Vajjis, and as long as the Vajjis are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline."

When the Buddha had spoken, Vassakāra said to him: "Mister Gotama, if the Vajjis follow even a single one of these principles they can expect growth, not decline. How much more so all seven! King Ajātasattu cannot defeat the Vajjis in war, unless by bribery or by sowing dissension. Well, now, Mister Gotama, I must go. I have many duties, and much to do."

"Please, brahmin, go at your convenience." Then Vassakāra the brahmin, having approved and agreed with what the Buddha said, got up from his seat and left.

AN 7.23

AN 7.23
Non-Decline for Mendicants (1st)
Paṭhamasattakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

"Mendicants, I will teach you these seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"What are the seven principles that prevent decline? As long as the mendicants meet frequently and have many meetings, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants meet in harmony, leave in harmony, and carry on their business in harmony, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants don't make new decrees or abolish existing decrees, but undertake and follow the training rules as they have been decreed, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the senior mendicants—of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha—and think them worth listening to, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants don't fall under the sway of arisen craving for future lives, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants take care to live in wilderness lodgings, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as the mendicants individually establish mindfulness, so that more good-hearted spiritual companions might come, and those that have already come may live comfortably, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the mendicants, and as long as the mendicants are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline."

AN 7.24

AN 7.24
Non-Decline for Mendicants (2nd)
Dutiyasattakasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well … And what are the seven principles that prevent decline?

As long as the mendicants don’t relish work, loving it and liking to relish it, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as they don’t enjoy talk … sleep … company … they don’t have corrupt wishes, falling under the sway of corrupt wishes … they don’t have bad friends, companions, and associates … they don’t stop half-way after achieving some insignificant distinction, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the mendicants, and as long as the mendicants are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline.”

AN 7.25

AN 7.25
Non-Decline for Mendicants (3rd)
Tatiyasattakasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well … And what are the seven principles that prevent decline? As long as the mendicants are faithful … conscientious … prudent … learned … energetic … mindful … wise, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the mendicants, and as long as the mendicants are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline.”

AN 7.26

AN 7.26
Awakening Factors
Bojjhaṅgasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well … And what are the seven principles that prevent decline? As long as the mendicants develop the awakening factor of mindfulness … investigation of principles … energy … rapture … tranquility … immersion … equanimity, they can expect growth, not decline.

As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the mendicants, and as long as the mendicants are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline.”

AN 7.27

AN 7.27
Perceptions
Saññāsutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you seven principles that prevent decline. Listen and apply your mind well … And what are the seven principles that prevent decline? As long as the mendicants develop the perception of impermanence …

not-self … ugliness … drawbacks … giving up … fading away … cessation, they can expect growth, not decline. As long as these seven principles that prevent decline last among the mendicants, and as long as the mendicants are seen following them, they can expect growth, not decline.”

AN 7.28

AN 7.28
Non-decline for a Mendicant Trainee
Paṭhamaparihānisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

"These seven things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? They relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They don't guard the sense doors and they eat too much. And when there is Saṅgha business to be carried out, they don't reflect: 'There are senior mendicants in the Saṅgha of long standing, long gone forth, responsible. They'll be known for taking care of this.' So they try to do it themselves. These seven things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These seven things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? They don't relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They guard the sense doors and don't they eat too much. And when there is Saṅgha business to be carried out, they reflect: 'There are senior mendicants in the Saṅgha of long standing, long gone forth, responsible. They'll be known for taking care of this.' So they don't try to do it themselves. These seven things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee."

AN 7.29

AN 7.29
Non-decline for a Lay Follower
Dutiyaparihānisutta

“These seven things lead to the decline of a lay follower. What seven? They miss out on seeing the mendicants. They neglect listening to the true teaching. They don’t train in higher ethical conduct. They’re very suspicious about mendicants, whether senior, junior, or middle. They listen to the teaching with a hostile, fault-finding mind. They seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations. And they serve them first. These seven things lead to the decline of a lay follower.

These seven things don’t lead to the decline of a lay follower. What seven? They don’t miss out on seeing the mendicants. They don’t neglect listening to the true teaching. They train in higher ethical conduct. They’re very confident about mendicants, whether senior, junior, or middle. They don’t listen to the teaching with a hostile, fault-finding mind. They don’t seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations. And they serve the Buddhist community first. These seven things don’t lead to the decline of a lay follower.”

That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

“A lay follower misses out on seeing those who are evolved and listening to the teachings of the Noble One. They don’t train in higher ethical conduct, and their suspicion about mendicants just grows and grows. They want to listen to the true teaching with a fault-finding mind.

They seek outside the Buddhist community for someone else worthy of religious donations, and that lay follower serves them first.

These seven principles leading to decline have been well taught. A lay follower who practices them falls away from the true teaching.

A lay follower doesn’t miss out on seeing those who are evolved and listening to the teachings of the Noble One. They train in higher ethical conduct, and their confidence in mendicants just grows and grows. They want to listen to the true teaching without a fault-finding mind.

They don’t seek outside the Buddhist community for someone else worthy of religious donations, and that lay follower serves the Buddhist community first.

These seven principles that prevent decline have been well taught. A lay follower who practices them doesn't fall away from the true teaching."

AN 7.30

AN 7.30
Failures for a Lay Follower
Vipattisutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven failures for a lay follower …

There are these seven accomplishments for a lay follower …”

AN 7.31

AN 7.31
Downfalls for a Lay Follower
Parābhavasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven downfalls for a lay follower … There are these seven successes for a lay follower. What seven?

They don’t miss out on seeing the mendicants.

They don’t neglect listening to the true teaching.

They train in higher ethical conduct.

They’re very confident about mendicants, whether senior, junior, or middle.

They don’t listen to the teaching with a hostile, fault-finding mind.

They don’t seek outside of the Buddhist community for those worthy of religious donations.

And they serve the Buddhist community first.

These are the seven successes for a lay follower.

A lay follower misses out on seeing those who are evolved and listening to the teachings of the Noble One. They don’t train in higher ethical conduct, and their suspicion about mendicants just grows and grows. They want to listen to the true teaching with a fault-finding mind.

They seek outside the Buddhist community for someone else worthy of religious donations, and that lay follower serves them first.

These seven principles leading to decline have been well taught. A lay follower who practices these falls away from the true teaching.

A lay follower doesn’t miss out on seeing those who are evolved and listening to the teachings of the Noble One. They train in higher ethical conduct, and their confidence in mendicants just grows and grows. They want to listen to the true teaching without a fault-finding mind.

They don’t seek outside the Buddhist community for someone else worthy of religious donations, and that lay follower serves the Buddhist community first.

These seven principles that prevent decline have been well taught. A lay follower who practices them doesn’t fall away from the true teaching.”

AN 7.32

AN 7.32
Respect for Diligence
Appamādagāravasutta

Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, these seven things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for immersion, for diligence, and for hospitality. These seven things don't lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee."

That's what that deity said, and the teacher approved. Then that deity, knowing that the teacher approved, bowed and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened, adding:

"Respect for the Teacher and the teaching, and keen respect for the Saṅgha; respect for immersion, being energetic, and keen respect for the training.

A mendicant who respects diligence and hospitality can't decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment."

AN 7.33

AN 7.33
Respect for Conscience
Hirigāravasutta

“Mendicants, tonight, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta’s Grove, came to me, bowed, stood to one side, and said to me: ‘Sir, these seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for immersion, for conscience, and for prudence. These seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.’

That is what that deity said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled me, keeping me on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Respect for the Teacher and the teaching, and keen respect for the Saṅgha; respect for immersion, being energetic, and keen respect for the training.

One with both conscience and prudence, reverential and respectful, can’t decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment.”

AN 7.34

AN 7.34
Easy to Admonish (1st)
Paṭhamasovacassatāsutta

“Mendicants, tonight a deity … said to me: ‘Sir, these seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for immersion; being easy to admonish, and good friendship. These seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.’

That is what that deity said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled me, keeping me on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Respect for the Teacher and the teaching, and keen respect for the Saṅgha; respect for immersion, being energetic, and keen respect for the training.

One with good friends, easy to admonish, reverential and respectful, can’t decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment.”

AN 7.35

AN 7.35
Easy to Admonish (2nd)
Dutiyasovacassatāsutta

“Mendicants, tonight a deity … said to me: ‘Sir, these seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What seven? Respect for the Teacher, for the teaching, for the Saṅgha, for the training, for immersion; being easy to admonish, and good friendship. These seven things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.’

That is what that deity said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled me, keeping me on his right side, before vanishing right there.”

When he said this, Venerable Sāriputta said to the Buddha:

“Sir, this is how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha’s brief statement.

It’s when a mendicant personally respects the Teacher and praises such respect. And they encourage other mendicants who lack such respect to respect the Teacher. And they praise other mendicants who respect the Teacher at the right time, truthfully and correctly.

They personally respect the teaching …

They personally respect the Saṅgha …

They personally respect the training …

They personally respect immersion …

They are personally easy to admonish …

They personally have good friends, and praise such friendship. And they encourage other mendicants who lack good friends to develop good friendship. And they praise other mendicants who have good friends at the right time, truthfully and correctly.

That’s how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha’s brief statement.”

“Good, good, Sāriputta! It’s good that you understand the detailed meaning of what I’ve said in brief like this.

It’s when a mendicant personally respects the Teacher … And they encourage other mendicants who lack such respect to respect the Teacher. And they praise other mendicants who respect the Teacher at the right time, truthfully and correctly.

They personally respect the teaching …

They personally respect the Saṅgha …

They personally respect the training …

They personally respect immersion …

They are personally easy to admonish …

They personally have good friends, and praise such friendship. And they encourage other mendicants who lack good friends to develop good friendship. And they praise other mendicants who have good friends at the right time, truthfully and correctly.

This is how to understand the detailed meaning of what I said in brief.”

AN 7.36

AN 7.36
A Friend (1st)
Paṭhamamittasutta

“Mendicants, you should associate with a friend who has seven factors. What seven? They give what is hard to give. They do what is hard to do. They endure what is hard to endure. They reveal their secrets to you. They keep your secrets. They don’t abandon you in times of trouble. They don’t look down on you in times of loss. You should associate with a friend who has these seven factors.

A friend gives what is hard to give, and does what’s hard to do. They put up with your harsh words, and with things hard to endure.

They tell you their secrets, and keep your secrets for you. They don’t abandon you in times of trouble, or look down on you in times of loss.

The person in whom these things are found is your friend. If you want to have a friend, you should keep company with such a person.”

AN 7.37

AN 7.37
A Friend (2nd)
Dutiyamittasutta

“Mendicants, when a friend has seven qualities you should associate with, accompany, and attend them, even if they send you away. What seven? They’re likable, agreeable, respected, and admired. They admonish you and they accept admonishment. They speak on deep matters. And they don’t urge you to do bad things. When a friend has these seven qualities you should associate with, accompany, and attend them, even if they send you away.

They’re lovable, respected, and admired, an admonisher who accepts admonishment, speaks on deep matters, and doesn’t urge you to do bad.

The person in whom these things are found is your friend. If you want to have a friend, benevolent and compassionate, you should keep company with such a person, even if they send you away.”

AN 7.38

AN 7.38
Textual Analysis (1st)
Paṭhamapaṭisambhidāsutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities will soon realize the four kinds of textual analysis and live having achieved them with their own insight. What seven?

It’s when a mendicant truly understands: ‘This is mental sluggishness’.

They truly understand internally constricted mind as ‘internally constricted mind’.

They truly understand externally scattered mind as ‘externally scattered mind’.

They know feelings as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away.

They know perceptions as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away.

They know thoughts as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away.

The patterns of qualities—suitable or unsuitable, inferior or superior, or those on the side of dark or bright—are properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom.

A mendicant with these seven qualities will soon realize the four kinds of textual analysis and live having achieved them with their own insight.”

AN 7.39

AN 7.39
Textual Analysis (2nd)
Dutiyapaṭisambhidāsutta

“Mendicants, having seven qualities, Sāriputta realized the four kinds of textual analysis and lives having achieved them with his own insight. What seven?

It’s when Sāriputta truly understood: ‘This is mental sluggishness’.

He truly understood internally constricted mind as ‘internally constricted mind’.

He truly understood externally scattered mind as ‘externally scattered mind’.

He knew feelings, perceptions, and thoughts as they arose, as they remained, and as they went away.

The patterns of qualities—suitable or unsuitable, inferior or superior, or those on the side of dark or bright—were properly grasped, focused on, borne in mind, and comprehended with wisdom.

Having these seven qualities, Sāriputta realized the four kinds of textual analysis and lives having achieved them with his own insight.”

AN 7.40

AN 7.40
Mastery of the Mind (1st)
Paṭhamavasasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities masters their mind and is not mastered by it. What seven? It’s when a mendicant is skilled at immersion, skilled in entering immersion, skilled in remaining in immersion, skilled in emerging from immersion, skilled in gladdening the mind for immersion, skilled in the meditation subjects for immersion, and skilled in projecting the mind purified by immersion. A mendicant with these seven qualities masters their mind and is not mastered by it.”

AN 7.41

AN 7.41
Mastery of the Mind (2nd)
Dutiyavasasutta

“Mendicants, having seven qualities Sāriputta has mastered his mind and is not mastered by it. What seven? Sāriputta is skilled at immersion, skilled in entering immersion, skilled in remaining in immersion, skilled in emerging from immersion, skilled in gladdening the mind for immersion, skilled in the meditation subjects for immersion, and skilled in projecting the mind purified by immersion. Having these seven qualities Sāriputta has mastered his mind and is not mastered by it.”

AN 7.42

AN 7.42
Graduation (1st)
Paṭhamaniddasasutta

Then Venerable Sāriputta robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then it occurred to him, “It’s too early to wander for alms in Sāvatthī. Why don’t I visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?”

Then he went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions and exchanged greetings with the wanderers there. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side.

Now at that time while those wanderers of other religions were sitting together this discussion came up among them, “Reverends, anyone who lives the full and pure spiritual life for twelve years is qualified to be called a ‘graduate mendicant’.”

Sāriputta neither approved nor dismissed that statement of the wanderers of other religions. He got up from his seat, thinking, “I will learn the meaning of this statement from the Buddha himself.”

Then Sāriputta wandered for alms in Sāvatthī. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened, adding:

“Sir, in this teaching and training can we describe a mendicant as a ‘graduate’ solely because they have completed a certain number of years?”

“No, Sāriputta, we cannot. I make known these seven qualifications for graduation after realizing them with my own insight.

What seven? It’s when a mendicant has a keen enthusiasm to undertake the training … to examine the teachings … to get rid of desires … for retreat … to rouse up energy … for mindfulness and alertness … to penetrate theoretically. And they don’t lose these desires in the future. These are the seven qualifications for graduation that I make known after realizing them with my own insight. A mendicant who has these seven qualifications for graduation is qualified to be called a ‘graduate mendicant’. This is so whether they have lived the full and pure spiritual life for twelve years, twenty-four years, thirty-six years, or forty-eight years.”

AN 7.43

AN 7.43
Graduation (2nd)
Dutiyaniddasasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery.

Then Venerable Ānanda robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Kosambī for alms. Then it occurred to him, "It's too early to wander for alms in Kosambī. Why don't I visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?"

Then he went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions and exchanged greetings with the wanderers there. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side.

Now at that time while those wanderers of other religions were sitting together this discussion came up among them, "Reverends, anyone who lives the full and pure spiritual life for twelve years is qualified to be called a 'graduate mendicant'."

Ānanda neither approved nor dismissed that statement of the wanderers of other religions. He got up from his seat, thinking, "I will learn the meaning of this statement from the Buddha himself."

Then Ānanda wandered for alms in Kosambī. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened, adding:

"Sir, in this teaching and training can we describe a mendicant as a 'graduate' solely because they have completed a certain number of years?"

"No, Ānanda, we cannot. These are the seven qualifications for graduation that I make known after realizing them with my own insight.

What seven? It's when someone is faithful, conscientious, prudent, learned, energetic, mindful, and wise. These are the seven qualifications for graduation that I make known after realizing them with my own insight. A mendicant who has these seven qualifications for graduation is qualified to be called a 'graduate mendicant'. This is so whether they have lived the full and pure spiritual life for twelve years, twenty-four years, thirty-six years, or forty-eight years."

AN 7.44

AN 7.44
Planes of Consciousness
Sattaviññāṇaṭṭhitisutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven planes of consciousness. What seven?

There are sentient beings that are diverse in body and diverse in perception, such as human beings, some gods, and some beings in the underworld. This is the first plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that are diverse in body and unified in perception, such as the gods reborn in Brahmā’s Host through the first absorption. This is the second plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that are unified in body and diverse in perception, such as the gods of streaming radiance. This is the third plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that are unified in body and unified in perception, such as the gods replete with glory. This is the fourth plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond perceptions of form. With the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, they have been reborn in the dimension of infinite space. This is the fifth plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond the dimension of infinite space. Aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, they have been reborn in the dimension of infinite consciousness. This is the sixth plane of consciousness.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness. Aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they have been reborn in the dimension of nothingness. This is the seventh plane of consciousness.

These are the seven planes of consciousness.”

AN 7.45

AN 7.45
Prerequisites for Immersion
Samādhiparikkhārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven prerequisites for immersion. What seven? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, and right mindfulness. Unification of mind with these seven factors as prerequisites is what is called noble right immersion ‘with its vital conditions’ and also ‘with its prerequisites’.”

AN 7.46

AN 7.46
Fires (1st)
Paṭhamaaggisutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven fires. What seven? The fires of greed, hate, delusion. The fire of those worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods. A householder’s fire. The fire of those worthy of a religious donation. And a wood fire. These are the seven fires.”

AN 7.47

AN 7.47
Fires (2nd)
Dutiyaaggisutta

Now at that time the brahmin Uggatasarīra had prepared a large sacrifice. Bulls, bullocks, heifers, goats and rams—five hundred of each—had been led to the post for the sacrifice.

Then the brahmin Uggatasarīra went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha, “Mister Gotama, I have heard that kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post is very fruitful and beneficial.”

“I’ve also heard this, brahmin.”

For a second time … and third time Uggatasarīra said to the Buddha, “Mister Gotama, I have heard that kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post is very fruitful and beneficial.”

“I’ve also heard this, brahmin.”

“Then Mister Gotama and I are in total agreement in this matter.”

When he said this, Venerable Ānanda said to Uggatasarīra, “Brahmin, you shouldn’t ask the Buddha in this way. You should ask in this way: ‘Sir, I want to kindle the sacrificial fire and raise the sacrificial post. May the Buddha please advise and instruct me. It will be for my lasting welfare and happiness.’”

Then Uggatasarīra said to the Buddha, “Sir, I want to kindle the sacrificial fire and raise the sacrificial post. May Mister Gotama please advise and instruct me. It will be for my lasting welfare and happiness.”

“Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post, one raises three unskillful knives which ripen and result in suffering. What three? The knives of the body, speech, and mind. Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post one gives rise to the thought: ‘May this many bulls, bullocks, heifers, goats, and rams be slaughtered for the sacrifice!’ Thinking, ‘May I make goodness’, one makes wickedness. Thinking, ‘May I do good’, one does bad. Thinking, ‘May I seek the path to a good rebirth’, one seeks the path to a bad rebirth. Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post one raises this first unskillful mental knife which ripens and results in suffering.

Furthermore, even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post, one says such things as: ‘May this many bulls, bullocks, heifers, goats, and rams be slaughtered for the sacrifice!’ Thinking, ‘May I make goodness’, one makes wickedness.

Thinking, ‘May I do good’, one does bad. Thinking, ‘May I seek the path to a good rebirth’, one seeks the path to a bad rebirth. Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post one raises this second unskillful verbal knife which ripens and results in suffering.

Furthermore, even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post one first personally undertakes preparations for the sacrificial slaughter of bulls, bullocks, heifers, goats, and rams. Thinking, ‘May I make goodness’, one makes wickedness. Thinking, ‘May I do good’, one does bad. Thinking, ‘May I seek the path to a good rebirth’, one seeks the path to a bad rebirth. Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post, one raises this third unskillful bodily knife which ripens and results in suffering. Even before kindling the sacrificial fire and raising the sacrificial post, one raises these three unskillful knives which ripen and result in suffering.

Brahmin, these three fires should be given up and rejected, not cultivated. What three? The fires of greed, hate, and delusion.

And why should the fire of greed be given up and rejected, not cultivated? A greedy person does bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. That’s why the fire of greed should be given up and rejected, not cultivated.

And why should the fire of hate be given up and rejected, not cultivated? A hateful person does bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. That’s why the fire of hate should be given up and rejected, not cultivated.

And why should the fire of delusion be given up and rejected, not cultivated? A deluded person does bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. That’s why the fire of delusion should be given up and rejected, not cultivated. These three fires should be given up and rejected, not cultivated.

Brahmin, you should properly and happily take care of three fires, honoring, respecting, esteeming, and venerating them. What three? The fire of those worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods. The fire of a householder. And the fire of those worthy of a religious donation.

And what is the fire of those worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods? Your mother and father are called the fire of those worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods. Why is that? Since it is from them that you’ve been incubated and produced. So you should properly and happily take care of this fire, honoring, respecting, esteeming, and venerating it.

And what is the fire of a householder? Your children, partners, bondservants, employees, and workers are called a householder’s fire. So you should properly and happily take care of this fire, honoring, respecting, esteeming, and venerating it.

And what is the fire of those worthy of a religious donation? The ascetics and brahmins who avoid intoxication and negligence, are settled in patience and gentleness, and who tame, calm, and extinguish themselves are called the fire of those worthy of a religious donation. So you should properly and happily take care of this fire, honoring, respecting, esteeming, and venerating it. You should properly and happily take care of these three fires, honoring, respecting, esteeming, and venerating them.

But the wood fire, brahmin, should, from time to time, be fanned, watched over with equanimity, extinguished, or put aside."

When he said this, the brahmin Uggatasarīra said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life. Mister Gotama, I now set free these five hundred bulls, five hundred bullocks, five hundred heifers, five hundred goats, and five hundred rams. I give them life! May they eat grass and drink cool water and enjoy a cool breeze!"

AN 7.48

AN 7.48
Perceptions in Brief
Paṭhamasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these seven perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.

What seven? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, and not-self in suffering. These seven perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 7.49

AN 7.49
Perceptions in Detail
Dutiyasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these seven perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What seven? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, and not-self in suffering. These seven perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.

‘When the perception of ugliness is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of ugliness, their mind draws back from sexual intercourse. They shrink away, turn aside, and don’t get drawn into it. And either equanimity or revulsion become stabilized. It’s like a chicken’s feather or a scrap of sinew thrown in a fire. It shrivels up, shrinks, rolls up, and doesn’t stretch out. In the same way, when a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of ugliness, their mind draws back from sexual intercourse. …

If a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of ugliness, but their mind is drawn to sexual intercourse, and not repulsed, they should know: ‘My perception of ugliness is undeveloped. I don’t have any distinction higher than before. I haven’t attained a fruit of development.’ In this way they are aware of the situation. But if a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of ugliness, their mind draws back from sexual intercourse … they should know: ‘My perception of ugliness is well developed. I have realized a distinction higher than before. I have attained a fruit of development.’ In this way they are aware of the situation. ‘When the perception of ugliness is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘When the perception of death is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of death, their mind draws back from desire to be reborn. … That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘When the perception of the repulsiveness of food is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of the repulsiveness of food, their mind draws back from craving for tastes. … That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'When the perception of dissatisfaction with the whole world is developed and cultivated it's very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of dissatisfaction with the whole world, their mind draws back from the world's shiny things. … That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'When the perception of impermanence is developed and cultivated it's very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of impermanence, their mind draws back from material possessions, honors, and fame. … That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'When the perception of suffering in impermanence is developed and cultivated it's very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of suffering in impermanence, they establish a keen perception of the danger of sloth, laziness, slackness, negligence, lack of commitment, and failure to review, like a killer with a drawn sword. … That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'When the perception of not-self in suffering is developed and cultivated it's very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? When a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of not-self in suffering, their mind is rid of I-making, mine-making, and conceit for this conscious body and all external stimuli. It has gone beyond discrimination, and is peaceful and well freed.

If a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of not-self in suffering, but their mind is not rid of I-making, mine-making, and conceit for this conscious body and all external stimuli; nor has it gone beyond discrimination, and is not peaceful or well freed, they should know: 'My perception of not-self in suffering is undeveloped. I don't have any distinction higher than before. I haven't attained a fruit of development.' In this way they are aware of the situation.

But if a mendicant often meditates with a mind reinforced with the perception of not-self in suffering, and their mind is rid of I-making, mine-making, and conceit for this conscious body and all external stimuli; and it has gone beyond discrimination, and is peaceful and well freed, they should know: 'My perception of not-self in suffering is well developed. I have realized a distinction higher than before. I have attained a fruit of development.' In this way they are aware of the situation. 'When the perception of not-self in suffering is developed and cultivated it's very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

These seven perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death."

AN 7.50

AN 7.50
Sex
Methunasutta

Then the brahmin Jānussoṇi went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha, “Does Mister Gotama claim to be celibate?”

“Brahmin, if anyone should be rightly said to live the celibate life unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, full and pure, it’s me.”

“But what, Mister Gotama, is a break, taint, stain, or mar in celibacy?”

“Firstly, an ascetic or brahmin who claims to be perfectly celibate does not mutually engage in sex with a female. However, they consent to being anointed, massaged, bathed, and rubbed by a female. They enjoy it and like it and find it satisfying. This is a break, taint, stain, or mar in celibacy. This is called one who lives the celibate life impurely, yoked by the yoke of sex. They’re not freed from rebirth, old age, death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re not freed from suffering, I say.

Furthermore, an ascetic or brahmin who claims to be perfectly celibate does not mutually engage in sex with a female. Nor do they consent to massage and bathing. However, they giggle and play and have fun with females. …

they gaze into a female’s eyes. …

they listen through a wall or rampart to the sound of females laughing or chatting or singing or crying. …

they recall when they used to laugh, chat, and have fun with females …

they see a householder or their child amusing themselves, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. …

They don’t see a householder or their child amusing themselves, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. However, they live the celibate life wishing to be reborn in one of the orders of gods. They think: ‘By this precept or observance or fervent austerity or spiritual life, may I become one of the gods!’ They enjoy it and like it and find it satisfying. This is a break, taint, stain, or mar in celibacy. This is called one who lives the celibate life impurely, yoked by the yoke of sex. They’re not free from rebirth, old age, death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re not free from suffering, I say.

As long as I saw that these seven sexual yokes—or even one of them—had not been given up in me, I didn't announce my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.

But when I saw that these seven sexual yokes—every one of them—had been given up in me, I announced my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans. Knowledge and vision arose in me: 'My freedom is unshakable; this is my last rebirth; now there'll be no more future lives.'"

When he said this, the brahmin Jānussoṇi said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 7.51

AN 7.51
Yoking and Unyoking
Saṁyogasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an exposition of the teaching on yoking and unyoking. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. … And what is the exposition of the teaching on yoking and unyoking?

A woman focuses on her own femininity: her feminine moves, feminine appearance, feminine ways, feminine desires, feminine voice, and feminine adornment. She’s stimulated by this and takes pleasure in it. So she focuses on the masculinity of others: masculine moves, masculine appearance, masculine ways, masculine desires, masculine voice, and masculine adornment. She’s stimulated by this and takes pleasure in it. So she desires to yoke herself to another. And she desires the pleasure and happiness that comes from such yoking. Sentient beings who relish their femininity are yoked to men. This is how a woman does not transcend her femininity.

A man focuses on his own masculinity: his masculine moves, masculine appearance, masculine ways, masculine desires, masculine voice, and masculine adornment. He’s stimulated by this and takes pleasure in it. So he focuses on the femininity of others: feminine moves, feminine appearance, feminine ways, feminine desires, feminine voice, and feminine adornment. He’s stimulated by this and takes pleasure in it. So he desires to yoke himself to another. And he desires the pleasure and happiness that comes from such yoking. Sentient beings who relish their masculinity are yoked to women. This is how a man does not transcend his masculinity. This is how yoking comes about.

And how does unyoking come about? A woman doesn’t focus on her own femininity: her feminine moves, feminine appearance, feminine ways, feminine desires, feminine voice, and feminine adornment. She isn’t stimulated by this and takes no pleasure in it. So she doesn’t focus on the masculinity of others: masculine moves, masculine appearance, masculine ways, masculine desires, masculine voice, and masculine adornment. She isn’t stimulated by this and takes no pleasure in it. So she doesn’t desire to yoke herself to another. Nor does she desire the pleasure and happiness that comes from such yoking. Sentient beings who do not relish their femininity are not yoked to men. This is how a woman transcends her femininity.

A man doesn’t focus on his own masculinity: masculine moves, masculine appearance, masculine ways, masculine desires, masculine voice, and masculine adornment. He isn’t stimulated by this and takes no pleasure in it. So he doesn’t focus on the femininity of others: feminine moves, feminine appearance, feminine ways, feminine desires, feminine voice, and feminine adornment. He isn’t stimulated by this and takes no pleasure in it. So he doesn’t desire to yoke himself to another. Nor does he desire the pleasure and happiness that comes from such yoking. Sentient beings who do not relish their masculinity are not yoked to women. This is how a man transcends his masculinity. This is how unyoking comes about. This is the exposition of the teaching on yoking and unyoking."

AN 7.52

AN 7.52
A Very Fruitful Gift
Dānamahapphalasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Campā on the banks of the Gaggarā Lotus Pond.

Then several lay followers of Campā went to Venerable Sāriputta, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, it’s been a long time since we’ve heard a Dhamma talk from the Buddha. It would be good if we got to hear a Dhamma talk from the Buddha.”

“Well then, reverends, come on the next sabbath day. Hopefully you’ll get to hear a Dhamma talk from the Buddha.”

“Yes, sir” they replied. Then they rose from their seats, bowed to Sāriputta, and respectfully circled him before leaving.

Then on the next sabbath the lay followers of Campā went to Venerable Sāriputta, bowed, and stood to one side. Then they went together with Sāriputta to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Sāriputta said to the Buddha:

“Sir, could it be that someone gives a gift and it is not very fruitful or beneficial, while someone else gives exactly the same gift and it is very fruitful and beneficial?”

“Indeed it could, Sāriputta.”

“Sir, what is the cause, what is the reason for this?”

“Sāriputta, take the case of a someone who gives a gift as an investment, their mind tied to it, expecting to keep it, thinking ‘I’ll enjoy this in my next life’. They give to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. What do you think, Sāriputta, don’t some people give gifts in this way?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Sāriputta, someone who gives a gift as an investment, when their body breaks up, after death, is reborn in the company of the gods of the Four Great Kings. When that deed, success, fame, and sovereignty is spent they return to this state of existence.

Next, take the case of a someone who gives a gift not as an investment, their mind not tied to it, not expecting to keep it, and not thinking, ‘I’ll enjoy this in my next life’. But they give a gift thinking, ‘It’s good to give’ …

They give a gift thinking, ‘Giving was practiced by my father and my father’s father. It would not be right for me to abandon this family tradition.’ …

They give a gift thinking, ‘I cook, they don’t. It wouldn’t be right for me to not give to them.’ …

They give a gift thinking, ‘The ancient brahmin seers were Aṭṭhaka, Vāmaka, Vāmadeva, Vessāmitta, Yamadaggi, Aṅgīrasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kassapa, and Bhagu. Just as they performed great sacrifices, I will share a gift.’ …

They give a gift thinking, ‘When giving this gift my mind becomes clear, and I become happy and joyful.’ …

They don’t give a gift thinking, ‘When giving this gift my mind becomes clear, and I become happy and joyful.’ But they give a gift thinking, ‘This is an adornment and requisite for the mind.’ They give to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. What do you think, Sāriputta, don’t some people give gifts in this way?”

“Yes, sir.”

“Sāriputta, someone who gives gifts, not for any other reason, but thinking, ‘This is an adornment and requisite for the mind’, when their body breaks up, after death, is reborn among the gods of Brahmā’s Host. When that deed, success, fame, and sovereignty is spent they are a non-returner; they do not return to this state of existence.

This is the cause, this is the reason why someone gives a gift and it is not very fruitful or beneficial, while someone else gives exactly the same gift and it is very fruitful and beneficial.”

AN 7.53

AN 7.53
Nanda's Mother
Nandamātāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the venerables Sāriputta and Mahāmoggallāna were wandering in the Southern Hills together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants. Now at that time the laywoman Veḷukaṇṭakī, Nanda's mother, rose at the crack of dawn and recited the verses of "The Way to the Far Shore".

And at that time the great king Vessavaṇa was on his way from the north to the south on some business. He heard Nanda's Mother reciting, and stood waiting for her to finish.

Then when her recital was over she fell silent. Then, knowing she had finished, Vessavaṇa applauded, saying, "Good, sister! Good, sister!"

"But who might you be, dearest?"

"Sister, I am your brother Vessavaṇa, the great king."

"Good, dearest! Then may my recital of the teaching be my offering to you as my guest."

'Good, sister! And let this also be your offering to me as your guest. Tomorrow, the mendicant Saṅgha headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna will arrive at Veḷukaṇṭa before breakfast. When you've served the Saṅgha, please dedicate the religious donation to me. Then that will also be your offering to me as your guest."

And when the night had passed the lay woman Nanda's Mother had delicious fresh and cooked foods prepared in her own home. Then the Saṅgha of mendicants headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna arrived at Veḷukaṇṭa. Then Nanda's Mother addressed a man, "Please, mister, go to the monastery and announce the time to the Saṅgha, saying: 'Sirs, it's time. The meal is ready in the home of the lady Nanda's Mother.'"

"Yes, Ma'am," that man replied, and he did as she said.

And then the Saṅgha of mendicants headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, went to the home of Nanda's Mother, where they sat on the seats spread out. Then Nanda's Mother served and satisfied them with her own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods.

When Sāriputta had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, Nanda's Mother sat down to one side. Sāriputta said to her, "Nanda's Mother, who told you that the Saṅgha of mendicants was about to arrive?"

“Sir, last night I rose at the crack of dawn and recited the verses of ‘The Way to the Far Shore’, and then I fell silent. Then the great king Vessavaṇa, knowing I had finished, applauded me, ‘Good, sister! Good, sister!’

I asked: ‘But who might you be, dearest?’

‘Sister, I am your brother Vessavaṇa, the great king.’

‘Good, dearest! Then may my recital of the teaching be my offering to you as my guest.’

‘Good, sister! And let this also be your offering to me as your guest. Tomorrow, the mendicant Saṅgha headed by Sāriputta and Moggallāna will arrive at Veḷukaṇṭa before breakfast. When you’ve served the Saṅgha, please dedicate the religious donation to me. Then that will also be your offering to me as your guest.’

And so, sir, may the merit and the flourishing of merit of this gift be for the happiness of the great king Vessavaṇa.”

“It’s incredible, Nanda’s Mother, it’s amazing that you converse face to face with a mighty and illustrious god like the great king Vessavaṇa.”

“Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. I had an only son called Nanda who I loved dearly. The rulers forcibly abducted him on some pretext and had him executed. But I can’t recall getting upset when my boy was under arrest or being arrested, imprisoned or being put in prison, killed or being killed.”

“It’s incredible, Nanda’s Mother, it’s amazing that you purify even the arising of a thought.”

“Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. When my husband passed away he was reborn in one of the realms of spirits. He revealed to me his previous incarnation. But I can’t recall getting upset on that account.”

“It’s incredible, Nanda’s Mother, it’s amazing that you purify even the arising of a thought.”

“Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. Ever since we were both young, and I was given in marriage to my husband, I can’t recall betraying him even in thought, still less in deed.”

“It’s incredible, Nanda’s Mother, it’s amazing that you purify even the arising of a thought.”

“Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. Ever since I declared myself a lay follower, I can’t recall deliberately breaking any precept.”

“It’s incredible, Nanda’s Mother, it’s amazing!”

“Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. Whenever I want, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, I enter and remain in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. As the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, I enter and remain in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. And with the fading away of rapture, I enter and remain in the third absorption, where I meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.' With the giving up of pleasure and pain, and the ending of former happiness and sadness, I enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness."

"It's incredible, Nanda's Mother, it's amazing!"

"Sir, this is not my only incredible and amazing quality; there is another. Of the five lower fetters taught by the Buddha, I don't see any that I haven't given up."

"It's incredible, Nanda's Mother, it's amazing!"

Then Venerable Sāriputta educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired Nanda's Mother with a Dhamma talk, after which he got up from his seat and left.

AN 7.54

AN 7.54
The Undeclared Points
Abyākatasutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, what is the cause, what is the reason why a learned noble disciple has no doubts regarding the undeclared points?”

“Mendicant, it’s due to the cessation of views that a learned noble disciple has no doubts regarding the undeclared points. ‘A realized one still exists after death’: this is a misconception. ‘A realized one no longer exists after death’: this is a misconception. ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death’: this is a misconception. ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death’: this is a misconception. An unlearned ordinary person doesn’t understand views, their origin, their cessation, or the practice that leads to their cessation. And so their views grow. They’re not freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re not freed from suffering, I say.

A learned noble disciple does understand views, their origin, their cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation. And so their views cease. They’re freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re freed from suffering, I say. Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple does not answer: ‘A realized one still exists after death’, ‘A realized one no longer exists after death’, ‘a realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death’, ‘a realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death.’ Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple does not declare the undeclared points. Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple doesn’t shake, tremble, quake, or get nervous regarding the undeclared points.

‘A realized one still exists after death’: this is just about craving. … it’s just about perception … it’s an conceiving … it’s a proliferation … it’s just about grasping … ‘A realized one still exists after death’: this is a regret. ‘A realized one no longer exists after death’: this is a regret. ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death’: this is a regret. ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death’: this is a regret. An unlearned ordinary person doesn’t understand regrets, their origin, their cessation, or the practice that leads to their cessation. And so their regrets grow. They’re not freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re not freed from suffering, I say.

A learned noble disciple does understand regrets, their origin, their cessation, and the practice that leads to their cessation. And so their regrets cease. They’re freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re freed from suffering, I say. Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple does not answer:

‘A realized one still exists after death’ … ‘a realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death.’ Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple does not declare the undeclared points. Knowing and seeing this, a learned noble disciple doesn’t shake, tremble, quake, or get nervous regarding the undeclared points. This is the cause, this is the reason why a learned noble disciple has no doubts regarding the undeclared points.”

AN 7.55

AN 7.55
Places People Are Reborn
Purisagatisutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you seven places people are reborn, and extinguishment by not grasping. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” the mendicants replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what are the seven places people are reborn?

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. It will not be, and it will not be mine. I am giving up what exists, what has come to be.’ They gain equanimity. They’re not attached to life, or to creating a new life. And they see with right wisdom that there is a peaceful state beyond. But they haven’t completely realized that state. They haven’t totally given up the underlying tendencies of conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off would be extinguished. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. It will not be, and it will not be mine. I am giving up what exists, what has come to be.’ They gain equanimity. They’re not attached to life, or to creating a new life. And they see with right wisdom that there is a peaceful state beyond. But they haven’t totally realized that state. They haven’t completely given up the underlying tendencies of conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would be extinguished. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would be extinguished just before landing. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished upon landing. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would be extinguished on landing. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished upon landing.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished without extra effort. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would fall on a little heap of grass or twigs. There it would ignite a fire and produce smoke. But the fire would consume the grass or twigs and become extinguished for lack of fuel. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished without extra effort.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished with extra effort. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would fall on a large heap of grass or twigs. There it would ignite a fire and produce smoke. But the fire would consume the grass or twigs and become extinguished for lack of fuel. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished with extra effort.

Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. It will not be, and it will not be mine. I am giving up what exists, what has come to be.’ They gain equanimity. They’re not attached to life, or to creating a new life. And they see with right wisdom that there is a peaceful state beyond. But they haven’t totally realized that state. They haven’t completely given up the underlying tendencies of conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. Suppose you struck an iron pot that had been heated all day. Any spark that flew off and floated away would fall on a huge heap of grass or twigs. There it would ignite a fire and produce smoke. And after consuming the grass and twigs, the fire would burn up plants and trees until it reached a green field, a roadside, a cliff’s edge, a body of water, or cleared parkland, where it would be extinguished for lack of fuel. In the same way, a mendicant who practices like this … ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. …’ With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. These are the seven places people are reborn.

And what is extinguishment by not grasping? Take a mendicant who practices like this: ‘It might not be, and it might not be mine. It will not be, and it will not be mine. I am giving up what exists, what has come to be.’ They gain equanimity. They’re not attached to life, or to creating a new life. And they see with right wisdom that there is a peaceful state beyond. And they have totally realized that state. They’ve completely given up the underlying tendencies of conceit, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. They’ve realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is called extinguishment by not grasping.

These are the seven places people are reborn, and extinguishment by not grasping.”

AN 7.56

AN 7.56
Tissa the Brahmā
Tissabrahmāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain.

Then, late at night, two glorious deities, lighting up the entire Vulture's Peak, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and stood to one side. One deity said to him, "Sir, these nuns are freed!"

The other deity said to him, "Sir, these nuns are well freed without anything left over!"

This is what those deities said, and the teacher approved. Then those deities, knowing that the teacher approved, bowed and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened.

Now at that time Venerable Mahāmoggallāna was sitting not far from the Buddha. He thought, "Which gods know whether a person has anything left over or not?"

Now, at that time a monk called Tissa had recently passed away and been reborn in a Brahmā realm. There they knew that Tissa the Brahmā was very mighty and powerful.

And then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from the Vulture's Peak and reappeared in that Brahmā realm.

Tissa saw Moggallāna coming off in the distance, and said to him, "Come, my good Moggallāna! Welcome, my good Moggallāna! It's been a long time since you took the opportunity to come here. Sit, my good Moggallāna, this seat is for you."

Moggallāna sat down on the seat spread out. Then Tissa bowed to Moggallāna and sat to one side.

Moggallāna said to him, "Which gods know whether a person has anything left over or not?"

"The gods of Brahmā's Host know this."

"But do all of them know this?"

"No, my good Moggallāna, not all of them.

Those gods of Brahmā's Host who are content with the lifespan of Brahmā, with the beauty, happiness, fame, and sovereignty of Brahmā, and who don't truly understand any escape beyond: they don't know this. But those gods of Brahmā's Host who are not content with the lifespan of Brahmā, with the beauty, happiness, fame, and sovereignty of Brahmā, and who do truly understand a higher escape: they do know this.

Take a mendicant who is freed both ways. The gods know of them: 'This venerable is freed both ways. As long as their body remains they will be seen by gods and humans. But when their body breaks up gods and humans will see them no more.' This too is how those gods know whether a person has anything left over or not.

Take a mendicant who is freed by wisdom. The gods know of them: 'This venerable is freed by wisdom. As long as their body remains they will be seen by gods and humans. But when their body breaks up gods and humans will see them no more.' This too is how those gods know whether a person has anything left over or not.

Take a mendicant who is a direct witness. The gods know of them: 'This venerable is a direct witness. Hopefully this venerable will frequent appropriate lodgings, associate with good friends, and control their faculties. Then they might realize the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life, and live having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.' This too is how those gods know whether a person has anything left over or not.

Take a mendicant who is attained to view. … freed by faith … a follower of teachings. The gods know of them: 'This venerable is a follower of teachings. Hopefully this venerable will frequent appropriate lodgings, associate with good friends, and control their faculties. Then they might realize the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life, and live having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.' This too is how those gods know whether a person has anything left over or not."

Moggallāna approved and agreed with what Tissa the Brahmā said. Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from the Brahmā realm and reappeared on the Vulture's Peak. Then Mahāmoggallāna went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"But Moggallāna, Tissa the Brahmā didn't teach the seventh person, the signless meditator."

"Now is the time, Blessed One! Now is the time, Holy One! May the Buddha teach the seventh person, the signless meditator. The mendicants will listen and remember it."

"Well then, Moggallāna, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Mahāmoggallāna replied. The Buddha said this:

"Moggallāna, take the case of a mendicant who, not focusing on any signs, enters and remains in the signless immersion of the heart. The gods know of them: 'This venerable, not focusing on any signs, enters and remains in the signless immersion of the heart.

Hopefully this venerable will frequent appropriate lodgings, associate with good friends, and control their faculties. Then they might realize the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life, and live having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.' This too is how those gods know whether a person has anything left over or not."

AN 7.57

AN 7.57
General Sīha
Sīhasenāpatisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then General Sīha went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, can you point out a fruit of giving that’s apparent in the present life?”

“Well then, Sīha, I’ll ask you about this in return, and you can answer as you like. What do you think, Sīha? Consider two people. One is faithless, stingy, miserly, and abusive. One is a faithful donor who loves charity. Which do you think the perfected ones will show compassion for first?”

“Why would the perfected ones first show compassion for the person who is faithless, stingy, miserly, and abusive? They’d show compassion first for the faithful donor who loves charity.”

“Which do you think the perfected ones will first approach?” “They’d first approach the faithful donor who loves charity.”

“Which do you think the perfected ones will receive alms from first?” “They’d receive alms first from the faithful donor who loves charity.”

“Which do you think the perfected ones will teach the Dhamma to first?” “They’d first teach the Dhamma to the faithful donor who loves charity.”

“Which do you think would get a good reputation?” “The faithful donor who loves charity would get a good reputation.”

“Which do you think would enter any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics?”

“How could the person who is faithless, stingy, miserly, and abusive enter any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics? The faithful donor who loves charity would enter any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics.”

“When their body breaks up, after death, which do you think would be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm?”

“Why would the person who is faithless, stingy, miserly, and abusive be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm? The faithful donor who loves charity would, when their body breaks up, after death, be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

When it comes to these fruits of giving that are apparent in the present life, I don’t have to rely on faith in the Buddha, for I know them too. I’m a giver, a donor, and the perfected ones show compassion for me first. I’m a giver, and the perfected ones approach me first. I’m a giver, and the perfected ones receive alms from me first. I’m a giver, and the perfected ones teach me Dhamma first. I’m a giver, and I have this good reputation: ‘General Sīha gives, serves, and attends on the Saṅgha.’ I’m a giver, I enter any kind of assembly bold and assured, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. When it comes to these fruits of giving that are apparent in the present life, I don’t have to rely on faith in the Buddha, for I know them too. But when the Buddha says: ‘When a giver’s body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ I don’t know this, so I have to rely on faith in the Buddha.”

“That’s so true, Sīha! That’s so true! When a giver’s body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.”

AN 7.58

AN 7.58
Nothing to Hide
Arakkheyyasutta

“Mendicants, there are four areas where the Realized One has nothing to hide, and three ways he is irreproachable. What are the four areas where the Realized One has nothing to hide?

His bodily behavior is pure. So the Realized One has no bodily misconduct to hide, thinking: ‘Don’t let others find this out about me!’

His verbal behavior is pure. So the Realized One has no verbal misconduct to hide, thinking: ‘Don’t let others find this out about me!’

His mental behavior is pure. So the Realized One has no mental misconduct to hide, thinking: ‘Don’t let others find this out about me!’

His livelihood is pure. So the Realized One has no wrong livelihood to hide, thinking: ‘Don’t let others find this out about me!’

These are the four areas where the Realized One has nothing to hide.

What are the three ways the Realized One is irreproachable?

The Realized One has explained the teaching well. I see no reason for anyone—whether ascetic, brahmin, god, Māra, or Brahmā, or anyone else in the world—to legitimately scold me, saying: ‘For such and such reasons you haven’t explained the teaching well.’ Since I see no such reason, I live secure, fearless, and assured.

I have clearly described the practice that leads to extinguishment for my disciples. Practicing in accordance with this, my disciples realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. I see no reason for anyone—whether ascetic, brahmin, god, Māra, or Brahmā, or anyone else in the world—to legitimately scold me, saying: ‘For such and such reasons you haven’t clearly described the practice that leads to extinguishment for your disciples.’ Since I see no such reason, I live secure, fearless, and assured.

Many hundreds in my assembly of disciples have realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. I see no reason for anyone—whether ascetic, brahmin, god, Māra, or Brahmā, or anyone else in the world—to legitimately scold me, saying: ‘For such and such reasons you don’t have many hundreds of disciples in your following who have realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and who live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.' Since I see no such reason, I live secure, fearless, and assured.

These are the three ways the Realized One is irreproachable.

These are the four areas where the Realized One has nothing to hide, and the three ways he is irreproachable."

AN 7.59

AN 7.59
With Kimbila
Kimilasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kimbilā in the Freshwater Mangrove Wood. Then Venerable Kimbila went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen lack respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, diligence, and hospitality after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does not last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One?”

“Kimbila, it’s when the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen maintain respect and reverence for the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, diligence, and hospitality after the final extinguishment of the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why the true teaching does last long after the final extinguishment of the Realized One.”

AN 7.60

AN 7.60
Seven Qualities
Sattadhammasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities soon realizes the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. They live having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness. What seven? It’s when a mendicant is faithful, ethical, learned, secluded, energetic, mindful, and wise. A mendicant with these seven qualities soon realizes the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. They live having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.”

AN 7.61

AN 7.61
Nodding Off
Pacalāyamānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood.

Now at that time, in the land of the Magadhans near Kallavāḷamutta Village, Venerable Mahāmoggallāna was nodding off while meditating. The Buddha saw him with his clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman. Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood in the land of the Bhaggas and reappeared in front of Mahāmoggallāna near Kallavāḷamutta Village in the land of the Magadhans.

He sat on the seat spread out and said to Mahāmoggallāna, "Are you nodding off, Moggallāna? Are you nodding off?"

"Yes, sir."

"So, Moggallāna, don't focus on or cultivate the perception that you were meditating on when you fell drowsy. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then think about and consider the teaching as you've learned and memorized it, examining it with your mind. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then recite in detail the teaching as you've learned and memorized it. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then pinch your ears and rub your limbs. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then get up from your seat, flush your eyes with water, look around in every direction, and look up at the stars and constellations. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then focus on the perception of light, concentrating on the perception of day: as by day, so by night; as by night, so by day. And so, with an open and unenveloped heart, develop a mind that's full of radiance. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then walk mindfully, concentrating on the perception of continuity, your faculties directed inwards and your mind not scattered outside. It's possible that you'll give up drowsiness in this way.

But what if that doesn't work? Then lie down in the lion's posture—on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other—mindful and aware, and focused on the time of getting up. When you wake, you should get up quickly, thinking: 'I will not live indulging in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing.' That's how you should train.

So you should train like this: 'I will not approach families with my head swollen with vanity.' That's how you should train. What happens if a mendicant approaches families with a head swollen with vanity? Well, families have business to attend to, so people might not notice when a mendicant arrives. In that case the mendicant thinks: 'Who on earth has turned this family against me? It seems they don't like me any more.' And so, because they don't get anything they feel dismayed. Being dismayed, they become restless. Being restless, they lose restraint. And without restraint the mind is far from immersion.

So you should train like this: 'I won't get into arguments.' That's how you should train. When there's an argument, you can expect there'll be lots of talking. When there's lots of talking, people become restless. Being restless, they lose restraint. And without restraint the mind is far from immersion. Moggallāna, I don't praise all kinds of closeness. Nor do I criticize all kinds of closeness. I don't praise closeness with laypeople and renunciates. I do praise closeness with those lodgings that are quiet and still, far from the madding crowd, remote from human settlements, and fit for retreat."

When he said this, Venerable Moggallāna asked the Buddha, "Sir, how do you briefly define a mendicant who is freed through the ending of craving, who has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal, and is best among gods and humans?"

"Take a mendicant who has heard: 'Nothing is worth insisting on.' When a mendicant has heard that nothing is worth insisting on, they directly know all things. Directly knowing all things, they completely understand all things. Completely understanding all things, when they experience any kind of feeling—pleasant, unpleasant, or neutral—they meditate observing impermanence, dispassion, cessation, and letting go in those feelings. Meditating in this way, they don't grasp at anything in the world. Not grasping, they're not anxious. Not being anxious, they personally become extinguished.

They understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.' That's how I briefly define a mendicant who is freed through the ending of craving, who has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal, and is best among gods and humans."

AN 7.62

AN 7.62
Don’t Fear Good Deeds
Mettasutta

“Mendicants, don’t fear good deeds. For ‘good deeds’ is a term for happiness. I recall undergoing for a long time the likable, desirable, and agreeable results of good deeds performed over a long time. I developed a mind of love for seven years. As a result, for seven eons of the cosmos contracting and expanding I didn’t return to this world again. As the cosmos contracted I went to the realm of streaming radiance. As it expanded I was reborn in an empty mansion of Brahmā.

There I was Brahmā, the Great Brahmā, the vanquisher, the unvanquished, the universal seer, the wielder of power. I was Sakka, lord of gods, thirty-six times. Many hundreds of times I was a king, a wheel-turning monarch, a just and principled king. My dominion extended to all four sides, I achieved stability in the country, and I possessed the seven treasures. These were my seven treasures: the wheel, the elephant, the horse, the jewel, the woman, the treasurer, and the counselor as the seventh treasure. I had over a thousand sons who were valiant and heroic, crushing the armies of my enemies. After conquering this land girt by sea, I reigned by principle, without rod or sword.

See the result of good deeds, of skillful deeds, for one seeking happiness. I developed a mind of love for seven years, mendicants. For seven eons of expansion and contraction I didn’t return to this world again.

As the world contracted I went to the realm of streaming radiance. And when it expanded I went to an empty mansion of Brahmā.

Seven times I was a Great Brahmā, and at that time I was the wielder of power. Thirty-six times I was lord of gods, acting as ruler of the gods.

Then I was king, a wheel-turning monarch, ruler of all India. An anointed aristocrat, I was sovereign of all humans.

Without rod or sword, I conquered this land. Through non-violent action I guided it justly.

After ruling this vast territory by means of principle, I was born in a rich family, affluent and wealthy.

It was replete with all sense pleasures, and the seven treasures. This was well taught by the Buddhas, who bring the world together.

This is the cause of greatness by which one is called a lord of the land. I was a majestic king, with lots of property and assets.

Successful and glorious, I was lord of India. Who would not be inspired by this, even someone of dark birth.

Therefore someone who cares for their own welfare, and wants to become the very best they can be, should respect the true teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.”

AN 7.63

AN 7.63
Kinds of Wives
Bhariyāsutta

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, where he sat on the seat spread out.

Now at that time people in Anāthapiṇḍika's home were making a dreadful racket. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, "Householder, what's with the people making that dreadful racket in your home? You'd think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!"

"Sir, that's my daughter-in-law Sujātā. She's been brought here from a wealthy family. She doesn't obey her mother-in-law or father-in-law or her husband. And she does not honor, respect, esteem, and venerate the Buddha."

Then the Buddha addressed Sujātā, saying, "Come, Sujātā."

"Yes, sir," she replied. She went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Sujātā, a man can have seven kinds of wife. What seven? A wife like a killer, a wife like a thief, a wife like a lord, a wife like a mother, a wife like a sister, a wife like a friend, and a wife like a bondservant. These are the kinds of wife that a man can have. Which one of these are you?"

"Sir, I don't understand the detailed meaning of what the Buddha has said in brief. Please teach me this matter so I can understand the detailed meaning."

"Well then, Sujātā, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," she replied. The Buddha said this:

"With a mind full of hate and no kindness, lusting for others, looking down on her husband, she longs to murder him who paid the price for her. A man's wife of this sort is called a wife and a killer.

A woman's husband earns his wealth by applying oneself to a profession, trade, or farming. And even if it's only a little, she wants to take it. A man's wife of this sort is called a wife and a thief.

She's an idle glutton who doesn't want to work. Her words are harsh, fierce, and rude. She rules over him, though he rises early. A man's wife of this sort is called a wife and a lord.

She’s always caring and kind, looking after her husband like a mother her child. She keeps the wealth that he has earned secure. A man’s wife of this sort is called a wife and a mother.

She respects her husband as a younger sister respects her elder. Conscientious, she does what her husband says. A man’s wife of this sort is called a wife and a sister.

She’s delighted to see him, like one reunited with a long-lost friend. She’s well-raised, virtuous, and devoted. A man’s wife of this sort is called a wife and a friend.

She has no anger when threatened with violence by the rod. Without hate or anger, she endures her husband and does what he says. A man’s wife of this sort is called a wife and a bondservant.

The kinds of wives here called killer, thief, and lord; immoral, harsh, and lacking regard for others, when their body breaks up they set course for hell.

But the kinds of wives here called mother, sister, friend, and bondservant; steadfast in their own morality, restrained for a long time, when their body breaks up they set course for a good place.

Sujātā, these are the seven kinds of wife that a man can have. Which one of these are you?”

“Sir, from this day forth may the Buddha remember me as a wife like a bondservant.”

AN 7.64

AN 7.64
Irritable
Kodhanasutta

“Mendicants, these seven things that please and assist an enemy happen to an irritable woman or man. What seven?

Firstly, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they’d become ugly!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have a beautiful enemy. An irritable person, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, is ugly, even though they’re nicely bathed and anointed, with hair and beard dressed, and wearing white clothes. This is the first thing that pleases and assists an enemy which happens to an irritable woman or man.

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they’d sleep badly!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have an enemy who sleeps at ease. An irritable person, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, sleeps badly, even though they sleep on a couch spread with woolen covers—shag-piled, pure white, or embroidered with flowers—and spread with a fine deer hide, with a canopy above and red pillows at both ends. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they don’t get all they need!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have an enemy who gets all they need. When an irritable person, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, gets what they don’t need they think, ‘I’ve got what I need.’ When they get what they need they think, ‘I’ve got what I don’t need.’ When an angry person gets these things that are the exact opposite of what they need, it’s for their lasting harm and suffering. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they weren’t wealthy!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have an enemy who is wealthy. When a person is irritable, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, the rulers seize the legitimate wealth they’ve earned by their efforts, built up with their own hands, gathered by the sweat of their brow. This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they weren’t famous!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have a famous enemy. When a person is irritable, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, any fame they have acquired by diligence falls to dust. This is the fifth thing …

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only they had no friends!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have an enemy with friends. When a person is irritable, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, their friends and colleagues, relatives and kin avoid them from afar. This is the sixth thing …

Furthermore, an enemy wishes for an enemy: ‘If only, when their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell!’ Why is that? Because an enemy doesn’t like to have an enemy who goes to a good place. When a person is irritable, overcome and overwhelmed by anger, they do bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. This is the seventh thing that pleases and assists an enemy which happens to an irritable woman or man.

These are the seven things that please and assist an enemy which happen to an irritable woman or man.

An irritable person is ugly and they sleep badly. When they get what they need, they take it to be what they don’t need.

An angry person kills with body or speech; overcome with anger, they lose their wealth.

Mad with anger, they fall into disgrace. Family, friends, and loved ones avoid an irritable person.

Anger creates harm; anger upsets the mind. That person doesn’t recognize the danger that arises within.

An angry person doesn’t know the good. An angry person doesn’t see the truth. When a person is beset by anger, only blind darkness is left.

An angry person destroys with ease what was hard to build. Afterwards, when the anger is spent, they’re tormented as if burnt by fire.

Their look betrays their sulkiness like a fire’s smoky plume. And when their anger flares up, they make others angry.

They have no conscience or prudence, nor any respectful speech. One overcome by anger has no island refuge anywhere.

The deeds that torment a man are far from those that are good. I’ll explain them now; listen to this, for it is the truth.

An angry person slays their father; their mother, too, they slay. An angry person slays a saint; a normal person, too, they slay.

A man is raised by his mother, who shows him the world. But an angry ordinary person slays even that good woman who gave him life.

Like oneself, all sentient beings hold themselves most dear. But angry people kill themselves all kinds of ways, distraught for many reasons.

Some kill themselves with swords, some, distraught, take poison. Some hang themselves with rope, or fling themselves down a mountain gorge.

When they commit deeds of killing babes and killing themselves, they don’t realize what they do, for anger leads to their downfall.

The snare of death in the form of anger lies hidden in the heart. You should cut it out by self-control, by wisdom, energy, and right ideas.

An astute person should cut out this unskillful thing. And they’d train in the teaching in just the same way, not yielding to sulkiness.

Free of anger, free of despair, free of greed, with no more longing, tamed, having given up anger, the undefiled become fully extinguished.

AN 7.65

AN 7.65
Conscience and Prudence
Hirīottappasutta

“Mendicants, when there is no conscience and prudence, one who lacks conscience and prudence has destroyed a vital condition for sense restraint. When there is no sense restraint, one who lacks sense restraint has destroyed a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is no ethical conduct, one who lacks ethics has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is no conscience and prudence, a person who lacks conscience and prudence has destroyed a vital condition for sense restraint. When there is no sense restraint, one who lacks sense restraint has destroyed a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is no ethical conduct, one who lacks ethics has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

When there is conscience and prudence, a person who has fulfilled conscience and prudence has fulfilled a vital condition for sense restraint. When there is sense restraint, one who has fulfilled sense restraint has fulfilled a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is ethical conduct, one who has fulfilled ethical conduct has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is conscience and prudence, a person who has fulfilled conscience and prudence has fulfilled a vital condition for sense restraint. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 7.66

AN 7.66
The Seven Suns
Sattasūriyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, in Ambapālī's Mango Grove. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, conditions are impermanent. Conditions are unstable. Conditions are unreliable. This is quite enough for you to become disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding all conditions.

Sineru, the king of mountains, is 84,000 leagues long and 84,000 leagues wide. It sinks 84,000 leagues below the ocean and rises 84,000 leagues above it. There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, the rain doesn't fall. For many years, many hundreds, many thousands, many hundreds of thousands of years no rain falls. When this happens, the plants and seeds, the herbs, grass, and big trees wither away and dry up, and are no more. So impermanent are conditions, so unstable, so unreliable. This is quite enough for you to become disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding all conditions.

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a second sun appears. When this happens, the streams and pools wither away and dry up, and are no more. So impermanent are conditions …

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a third sun appears. When this happens, the great rivers—the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—wither away and dry up, and are no more. So impermanent are conditions …

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a fourth sun appears. When this happens, the great lakes from which the rivers originate—the Anotattā, Sīhapapātā, Rathakārā, Kaṇṇamuṇḍā, Kuṇālā, Chaddantā, and Mandākinī—wither away and dry up, and are no more. So impermanent are conditions …

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a fifth sun appears. When this happens, the water in the ocean sinks by a hundred leagues. It sinks by two, three, four, five, six, or even seven hundred leagues. The water that remains in the ocean is only seven palm trees deep. It's six, five, four, three, two, or even one palm tree deep. The water that remains in the ocean is only seven fathoms deep. It's six, five, four, three, two, one or even half a fathom deep. It's waist high, knee high, or even ankle high. It's like the time after the rainy season, when the rain falls heavily and water remains here and there in the cows' hoofprints. In the same way, water in the ocean remains here and there in puddles like cows' hoofprints. When the fifth sun appears there's not even enough water in the great ocean to wet a toe-joint. So impermanent are conditions …

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a sixth sun appears. When this happens, this great earth and Sineru the king of mountains smoke and smolder and give off fumes. It's like when a potter's kiln is first kindled, and it smokes and smolders and gives off fumes. In the same way, this great earth and Sineru the king of mountains smoke and smolder and give off fumes. So impermanent are conditions …

There comes a time when, after a very long period has passed, a seventh sun appears. When this happens, this great earth and Sineru the king of mountains erupt in one burning mass of fire. And as they blaze and burn the flames are swept by the wind as far as the Brahmā realm. Sineru the king of mountains blazes and burns, crumbling as it's overcome by the great fire. And meanwhile, mountain peaks a hundred leagues high, or two, three, four, or five hundred leagues high disintegrate as they burn. And when the great earth and Sineru the king of mountains blaze and burn, no soot or ash is found. It's like when ghee or oil blaze and burn, and neither ashes nor soot are found. In the same way, when the great earth and Sineru the king of mountains blaze and burn, no soot or ash is found. So impermanent are conditions, so unstable are conditions, so unreliable are conditions. This is quite enough for you to become disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding all conditions.

Mendicants, who would ever think or believe that this earth and Sineru, king of mountains, will burn and crumble and be no more, except for one who has seen the truth?

Once upon a time, there was a teacher called Sunetta. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples. He taught them the path to rebirth in the company of Brahmā. Those who totally understood Sunetta's teachings were —when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a good place, the company of Brahmā. Of those who didn't totally understand Sunetta's teachings, some—when their body broke up, after death—were reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. Some were reborn in the company of the Gods Who Love to Imagine, some with the Joyful Gods, some with the Gods of Yāma, some with the Gods of the Thirty-Three, and some with the Gods of the Four Great Kings. Some were reborn in the company of well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders.

Then the teacher Sunetta thought: 'It's not proper for me to be reborn in the next life in exactly the same place as my disciples. Why don't I further develop love?'

Then Sunetta developed love for seven years. Having done so he did not return to this world for seven eons of cosmic expansion and contraction. As the cosmos contracted he went to the realm of streaming radiance. As it expanded he was reborn in an empty mansion of Brahmā. There he was Brahmā, the Great Brahmā, the vanquisher, the unvanquished, the universal seer, the wielder of power. He was Sakka, lord of gods, thirty-six times. Many hundreds of times he was a king, a wheel-turning monarch, a just and principled king. His dominion extended to all four sides, he achieved stability in the country, and he possessed the seven treasures. He had over a thousand sons who were valiant and heroic, crushing the armies of his enemies. After conquering this land girt by sea, he reigned by principle, without rod or sword. Yet even though Sunetta lived so long, he was not exempt from rebirth, old age, and death. He was not exempt from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress, I say.

Why is that? Because of not understanding and not penetrating four things. What four? Noble ethics, immersion, wisdom, and freedom. These noble ethics, immersion, wisdom, and freedom have been understood and comprehended. Craving for continued existence has been cut off; the conduit to rebirth is ended; now there'll be no more future lives."

That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

"Ethics, immersion, and wisdom, and the supreme freedom: these things have been understood by Gotama the renowned.

And so the Buddha, having insight, explained this teaching to the mendicants. The Teacher has made an end of suffering; seeing clearly, he is extinguished."

AN 7.67

AN 7.67
The Simile of the Citadel
Nagaropamasutta

“Mendicants, when a king’s frontier citadel is well provided with seven essentials and gets four kinds of sustenance when needed, without trouble or difficulty, it is then called a king’s frontier citadel that cannot be overrun by external foes and enemies.

With what seven essentials is a citadel well provided?

Firstly, a citadel has a pillar with deep foundations, firmly embedded, imperturbable and unshakable. This is the first essential with which a king’s frontier citadel is well provided, to defend those within and repel those outside.

Furthermore, a citadel has a moat that is deep and wide. This is the second essential …

Furthermore, a citadel has a patrol path that is high and wide. This is the third essential …

Furthermore, a citadel has stores of many weapons, both projectile and hand-held. This is the fourth essential …

Furthermore, many kinds of armed forces reside in a citadel, such as elephant riders, cavalry, charioteers, archers, bannermen, adjutants, food servers, warrior-chiefs, princes, chargers, great warriors, heroes, leather-clad soldiers, and sons of bondservants. This is the fifth essential …

Furthermore, a citadel has a gatekeeper who is astute, competent, and intelligent. He keeps strangers out and lets known people in. This is the sixth essential …

Furthermore, a citadel has a wall that’s high and wide, covered with plaster. This is the seventh essential with which a king’s frontier citadel is well provided, to defend those within and repel those outside.

With these seven essentials a citadel is well provided.

What are the four kinds of sustenance it gets when needed, without trouble or difficulty?

Firstly, a king’s frontier citadel has much hay, wood, and water stored up for the enjoyment, relief, and comfort of those within and to repel those outside.

Furthermore, a king’s frontier citadel has much rice and barley stored up for those within.

Furthermore, a king’s frontier citadel has much food such as sesame, green gram, and black gram stored up for those within.

Furthermore, a king's frontier citadel has much medicine—ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses, and salt—stored up for the enjoyment, relief, and comfort of those within and to repel those outside.

These are the four kinds of sustenance it gets when needed, without trouble or difficulty.

When a king's frontier citadel is well provided with seven essentials and gets four kinds of sustenance when needed, without trouble or difficulty, it is then called a king's frontier citadel that cannot be overrun by external foes and enemies. In the same way, when a noble disciple has seven good qualities, and they get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty, they are then called a noble disciple who cannot be overrun by Māra, who cannot be overrun by the Wicked One. What are the seven good qualities that they have?

Just as a king's frontier citadel has a pillar with deep foundations, firmly embedded, imperturbable and unshakable, to defend those within and repel those outside, in the same way a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One's awakening: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' A noble disciple with faith as their pillar gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the first good quality they have.

Just as a citadel has a moat that is deep and wide, in the same way a noble disciple has a conscience. They're conscientious about bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and conscientious about having any bad, unskillful qualities. A noble disciple with a conscience as their moat gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the second good quality they have.

Just as a citadel has a patrol path that is high and wide, in the same way a noble disciple is prudent. They're prudent when it comes to bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and prudent when it comes to acquiring any bad, unskillful qualities. A noble disciple with prudence as their patrol path gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the third good quality they have.

Just as a citadel has stores of many weapons, both projectile and hand-held, in the same way a noble disciple is very learned. They remember and keep what they've learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. A noble disciple with learning as their weapon gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the fourth good quality they have.

Just as many kinds of armed forces reside in a citadel … in the same way a noble disciple is energetic. They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. A noble disciple with energy as their armed forces gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the fifth good quality they have.

Just as a citadel has a gatekeeper who is astute, competent, and intelligent, who keeps strangers out and lets known people in, in the same way a noble disciple is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. A noble disciple with mindfulness as their gatekeeper gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the sixth good quality they have.

Just as a citadel has a wall that's high and wide, covered with plaster, to defend those within and repel those outside, in the same way a noble disciple is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. A noble disciple with wisdom as their wall gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, they give up the blameworthy and develop the blameless, and they keep themselves pure. This is the seventh good quality they have. These are the seven good qualities that they have.

And what are the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—that they get when they want, without trouble or difficulty? Just as a king's frontier citadel has much hay, wood, and water stored up for the enjoyment, relief, and comfort of those within and to repel those outside, in the same way a noble disciple, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. This is for their own enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

Just as a king's frontier citadel has much rice and barley stored up, in the same way, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, a noble disciple enters and remains in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. This is for their own enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

Just as a king's frontier citadel has much food such as sesame, green gram, and black gram stored up, in the same way with the fading away of rapture, a noble disciple enters and remains in the third absorption, where they meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.' This is for their own enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

Just as a king's frontier citadel has much medicine—ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses, and salt—stored up for the enjoyment, relief, and comfort of those within and to repel those outside, in the same way, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, a noble disciple enters and remains in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. This is for their own enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment. These are the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—which they get when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

When a noble disciple has seven good qualities, and they get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty, they are then called a noble disciple who cannot be overrun by Māra, who cannot be overrun by the Wicked One.”

AN 7.68

AN 7.68
One Who Knows the Teachings
Dhammaññūsutta

“A mendicant with seven qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What seven? It’s when a mendicant knows the teachings, knows the meaning, has self-knowledge, knows moderation, knows the right time, knows assemblies, and knows people high and low.

And how is a mendicant one who knows the teachings? It’s when a mendicant knows the teachings: statements, mixed prose & verse, discussions, verses, inspired exclamations, legends, stories of past lives, amazing stories, and elaborations. If a mendicant did not know these teachings, they would not be called ‘one who knows the teachings’. But because they do know these teachings, they are called ‘one who knows the teachings’. Such is the one who knows the teachings.

And how are they one who knows the meaning? It’s when a mendicant knows the meaning of this or that statement: ‘This is what that statement means; that is what this statement means.’ If a mendicant did not know the meaning of this or that statement, they would not be called ‘one who knows the meaning’. But because they do know the meaning of this or that statement, they are called ‘one who knows the meaning’. Such is the one who knows the teachings and the one who knows the meaning.

And how are they one who has self-knowledge? It’s when a mendicant has self-knowledge: ‘This is the extent of my faith, ethics, learning, generosity, wisdom, and eloquence.’ If a mendicant did not have self-knowledge, they would not be called ‘one who has self-knowledge’. But because they do have self-knowledge, they are called ‘one who has self-knowledge’. Such is the one who knows the teachings, the one who knows the meaning, and the one who has self-knowledge.

And how are they one who knows moderation? It’s when a mendicant knows moderation when receiving robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. If a mendicant did not know moderation, they would not be called ‘one who knows moderation’. But because they do know moderation, they are called ‘one who knows moderation’. Such is the one who knows the teachings, the one who knows the meaning, the one who has self-knowledge, and the one who knows moderation.

And how are they one who knows the right time? It’s when a mendicant knows the right time: ‘This is the time for recitation; this is the time for questioning; this is the time for meditation; this is the time for retreat.’ If a mendicant did not know the right time, they would not be called ‘one who knows the right time’. But because they do know the right time, they are called ‘one who knows the right time’. Such is the one who knows the teachings, the one who knows the meaning, the one who has self-knowledge, the one who knows moderation, and the one who knows the right time.

And how are they one who knows assemblies? It's when a mendicant knows assemblies: 'This is an assembly of aristocrats, of brahmins, of householders, or of ascetics. This one should be approached in this way. This is how to stand, to act, to sit, to speak, or to stay silent when there.' If a mendicant did not know assemblies, they would not be called 'one who knows assemblies'. But because they do know assemblies, they are called 'one who knows assemblies'. Such is the one who knows the teachings, the one who knows the meaning, the one who has self-knowledge, the one who knows moderation, the one who knows the right time, and the one who knows assemblies.

And how are they one who knows people high and low? It's when a mendicant understands people in terms of pairs. Two people: one likes to see the noble ones, one does not. The person who doesn't like to see the noble ones is reprehensible in that respect. The person who does like to see the noble ones is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people like to see the noble ones: one likes to hear the true teaching, one does not. The person who doesn't like to hear the true teaching is reprehensible in that respect. The person who does like to hear the true teaching is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people like to hear the true teaching: one actively listens to the teaching, one does not. The person who doesn't actively listen to the teaching is reprehensible in that respect. The person who does actively listen to the teaching is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people actively listen to the teaching: one remembers the teaching they've heard, one does not. The person who doesn't remember the teaching they've heard is reprehensible in that respect. The person who does remember the teaching they've heard is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people remember the teaching they've heard: one reflects on the meaning of the teachings they have remembered, one does not. The person who does not reflect on the meaning of the teachings they have remembered is reprehensible in that respect. The person who does reflect on the meaning of the teachings they have remembered is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people reflect on the meaning of the teachings they have remembered: one understands the meaning and the teaching and practices accordingly, one understands the meaning and the teaching but does not practice accordingly. The person who understands the meaning and the teaching but does not practice accordingly is reprehensible in that respect. The person who understands the meaning and the teaching and practices accordingly is praiseworthy in that respect.

Two people understand the meaning and the teaching and practice accordingly: one practices to benefit themselves but not others, and one practices to benefit both themselves and others. The person who practices to benefit themselves but not others is reprehensible in that respect. The person who practices to benefit both themselves and others is praiseworthy in that respect.

That’s how a mendicant understands people in terms of pairs.

That’s how a mendicant is one who knows people high and low. A mendicant with these seven qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 7.69

AN 7.69
The Shady Orchid Tree
Pāricchattakasutta

“Mendicants, when the leaves on the Shady Orchid Tree belonging to the Gods of the Thirty-Three turn brown, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the leaves on the Shady Orchid Tree have turned brown! It won’t be long until they fall.’

When the leaves have fallen, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the leaves on the Shady Orchid Tree have fallen. It won’t be long until its foliage starts to regrow.’

When the foliage starts to regrow, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the foliage of the Shady Orchid Tree has started to regrow. It won’t be long until it’s ready to grow flowers and leaves separately.’

When it’s ready to grow flowers and leaves separately, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the Shady Orchid Tree is ready to grow flowers and leaves separately. It won’t be long until buds start to form.’

When the buds start to form, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the buds of the Shady Orchid Tree have started to form. It won’t be long until the buds burst.’

When the buds have burst, the gods are elated. They think: ‘Now the buds of the Shady Orchid Tree have burst. It won’t be long until it fully blossoms.’

When the Shady Orchid Tree of the Gods of the Thirty-Three has fully blossomed, the gods are elated. For four heavenly months they amused themselves at the root of the tree, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. When the Shady Orchid Tree has fully blossomed, its radiance spreads for fifty leagues, while its fragrance wafts for a hundred leagues. Such is the majesty of the Shady Orchid Tree.

In the same way, when a noble disciple plans to go forth from the lay life to homelessness, they’re like the Shady Orchid Tree when its leaves turn brown.

When a noble disciple shaves off their hair and beard, dresses in ocher robes, and goes forth from the lay life to homelessness, they’re like the Shady Orchid Tree when its leaves fall.

When a noble disciple, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected, they’re like the Shady Orchid Tree when its foliage starts to regrow.

When, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, a noble disciple enters and remains in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected, they're like the Shady Orchid Tree when it's ready to grow flowers and leaves separately.

When, with the fading away of rapture, a noble disciple enters and remains in the third absorption, where they meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss', they're like the Shady Orchid Tree when its buds start to form.

When, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, a noble disciple enters and remains in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness, they're like the Shady Orchid Tree when its buds burst.

When a noble disciple realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements, they're like the Shady Orchid tree when it fully blossoms.

At that time the earth gods raise the cry: 'This venerable named so-and-so, from such-and-such village or town, the pupil of the venerable named so-and-so, went forth from the lay life to homelessness. They've realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.'

Hearing the cry of the Earth Gods, the Gods of the Four Great Kings … the Gods of the Thirty-Three … the Gods of Yama … the Joyful Gods … the Gods Who Love to Imagine … the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others … the Gods of Brahmā's Host raise the cry: 'This venerable named so-and-so, from such-and-such village or town, the pupil of the venerable named so-and-so, went forth from the lay life to homelessness. They've realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.' And so at that moment, in that instant, the cry soars up to the Brahmā realm. Such is the majesty of a mendicant who has ended the defilements."

AN 7.70

AN 7.70
Honor
Sakkaccasutta

Then as Venerable Sāriputta was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, “What should a mendicant honor and respect and rely on, to give up the unskillful and develop the skillful?”

Then he thought, “A mendicant should honor and respect and rely on the Teacher … the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … immersion … diligence … A mendicant should honor and respect and rely on hospitality, to give up the unskillful and develop the skillful.”

Then he thought, “These qualities are pure and bright in me. Why don’t I go and tell them to the Buddha? Then these qualities will not only be purified in me, but will be better known as purified. Suppose a man were to acquire a gold coin, pure and bright. They’d think, ‘My gold coin is pure and bright. Why don’t I take it to show the smiths? Then it will not only be purified, but will be better known as purified.’ In the same way, these qualities are pure and bright in me. Why don’t I go and tell them to the Buddha? Then these qualities will not only be purified in me, but will be better known as purified.”

Then in the late afternoon, Sāriputta came out of retreat and went to the Buddha. He bowed, sat down to one side, and told the Buddha of his thoughts while on retreat.

“Good, good, Sāriputta! A mendicant should honor and respect and rely on the Teacher, to give up the unskillful and develop the skillful. A mendicant should honor and respect and rely on the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … immersion … diligence … A mendicant should honor and respect and rely on hospitality, to give up the unskillful and develop the skillful.”

When he said this, Venerable Sāriputta said to the Buddha:

“Sir, this is how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha’s brief statement. It’s quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn’t respect the Teacher to respect the teaching. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher disrespects the teaching.

It’s quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn’t respect the Teacher and the teaching to respect the Saṅgha. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher and the teaching disrespects the Saṅgha.

It’s quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn’t respect the Teacher, the teaching, and the Saṅgha to respect the training. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher, the teaching, and the Saṅgha disrespects the training.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn't respect the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, and the training to respect immersion. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, and the training disrespects immersion.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn't respect the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, and immersion to respect diligence. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, and immersion disrespects diligence.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn't respect the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence to respect hospitality. A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence disrespects hospitality.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who does respect the Teacher to disrespect the teaching. …

A mendicant who respects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence respects hospitality.

It's quite possible for a mendicant who respects the Teacher to respect teaching. …

A mendicant who respects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence respects hospitality.

That's how I understand the detailed meaning of the Buddha's brief statement."

"Good, good, Sāriputta! It's good that you understand the detailed meaning of what I've said in brief like this.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who doesn't respect the Teacher to respect the teaching. …

A mendicant who disrespects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence disrespects hospitality.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who does respect the Teacher to disrespect the teaching. …

A mendicant who respects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence respects hospitality.

It's quite possible for a mendicant who does respect the Teacher to respect the teaching. …

A mendicant who respects the Teacher, the teaching, the Saṅgha, the training, immersion, and diligence respects hospitality.

This is how to understand the detailed meaning of what I said in brief."

AN 7.71

AN 7.71
Committed to Development
Bhāvanāsutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant is not committed to development, they might wish: ‘If only my mind were freed from the defilements by not grasping!’ Even so, their mind is not freed from defilements by not grasping. Why is that? You should say: ‘It’s because they’re undeveloped.’ Undeveloped in what? The four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path.

Suppose there was a chicken with eight or ten or twelve eggs. But she had not properly sat on them to keep them warm and incubated. Even if that chicken might wish: ‘If only my chicks could break out of the eggshell with their claws and beak and hatch safely!’ Still they can’t break out and hatch safely. Why is that? Because she has not properly sat on them to keep them warm and incubated.

In the same way, when a mendicant is not committed to development, they might wish: ‘If only my mind was freed from the defilements by not grasping!’ Even so, their mind is not freed from defilements by not grasping. Why is that? You should say: ‘It’s because they’re undeveloped.’ Undeveloped in what? The four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path.

When a mendicant is committed to development, they might not wish: ‘If only my mind was freed from the defilements by not grasping!’ Even so, their mind is freed from defilements by not grasping. Why is that? You should say: ‘It’s because they are developed.’ Developed in what? The four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path.

Suppose there was a chicken with eight or ten or twelve eggs. And she properly sat on them to keep them warm and incubated. Even if that chicken doesn’t wish: ‘If only my chicks could break out of the eggshell with their claws and beak and hatch safely!’ Still they can break out and hatch safely. Why is that? Because she properly sat on them to keep them warm and incubated.

In the same way, when a mendicant is committed to development, they might not wish: ‘If only my mind was freed from the defilements by not grasping!’ Even so, their mind is freed from defilements by not grasping. Why is that? You should say: ‘It’s because they are developed.’ Developed in what? The four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path.

Suppose a carpenter or their apprentice sees the marks of his fingers and thumb on the handle of his adze. They don't know how much of the handle was worn away today, how much yesterday, and how much previously. They just know what has been worn away. In the same way, when a mendicant is committed to development, they don't know how much of the defilements were worn away today, how much yesterday, and how much previously. They just know what has been worn away.

Suppose there was a sea-faring ship bound together with ropes. For six months they deteriorated in the water. Then in the cold season it was hauled up on dry land, where the ropes were weathered by wind and sun. When the clouds soaked it with rain, the ropes would readily collapse and rot away. In the same way, when a mendicant is committed to development their fetters readily collapse and rot away."

AN 7.72

AN 7.72
The Simile of the Bonfire
Aggikkhandhopamasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants.

While walking along the road, at a certain spot he saw a bonfire burning, blazing, and glowing. Seeing this he left the road, sat at the root of a tree on a seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants, do you see that bonfire burning, blazing, and glowing?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to sit or lie down embracing that bonfire? Or to sit or lie down embracing a girl of the aristocrats or brahmins or householders with soft and tender hands and feet?”

“Sir, it would be much better to sit or lie down embracing a girl of the aristocrats or brahmins or householders with soft and tender hands and feet. For it would be painful to sit or lie down embracing that bonfire.”

“I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man—of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner, though claiming to be one, rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved—to sit or lie down embracing that bonfire. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

But when such an unethical man sits or lies down embracing a girl of the aristocrats or brahmins or householders with soft and tender hands and feet, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he’s reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man twist a tough horse-hair rope around both shins and tighten it so that it cuts through your outer skin, your inner skin, your flesh, sinews, and bones, until it reaches your marrow and keeps pushing? Or to consent to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders bowing down to you?”

“Sir, it would be much better to consent to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders bowing down. For it would be painful to have a strong man twist a tough horse-hair rope around your shins and tighten it so that it cut through the outer skin until it reached the marrow and kept pushing."

"I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man twist a tough horse-hair rope around both shins and tighten it until it reached the marrow and kept pushing. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man consents to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders bowing down, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he's reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man stab you in the chest with a sharp, oiled sword? Or to consent to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders revering you with joined palms?"

"Sir, it would be much better to consent to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders revering you with joined palms. For it would be painful to have a strong man stab you in the chest with a sharp, oiled sword."

"I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man stab him in the chest with a sharp, oiled sword. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man consents to well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders revering him with joined palms, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he's reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man wrap you up in a red-hot sheet of iron, burning, blazing, and glowing? Or to enjoy the use of a robe given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders?"

"Sir, it would be much better to enjoy the use of a robe given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders. For it would be painful to have a strong man wrap you up in a red-hot sheet of iron, burning, blazing, and glowing."

"I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man wrap him up in a red-hot sheet of iron, burning, blazing, and glowing. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man enjoys the use of a robe given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he's reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man force your mouth open with a hot iron spike and shove in a red-hot copper ball, burning, blazing, and glowing, that burns your lips, mouth, tongue, throat, and stomach before coming out below dragging your entrails? Or to enjoy almsfood given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders?"

"Sir, it would be much better to enjoy almsfood given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders. For it would be painful to have a strong man force your mouth open with a hot iron spike and shove in a red-hot copper ball, burning, blazing, and glowing, that burns your lips, mouth, tongue, throat, and stomach before coming out below dragging your entrails."

"I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man force his mouth open with a hot iron spike and shove in a red-hot copper ball, burning, blazing, and glowing, that burns his lips, mouth, tongue, throat, and stomach before coming out below with his entrails. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man enjoy almsfood given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he's reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man grab you by the head or shoulders and make you sit or lie down on red-hot iron bed or seat? Or to enjoy the use of beds and chairs given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders?"

"Sir, it would be much better to enjoy the use of beds and chairs given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders. For it would be painful to have a strong man grab you by the head or shoulders and make you sit or lie down on a red-hot iron bed or seat."

"I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man grab him by the head or shoulders and make him sit or lie down on a red-hot iron bed or seat. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man enjoys the use of beds and seats given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he's reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

What do you think, mendicants? Which is better—to have a strong man grab you, turn you upside down, and shove you in a red-hot copper pot, burning, blazing, and glowing, where you're seared in boiling scum, and swept up and down and round and round. Or to enjoy the use of dwellings given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders?"

"Sir, it would be much better to enjoy the use of dwellings given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders. For it would be painful to have a strong man grab you, turn you upside down, and shove you in a red-hot copper pot, burning, blazing, and glowing, where you're seared in boiling scum, and swept up and down and round and round."

“I declare this to you, mendicants, I announce this to you! It would be better for that unethical man to have a strong man grab him, turn him upside down, and shove him in a red-hot copper pot, burning, blazing, and glowing, where he’s seared in boiling scum, and swept up and down and round and round. Why is that? Because that might result in death or deadly pain. But when his body breaks up, after death, it would not cause him to be reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. But when such an unethical man enjoys the use of dwellings given in faith by well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders, that brings him lasting harm and suffering. When his body breaks up, after death, he’s reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

So you should train like this: ‘Our use of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick shall be of great fruit and benefit for those who offered them. And our going forth will not be wasted, but will be fruitful and fertile.’ That’s how you should train. Considering what is good for yourself, mendicants, is quite enough for you to persist with diligence. Considering what is good for others is quite enough for you to persist with diligence. Considering what is good for both is quite enough for you to persist with diligence.”

That is what the Buddha said. And while this discourse was being spoken, sixty monks spewed hot blood from their mouths. Sixty mendicants resigned the training and returned to a lesser life, saying:

“It’s too hard, Blessed One! It’s just too hard!” And sixty monks were freed from defilements by not grasping.

AN 7.73

AN 7.73
About Sunetta
Sunettasutta

“Once upon a time, mendicants, there was a Teacher called Sunetta. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples. He taught them the path to rebirth in the company of Brahmā. Those lacking confidence in Sunetta were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. Those full of confidence in Sunetta were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

Once upon a time there was a teacher called Mūgapakkha … Aranemi … Kuddālaka … Hatthipāla … Jotipāla … Araka. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples. He taught them the way to rebirth in the company of Brahmā. Those lacking confidence in Araka were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. Those full of confidence in Araka were—when their body broke up, after death—reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.

What do you think, mendicants? If someone with malicious intent were to abuse and insult these seven teachers with their hundreds of followers, would they not create much wickedness?”

“Yes, sir.”

“They would indeed. But someone who abuses and insults a single person accomplished in view with malicious intent creates even more wickedness. Why is that? I say that any injury done by those outside of the Buddhist community does not compare with what is done to one’s own spiritual companions.

So you should train like this: ‘We will have no malicious intent for our spiritual companions.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 7.74

AN 7.74
About Araka
Arakasutta

“Once upon a time, mendicants, there was a Teacher called Araka. He was a religious founder and was free of sensual desire. He had many hundreds of disciples, and he taught them like this: ‘Brahmins, life as a human is short, brief, and fleeting, full of suffering and distress. Be thoughtful and wake up! Do what’s good and lead the spiritual life, for no-one born can escape death.

It’s like a drop of dew on a grass tip. When the sun comes up it quickly evaporates and doesn’t last long. In the same way, life as a human is like a dewdrop. It’s brief and fleeting, full of suffering and distress. Be thoughtful and wake up! Do what’s good and lead the spiritual life, for no-one born can escape death.

It’s like when the rain falls heavily. The bubbles quickly vanish and don’t last long. In the same way, life as a human is like a bubble. …

It’s like a line drawn in water. It vanishes quickly and doesn’t last long. In the same way, life as a human is like a line drawn in water. …

It’s like a mountain river traveling far, flowing fast, carrying all before it. It doesn’t turn back—not for a moment, a second, an instant—but runs, rolls, and flows on. In the same way, life as a human is like a mountain river. …

It’s like a strong man who has formed a glob of spit on the tip of his tongue. He could easily spit it out. In the same way, life as a human is like a glob of spit. …

Suppose there was an iron cauldron that had been heated all day. If you tossed a scrap of meat in, it would quickly vanish and not last long. In the same way, life as a human is like a scrap of meat. …

It’s like a cow being led to the slaughterhouse. With every step she comes closer to the slaughter, closer to death. In the same way, life as a human is like a cow being slaughtered. It’s brief and fleeting, full of suffering and distress. Be thoughtful and wake up! Do what’s good and lead the spiritual life, for no-one born can escape death.’

Now, mendicants, at that time human beings had a life span of 60,000 years. Girls could be married at 500 years of age. And human beings only had six afflictions: cold, heat, hunger, thirst, and the need to defecate and urinate. But even though humans were so long-lived with so few afflictions, Araka still taught in this way: ‘Life as a human is short, brief, and fleeting, full of suffering and distress. Be thoughtful and wake up! Do what’s good and lead the spiritual life, for no-one born can escape death.’

These days it’d be right to say: ‘Life as a human is short, brief, and fleeting, full of suffering and distress. Be thoughtful and wake up! Do what’s good and lead the spiritual life, for no-one born can escape death.’ For these days a long life is a hundred years or a little more. Living for a hundred years, there are just three hundred seasons, a hundred each of the winter, summer, and rains. Living for three hundred seasons, there are just twelve hundred months, four hundred in each of the winter, summer, and rains. Living for twelve hundred months, there are just twenty-four hundred fortnights, eight hundred in each of the winter, summer, and rains. Living for 2,400 fortnights, there are just 36,000 days, 12,000 in each of the summer, winter, and rains. Living for 36,000 days, you just eat 72,000 meals, 24,000 in each of the summer, winter, and rains, including when you’re suckling at the breast, and when you’re prevented from eating.

Things that prevent you from eating include anger, pain, sickness, sabbath, or being unable to get food. So mendicants, for a human being with a hundred years life span I have counted the life span, the limit of the life span, the seasons, the years, the months, the fortnights, the nights, the days, the meals, and the things that prevent them from eating. Out of compassion, I’ve done what a teacher should do who wants what’s best for their disciples. Here are these roots of trees, and here are these empty huts. Practice absorption, mendicants! Don’t be negligent! Don’t regret it later! This is my instruction to you.”

AN 7.75

AN 7.75
An Expert in the Monastic Law (1st)
Paṭhamavinayadharasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.76

AN 7.76
An Expert in the Monastic Law (2nd)
Dutiyavinayadharasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.77

AN 7.77
An Expert in the Monastic Law (3rd)
Tatiyavinayadharasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They’re firm and unfaltering in the training. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.78

AN 7.78
An Expert in the Monastic Law (4th)
Catutthavinayadharasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities is an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.79

AN 7.79
Shines as an Expert in the Monastic Law (1st)
Paṭhamavinayadharasobhanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places; seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.80

AN 7.80
Shines as an Expert in the Monastic Law (2nd)
Dutiyavinayadharasobhanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.81

AN 7.81
Shines as an Expert in the Monastic Law (3rd)
Tatiyavinayadharasobhanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They’re firm and unfaltering in the training. They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.82

AN 7.82
Shines as an Expert in the Monastic Law (4th)
Catutthavinayadharasobhanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law. What seven? They know what is an offense. They know what is not an offense. They know what is a light offense. They know what is a serious offense. They recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. A mendicant with these seven qualities shines as an expert in the monastic law.”

AN 7.83

AN 7.83
The Teacher's Instructions
Satthusāsanasutta

Then Venerable Upāli went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief. When I've heard it, I'll live alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute."

"Upāli, you might know that certain things don't lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. Categorically, you should remember these things as not the teaching, not the training, and not the Teacher's instructions. You might know that certain things do lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. Categorically, you should remember these things as the teaching, the training, and the Teacher's instructions."

AN 7.84

AN 7.84
Settlement of Disciplinary Issues
Adhikaraṇasamathasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven principles for the settlement of any disciplinary issues that might arise. What seven? Resolution face-to-face to be applied. Resolution through recollection to be granted. Resolution because of past insanity to be granted. Acting according to what has been admitted. Majority decision. Further penalty. Covering over as if with grass. These are the seven principles for the settlement of any disciplinary issues that might arise.”

AN 7.85

AN 7.85
A Mendicant
Bhikkhusutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of breaking seven things that you become a mendicant. What seven? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, greed, hate, delusion, and conceit. It’s because of breaking these seven things that you become a mendicant.”

AN 7.86

AN 7.86
An Ascetic
Samaṇasutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of quelling seven things that you become an ascetic …”

AN 7.87

AN 7.87
Brahmin
Brāhmaṇasutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of barring out seven things that you become a brahmin …”

AN 7.88

AN 7.88
Scholar
Sottiyasutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of scouring off seven things that you become a scholar …”

AN 7.89

AN 7.89
Bathed
Nhātakasutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of bathing off seven things that you become a bathed initiate …”

AN 7.90

AN 7.90
A Knowledge Master
Vedagūsutta

“Mendicants, it’s because of knowing seven things that you become a knowledge master …”

AN 7.91

AN 7.91
A Noble One
Ariyasutta

“Mendicants, it’s because seven foes have been nobbled that you become a noble one …”

AN 7.92

AN 7.92
A Perfected One
Arahāsutta

“Mendicants, it’s by being impeccably remote from seven things that you become a perfected one. What seven? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, greed, hate, delusion, and conceit. It’s because of being impeccably remote from these seven things that you become a perfected one.”

AN 7.93

AN 7.93
Bad Qualities
Asaddhammasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven bad qualities. What seven? Someone is faithless, shameless, imprudent, unlearned, lazy, unmindful, and witless. These are the seven bad qualities.”

AN 7.94

AN 7.94
Good Qualities
Saddhammasutta

“Mendicants, there are these seven good qualities. What seven? Someone is faithful, conscientious, prudent, learned, energetic, mindful, and wise. These are the seven good qualities.”

AN 7.95

AN 7.95
Observing Impermanence in the Eye
~

“Mendicants, these seven people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What seven?

First, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in the eye. They perceive impermanence and experience impermanence. Constantly, continually, and without interruption, they apply the mind and fathom with wisdom. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is the first person who is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.

Next, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in the eye. … Their defilements and their life come to an end at exactly the same time. This is the second person who is worthy of offerings …

Next, take a person who meditates observing impermanence in the eye. … With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished between one life and the next. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished upon landing. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished without extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they’re extinguished with extra effort. …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. … This is the seventh person.

These are the seven people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 7.96-614

AN 7.96–614
Observing Suffering in the Eye, Etc.

~

“Mendicants, these seven people are worthy of offerings … What seven?

First, take a person who meditates observing suffering in the eye. … observing not-self in the eye. … observing ending in the eye. … observing vanishing in the eye. … observing fading away in the eye. … observing cessation in the eye. … observing letting go in the eye. …

ear … nose … tongue … body … mind …

sights … sounds … smells … tastes … touches … ideas …

eye consciousness … ear consciousness … nose consciousness … tongue consciousness … body consciousness … mind consciousness …

eye contact … ear contact … nose contact … tongue contact … body contact … mind contact …

feeling born of eye contact … feeling born of ear contact … feeling born of nose contact … feeling born of tongue contact … feeling born of body contact … feeling born of mind contact …

perception of sights … perception of sounds … perception of smells … perception of tastes … perception of touches … perception of ideas …

intention regarding sights … intention regarding sounds … intention regarding smells … intention regarding tastes … intention regarding touches … intention regarding ideas …

craving for sights … craving for sounds … craving for smells … craving for tastes … craving for touches … craving for ideas …

thoughts about sights … thoughts about sounds … thoughts about smells … thoughts about tastes … thoughts about touches … thoughts about ideas …

considerations regarding sights … considerations regarding sounds … considerations regarding smells … considerations regarding tastes … considerations regarding touches … considerations regarding ideas …

meditates observing impermanence in the five aggregates … the aggregate of form … the aggregate of feeling … the aggregate of perception … the aggregate of choices … the aggregate of consciousness … meditates observing suffering … not-self … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … letting go …”

AN 7.615

AN 7.615
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“Mendicants, for insight into greed, seven things should be developed. What seven? The awakening factor of mindfulness … the awakening factor of equanimity. These seven things should be developed for insight into greed.”

AN 7.616

AN 7.616
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)

~

“Mendicants, for insight into greed, seven things should be developed. What seven? The perception of impermanence, the perception of not-self, the perception of ugliness, the perception of drawbacks, the perception of giving up, the perception of fading away, and the perception of cessation. These seven things should be developed for insight into greed.”

AN 7.617

AN 7.617
Untitled Discourse on Greed (3rd)

~

“Mendicants, for insight into greed, seven things should be developed. What seven? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, and not-self in suffering. These seven things should be developed for insight into greed.”

AN 7.618-644

AN 7.618–644
Untitled Discourses on Greed

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … For the letting go of greed, these seven things should be developed.”

AN 7.645-1124

AN 7.645–1124
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for insight into negligence … complete understanding … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of negligence these seven things should be developed.”

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

The Book of the Sevens is finished.

AN 8.1

AN 8.1
The Benefits of Love
Mettāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, you can expect eight benefits when the heart's release by love has been cultivated, developed, and practiced, made a vehicle and a basis, kept up, consolidated, and properly implemented. What eight? You sleep at ease. You wake happily. You don't have bad dreams. Humans love you. Non-humans love you. Deities protect you. You can't be harmed by fire, poison, or blade. If you don't reach any higher, you'll be reborn in a Brahmā realm. You can expect these eight benefits when the heart's release by love has been cultivated, developed, and practiced, made a vehicle and a basis, kept up, consolidated, and properly implemented.

A mindful one who develops limitless love weakens the fetters, seeing the ending of attachments.

Loving just one creature with a hateless heart makes you a true person. Compassionate for all creatures, a noble one creates abundant merit.

The royal potentates conquered this land and traveled around sponsoring sacrifices—horse sacrifice, human sacrifice, the sacrifices of the 'casting of the yoke-pin', the 'royal soma drinking', and the 'unbarred'.

These are not worth a sixteenth part of the mind developed with love, as all the constellations of stars aren't worth a sixteenth part of the moon's light.

Don't kill or cause others to kill, don't conquer or encourage others to conquer, with love for all sentient beings, you'll have no enmity for anyone."

AN 8.2

AN 8.2
Wisdom
Paññāsutta

“Mendicants, there are eight causes and reasons that lead to acquiring the wisdom fundamental to the spiritual life, and to its increase, growth, and full development once it has been acquired. What eight?

It’s when a mendicant lives relying on the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher’s role. And they set up a keen sense of conscience and prudence for them, with warmth and respect. This is the first cause.

When a mendicant lives relying on the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher’s role —with a keen sense of conscience and prudence for them, with warmth and respect—from time to time they go and ask them questions: ‘Why, sir, does it say this? What does that mean?’ Those venerables clarify what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters. This is the second cause.

After hearing that teaching they perfect withdrawal of both body and mind. This is the third cause.

A mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. This is the fourth cause.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. This is the fifth cause.

They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is the sixth cause.

When in the Saṅgha they don’t engage in motley talk or low talk. Either they talk on Dhamma, or they invite someone else to do so, or they respect noble silence. This is the seventh cause.

They meditate observing rise and fall in the five grasping aggregates. ‘Such is form, such is the origin of form, such is the ending of form. Such is feeling, such is the origin of feeling, such is the ending of feeling. Such is perception, such is the origin of perception, such is the ending of perception. Such are choices, such is the origin of choices, such is the ending of choices. Such is consciousness, such is the origin of consciousness, such is the ending of consciousness.' This is the eighth cause.

Their spiritual companions esteem them: 'This venerable lives relying on the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher's role. They set up a keen sense of conscience and prudence for them, with warmth and respect. Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'This venerable lives relying on the Teacher or a spiritual companion in a teacher's role, and from time to time they go and ask them questions … Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'After hearing that teaching they perfect withdrawal of both body and mind. Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'This venerable is ethical … Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'This venerable is very learned, remembering and keeping what they've learned. … Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'This venerable lives with energy roused up … Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'When in the Saṅgha they don't engage in motley talk or low talk. Either they talk on Dhamma, or they invite someone else to do so, or they respect noble silence. Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

'They meditate observing rise and fall in the five grasping aggregates. … Clearly this venerable knows and sees.' This quality also leads to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

These are the eight causes and reasons that lead to acquiring the wisdom fundamental to the spiritual life, and to its increase, growth, and full development once it has been acquired."

AN 8.3

AN 8.3
Disliked (1st)
Paṭhamaappiyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with eight qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What eight? It’s when a mendicant praises the disliked and criticizes the liked. They desire material possessions and honor. They lack conscience and prudence. They have corrupt wishes and wrong view. A mendicant with these eight qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A mendicant with eight qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, and respected and admired. What eight? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t praise the disliked and criticize the liked. They don’t desire material possessions and honor. They have conscience and prudence. They have few desires and right view. A mendicant with these eight qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, and respected and admired.”

AN 8.4

AN 8.4
Disliked (2nd)
Dutiyaappiyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with eight qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired. What eight? It’s when a mendicant desires material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They know neither moderation nor the proper time. Their conduct is impure, they talk a lot, and they insult and abuse their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these eight qualities is disliked and disapproved by their spiritual companions, not respected or admired.

A mendicant with eight qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, and respected and admired. What eight? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t desire material possessions, honor, and to be looked up to. They know moderation and the proper time. Their conduct is pure, they don’t talk a lot, and they don’t insult and abuse their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these eight qualities is liked and approved by their spiritual companions, and respected and admired.”

AN 8.5

AN 8.5
Worldly Conditions (1st)
Paṭhamalokadhammasutta

“Mendicants, the eight worldly conditions revolve around the world, and the world revolves around the eight worldly conditions. What eight? Gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, pleasure and pain. These eight worldly conditions revolve around the world, and the world revolves around these eight worldly conditions.

Gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, and pleasure and pain. These qualities among people are impermanent, transient, and perishable.

An intelligent and mindful person knows these things, seeing that they’re perishable. Desirable things don’t disturb their mind, nor are they repelled by the undesirable.

Both favoring and opposing are cleared and ended, they are no more. Knowing the stainless, sorrowless state, they who have gone beyond rebirth understand rightly.”

AN 8.6

AN 8.6
Worldly Conditions (2nd)
Dutiyalokadhammasutta

“Mendicants, the eight worldly conditions revolve around the world, and the world revolves around the eight worldly conditions. What eight? Gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, pleasure and pain. These eight worldly conditions revolve around the world, and the world revolves around these eight worldly conditions.

An unlearned ordinary person encounters gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, and pleasure and pain. And so does a learned noble disciple. What, then, is the difference between a learned noble disciple and an ordinary unlearned person?”

“Our teachings are rooted in the Buddha. He is our guide and our refuge. Sir, may the Buddha himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Well then, mendicants, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, an unlearned ordinary person encounters gain. They don’t reflect: ‘I’ve encountered this gain. It’s impermanent, suffering, and perishable.’ They don’t truly understand it. They encounter loss … fame … disgrace … blame … praise … pleasure … pain. They don’t reflect: ‘I’ve encountered this pain. It’s impermanent, suffering, and perishable.’ They don’t truly understand it.

So gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, and pleasure and pain occupy their mind. They favor gain and oppose loss. They favor fame and oppose disgrace. They favor praise and oppose blame. They favor pleasure and oppose pain. Being so full of favoring and opposing, they’re not freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re not freed from suffering, I say.

A learned noble disciple encounters gain. They reflect: ‘I’ve encountered this gain. It’s impermanent, suffering, and perishable.’ They truly understand it. They encounter loss … fame … disgrace … blame … praise … pleasure … pain. They reflect: ‘I’ve encountered this pain. It’s impermanent, suffering, and perishable.’ They truly understand it.

So gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, and pleasure and pain don’t occupy their mind. They don’t favor gain or oppose loss. They don’t favor fame or oppose disgrace. They don’t favor praise or oppose blame. They don’t favor pleasure or oppose pain. Having given up favoring and opposing, they’re freed from rebirth, old age, and death, from sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. They’re freed from suffering,

I say. This is the difference between a learned noble disciple and an unlearned ordinary person.

Gain and loss, fame and disgrace, blame and praise, and pleasure and pain. These qualities among people are impermanent, transient, and perishable.

An intelligent and mindful person knows these things, seeing that they're perishable. Desirable things don't disturb their mind, nor are they repelled by the undesirable.

Both favoring and opposing are cleared and ended, they are no more. Knowing the stainless, sorrowless state, they who have gone beyond rebirth understand rightly."

AN 8.7

AN 8.7
Devadatta's Failure
Devadattavipattisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain, not long after Devadatta had left. There the Buddha spoke to the mendicants about Devadatta:

"Mendicants, it's good for a mendicant to check their own failings from time to time. It's good for a mendicant to check the failings of others from time to time. It's good for a mendicant to check their own successes from time to time. It's good for a mendicant to check the successes of others from time to time. Overcome and overwhelmed by eight things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable.

What eight? Overcome and overwhelmed by gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. Overcome and overwhelmed by these eight things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable.

It's good for a mendicant, whenever they encounter it, to overcome gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship.

What advantage does a mendicant gain by overcoming these eight things?

The distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without overcoming these eight things do not arise when they have overcome them. This is the advantage that a mendicant gains by overcoming these eight things.

So, mendicants, you should train like this: 'Whenever we encounter it, we will overcome gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship.' That's how you should train."

AN 8.8

AN 8.8
Uttara on Failure
Uttaravipattisutta

At one time Venerable Uttara was staying on the Saṅkheyyaka Mountain in the Mahisa region near Dhavajālikā. There Uttara addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, it’s good for a mendicant to check their own failings from time to time. It’s good for a mendicant to check the failings of others from time to time. It’s good for a mendicant to check their own successes from time to time. It’s good for a mendicant to check the successes of others from time to time.”

Now at that time the great king Vessavaṇa was on his way from the north to the south on some business. He heard Venerable Uttara teaching this to the mendicants on Saṅkheyyaka Mountain.

Then Vessavaṇa vanished from Saṅkheyyaka Mountain and appeared among the gods of the Thirty-Three, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm. Then he went up to Sakka, lord of gods, and said to him:

“Please sir, you should know this. Venerable Uttara is teaching the mendicants on Saṅkheyyaka Mountain in this way: ‘It’s good for a mendicant from time to time to check their own failings. … the failings of others … their own successes … the successes of others.’”

Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, Sakka vanished from the gods of the Thirty-Three and reappeared on Saṅkheyyaka Mountain in front of Venerable Uttara. Then Sakka went up to Venerable Uttara, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

“Is it really true, sir, that you teach the mendicants in this way: ‘It’s good for a mendicant from time to time to check their own failings … the failings of others … their own successes … the successes of others’?”

“Indeed, lord of gods.”

“Sir, did this teaching come to you from your own inspiration, or was it spoken by the Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha?”

“Well then, lord of gods, I shall give you a simile. For by means of a simile some sensible people understand the meaning of what is said.

Suppose there was a large heap of grain not far from a town or village. And a large crowd were to take away grain with carrying poles, baskets, hip sacks, or their cupped hands. If someone were to go to that crowd and ask them where they got the grain from, how should that crowd rightly reply?"

"Sir, they should reply that they took it from the large heap of grain."

"In the same way, lord of gods, whatever is well spoken is spoken by the Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. Both myself and others rely completely on that when we speak."

"It's incredible, sir, it's amazing! How well this was said by Venerable Uttara! 'Whatever is well spoken is spoken by the Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. Both myself and others rely completely on that when we speak.' At one time, Honorable Uttara, the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain, not long after Devadatta had left. There the Buddha spoke to the mendicants about Devadatta:

'Mendicants, it's good for a mendicant from time to time to check their own failings … the failings of others … their own successes … the successes of others. Overcome and overwhelmed by eight things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. What eight? Overcome and overwhelmed by gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. Overcome and overwhelmed by these eight things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable.

It's good for a mendicant, whenever they encounter it, to overcome gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship.

What advantage does a mendicant gain by overcoming these eight things?

The distressing and feverish defilements that might arise in someone who lives without overcoming these eight things do not arise when they have overcome them. This is the advantage that a mendicant gains by overcoming these eight things.

So you should train like this:

"Whenever we encounter it, we will overcome gain … loss … fame … disgrace … honor … dishonor … corrupt wishes … bad friendship." That's how you should train.'

Honorable Uttara, this exposition of the teaching is not established anywhere in the four assemblies—monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. Sir, learn this exposition of the teaching! Memorize this exposition of the teaching! Remember this exposition of the teaching! Sir, this exposition of the teaching is beneficial and relates to the fundamentals of the spiritual life."

AN 8.9

AN 8.9
Nanda
Nandasutta

“Mendicants, you could rightly call Nanda ‘Gentleman’, ‘strong’, ‘lovely’, and ‘lustful’. How could he live the full and pure spiritual life unless he guards the sense doors, eats in moderation, is dedicated to wakefulness, and has mindfulness and situational awareness?

This is how Nanda guards the sense doors. If he has to look to the east, he wholeheartedly concentrates before looking, thinking: ‘When I look to the east, bad, unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure will not overwhelm me.’ In this way he’s aware of the situation.

If he has to look to the west … north … south … up … down … If he has to survey the intermediate directions, he wholeheartedly concentrates before looking, thinking: ‘When I survey the intermediate directions, bad, unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure will not overwhelm me.’ In this way he’s aware of the situation. This is how Nanda guards the sense doors.

This is how Nanda eats in moderation. Nanda reflects rationally on the food he eats: ‘Not for fun, indulgence, adornment, or decoration, but only to sustain this body, to avoid harm, and to support spiritual practice. In this way, I shall put an end to old discomfort and not give rise to new discomfort, and I will live blamelessly and at ease.’ This is how Nanda eats in moderation.

This is how Nanda is committed to wakefulness. Nanda practices walking and sitting meditation by day, purifying his mind from obstacles. In the evening, he continues to practice walking and sitting meditation. In the middle of the night, he lies down in the lion’s posture—on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other—mindful and aware, and focused on the time of getting up. In the last part of the night, he gets up and continues to practice walking and sitting meditation, purifying his mind from obstacles. This is how Nanda is committed to wakefulness.

This is how Nanda has mindfulness and situational awareness. Nanda knows feelings as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away. He knows perceptions as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away. He knows thoughts as they arise, as they remain, and as they go away. This is how Nanda has mindfulness and situational awareness.

How could Nanda live the full and pure spiritual life unless he guards the sense doors, eats in moderation, is dedicated to wakefulness, and has mindfulness and situational awareness?”

AN 8.10

AN 8.10
Trash
Kāraṇḍavasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Campā on the banks of the Gaggarā Lotus Pond. Now at that time the mendicants accused a mendicant of an offense. The accused mendicant dodged the issue, distracted the discussion with irrelevant points, and displayed annoyance, hate, and bitterness.

Then the Buddha said to the mendicants, “Mendicants, throw this person out! Throw this person out! This person should be shown the door. Why should you be vexed by an outsider?

Take a case where a certain person looks just the same as other good-natured mendicants when going out and coming back, when looking ahead and aside, when bending and extending the limbs, and when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes. That is, so long as the mendicants don’t notice his offense. But when the mendicants notice the offense, they know that he’s a corrupt ascetic, just useless trash. When they realize this they send him away. Why is that? So that he doesn’t corrupt good-natured mendicants.

Suppose in a growing field of barley some bad barley appeared, just useless trash. Its roots, stem, and leaves would look just the same as the healthy barley. That is, so long as the head doesn’t appear. But when the head appears, they know that it’s bad barley, just useless trash. When they realize this they pull it up by the roots and throw it outside the field. Why is that? So that it doesn’t spoil the good barley.

In the same way, take a case where a certain person looks just the same as other good-natured mendicants when going out and coming back, when looking ahead and aside, when bending and extending the limbs, and when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes. That is, so long as the mendicants don’t notice his offense. But when the mendicants notice the offense, they know that he’s a corrupt ascetic, just useless trash. When they realize this they send him away. Why is that? So that he doesn’t corrupt good-natured mendicants.

Suppose that a large heap of grain is being winnowed. The grains that are firm and substantial form a heap on one side. And the grains that are flimsy and insubstantial are blown over to the other side. Then the owners take a broom and sweep them even further away. Why is that? So that it doesn’t spoil the good grain. In the same way, take a case where a certain person looks just the same as other good-natured mendicants when going out and coming back, when looking ahead and aside, when bending and extending the limbs, and when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes. That is, so long as the mendicants don’t notice his offense. But when the mendicants notice the offense, they know that he’s a corrupt ascetic, just useless trash. When they realize this they send him away. Why is that? So that he doesn't corrupt good-natured mendicants.

Suppose a man needs an irrigation gutter for a well. He'd take a sharp axe and enter the wood, where he'd knock various trees with the axe. The trees that were firm and substantial made a cracking sound. But the trees that were rotten inside, decomposing and decayed, made a thud. He'd cut down such a tree at the root, lop off the crown, and thoroughly clear out the insides. Then he'd use it as an irrigation gutter for the well. In the same way, take a case where a certain person looks just the same as other good-natured mendicants when going out and coming back, when looking ahead and aside, when bending and extending the limbs, and when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes. That is, so long as the mendicants don't notice his offense. But when the mendicants notice the offense, they know that he's a corrupt ascetic, just useless trash. When they realize this they send him away. Why is that? So that he doesn't corrupt good-natured mendicants.

By living together, know that they're irritable, with corrupt wishes, offensive, stubborn, and contemptuous, jealous, stingy, and devious.

They speak to people with a voice so smooth, just like an ascetic. But they act in secret, with their bad views and their lack of regard for others.

You should recognize them for what they are: a creep and liar. Then having gathered in harmony, you should expel them.

Throw out the trash! Get rid of the rubbish! And sweep away the scraps—they're not ascetics, they just think they are.

When you've thrown out those of corrupt wishes, of bad behavior and alms-resort, dwell in communion, ever mindful, the pure with the pure. Then in harmony, alert, make an end of suffering."

AN 8.11

AN 8.11
At Verañjā
Verañjasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in Verañjā at the root of a neem tree dedicated to Naḷeru. Then the brahmin Verañja went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, I have heard that the ascetic Gotama doesn’t bow to old brahmins, the elderly and senior, who are advanced in years and have reached the final stage of life; nor does he rise in their presence or offer them a seat. And this is indeed the case, for Mister Gotama does not bow to old brahmins, elderly and senior, who are advanced in years and have reached the final stage of life; nor does he rise in their presence or offer them a seat. This is not appropriate, Mister Gotama.”

“Brahmin, I don’t see anyone in this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—for whom I should bow down or rise up or offer a seat. If the Realized One bowed down or rose up or offered a seat to anyone, their head would explode!”

“Mister Gotama lacks taste.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I lack taste. For the Realized One has given up taste for sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. It’s cut off at the root, made like a palm stump, obliterated, and unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I lack taste. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is indelicate.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m indelicate. For the Realized One has given up delight in sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches. It’s cut off at the root, made like a palm stump, obliterated, and unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m indelicate. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is a teacher of inaction.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m a teacher of inaction. For I teach inaction regarding bad bodily, verbal, and mental conduct, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m a teacher of inaction. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is a teacher of annihilationism.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m a teacher of annihilationism. For I teach the annihilation of greed, hate, and delusion, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m a teacher of annihilationism. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is disgusted.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m disgusted. For I’m disgusted by bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and by attainment of the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m disgusted. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is an exterminator.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m an exterminator. For I teach the extermination of greed, hate, and delusion, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m an exterminator. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is a mortifier.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m a mortifier. For I say that bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind should be mortified. I say that a mortifier is someone who has given up unskillful qualities that should be mortified. They’ve cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they’re unable to arise in the future. The Realized One is someone who has given up unskillful qualities that should be mortified. He has cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they’re unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m a mortifier. But that’s not what you’re talking about.”

“Mister Gotama is immature.”

“There is, brahmin, a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m immature. I say that an immature person is someone who has given up future wombs and rebirth into a new state of existence. They’ve cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they’re unable to arise in the future. The Realized One has given up future wombs and rebirth into a new state of existence. He has cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they’re unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m immature. But that’s not what you’re talking about.

Suppose, brahmin, there was a chicken with eight or ten or twelve eggs. And she properly sat on them to keep them warm and incubated. Now, the chick that is first to break out of the eggshell with its claws and beak and hatch safely: should that be called the eldest or the youngest?”

“Mister Gotama, that should be called the eldest. For it is the eldest among them.”

“In the same way, in this population lost in ignorance, trapped in their shells, I alone have broken open the egg of ignorance and realized the supreme perfect awakening. So, brahmin, I am the eldest and the first in the world.

My energy was roused up and unflagging, my mindfulness was established and lucid, my body was tranquil and undisturbed, and my mind was immersed in samādhi. Quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, I entered and remained in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. As the placing of the mind and keeping it connected were stilled, I entered and remained in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. And with the fading away of rapture, I entered and remained in the third absorption, where I meditated with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, ‘Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.’ With the giving up of pleasure and pain, and the ending of former happiness and sadness, I entered and remained in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness.

When my mind had immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—I extended it toward recollection of past lives. I recollected many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. I remembered: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ And so I recollected my many kinds of past lives, with features and details.

This was the first knowledge, which I achieved in the first watch of the night. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute. This was my first breaking out, like a chick breaking out of the eggshell.

When my mind had immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—I extended it toward knowledge of the death and rebirth of sentient beings. With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, I saw sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. I understood how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds: ‘These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, I saw sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. I understood how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

This was the second knowledge, which I achieved in the middle watch of the night. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute. This was my second breaking out, like a chick breaking out of the eggshell.

When my mind had immersed in samādhi like this—purified, bright, flawless, rid of corruptions, pliable, workable, steady, and imperturbable—I extended it toward knowledge of the ending of defilements. I truly understood: 'This is suffering' … 'This is the origin of suffering' … 'This is the cessation of suffering' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering'. I truly understood: 'These are defilements' … 'This is the origin of defilements' … 'This is the cessation of defilements' … 'This is the practice that leads to the cessation of defilements'. Knowing and seeing like this, my mind was freed from the defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. When it was freed, I knew it was freed.

I understood: 'Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.'

This was the third knowledge, which I achieved in the last watch of the night. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute. This was my third breaking out, like a chick breaking out of the eggshell."

When he said this, the brahmin Verañja said to the Buddha:

"Mister Gotama is the eldest! Mister Gotama is the best! Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! As if he were righting the overturned, or revealing the hidden, or pointing out the path to the lost, or lighting a lamp in the dark so people with clear eyes can see what's there, Mister Gotama has made the teaching clear in many ways. I go for refuge to Mister Gotama, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 8.12

AN 8.12
With Sīha
Sīhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Now at that time several very prominent Licchavis were sitting together at the town hall, praising the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha in many ways.

Now at that time General Sīha, a disciple of the Jains, was sitting in that assembly. He thought, "That Blessed One must without a doubt be a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha. For several very prominent Licchavis are praising the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha in many ways. Why don't I go to see that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!"

Then General Sīha went to the Jain ascetic of the Ñātika clan and said to him, "Sir, I'd like to go to see the ascetic Gotama."

"But Sīha, you believe in the doctrine of action. Why should you go to see the ascetic Gotama, who teaches a doctrine of inaction? For the ascetic Gotama believes in a doctrine of inaction, he teaches inaction, and he guides his disciples in that way."

Then Sīha's determination to go and see the Buddha died down.

For a second time, several prominent Licchavis were sitting together at the town hall, praising the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha in many ways. And for a second time Sīha thought: "Why don't I go to see that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!"

Then General Sīha went to the Jain Ñātika …

Then for a second time Sīha's determination to go and see the Buddha died down.

For a third time, several prominent Licchavis were sitting together at the town hall, praising the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha in many ways. And for a third time Sīha thought, "That Blessed One must without a doubt be a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha. For several very prominent Licchavis are praising the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha in many ways. What can these Jains do to me, whether I take leave of them or not? Why don't I, without taking leave of them, go to see that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!"

Then Sīha, with around five hundred chariots, set out from Vesālī in the middle of the day to see the Buddha. He went by carriage as far as the terrain allowed, then descended and went by foot. Then General Sīha went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, I have heard this: ‘The ascetic Gotama believes in a doctrine of inaction, he teaches inaction, and he guides his disciples in that way.’ I trust those who say this repeat what the Buddha has said, and do not misrepresent him with an untruth? Is their explanation in line with the teaching? Are there any legitimate grounds for rebuke and criticism? For we don’t want to misrepresent the Blessed One.”

“There is, Sīha, a sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in inaction, I teach inaction, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in action, I teach action, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in annihilationism, I teach annihilation, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m disgusted, I teach disgust, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I'm an exterminator, I teach extermination, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m a mortifier, I teach mortification, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m immature, I teach immaturity, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And there is a sense in which you could rightly say that I’m ambitious, I teach ambition, and I guide my disciples in that way.

And what’s the sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in inaction, I teach inaction, and I guide my disciples in that way? I teach inaction regarding bad bodily, verbal, and mental conduct, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I teach inaction.

And what’s the sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in action, I teach action, and I guide my disciples in that way? I teach action regarding good bodily, verbal, and mental conduct, and the many kinds of skillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I teach action.

And what’s the sense in which you could rightly say that I believe in annihilationism, I teach annihilation, and I guide my disciples in that way? I teach the annihilation of greed, hate, and delusion, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I teach annihilationism.

And what’s the sense in which you could rightly say that I’m disgusted, I teach disgust, and I guide my disciples in that way? I’m disgusted by bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and by attainment of the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I’m disgusted.

And what's the sense in which you could rightly say that I'm an exterminator, I teach extermination, and I guide my disciples in that way? I teach the extermination of greed, hate, and delusion, and the many kinds of unskillful things. In this sense you could rightly say that I'm an exterminator.

And what's the sense in which you could rightly say that I'm a mortifier, I teach mortification, and I guide my disciples in that way? I say that bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind should be mortified. I say that a mortifier is someone who has given up unskillful qualities that should be mortified. They've cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they're unable to arise in the future. The Realized One is someone who has given up unskillful qualities that should be mortified. He has cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they're unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I'm a mortifier.

And what's the sense in which you could rightly say that I'm immature, I teach immaturity, and I guide my disciples in that way? I say that an immature person is someone who has given up future wombs and rebirth into a new state of existence. They've cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they're unable to arise in the future. The Realized One has given up future wombs and rebirth into a new state of existence. He has cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so that they're unable to arise in the future. In this sense you could rightly say that I'm immature.

And what's the sense in which you could rightly say that I'm ambitious, I teach ambition, and I guide my disciples in that way? I'm ambitious to offer solace, the highest solace, I teach solace, and I guide my disciples in that way. In this sense you could rightly say that I'm ambitious."

When he said this, General Sīha said to the Buddha, "Excellent, sir! Excellent! From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

"Sīha, you should act after careful consideration. It's good for well-known people such as yourself to act after careful consideration."

"Now I'm even more delighted and satisfied with the Buddha, since he tells me to act after careful consideration. For if the followers of other religions were to gain me as a disciple, they'd carry a banner all over Vesālī, saying: 'General Sīha has become our disciple!' And yet the Buddha tells me to act after careful consideration. For a second time, I go for refuge to the Buddha, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

"For a long time now, Sīha, your family has been a well-spring of support for the Jain ascetics. You should consider giving to them when they come."

"Now I'm even more delighted and satisfied with the Buddha, since he tells me to consider giving to the Jain ascetics when they come. Sir, I have heard that the ascetic Gotama says this: 'Gifts should only be given to me, and to my disciples. Only what is given to me is very fruitful, not what is given to others. Only what is given to my disciples is very fruitful, not what is given to the disciples of others.' Yet the Buddha encourages me to give to the Jain ascetics. Well, sir, we'll know the proper time for that. For a third time, I go for refuge to the Buddha, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

Then the Buddha taught Sīha step by step, with a talk on giving, ethical conduct, and heaven. He explained the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, so sordid and corrupt, and the benefit of renunciation. And when the Buddha knew that Sīha's mind was ready, pliable, rid of hindrances, elated, and confident he explained the special teaching of the Buddhas: suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. Just as a clean cloth rid of stains would properly absorb dye, in that very seat the stainless, immaculate vision of the Dhamma arose in General Sīha: "Everything that has a beginning has an end."

Then Sīha saw, attained, understood, and fathomed the Dhamma. He went beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and became self-assured and independent of others regarding the Teacher's instructions. He said to the Buddha, "Sir, may the Buddha together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow's meal from me." The Buddha consented with silence. Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, Sīha got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

Then Sīha addressed a certain man, "Mister, please find out if there is any meat ready for sale." And when the night had passed General Sīha had delicious fresh and cooked foods prepared in his own home. Then he had the Buddha informed of the time, saying, "Sir, it's time. The meal is ready."

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to Sīha's home, where he sat on the seat spread out, together with the Saṅgha of mendicants. Now at that time many Jain ascetics in Vesālī went from street to street and from square to square, calling out with raised arms: "Today General Sīha has slaughtered a fat calf for the ascetic Gotama's meal. The ascetic Gotama knowingly eats meat prepared specially for him: this is a deed he caused."

Then a certain person went up to Sīha and whispered in his ear, "Please sir, you should know this. Many Jain ascetics in Vesālī are going from street to street and square to square, calling out with raised arms: 'Today General Sīha has slaughtered a fat calf for the ascetic Gotama's meal. The ascetic Gotama knowingly eats meat prepared specially for him: this is a deed he caused.'"

"Enough, sir. For a long time those venerables have wanted to discredit the Buddha, his teaching, and his Saṅgha. They'll never stop misrepresenting the Buddha with their incorrect, hollow, false, untruthful claims. We would never deliberately take the life of a living creature, not even for life's sake."

Then Sīha served and satisfied the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha with his own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods. When the Buddha had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, Sīha sat down to one side. Then the Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired him with a Dhamma talk, after which he got up from his seat and left.

AN 8.13

AN 8.13
A Thoroughbred
Assājānīyasutta

“Mendicants, a fine royal thoroughbred with eight factors is worthy of a king, fit to serve a king, and considered a factor of kingship. What eight?

It’s when a fine royal thoroughbred is well born on both the mother’s and the father’s sides.

He’s bred in the region fine thoroughbreds come from.

Whatever food he’s given, fresh or dry, he eats carefully, without making a mess.

He’s disgusted by sitting or lying down in excrement or urine.

He’s sweet-natured and pleasant to live with, and he doesn’t upset the other horses.

He openly shows his tricks, bluffs, ruses, and feints to his trainer, so the trainer can try to subdue them.

He carries his load, determining: ‘Whether or not the other horses carry their loads, I’ll carry mine.’

He always walks in a straight path. He’s strong, and stays strong even until death.

A fine royal thoroughbred with these eight factors is worthy of a king. …

In the same way, a mendicant with eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What eight?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

Whatever food they’re given, coarse or fine, they eat carefully, without bother.

They're disgusted with bad conduct by way of body, speech, or mind, and by attainment of the many kinds of unskillful things.

They're sweet-natured and pleasant to live with, and they doesn’t upset the other mendicants.

They openly show their tricks, bluffs, ruses, and feints to their sensible spiritual companions, so they can try to subdue them.

They do their training, determining: ‘Whether or not the other mendicants do their training, I’ll do mine.’

They always walk in a straight path. And here the straight path is right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion.

They’re energetic: ‘Gladly, let my skin, sinews, and bones remain! Let the blood and flesh waste away in my body! I will not stop trying until I have achieved what is possible by human strength, energy, and vigor.’

A mendicant with these eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 8.14

AN 8.14
A Wild Colt
Assakhaḷuṅkasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you about eight wild colts and eight defects in horses, and about eight wild people and eight defects in people. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, are the eight wild colts and eight defects in horses?

Firstly, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts back right up and spin the chariot behind them. Some wild colts are like that. This is the first defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts jump back, wreck the hub, and break the triple rod. Some wild colts are like that. This is the second defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts shake the cart-pole off their thigh and trample it. Some wild colts are like that. This is the third defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts take a wrong turn, sending the chariot off track. Some wild colts are like that. This is the fourth defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts rear up and strike out with their fore-legs. Some wild colts are like that. This is the fifth defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts ignore the trainer and the goad, spit out the bit, and go wherever they want. Some wild colts are like that. This is the sixth defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts don’t step forward or turn back but stand right there still as a post. Some wild colts are like that. This is the seventh defect of a horse.

Furthermore, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, some wild colts tuck in their fore-legs and hind-legs, and sit right down on their four legs. Some wild colts are like that. This is the eighth defect of a horse. These are the eight wild colts and the eight defects in horses.

And what are the eight wild people and eight defects in people?

Firstly, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant evades it by saying they don't remember. I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, back right up and spin the chariot behind them. Some wild people are like that. This is the first defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant objects to the accuser: 'What has an incompetent fool like you got to say? How on earth could you imagine you've got something worth saying!' I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, jump back, wreck the hub, and break the triple rod. Some wild people are like that. This is the second defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant retorts to the accuser: 'Well, you've fallen into such-and-such an offense. You should deal with that first.' I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, shake the cart-pole off their thigh and trample it. Some wild people are like that. This is the third defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant dodges the issue, distracts the discussion with irrelevant points, and displays annoyance, hate, and bitterness. I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, take a wrong turn, sending the chariot off track. Some wild people are like that. This is the fourth defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant gesticulates while speaking in the middle of the Saṅgha. I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, rear up and strike out with their fore-legs. Some wild people are like that. This is the fifth defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant ignores the Saṅgha and the accusation and, though still guilty of the offense, they go wherever they want. I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, ignore the trainer and the goad, spit out the bit, and go wherever they want. Some wild people are like that. This is the sixth defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant neither confesses to the offense nor denies it, but frustrates the Saṅgha by staying silent. I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says 'giddyup!' and spurs and goads them on, don't step forward or turn back but stand right there still as a post. Some wild people are like that. This is the seventh defect of a person.

Furthermore, the mendicants accuse a mendicant of an offense. But the accused mendicant says this: 'Why are you venerables making so much of an issue over me? Now I'll resign the training and return to a lesser life.' When they have resigned the training, they say:

‘Well, venerables, are you happy now?’ I say that this person is comparable to the wild colts who, when the trainer says ‘giddyup!’ and spurs and goads them on, tuck in their fore-legs and hind-legs, and sit right down on their four legs. Some wild people are like that. This is the eighth defect of a person.

These are the eight wild people and eight defects in people.”

AN 8.15

AN 8.15
Stains
Malasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight stains. What eight? Not reciting is the stain of hymns. Neglect is the stain of houses. Laziness is the stain of beauty. Negligence is a guard’s stain. Misconduct is a woman’s stain. Stinginess is a giver’s stain. Bad, unskillful qualities are a stain in this world and the next. Worse than any of these is ignorance, the worst stain of all. These are the eight stains.

Not reciting is the stain of hymns. The stain of houses is neglect. Laziness is the stain of beauty. A guard’s stain is negligence.

Misconduct is a woman’s stain. A giver’s stain is stinginess. Bad qualities are a stain in this world and the next. But a worse stain than these is ignorance, the worst stain of all.”

AN 8.16

AN 8.16
Going on a Mission
Dūteyyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with eight qualities is worthy of going on a mission. What eight? It’s a mendicant who learns and educates others. They memorize and remember. They understand and help others understand. They’re skilled at knowing what’s on topic and what isn’t. And they don’t cause quarrels. A mendicant with these eight qualities is worthy of going on a mission.

Having eight qualities Sāriputta is worthy of going on a mission. What eight? He learns and educates others. He memorizes and remembers. He understands and helps others understand. He’s skilled at knowing what’s on topic and what isn’t. And he doesn’t cause quarrels. Having these eight qualities Sāriputta is worthy of going on a mission.

They don’t tremble when arriving at an assembly of fierce debaters. They don’t miss out any words, or conceal the instructions.

Their words aren’t poisoned, and they don’t tremble when questioned. Such a mendicant is worthy of going on a mission.”

AN 8.17

AN 8.17
Catching (1st)
Paṭhamabandhanasutta

“Mendicants, a woman catches a man using eight features. What eight? With weeping, laughing, speaking, appearance, gifts of wildflowers, scents, tastes, and touches. A woman catches a man using these eight features. But those beings who are caught by touch are well and truly caught.”

AN 8.18

AN 8.18
Catching (2nd)
Dutiyabandhanasutta

“Mendicants, a man catches a woman using eight features. What eight? With weeping, laughing, speaking, appearance, gifts of wildflowers, scents, tastes, and touches. A man catches a woman using these eight features. But those beings who are caught by touch are well and truly caught.”

AN 8.19

AN 8.19
With Pahārāda
Pahārādasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in Verañjā at the root of a neem tree dedicated to Naḷeru.

Then Pahārāda, lord of titans, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and stood to one side. The Buddha said to him, “Well, Pahārāda, do the titans love the ocean?”

“Sir, they do indeed.”

“But seeing what incredible and amazing things do the titans love the ocean?”

“Sir, seeing eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean. What eight? The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. This is the first thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean is consistent and doesn’t overflow its boundaries. This is the second thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean doesn’t accommodate a carcass, but quickly carries it to the shore and strands it on the beach. This is the third thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, when they reach the ocean, all the great rivers—that is, the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—lose their names and clans and are simply considered ‘the ocean’. This is the fourth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, for all the world’s streams that reach it, and the rain that falls from the sky, the ocean never empties or fills up. This is the fifth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean has just one taste, the taste of salt. This is the sixth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean is full of many kinds of treasures, such as pearls, gems, beryl, conch, quartz, coral, silver, gold, rubies, and emeralds. This is the seventh thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. This is the eighth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean.

Well, sir, do the mendicants love this teaching and training?”

“They do indeed, Pahārāda.”

“But seeing how many incredible and amazing things do the mendicants love this teaching and training?”

“Seeing eight incredible and amazing things, Pahārāda, the mendicants love this teaching and training. What eight?

The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. In the same way in this teaching and training the penetration to enlightenment comes from gradual training, progress, and practice, not abruptly. This is the first thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean is consistent and doesn’t overflow its boundaries. In the same way, when a training rule is laid down for my disciples they wouldn’t break it even for the sake of their own life. This is the second thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean doesn’t accommodate a carcass, but quickly carries it to the shore and strands it on the beach. In the same way, the Saṅgha doesn’t accommodate a person who is unethical, of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner—though claiming to be one—rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved. But they quickly gather and expel them. Even if such a person is sitting in the middle of the Saṅgha, they’re far from the Saṅgha, and the Saṅgha is far from them. This is the third thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

When they reach the ocean, all the great rivers—that is, the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—lose their names and clans and are simply considered ‘the ocean’. In the same way, when they go forth from the lay life to homelessness, all four classes—aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials—lose their former names and clans and are simply considered ‘Sakyan ascetics’. This is the fourth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

For all the world’s streams that reach it, and the rain that falls from the sky, the ocean never empties or fills up. In the same way, though several mendicants become fully extinguished in the element of extinguishment with nothing left over, the element of extinguishment never empties or fills up. This is the fifth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean has just one taste, the taste of salt. In the same way, this teaching and training has one taste, the taste of freedom. This is the sixth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean is full of many kinds of treasures, such as pearls, gems, beryl, conch, quartz, coral, silver, gold, rubies, and emeralds. In the same way, this teaching and training is full of many kinds of treasures, such as the four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path. This is the seventh thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

Many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. In the same way, great beings live in this teaching and training, and these are those beings. The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The perfected one, and the one practicing for perfection. This is the eighth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things, Pahārāda, the mendicants love this teaching and training."

AN 8.20

AN 8.20
Sabbath
Uposathasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother.

Now, at that time it was the sabbath, and the Buddha was sitting surrounded by the Saṅgha of monks. And then, as the night was getting late, in the first watch of the night, Venerable Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the first watch of the night, and the Saṅgha of monks has been sitting long. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks."

But when he said this, the Buddha kept silent.

For a second time, as the night was getting late, in the middle watch of the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the middle watch of the night, and the Saṅgha of monks has been sitting long. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks."

But for a second time the Buddha kept silent.

For a third time, as the night was getting late, in the last watch of the night, as dawn stirred, bringing joy to the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the last watch of the night and dawn stirs, bringing joy to the night. And the Saṅgha has been sitting long. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks."

"Ānanda, the assembly is not pure."

Then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna thought, "Who is the Buddha talking about?"

Then he focused on comprehending the minds of everyone in the Saṅgha. He saw that unethical person, of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner—though claiming to be one—rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved, sitting in the middle of the Saṅgha.

When he saw him he got up from his seat, went up to him and said, "Get up, reverend. The Buddha has seen you. You can't live in communion with the monks."

But when he said this, that person kept silent.

For a second time

and a third time, he asked that monk to leave.

But for a third time that person kept silent.

Then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna took that person by the arm, ejected him out the gate, and bolted the door. Then he went up to the Buddha, and said to him, “I have ejected that person. The assembly is pure. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks.”

“It’s incredible, Moggallāna, it’s amazing, how that silly man waited to be taken by the arm!”

Then the Buddha said to the monks:

“Now, monks, you should perform the sabbath and recite the monastic code. From this day forth, I will not perform the sabbath or recite the monastic code. It’s impossible, monks, it can’t happen that a Realized One could recite the monastic code in an impure assembly.

Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean. What eight? The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. This is the first thing the titans love about the ocean.

(Tell in full as in the previous discourse.)

Furthermore, many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. This is the eighth thing the titans love about the ocean. Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean.

In the same way, seeing eight incredible and amazing things, mendicants, the mendicants love this teaching and training. What eight?

The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. In the same way in this teaching and training the penetration to enlightenment comes from gradual training, progress, and practice, not abruptly. This is the first thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training. …

Many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. In the same way, great beings live in this teaching and training, and these are those beings. The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The perfected one, and the one practicing for perfection. This is the eighth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things, the mendicants love this teaching and training.”

AN 8.21

AN 8.21
With Ugga of Vesālī
Paṭhamauggasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, you should remember the householder Ugga of Vesālī as someone who has eight amazing and incredible qualities.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Then a certain mendicant robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the householder Ugga of Vesālī, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then Ugga of Vesālī went up to that mendicant, bowed, and sat down to one side. The mendicant said to him:

“Householder, the Buddha declared that you have eight amazing and incredible qualities. What are the eight qualities that he spoke of?”

“Sir, I don’t know what eight amazing and incredible qualities the Buddha was referring to. But these eight amazing and incredible qualities are found in me. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, householder,” replied the mendicant. Ugga of Vesālī said this:

“Sir, when I first saw the Buddha off in the distance, my heart was inspired as soon as I saw him. This is the first incredible and amazing quality found in me.

With confident heart I paid homage to the Buddha. The Buddha taught me step by step, with a talk on giving, ethical conduct, and heaven. He explained the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, so sordid and corrupt, and the benefit of renunciation. And when he knew that my mind was ready, pliable, rid of hindrances, elated, and confident he explained the special teaching of the Buddhas: suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. Just as a clean cloth rid of stains would properly absorb dye, in that very seat the stainless, immaculate vision of the Dhamma arose in me: ‘Everything that has a beginning has an end.’ I saw, attained, understood, and fathomed the Dhamma. I went beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and became self-assured and independent of others regarding the Teacher’s instructions. Right there I went for refuge to the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha. And I undertook the five training rules with celibacy as the fifth. This is the second incredible and amazing quality found in me.

I had four teenage wives. And I went to them and said: ‘Sisters, I’ve undertaken the five training rules with celibacy as fifth. If you wish, you may stay here, enjoy my wealth, and do good deeds. Or you can return to your own families. Or would you prefer if I gave you to another man?’ When I said this, my eldest wife said to me: ‘Master, please give me to such-and-such a man.’ Then I summoned that man. Taking my wife with my left hand and a ceremonial vase with my right, I presented her to that man with the pouring of water. But I can’t recall getting upset while giving away my teenage wife. This is the third incredible and amazing quality found in me.

And though my family has wealth, it’s shared without reserve with ethical people of good character. This is the fourth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

When I pay homage to a mendicant, I do so carefully, not carelessly. This is the fifth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

If that venerable teaches me the Dhamma, I listen carefully, not carelessly. But if they don’t teach me the Dhamma, I teach them. This is the sixth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

It’s not unusual for deities to come to me and announce: ‘Householder, the Buddha’s teaching is well explained!’ When they say this I say to them: ‘The Buddha’s teaching is well explained, regardless of whether or not you deities say so!’ But I don’t recall getting too excited by the fact that the deities come to me, and I have a conversation with them. This is the seventh incredible and amazing quality found in me.

Of the five lower fetters taught by the Buddha, I don’t see any that I haven’t given up. This is the eighth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

These eight amazing and incredible qualities are found in me. But I don’t know what eight amazing and incredible qualities the Buddha was referring to.”

Then that mendicant, after taking almsfood in Ugga of Vesālī’s home, got up from his seat and left. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. He informed the Buddha of all he had discussed with the householder Ugga of Vesālī. The Buddha said:

“Good, good, mendicant! When I declared that the householder Ugga of Vesālī was someone who has eight amazing and incredible qualities, I was referring to the same eight qualities that he rightly explained to you. You should remember the householder Ugga of Vesālī as someone who has these eight amazing and incredible qualities.”

AN 8.22

AN 8.22
With Ugga of Elephant Village
Dutiyauggasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Vajjis at Elephant Village. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, you should remember the householder Ugga of Elephant Village as someone who has eight amazing and incredible qualities.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Then a certain mendicant robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the householder Ugga of Elephant Village, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then Ugga of Elephant Village went up to that mendicant, bowed, and sat down to one side. The mendicant said to him:

“Householder, the Buddha declared that you have eight amazing and incredible qualities. What are the eight qualities that he spoke of?”

“Sir, I don’t know what eight amazing and incredible qualities the Buddha was referring to. But these eight amazing and incredible qualities are found in me. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, householder,” replied the mendicant. Ugga of Elephant Village said this:

“Sir, when I first saw the Buddha off in the distance I was partying in the Dragon’s Park. My heart was inspired as soon as I saw him, and I sobered up. This is the first incredible and amazing quality found in me.

With confident heart I paid homage to the Buddha. The Buddha taught me step by step, with a talk on giving, ethical conduct, and heaven. He explained the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, so sordid and corrupt, and the benefit of renunciation. And when he knew that my mind was ready, pliable, rid of hindrances, elated, and confident he explained the special teaching of the Buddhas: suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. Just as a clean cloth rid of stains would properly absorb dye, in that very seat the stainless, immaculate vision of the Dhamma arose in me: ‘Everything that has a beginning has an end.’ I saw, attained, understood, and fathomed the Dhamma. I went beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and became self-assured and independent of others regarding the Teacher’s instructions. Right there I went for refuge to the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha. And I undertook the five training rules with celibacy as the fifth. This is the second incredible and amazing quality found in me.

I had four teenage wives. And I went to them and said: ‘Sisters, I’ve undertaken the five training rules with celibacy as fifth. If you wish, you may stay here, enjoy my wealth, and do good deeds. Or you can return to your own families. Or would you prefer if I gave you to another man?’ When I said this, my eldest wife said to me: ‘Master, please give me to such-and-such a man.’ Then I summoned that man. Taking my wife with my left hand and a ceremonial vase with my right, I presented her to that man with the pouring of water. But I can’t recall getting upset while giving away my teenage wife. This is the third incredible and amazing quality found in me.

And though my family has wealth, it’s shared without reserve with ethical people of good character. This is the fourth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

When I pay homage to a mendicant, I do so carefully, not carelessly. If that venerable teaches me the Dhamma, I listen carefully, not carelessly. But if they don’t teach me the Dhamma, I teach them. This is the fifth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

It’s not unusual for deities to come to me when the Saṅgha has been invited and announce: ‘Householder, that mendicant is freed both ways. That one is freed by wisdom. That one is a direct witness. That one is attained to view. That one is freed by faith. That one is a follower of teachings. That one is a follower by faith. That one is ethical, of good character. That one is unethical, of bad character.’ But while I’m serving the Saṅgha I don’t recall thinking: ‘Let me give this one just a little, and that one a lot.’ Rather, I give impartially. This is the sixth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

It’s not unusual for deities to come to me and announce: ‘Householder, the Buddha’s teaching is well explained!’ When they say this I say to them: ‘The Buddha’s teaching is well explained, regardless of whether or not you deities say so!’ But I don’t recall getting too excited by the fact that the deities come to me, and I have a conversation with them. This is the seventh incredible and amazing quality found in me.

If I pass away before the Buddha, it wouldn’t be surprising if the Buddha declares of me: ‘The householder Ugga of Elephant Village is bound by no fetter that might return him to this world.’ This is the eighth incredible and amazing quality found in me.

These eight amazing and incredible qualities are found in me. But I don’t know what eight amazing and incredible qualities the Buddha was referring to.”

Then that mendicant, after taking almsfood in Ugga of Elephant Village’s home, got up from his seat and left. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. He informed the Buddha of all he had discussed with the householder Ugga of Elephant Village. The Buddha said:

“Good, good, mendicant! When I declared that the householder Ugga of Elephant Village was someone who has eight amazing and incredible qualities, I was referring to the same eight qualities that he rightly explained to you. You should remember the householder Ugga of Elephant Village as someone who has these eight amazing and incredible qualities.”

AN 8.23

AN 8.23
With Hatthaka (1st)
Paṭhamahatthakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Āḷavī, at the Aggāḷava Tree-shrine. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

“Mendicants, you should remember the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī as someone who has seven amazing and incredible qualities. What seven? He’s faithful, ethical, conscientious, prudent, learned, generous, and wise. You should remember the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī as someone who has these seven amazing and incredible qualities.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Then a certain mendicant robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then Hatthaka went up to that mendicant, bowed, and sat down to one side. The mendicant said to Hatthaka:

“Householder, the Buddha declared that you have seven amazing and incredible qualities. What seven? He said that you’re faithful, ethical, conscientious, prudent, learned, generous, and wise. The Buddha declared that you have these seven amazing and incredible qualities.”

“But sir, I trust that no white-clothed lay people were present?”

“No, there weren’t any white-clothed lay people present.”

“That’s good, sir.”

Then that mendicant, after taking almsfood in Hatthaka of Āḷavī’s home, got up from his seat and left. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him of what he had discussed with the householder Hatthaka. The Buddha said:

“Good, good, mendicant! That gentleman has few wishes. He doesn’t want his own good qualities to be made known to others. Well then, mendicant, you should remember the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī as someone who has this eighth amazing and incredible quality, that is, fewness of wishes.”

AN 8.24

AN 8.24
With Hatthaka (2nd)
Dutiyahatthakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Āḷavī, at the Aggāḷava Tree-shrine. Then the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī, escorted by around five hundred lay followers, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to Hatthaka:

“Hatthaka, you have a large congregation. How do you bring together such a large congregation?”

“Sir, I bring together such a large congregation by using the four ways of being inclusive as taught by the Buddha. When I know that a person can be included by a gift, I include them by giving a gift. When I know that a person can be included by kindly words, I include them by kindly words. When I know that a person can be included by taking care of them, I include them by caring for them. When I know that a person can be included by equality, I include them by treating them equally. But also, sir, my family is wealthy. They wouldn’t think that a poor person was worth listening to in the same way.”

“Good, good, Hatthaka! This is the right way to bring together a large congregation. Whether in the past, future, or present, all those who have brought together a large congregation have done so by using these four ways of being inclusive.”

Then the Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired Hatthaka of Āḷavī with a Dhamma talk, after which he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha before leaving. Then, not long after Hatthaka had left, the Buddha addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, you should remember the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī as someone who has eight amazing and incredible qualities. What eight? He’s faithful, ethical, conscientious, prudent, learned, generous, wise, and has few wishes. You should remember the householder Hatthaka of Āḷavī as someone who has these eight amazing and incredible qualities.”

AN 8.25

AN 8.25
With Mahānāma
Mahānāmasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Then Mahānāma the Sakyan went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, how is a lay follower defined?”

“Mahānāma, when you’ve gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, you’re considered to be a lay follower.”

“But how is an ethical lay follower defined?”

“When a lay follower doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, they’re considered to be an ethical lay follower.”

“But how do we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit themselves, not others?”

“A lay follower is accomplished in faith, but doesn’t encourage others to do the same. They’re accomplished in ethical conduct, but don’t encourage others to do the same. They’re accomplished in generosity, but don’t encourage others to do the same. They like to see the mendicants, but don’t encourage others to do the same. They like to hear the true teaching, but don’t encourage others to do the same. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard, but don’t encourage others to do the same. They examine the meaning of the teachings they’ve memorized, but don’t encourage others to do the same. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly, but they don’t encourage others to do the same. That’s how we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit themselves, not others.”

“But how do we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit both themselves and others?”

“A lay follower is accomplished in faith and encourages others to do the same. They’re accomplished in ethical conduct and encourage others to do the same. They’re accomplished in generosity and encourage others to do the same. They like to see the mendicants and encourage others to do the same. They like to hear the true teaching and encourage others to do the same. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard and encourage others to do the same. They examine the meaning of the teachings they’ve memorized and encourage others to do the same. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly and they encourage others to do the same. That's how we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit both themselves and others."

AN 8.26

AN 8.26
With Jīvaka
Jīvakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha in Jīvaka's Mango Grove. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, how is a lay follower defined?"

"Jīvaka, when you've gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha, you're considered to be a lay follower."

"But how is an ethical lay follower defined?"

"When a lay follower doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, they're considered to be an ethical lay follower."

"But how do we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit themselves, not others?"

"A lay follower is accomplished in faith, but doesn't encourage others to do the same. They're accomplished in ethical conduct … they're accomplished in generosity … they like to see the mendicants … they like to hear the true teaching … they memorize the teachings … they examine the meaning … Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly, but they don't encourage others to do the same. That's how we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit themselves, not others."

"But how do we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit both themselves and others?"

"A lay follower is accomplished in faith and encourages others to do the same. They're accomplished in ethical conduct and encourage others to do the same. They're accomplished in generosity and encourage others to do the same. They like to see the mendicants and encourage others to do the same. They like to hear the true teaching and encourage others to do the same. They readily memorize the teachings they've heard and encourage others to do the same. They examine the meaning of the teachings they've memorized and encourage others to do the same. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly and they encourage others to do the same. That's how we define a lay follower who is practicing to benefit both themselves and others."

AN 8.27

AN 8.27
Powers (1st)
Paṭhamabalasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight powers. What eight? Crying is the power of babies. Anger is the power of females. Weapons are the power of bandits. Authority is the power of rulers. Complaining is the power of fools. Reason is the power of the astute. Reflection is the power of the learned. Patience is the power of ascetics and brahmins. These are the eight powers.”

AN 8.28

AN 8.28
Powers (2nd)
Dutiyabalasutta

Then Venerable Sāriputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Sāriputta, how many powers does a mendicant who has ended the defilements have that qualify them to claim: ‘My defilements have ended’?”

“Sir, a mendicant who has ended the defilements has eight powers that qualify them to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

What eight? Firstly, a mendicant with defilements ended has clearly seen with right wisdom all conditions as truly impermanent. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has clearly seen with right wisdom that sensual pleasures are truly like a pit of glowing coals. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

Furthermore, the mind of a mendicant with defilements ended slants, slopes, and inclines to seclusion. They’re withdrawn, loving renunciation, and they’ve totally done with defiling influences. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has well developed the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has well developed the four bases of psychic power … the five faculties … the seven awakening factors … the noble eightfold path. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’

A mendicant who has ended the defilements has these eight powers that qualify them to claim: ‘My defilements have ended.’”

AN 8.29

AN 8.29
Lost Opportunities
Akkhaṇasutta

“‘Now is the time! Now is the time!’ So says an unlearned ordinary person. But they don’t know whether it’s time or not. Mendicants, there are eight lost opportunities for spiritual practice. What eight?

Firstly, a Realized One has arisen in the world—perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed. He teaches the Dhamma leading to peace, extinguishment, awakening, as proclaimed by the Holy One. But a person has been reborn in hell. This is the first lost opportunity for spiritual practice.

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. But a person has been reborn in the animal realm. This is the second lost opportunity.

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. But a person has been reborn in the ghost realm. This is the third lost opportunity.

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. But a person has been reborn in one of the long-lived orders of gods. This is the fourth lost opportunity.

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. But a person has been reborn in the borderlands, among uneducated foreigners, where monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen do not go. This is the fifth lost opportunity …

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. And a person is reborn in a central country. But they have wrong view and distorted perspective: ‘There’s no meaning in giving, sacrifice, or offerings. There’s no fruit or result of good and bad deeds. There’s no afterlife. There’s no such thing as mother and father, or beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there’s no ascetic or brahmin who is rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describes the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.’ This is the sixth lost opportunity …

Furthermore, a Realized One has arisen in the world. And a person is reborn in a central country. But they’re witless, dull, stupid, and unable to distinguish what is well said from what is poorly said. This is the seventh lost opportunity …

Furthermore, a Realized One has not arisen in the world … So he doesn’t teach the Dhamma leading to peace, extinguishment, awakening, as proclaimed by the Holy One. And a person is reborn in a central country. And they’re wise, bright, clever, and able to distinguish what is well said from what is poorly said. This is the eighth lost opportunity …

There are these eight lost opportunities for spiritual practice.

Mendicants, there is just one opportunity for spiritual practice. What is that one? It's when a Realized One has arisen in the world, perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed. He teaches the Dhamma leading to peace, extinguishment, awakening, as proclaimed by the Holy One. And a person is reborn in a central country. And they're wise, bright, clever, and able to distinguish what is well said from what is poorly said. This is the one opportunity for spiritual practice.

When you've gained the human state, and the true teaching has been so well proclaimed, those who don't seize the moment are wasting their time.

For many wrong times are spoken of, which obstruct the path. Only on rare occasions do Realized Ones arise.

If you find yourself in their presence, so hard to find in the world, and if you've gained a human birth, and the teaching of the Dhamma; that's enough to make an effort, for a person who cares for their own welfare.

How is the true teaching to be understood so that the moment doesn't pass you by? For if you miss your moment you'll grieve when sent to hell.

If you fail to achieve certainty regarding the true teaching you'll regret it for a long time, like a trader who loses a profit.

A man shrouded by ignorance, a failure in the true teaching, will long undergo transmigration through birth and death.

Those who've gained the human state when the true teaching has been so well proclaimed, and have completed what the Teacher taught—or will do so, or are doing so now—have realized the right time in the world for the supreme spiritual life. You should live guarded, ever mindful, not soaked with defilements, among those restrained ones who have practiced the path proclaimed by the Realized One, the Clear-eyed One, and taught by the kinsman of the Sun.

Having cut off all underlying tendencies that follow those drifting in Māra's dominion, they're the ones in this world who've truly crossed over, having reached the ending of defilements."

AN 8.30

AN 8.30
Anuruddha and the Great Thoughts
Anuruddhamahāvitakkasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. And at that time Venerable Anuruddha was staying in the land of the Cetīs in the Eastern Bamboo Park. Then as Anuruddha was in private retreat this thought came to his mind:

"This teaching is for those of few wishes, not those of many wishes. It's for the contented, not those who lack contentment. It's for the secluded, not those who enjoy company. It's for the energetic, not the lazy. It's for the mindful, not the unmindful. It's for those with immersion, not those without immersion. It's for the wise, not the witless."

Then the Buddha knew what Anuruddha was thinking. As easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood in the land of the Bhaggas and reappeared in front of Anuruddha in the Eastern Bamboo Park in the land of the Cetīs, and sat on the seat spread out. Anuruddha bowed to the Buddha and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Good, good, Anuruddha! It's good that you reflect on these thoughts of a great man: 'This teaching is for those of few wishes, not those of many wishes. It's for the contented, not those who lack contentment. It's for the secluded, not those who enjoy company. It's for the energetic, not the lazy. It's for the mindful, not the unmindful. It's for those with immersion, not those without immersion. It's for the wise, not the witless.' Well then, Anuruddha, you should also reflect on the following eighth thought of a great man: 'This teaching is for those who don't enjoy proliferating and don't like to proliferate, not for those who enjoy proliferating and like to proliferate.'

First you'll reflect on these eight thoughts of a great man. Then whenever you want, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, you'll enter and remain in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected.

You'll enter and remain in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected.

You'll enter and remain in the third absorption, where you'll meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.'

Giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, you'll enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness.

First you'll reflect on these eight thoughts of a great man, and you'll get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when you want, without trouble or difficulty. Then as you live contented your rag robe will seem to you like a chest full of garments of different colors seems to a householder or householder's child. It will be for your enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

As you live contented your scraps of almsfood will seem to you like boiled fine rice with the dark grains picked out, served with many soups and sauces seems to a householder or householder's child. It will be for your enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

As you live contented your lodging at the root of a tree will seem to you like a bungalow, plastered inside and out, draft-free, with latches fastened and windows shuttered seems to a householder or householder's child. It will be for your enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

As you live contented your lodging at the root of a tree will seem to you like a couch spread with woolen covers—shag-piled, pure white, or embroidered with flowers—and spread with a fine deer hide, with a canopy above and red pillows at both ends seems to a householder or householder's child. It will be for your enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment.

As you live contented your rancid urine as medicine will seem to you like various medicines—ghee, butter, oil, honey, and molasses—seem to a householder or householder's child. It will be for your enjoyment, relief, and comfort, and for alighting upon extinguishment. Well then, Anuruddha, for the next rainy season residence you should stay right here in the land of the Cetīs in the Eastern Bamboo Park."

"Yes, sir," Anuruddha replied.

After advising Anuruddha like this, the Buddha—as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from the Eastern Bamboo Park in the land of the Cetīs and reappeared in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood in the land of the Bhaggas. He sat on the seat spread out and addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, I will teach you the eight thoughts of a great man. Listen …

And what are the eight thoughts of a great man? This teaching is for those of few wishes, not those of many wishes. It's for the contented, not those who lack contentment. It's for the secluded, not those who enjoy company. It's for the energetic, not the lazy. It's for the mindful, not the unmindful. It's for those with immersion, not those without immersion. It's for the wise, not the witless. It's for those who don't enjoy proliferating and don't like to proliferate, not for those who enjoy proliferating and like to proliferate.

‘This teaching is for those of few wishes, not those of many wishes.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? A mendicant with few wishes doesn’t wish: ‘May they know me as having few wishes!’ When contented, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as contented!’ When secluded, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as secluded!’ When energetic, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as energetic!’ When mindful, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as mindful!’ When immersed, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as immersed!’ When wise, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as wise!’ When not enjoying proliferation, they don’t wish: ‘May they know me as one who doesn’t enjoy proliferating!’ ‘This teaching is for those of few wishes, not those of many wishes.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for the contented, not those who lack contentment.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who’s content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. ‘This teaching is for the contented, not those who lack contentment.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for the secluded, not those who enjoy company.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who lives secluded. But monks, nuns, laymen, laywomen, rulers and their ministers, monastics of other religions and their disciples go to visit them. With a mind slanting, sloping, and inclining to seclusion, withdrawn, and loving renunciation, that mendicant invariably gives each of them a talk emphasizing the topic of dismissal. ‘This teaching is for the secluded, not those who enjoy company.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for the energetic, not the lazy.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. ‘This teaching is for the energetic, not the lazy.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for the mindful, not the unmindful.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who’s mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. ‘This teaching is for the mindful, not the unmindful.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for those with immersion, not those without immersion.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption … second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. ‘This teaching is for those with immersion, not those without immersion.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for the wise, not the witless.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant who’s wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. ‘This teaching is for the wise, not the witless.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘This teaching is for those who don’t enjoy proliferating and don’t like to proliferate, not for those who enjoy proliferating and like to proliferate.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? It’s for a mendicant whose mind is secure, confident, settled, and decided regarding the cessation of proliferation. ‘This teaching is for those who don’t enjoy proliferating and don’t like to proliferate, not for those who enjoy proliferating and like to proliferate.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

Then Anuruddha stayed the next rainy season residence right there in the land of the Cetīs in the Eastern Bamboo Park. And Anuruddha, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And Venerable Anuruddha became one of the perfected. And on the occasion of attaining perfection he recited these verses:

“Knowing my thoughts, the supreme Teacher in the world came to me in a mind-made body, using his psychic power.

He taught me more than I had thought of. The Buddha who loves non-proliferation taught me non-proliferation.

Understanding that teaching, I happily did his bidding. I’ve attained the three knowledges, and have fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.”

AN 8.31

AN 8.31
Giving (1st)
Paṭhamadānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight gifts. What eight? A person might give a gift after insulting the recipient. Or they give out of fear. Or they give thinking, ‘They gave to me.’ Or they give thinking, ‘They’ll give to me.’ Or they give thinking, ‘It’s good to give.’ Or they give thinking, ‘I cook, they don’t. It wouldn’t be right for me to not give to them.’ Or they give thinking, ‘By giving this gift I’ll get a good reputation.’ Or they give thinking, ‘This is an adornment and requisite for the mind.’ These are the eight gifts.”

AN 8.32

AN 8.32
Giving (2nd)
Dutiyadānasutta

“Faith, conscience, and skillful giving are qualities true persons follow. For this, they say, is the path of the gods, which leads to the heavenly realm.”

AN 8.33

AN 8.33
Reasons to Give Dānavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight grounds for giving. What eight? A person might give a gift out of favoritism or hostility or stupidity or cowardice. Or they give thinking, ‘Giving was practiced by my father and my father’s father. It would not be right for me to abandon this family tradition.’ Or they give thinking, ‘After I’ve given this gift, when my body breaks up, after death, I’ll be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ Or they give thinking, ‘When giving this gift my mind becomes clear, and I become happy and joyful.’ Or they give a gift thinking, ‘This is an adornment and requisite for the mind.’ These are the eight grounds for giving.”

AN 8.34

AN 8.34
A Field
Khettasutta

“Mendicants, when a field has eight factors a seed sown in it is not very fruitful or rewarding or productive. What eight factors does it have? It’s when a field has mounds and ditches. It has stones and gravel. It’s salty. It doesn’t have deep furrows. And it’s not equipped with water inlets, water outlets, irrigation channels, and boundaries. When a field has these eight factors a seed sown in it is not fruitful or rewarding or productive.

In the same way, when an ascetic or brahmin has eight factors a gift given to them is not very fruitful or beneficial or splendid or bountiful. What eight factors do they have? It’s when an ascetic or brahmin has wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, and wrong immersion. When an ascetic or brahmin has these eight factors a gift given to them is not very fruitful or beneficial or splendid or bountiful.

When a field has eight factors a seed sown in it is very fruitful and rewarding and productive. What eight factors does it have? It’s when a field doesn’t have mounds and ditches. It doesn’t have stones and gravel. It’s not salty. It has deep furrows. And it’s equipped with water inlets, water outlets, irrigation channels, and boundaries. When a field has these eight factors a seed sown in it is very fruitful and rewarding and productive.

In the same way, when an ascetic or brahmin has eight factors a gift given to them is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. What eight factors do they have? It’s when an ascetic or brahmin has right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. When an ascetic or brahmin has these eight factors a gift given to them is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful.

When the field is excellent, and the seed sown in it is excellent, and the rainfall is excellent, the crop of grain will be excellent.

Its health is excellent, its growth is excellent, its maturation is excellent, and its fruit is excellent.

So too, when you give excellent food to those of excellent ethics, it leads to many excellences, for what you did was excellent.

So if a person wants excellence, let them excel in this. You should frequent those with excellent wisdom, so that your own excellence will flourish.

Excelling in knowledge and conduct, and having excellence of mind, you perform excellent deeds, and gain excellent benefits.

Truly knowing the world, and having attained excellence of view, one who excels in mind proceeds, relying on excellence in the path.

Shaking off all stains, and attaining the excellence of extinguishment, you're freed from all sufferings: this is complete excellence."

AN 8.35

AN 8.35
Rebirth by Giving Dānūpapattisutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight rebirths by giving. What eight?

First, someone gives to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. Whatever they give they expect back. They see a well-to-do aristocrat or brahmin or householder amusing themselves, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. It occurs to them: ‘If only, when my body breaks up, after death, I would be reborn in the company of well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders!’ They settle on that idea, concentrate on it and develop it. As they’ve settled for less and not developed further, their idea leads to rebirth there. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of well-to-do aristocrats or brahmins or householders. But I say that this is only for those of ethical conduct, not for the unethical. The heart’s wish of an ethical person succeeds because of their purity.

Next, someone gives to ascetics or brahmins … Whatever they give they expect back. And they’ve heard: ‘The Gods of the Four Great Kings are long-lived, beautiful, and very happy.’ It occurs to them: ‘If only, when my body breaks up, after death, I would be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings!’ … When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings. But I say that this is only for those of ethical conduct, not for the unethical. The heart’s wish of an ethical person succeeds because of their purity.

Next, someone gives to ascetics or brahmins … Whatever they give they expect back. And they’ve heard: ‘The Gods of the Thirty-Three …’

‘The Gods of Yama …’

‘The Joyful Gods …’

‘The Gods Who Love to Imagine …’

‘The Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others are long-lived, beautiful, and very happy.’ It occurs to them: ‘If only, when my body breaks up, after death, I would be reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others!’ They settle on that idea, concentrate on it and develop it. As they’ve settled for less and not developed further, their idea leads to rebirth there. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. But I say that this is only for those of ethical conduct, not for the unethical. The heart’s wish of an ethical person succeeds because of their purity.

Next, someone gives to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, fragrance, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. Whatever they give they expect back. And they've heard: 'The Gods of Brahmā's Host are long-lived, beautiful, and very happy.' It occurs to them: 'If only, when my body breaks up, after death, I would be reborn in the company of the Gods of Brahmā's Host!' They settle on that idea, concentrate on it and develop it. As they've settled for less and not developed further, their idea leads to rebirth there. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in the company of the Gods of Brahmā's Host. But I say that this is only for those of ethical conduct, not for the unethical. And for those free of desire, not those with desire. The heart's wish of an ethical person succeeds because of their freedom from desire.

These are the eight rebirths by giving."

AN 8.36

AN 8.36
Grounds for Making Merit
Puññakiriyavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are these three grounds for making merit. What three? Giving, ethical conduct, and meditation are all grounds for making merit.

First, someone has practiced a little giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn among disadvantaged humans.

Next, someone has practiced a moderate amount of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn among well-off humans.

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings. There, the Four Great Kings themselves have practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So they surpass them in ten respects: divine life span, beauty, happiness, glory, sovereignty, sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Gods of the Thirty-Three. There, Sakka, lord of gods, has practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So he surpasses them in ten respects …

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Gods of Yama. There, the god Suyāma has practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So he surpasses them in ten respects …

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven’t got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the Joyful Gods. There, the god Santusita has practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So he surpasses them in ten respects …

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven't got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in the company of the Gods Who Love to Imagine. There, the god Sunimmita has practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So he surpasses them in ten respects …

Next, someone has practiced a lot of giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit, but they haven't got as far as meditation as a ground for making merit. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. There, the god Vasavattī has practiced giving and ethical conduct as grounds for making merit to a greater degree than the other gods. So he surpasses them in ten respects: divine life span, beauty, happiness, glory, sovereignty, sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches.

These are the three grounds for making merit."

AN 8.37

AN 8.37
Gifts of a True Person
Sappurisadānasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight gifts of a true person. What eight? Their gift is pure, good quality, timely, appropriate, intelligent, and regular. While giving their heart is confident, and afterwards they’re uplifted. These are the eight gifts of a true person.

He gives pure, good quality, and timely gifts of appropriate food and drinks regularly to spiritual practitioners who are fertile fields of merit.

They never regret giving away many things of the flesh. Discerning people praise giving such gifts.

An intelligent person sacrifices like this, faithful, with a mind of letting go. Such an astute person is reborn in a happy, pleasing world.”

AN 8.38

AN 8.38
A True Person
Sappurisasutta

“Mendicants, a true person is born in a family for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. For the benefit, welfare, and happiness of mother and father; children and partners; bondservants, workers, and staff; friends and colleagues; departed ancestors; the king; the deities; and ascetics and brahmins.

It’s like a great rain cloud, which nourishes all the crops for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. In the same way, a true person is born in a family for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of the people. …

A wise person living at home benefits many people. Neither by day or at night do they neglect their mother, father, and ancestors. They venerate them in accord with the teaching, remembering what they have done.

One of settled faith and good nature venerates the homeless renunciates, the mendicant spiritual practitioners, knowing their good-hearted qualities.

Good for the king, good for the gods, and good for relatives and friends.

In fact, they’re good for everyone, well grounded in the true teaching. Rid of the stain of stinginess, they’ll enjoy a world of grace.”

AN 8.39

AN 8.39
Overflowing Merit
Abhisandasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight kinds of overflowing merit, overflowing goodness. They nurture happiness and are conducive to heaven, ripening in happiness and leading to heaven. They lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, to welfare and happiness. What eight?

Firstly, a noble disciple has gone for refuge to the Buddha. This is the first kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple has gone for refuge to the teaching. This is the second kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple has gone for refuge to the Saṅgha. This is the third kind of overflowing merit …

Mendicants, these five gifts are great, primordial, long-standing, traditional, and ancient. They are uncorrupted, as they have been since the beginning. They’re not being corrupted now nor will they be. Sensible ascetics and brahmins don’t look down on them. What five?

Firstly, a noble disciple gives up killing living creatures. By so doing they give to countless sentient beings the gift of freedom from fear, enmity, and ill will. And they themselves also enjoy unlimited freedom from fear, enmity, and ill will. This is the first gift that is a great offering, primordial, long-standing, traditional, and ancient. It is uncorrupted, as it has been since the beginning. It’s not being corrupted now nor will it be. Sensible ascetics and brahmins don’t look down on it. This is the fourth kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple gives up stealing. … This is the fifth kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple gives up sexual misconduct. … This is the sixth kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple gives up lying. … This is the seventh kind of overflowing merit …

Furthermore, a noble disciple gives up alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. By so doing they give to countless sentient beings the gift of freedom from fear, enmity, and ill will. And they themselves also enjoy unlimited freedom from fear, enmity, and ill will. This is the fifth gift that is a great offering, primordial, long-standing, traditional, and ancient. It is uncorrupted, as it has been since the beginning. It’s not being corrupted now nor will it be.

Sensible ascetics and brahmins don’t look down on it. This is the eighth kind of overflowing merit …

These are the eight kinds of overflowing merit, overflowing goodness. They nurture happiness and are conducive to heaven, ripening in happiness and leading to heaven. They lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, to welfare and happiness.”

AN 8.40

AN 8.40
The Results of Misconduct
Duccaritavipākasutta

“Mendicants, the killing of living creatures, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is a short life span.

Stealing, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is loss of wealth.

Sexual misconduct, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is rivalry and enmity.

Lying, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is false accusations.

Divisive speech, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is being divided against friends.

Harsh speech, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is hearing disagreeable things.

Talking nonsense, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is that no-one takes what you say seriously.

Taking alcoholic drinks that cause negligence, when cultivated, developed, and practiced, leads to hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. The minimum result it leads to for a human being is madness.”

AN 8.41

AN 8.41
The Sabbath With Eight Factors, In Brief
Saṁkhittūposathasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, the observance of the sabbath with its eight factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. And how should it be observed? It's when a noble disciple reflects: 'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They are scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I, too, for this day and night will give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. I'll be scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its first factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up stealing. They take only what's given, and expect only what's given. They keep themselves clean by not thieving. I, too, for this day and night will give up stealing. I'll take only what's given, and expect only what's given. I'll keep myself clean by not thieving. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its second factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up unchastity. They are celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. I, too, for this day and night will give up unchastity. I will be celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its third factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up lying. They speak the truth and stick to the truth. They're honest and trustworthy, and don't trick the world with their words. I, too, for this day and night will give up lying. I'll speak the truth and stick to the truth. I'll be honest and trustworthy, and won't trick the world with my words. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its fourth factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. I, too, for this day and night will give up alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its fifth factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night and from food at the wrong time. I, too, for this day and night will eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night and food at the wrong time. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its sixth factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up seeing shows of dancing, singing, and music ; and beautifying and adorning themselves with garlands, fragrance, and makeup. I, too, for this day and night will give up seeing shows of dancing, singing, and music ; and beautifying and adorning myself with garlands, fragrance, and makeup. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its seventh factor.

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up high and luxurious beds. They sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I, too, for this day and night will give up high and luxurious beds. I'll sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its eighth factor.

The observance of the sabbath with its eight factors in this way is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful."

AN 8.42

AN 8.42
The Sabbath With Eight Factors, In Detail
Vitthatūposathasutta

“Mendicants, the observance of the sabbath with its eight factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. And how should it be observed?

It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘As long as they live, the perfected ones give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They are scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I, too, for this day and night will give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. I’ll be scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.’ This is its first factor. …

‘As long as they live, the perfected ones give up high and luxurious beds. They sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I, too, for this day and night will give up high and luxurious beds. I’ll sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.’ This is its eighth factor. The observance of the sabbath with its eight factors in this way is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful.

How much so? Suppose you were to rule as sovereign lord over these sixteen great countries—Aṅga, Magadha, Kāsi, Kosala, Vajji, Malla, Cetī, Vaccha, Kuru, Pañcāla, Maccha, Sūrasena, Assaka, Avanti, Gandhāra, and Kamboja—full of the seven kinds of precious things. This wouldn’t be worth a sixteenth part of the sabbath with its eight factors. Why is that? Because human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.

Fifty years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of the Four Great Kings. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of the Four Great Kings is five hundred of these divine years. It’s possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings. This is what I was referring to when I said: ‘Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.’

A hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of the Thirty-Three. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of the Thirty-Three is a thousand of these divine years. It’s possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Thirty-Three. This is what I was referring to when I said: ‘Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.’

Two hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of Yama. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of Yama is two thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of Yama. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

Four hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Joyful Gods. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Joyful Gods is four thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Joyful Gods. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

Eight hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods Who Love to Imagine. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods Who Love to Imagine is eight thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods Who Love to Imagine. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

Sixteen hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others is sixteen thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

You shouldn't kill living creatures, or steal, or lie, or drink alcohol. Be celibate, refraining from sex, and don't eat at night, the wrong time.

Not wearing garlands or applying perfumes, you should sleep on a low bed, or a mat on the ground. This is the eight-factored sabbath, they say, explained by the Buddha, who has gone to suffering's end.

The moon and sun are both fair to see, radiating as far as they revolve. Those shining ones in the sky light up the quarters, dispelling the darkness as they traverse the heavens.

All of the wealth that's found in this realm—pearls, gems, fine beryl too, rose-gold or pure gold, or natural gold dug up by marmots—they're not worth a sixteenth part of the sabbath with its eight factors, as starlight cannot rival the moon.

So an ethical woman or man, who has observed the eight-factored sabbath, having made merit whose outcome is happiness, blameless, they go to a heavenly place.”

AN 8.43

AN 8.43
With Visākhā on the Sabbath
Visākhāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Visākhā, the observance of the sabbath with its eight factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. And how should it be observed? It's when a noble disciple reflects: 'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They are scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I, too, for this day and night will give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. I'll be scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its first factor. …

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up high and luxurious beds. They sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I, too, for this day and night will give up high and luxurious beds. I'll sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its eighth factor. The observance of the sabbath with its eight factors in this way is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful.

How much so? Suppose you were to rule as sovereign lord over these sixteen great countries—Aṅga, Magadha, Kāsi, Kosala, Vajji, Malla, Cetī, Vaccha, Kuru, Pañcāla, Maccha, Sūrasena, Assaka, Avanti, Gandhāra, and Kamboja—full of the seven kinds of precious things. This wouldn't be worth a sixteenth part of the sabbath with its eight factors. Why is that? Because human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.

Fifty years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of the Four Great Kings. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of the Four Great Kings is five hundred of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

A hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of the Thirty-Three. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of the Thirty-Three is a thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Thirty-Three. This is what I was referring to when I said: ‘Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.’

Two hundred years in the human realm …

Four hundred years in the human realm …

Eight hundred years in the human realm …

Sixteen hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others is sixteen thousand of these divine years. It’s possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. This is what I was referring to when I said: ‘Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.’

You shouldn’t kill living creatures, or steal, or lie, or drink alcohol. Be celibate, refraining from sex, and don’t eat at night, the wrong time.

Not wearing garlands or applying perfumes, you should sleep on a low bed, or a mat on the ground. This is the eight-factored sabbath, they say, explained by the Buddha, who has gone to suffering’s end.

The moon and sun are both fair to see, radiating as far as they revolve. Those shining ones in the sky light up the quarters, dispelling the darkness as they traverse the heavens.

All of the wealth that’s found in this realm—pearls, gems, fine beryl too, rose-gold or pure gold, or natural gold dug up by marmots—they’re not worth a sixteenth part of the sabbath with its eight factors, as starlight cannot rival the moon.

So an ethical woman or man, who has observed the eight-factored sabbath, having made merit whose outcome is happiness, blameless, they go to a heavenly place.”

AN 8.44

AN 8.44
With Vāseṭṭha on the Sabbath
Vāseṭṭhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then the layman Vāseṭṭha went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Vāseṭṭha, the observance of the sabbath with its eight factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful … blameless, they go to a heavenly place.”

When he said this, Vāseṭṭha said to the Buddha:

“If my loved ones—relatives and kin—were to observe this sabbath with its eight factors, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If all the aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials were to observe this sabbath with its eight factors, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness.”

“That’s so true, Vāseṭṭha! That’s so true, Vāseṭṭha! If all the aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials were to observe this sabbath with its eight factors, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If the whole world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—were to observe this sabbath with its eight factors, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness. If these great sal trees were to observe this sabbath with its eight factors, it would be for their lasting welfare and happiness—if they were sentient. How much more then a human being!”

AN 8.45

AN 8.45
With Bojjhā on the Sabbath
Bojjhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the laywoman Bojjhā went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Bojjhā, the observance of the sabbath with its eight factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. And how should it be observed?

It's when a noble disciple reflects: 'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They are scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I, too, for this day and night will give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. I'll be scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its first factor. …

'As long as they live, the perfected ones give up high and luxurious beds. They sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I, too, for this day and night will give up high and luxurious beds. I'll sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.' This is its eighth factor. The observance of the sabbath with its eight factors in this way is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful.

How much so? Suppose you were to rule as sovereign lord over these sixteen great countries—Aṅga, Magadha, Kāsi, Kosala, Vajji, Malla, Cetī, Vaccha, Kuru, Pañcāla, Maccha, Sūrasena, Assaka, Avanti, Gandhāra, and Kamboja—full of the seven kinds of precious things. This wouldn't be worth a sixteenth part of the sabbath with its eight factors. Why is that? Because human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.

Fifty years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods of the Four Great Kings. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the Gods of the Four Great Kings is five hundred of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods of the Four Great Kings. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

A hundred years in the human realm …

Two hundred years in the human realm …

Four hundred years in the human realm …

Eight hundred years in the human realm …

Sixteen hundred years in the human realm is one day and night for the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. Thirty such days make up a month. Twelve such months make up a year. The life span of the gods who Control what is Imagined by Others is sixteen thousand of these divine years. It's possible that a woman or man who has observed the eight-factored sabbath will—when their body breaks up, after death—be reborn in the company of the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. This is what I was referring to when I said: 'Human kingship is a poor thing compared to the happiness of the gods.'

You shouldn't kill living creatures, or steal, or lie, or drink alcohol. Be celibate, refraining from sex, and don't eat at night, the wrong time.

Not wearing garlands or applying perfumes, you should sleep on a low bed, or a mat on the ground. This is the eight-factored sabbath, they say, explained by the Buddha, who has gone to suffering's end.

The moon and sun are both fair to see, radiating as far as they revolve. Those shining ones in the sky light up the quarters, dispelling the darkness as they traverse the heavens.

All of the wealth that's found in this realm—pearls, gems, fine beryl too, rose-gold or pure gold, or natural gold dug up by marmots—they're not worth a sixteenth part of the mind developed with love, as starlight cannot rival the moon.

So an ethical woman or man, who has observed the eight-factored sabbath, having made merit whose outcome is happiness, blameless, they go to a heavenly place."

AN 8.46

AN 8.46
Anuruddha and the Agreeable Deities
Anuruddhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery.

Now at that time Venerable Anuruddha had gone into retreat for the day's meditation. Then several deities of the Lovable Host went up to Venerable Anuruddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

"Honorable Anuruddha, we are the deities called 'Lovable'. We wield authority and control over three things. We can turn any color we want on the spot. We can get any voice that we want on the spot. We can get any pleasure that we want on the spot. We are the deities called 'Lovable'. We wield authority and control over these three things."

Then Venerable Anuruddha thought, "If only these deities would all turn blue, of blue color, clad in blue, adorned with blue!" Then those deities, knowing Anuruddha's thought, all turned blue.

Then Venerable Anuruddha thought, "If only these deities would all turn yellow …"

"If only these gods would all turn red …"

"If only these gods would all turn white …" Then those deities, knowing Anuruddha's thought, all turned white.

Then one of those deities sang, one danced, and one snapped her fingers. Suppose there was a quintet made up of skilled musicians who had practiced well and kept excellent rhythm. They'd sound graceful, tantalizing, sensuous, lovely, and intoxicating. In the same way the performance by those deities sounded graceful, tantalizing, sensuous, lovely, and intoxicating. But Venerable Anuruddha averted his senses.

Then those deities, thinking "Mister Anuruddha isn't enjoying this," vanished right there. Then in the late afternoon, Anuruddha came out of retreat and went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened, adding:

"How many qualities do females have so that—when their body breaks up, after death—they are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host?"

"Anuruddha, when they have eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host. What eight?

Take the case of a female whose mother and father give her to a husband wanting what's best for her, out of kindness and compassion. She would get up before him and go to bed after him, and be obliging, behaving nicely and speaking politely.

She honors, respects, esteems, and venerates those her husband respects, such as mother and father, and ascetics and brahmins. And when they arrive she serves them with a seat and water.

She's deft and tireless in her husband's household duties, such as knitting and sewing. She understands how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work.

She knows what work her husband's domestic bondservants, servants, and workers have completed, and what they've left incomplete. She knows who is sick, and who is fit or unwell. She distributes to each a fair portion of fresh and cooked foods.

She ensures that any income her husband earns is guarded and protected, whether money, grain, silver, or gold. She doesn't overspend, steal, waste, or lose it.

She's a lay follower who has gone for refuge to the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha.

She's ethical. She doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence.

She's generous. She lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.

When they have these eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host.

She'd never look down on her husband, who's always eager to work hard, always looking after her, and bringing whatever she wants.

And a good woman never scolds her husband with jealous words. Being astute, she reveres those respected by her husband.

She gets up early, works tirelessly, and manages the domestic help. She's lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

A lady who fulfills these duties according to her husband's desire, is reborn among the gods called 'Lovable'."

AN 8.47

AN 8.47
With Visākhā on the Lovable Gods
Dutiyavisākhāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Visākhā, when they have eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host. What eight? Take the case of a female whose mother and father give her to a husband wanting what's best for her, out of kindness and compassion. She would get up before him and go to bed after him, and be obliging, behaving nicely and speaking politely. …

She's generous. She lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. When they have these eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host.

She'd never look down on her husband, who's always eager to work hard, always looking after her, and bringing whatever she wants.

And a good woman never scolds her husband with jealous words. Being astute, she reveres those respected by her husband.

She gets up early, works tirelessly, and manages the domestic help. She's lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

A lady who fulfills these duties according to her husband's desire, is reborn among the gods called 'Lovable'."

AN 8.48

AN 8.48
With Nakula's Mother on the Lovable Gods
Nakulamātāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Bhaggas at Crocodile Hill, in the deer park at Bhesakaḷā's Wood. Then the housewife Nakula's mother went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Nakula's mother, when they have eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host. What eight?

Take the case of a female whose mother and father give her to a husband wanting what's best for her, out of kindness and compassion. She would get up before him and go to bed after him, and be obliging, behaving nicely and speaking politely.

She honors, respects, esteems, and venerates those her husband respects, such as mother and father, and ascetics and brahmins. And when they arrive she serves them with a seat and water.

She's deft and tireless in her husband's household duties, such as knitting and sewing. She understands how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work.

She knows what work her husband's domestic bondservants, servants, and workers have completed, and what they've left incomplete. She knows who is sick, and who is fit or unwell. She distributes to each a fair portion of fresh and cooked foods.

She ensures that any income her husband earns is guarded and protected, whether money, grain, silver, or gold. She doesn't overspend, steal, waste, or lose it.

She's a lay follower who has gone for refuge to the Buddha, his teaching, and the Saṅgha.

She's ethical. She doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence.

She's generous. She lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.

When they have these eight qualities females—when their body breaks up, after death—are reborn in company with the Gods of the Lovable Host.

She'd never look down on her husband, who's always eager to work hard, always looking after her, and bringing whatever she wants.

And a good woman never scolds her husband with jealous words. Being astute, she reveres those respected by her husband.

She gets up early, works tirelessly, and manages the domestic help. She's lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

A lady who fulfills these duties according to her husband's desire, is reborn among the gods called 'Lovable'."

AN 8.49

AN 8.49
Winning in This Life (1st)
Paṭhamaidhalokikasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to her:

"Visākhā, a female who has four qualities is practicing to win in this life, and she succeeds at it. What four? It's when a female is well-organized at work, manages the domestic help, acts lovingly toward her husband, and preserves his earnings.

And how is a female well-organized at work? It's when she's deft and tireless in doing domestic duties for her husband, such as knitting and sewing. She understands how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. That's how a female is well-organized at work.

And how does a female manage the domestic help? It's when she knows what work her husband's domestic bondservants, servants, and workers have completed, and what they've left incomplete. She knows who is sick, and who is fit or unwell. She distributes to each a fair portion of fresh and cooked foods. That's how a female manages the domestic help.

And how does a female act lovingly toward her husband? It's when a female would not transgress in any way that her husband would not consider lovable, even for the sake of her own life. That's how a female acts lovingly toward her husband.

And how does a female preserve his earnings? It's when she ensures that any income her husband earns is guarded and protected, whether money, grain, silver, or gold. She doesn't overspend, steal, waste, or lose it. That's how a female preserves his earnings.

A female who has these four qualities is practicing to win in this life, and she succeeds at it.

A female who has four qualities is practicing to win in the next life, and she succeeds at it. What four? It's when a female is accomplished in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom.

And how is a female accomplished in faith? It's when a female has faith in the Realized One's awakening: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' That's how a female is accomplished in faith.

And how is a female accomplished in ethics? It's when a female doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. That's how a female is accomplished in ethics.

And how is a female accomplished in generosity? It's when she lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. That's how a female is accomplished in generosity.

And how is a female accomplished in wisdom? It's when a female is wise. She has the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. That's how a female is accomplished in wisdom.

A female who has these four qualities is practicing to win in the next life, and she succeeds at it.

She's organized at work, and manages the domestic help. She's lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess, she always purifies the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so, a lady in whom these eight qualities are found is known as virtuous, firm in principle, and truthful.

Accomplished in sixteen respects, complete with the eight factors, a virtuous laywoman such as she is reborn in the realm of the Lovable Gods."

AN 8.50

AN 8.50
Winning in This Life (2nd)
Dutiyaidhalokikasutta

“Mendicants, a female who has four qualities is practicing to win in this life, and she succeeds at it. What four?

It’s when a female is well-organized at work, manages the domestic help, acts lovingly toward her husband, and preserves his earnings.

And how is a female well-organized at work? It’s when she’s skilled and tireless in doing domestic duties for her husband … That’s how a female is well-organized at work.

And how does a female manage the domestic help? It’s when she knows what work her husband’s domestic bondservants, servants, and workers have completed, and what they’ve left incomplete. She knows who is sick, and who is fit or unwell. She distributes to each a fair portion of fresh and cooked foods. That’s how a female manages the domestic help.

And how does a female act lovingly toward her husband? It’s when a female would not transgress in any way that her husband would not consider lovable, even for the sake of her own life. That’s how a female acts lovingly toward her husband.

And how does a female preserve his earnings? It’s when she tries to guard and protect any income her husband earns … That’s how a female preserves his earnings.

A female who has these four qualities is practicing to win in this life, and she succeeds at it.

A female who has four qualities is practicing to win in the next life, and she succeeds at it. What four? It’s when a female is accomplished in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom.

And how is a female accomplished in faith? It’s when a female has faith in the Realized One’s awakening … That’s how a female is accomplished in faith.

And how is a female accomplished in ethics? It’s when a female doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. That’s how a female is accomplished in ethics.

And how is a female accomplished in generosity? It’s when she lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. That’s how a female is accomplished in generosity.

And how is a female accomplished in wisdom? It's when a female is wise. She has the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. That's how a female is accomplished in wisdom.

A female who has these four qualities is practicing to win in the next life, and she succeeds at it.

She's organized at work, and manages the domestic help. She's lovable to her husband, and preserves his wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, being bountiful and rid of stinginess. She always purifies the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so, a lady in whom these eight qualities are found is known as virtuous, firm in principle, and truthful.

Accomplished in sixteen respects, complete with the eight factors, a virtuous laywoman such as she is reborn in the realm of the Lovable Gods."

AN 8.51

AN 8.51
With Gotamī
Gotamīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Then Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, please let females gain the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One."

"Enough, Gotamī. Don't endorse the going forth for females from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One."

For a second time …

For a third time, Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī said to the Buddha:

"Sir, please let females gain the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One."

"Enough, Gotamī. Don't endorse the going forth for females from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One."

Then Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī thought, "The Buddha does not permit females to go forth." Miserable and sad, weeping, with a tearful face, she bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on her right, before leaving.

When the Buddha had stayed in Kapilavatthu as long as he pleased, he set out for Vesālī. Traveling stage by stage, he arrived at Vesālī, where he stayed at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī had her hair shaved, and dressed in ocher robes. Together with several Sakyan ladies she set out for Vesālī. Traveling stage by stage, she arrived at Vesālī and went to the Great Wood, the hall with the peaked roof. Then Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī stood crying outside the gate, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, miserable and sad, with tearful face.

Venerable Ānanda saw her standing there, and said to her, "Gotamī, why do you stand crying outside the gate, your feet swollen, your limbs covered with dust, miserable and sad, with tearful face?"

"Honorable Ānanda, it's because the Buddha does not permit females to go forth in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One."

“Well then, Gotamī, wait here just a moment, while I ask the Buddha to grant the going forth for females.”

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī is standing crying outside the gate, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, miserable and sad, with tearful face. She says that it’s because the Buddha does not permit females to go forth. Sir, please let females gain the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.”

“Enough, Ānanda. Don’t endorse the going forth for females from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.”

For a second time …

For a third time, Ānanda said to the Buddha:

“Sir, please let females gain the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.”

“Enough, Ānanda. Don’t endorse the going forth for females from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.”

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “The Buddha does not permit females to go forth. Why don’t I try another approach?”

Then Venerable Ānanda said to the Buddha, “Sir, is a female able to realize the fruits of stream-entry, once-return, non-return, and perfection once she has gone forth?”

“She is able, Ānanda.”

“If a female is able to realize the fruits of stream-entry, once-return, non-return, and perfection once she has gone forth. Sir, Mahāpajāpatī has been very helpful to the Buddha. She is his aunt who raised him, nurtured him, and gave him her milk. When the Buddha’s birth mother passed away, she nurtured him at her own breast. Sir, please let females gain the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.”

“Ānanda, if Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī accepts these eight principles of respect, that will be her ordination.

A nun, even if she has been ordained for a hundred years, should bow down to a monk who was ordained that very day. She should rise up for him, greet him with joined palms, and observe proper etiquette toward him. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

A nun should not commence the rainy season residence in a monastery without monks. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

Each fortnight the nuns should expect two things from the community of monks: the date of the sabbath, and visiting for advice. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

After completing the rainy season residence the nuns should invite admonition from the communities of both monks and nuns in regard to anything that was seen, heard, or suspected. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

A nun who has committed a grave offense should undergo penance in the communities of both monks and nuns for a fortnight. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

A trainee nun who has trained in the six rules for two years should seek ordination from the communities of both monks and nuns. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

A nun should not abuse or insult a monk in any way. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

From this day forth it is forbidden for nuns to criticize monks, but it is not forbidden for monks to criticize nuns. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts.

If Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī accepts these eight principles of respect, that will be her ordination."

Then Ānanda, having learned these eight principles of respect from the Buddha himself, went to Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī and said:

"Gotamī, if you accept eight principles of respect, that will be your ordination.

A nun, even if she has been ordained for a hundred years, should bow down to a monk who was ordained that very day. She should rise up for him, greet him with joined palms, and observe proper etiquette toward him. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts. …

From this day forth it is forbidden for nuns to criticize monks, but it is not forbidden for monks to criticize nuns. This principle should be honored, respected, esteemed, and venerated, and not transgressed so long as life lasts. If you accept these eight principles of respect, that will be your ordination."

"Ānanda, suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and had bathed their head. After getting a garland of lotuses, jasmine, or liana flowers, they would take them in both hands and place them on the crown of the head. In the same way, sir, I accept these eight principles of respect as not to be transgressed so long as life lasts."

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“Sir, Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī has accepted the eight principles of respect as not to be transgressed so long as life lasts.”

“Ānanda, if females had not gained the going forth from the lay life to homelessness in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One, the spiritual life would have lasted long. The true teaching would have remained for a thousand years. But since they have gained the going forth, now the spiritual life will not last long. The true teaching will remain only five hundred years.

It’s like those families with many women and few men. They’re easy prey for bandits and thieves. In the same way, the spiritual life does not last long in a teaching and training where females gain the going forth.

It’s like a field full of rice. Once the disease called ‘white bones’ attacks, it doesn’t last long. In the same way, the spiritual life does not last long in a teaching and training where females gain the going forth.

It’s like a field full of sugar cane. Once the disease called ‘red rot’ attacks, it doesn’t last long. In the same way, the spiritual life does not last long in a teaching and training where females gain the going forth.

As a man might build a dyke around a large lake as a precaution against the water overflowing, in the same way as a precaution I’ve prescribed the eight principles of respect as not to be transgressed so long as life lasts.”

AN 8.52

AN 8.52
An Adviser for Nuns
Ovādasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“Sir, how many qualities should a monk have to be deemed an adviser for nuns?”

“Ānanda, a monk with eight qualities may be deemed an adviser for nuns. What eight?

Firstly, a monk is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material.

They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning.

They’re able to educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire the community of nuns.

They’re likable and agreeable to most of the nuns.

They have never previously sexually harassed any woman wearing the ocher robe who has gone forth in the Buddha’s name.

They have been ordained for twenty years or more.

A monk with these eight qualities may be deemed an adviser for nuns.”

AN 8.53

AN 8.53
Brief Advice to Gotamī
Saṁkhittasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief. When I’ve heard it, I’ll live alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute.”

“Gotamī, you might know that certain things lead to passion, not dispassion; to yoking, not to unyoking; to accumulation, not dispersal; to more desires, not fewer; to lack of contentment, not contentment; to crowding, not seclusion; to laziness, not energy; to being burdensome, not being unburdensome. Categorically, you should remember these things as not the teaching, not the training, and not the Teacher’s instructions.

You might know that certain things lead to dispassion, not passion; to unyoking, not to yoking; to dispersal, not accumulation; to fewer desires, not more; to contentment, not lack of contentment; to seclusion, not crowding; to energy, not laziness; to being unburdensome, not being burdensome. Categorically, you should remember these things as the teaching, the training, and the Teacher’s instructions.”

AN 8.54

AN 8.54
With Dīghajāṇu
Dīghajāṇusutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Koliyans, where they have a town named Kakkarapatta. Then Dīghajāṇu the Koliyan went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“Sir, we are laypeople who enjoy sensual pleasures and living at home with our children. We use sandalwood imported from Kāsi, we wear garlands, perfumes, and makeup, and we accept gold and money. May the Buddha please teach us the Dhamma in a way that leads to our welfare and happiness in this life and in future lives.”

“Byagghapajja, these four things lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in this life. What four?

Accomplishment in initiative, protection, good friendship, and balanced finances. And what is accomplishment in initiative? It’s when a gentleman earns a living by means such as farming, trade, raising cattle, archery, government service, or one of the professions. He understands how to go about these things in order to complete and organize the work. This is called accomplishment in initiative.

And what is accomplishment in protection? It’s when a gentleman owns legitimate wealth that he has earned by his own efforts and initiative, built up with his own hands, gathered by the sweat of the brow. He ensures it is guarded and protected, thinking: ‘How can I prevent my wealth from being taken by rulers or bandits, consumed by fire, swept away by flood, or taken by unloved heirs?’ This is called accomplishment in protection.

And what is accomplishment in good friendship? It’s when a gentleman resides in a town or village. And in that place there are householders or their children who may be young or old, but are mature in conduct, accomplished in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. He associates with them, converses and engages in discussion. And he emulates the same kind of accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. This is called accomplishment in good friendship.

And what is accomplishment in balanced finances? It’s when a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ It’s like an appraiser or their apprentice who, holding up the scales, knows that it’s low by this much or high by this much. In the same way, a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ If a gentleman has little income but an opulent life, people will say: ‘This gentleman eats their wealth like a fig-eater!' If a gentleman has a large income but a spartan life, people will say: 'This gentleman is starving themselves to death!' But a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, leads a balanced life, neither too extravagant nor too frugal, thinking, 'In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.' This is called accomplishment in balanced finances.

There are four drains on wealth that has been gathered in this way. Womanizing, drinking, gambling, and having bad friends, companions, and associates. Suppose there was a large reservoir with four inlets and four drains. And someone was to open up the drains and close off the inlets, and the heavens don't provide enough rain. You'd expect that large reservoir to dwindle, not expand. In the same way, there are four drains on wealth that has been gathered in this way. Womanizing, drinking, gambling, and having bad friends, companions, and associates.

There are four inlets for wealth that has been gathered in this way. Not womanizing, drinking, or gambling, and having good friends, companions, and associates. Suppose there was a large reservoir with four inlets and four drains. And someone was to open up the inlets and close off the drains, and the heavens provide plenty of rain. You'd expect that large reservoir to expand, not dwindle. In the same way, there are four inlets for wealth that has been gathered in this way. Not womanizing, drinking, or gambling, and having good friends, companions, and associates.

These are the four things that lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in this life.

These four things lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in future lives. What four? Accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom.

And what is accomplishment in faith? It's when a gentleman has faith in the Realized One's awakening: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' This is called accomplishment in faith.

And what is accomplishment in ethics? It's when a gentleman doesn't kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called accomplishment in ethics.

And what is accomplishment in generosity? It's when a gentleman lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. This is called accomplishment in generosity.

And what is accomplishment in wisdom? It's when a gentleman is wise. He has the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called accomplishment in wisdom.

These are the four things that lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in future lives.

They’re enterprising in the workplace, diligent in managing things, they balance their finances, and preserve their wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess, they always purify the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so these eight qualities of a faithful householder are declared by the one who is truly named to lead to happiness in both spheres, welfare and benefit in this life, and happiness in the future lives. This is how, for a householder, merit grows by generosity.”

AN 8.55

AN 8.55
With Ujjaya
Ujjayasutta

Then Ujjaya the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, we wish to travel abroad. May the Buddha please teach us the Dhamma in a way that leads to our welfare and happiness in this life and in future lives.”

“Brahmin, these four things lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in this life. What four? Accomplishment in initiative, protection, good friendship, and balanced finances.

And what is accomplishment in initiative? A gentleman may earn a living by means such as farming, trade, raising cattle, archery, government service, or one of the professions. He understands how to go about these things in order to complete and organize the work. This is called accomplishment in initiative.

And what is accomplishment in protection? It’s when a gentleman owns legitimate wealth that he has earned by his own efforts and initiative, built up with his own hands, gathered by the sweat of the brow. He ensures it is guarded and protected, thinking: ‘How can I prevent my wealth from being taken by rulers or bandits, consumed by fire, swept away by flood, or taken by unloved heirs?’ This is called accomplishment in protection.

And what is accomplishment in good friendship? It’s when a gentleman resides in a town or village. And in that place there are householders or their children who may be young or old, but are mature in conduct, accomplished in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. He associates with them, converses and engages in discussion. And he emulates the same kind of accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. This is called accomplishment in good friendship.

And what is accomplishment in balanced finances? It’s when a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ It’s like an appraiser or their apprentice who, holding up the scales, knows that it’s low by this much or high by this much. In the same way, a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ If a gentleman has little income but an opulent life, people will say: ‘This gentleman eats their wealth like a fig-eater!’ If a gentleman has a large income but a spartan life, people will say: ‘This gentleman is starving themselves to death!’ But a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, leads a balanced life, neither too extravagant nor too frugal, thinking, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ This is called accomplishment in balanced finances.

There are four drains on wealth that has been gathered in this way. Womanizing, drinking, gambling, and having bad friends, companions, and associates. Suppose there was a large reservoir with four inlets and four drains. And someone was to open up the drains and close off the inlets, and the heavens don’t provide enough rain. You’d expect that large reservoir to dwindle, not expand. In the same way, there are four drains on wealth that has been gathered in this way. Womanizing, drinking, gambling, and having bad friends, companions, and associates.

There are four inlets for wealth that has been gathered in this way. Not womanizing, drinking, or gambling, and having good friends, companions, and associates. Suppose there was a large reservoir with four inlets and four drains. And someone was to open up the inlets and close off the drains, and the heavens provide plenty of rain. You’d expect that large reservoir to expand, not dwindle. In the same way, there are four inlets for wealth that has been gathered in this way. Not womanizing, drinking, or gambling, and having good friends, companions, and associates.

These are the four things that lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in this life.

These four things lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in future lives. What four? Accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom.

And what is accomplishment in faith? It’s when a gentleman has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called accomplishment in faith.

And what is accomplishment in ethics? It’s when a gentleman doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called accomplishment in ethics.

And what is accomplishment in generosity? It’s when a gentleman lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. This is called accomplishment in generosity.

And what is accomplishment in wisdom? It’s when a gentleman is wise. He has the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called accomplishment in wisdom.

These are the four things that lead to the welfare and happiness of a gentleman in future lives.

They’re enterprising in the workplace, diligent in managing things, they balance their finances, and preserve their wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess, they always purify the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so these eight qualities of a faithful householder are declared by the one who is truly named to lead to happiness in both spheres, welfare and benefit in this life, and happiness in the next. This is how, for a householder, merit grows by generosity.”

AN 8.56

AN 8.56
Danger
Bhayasutta

“Mendicants, ‘danger’ is a term for sensual pleasures. ‘Suffering’, ‘disease’, ‘boil’, ‘dart’, ‘snare’, ‘bog’, and ‘womb’ are terms for sensual pleasures. And why is ‘danger’ a term for sensual pleasures? Someone who is besotted by sensual greed and shackled by lustful desire is not freed from dangers in the present life or in lives to come. That is why ‘danger’ is a term for sensual pleasures. And why are ‘suffering’, ‘disease’, ‘boil’, ‘dart’, ‘snare’, ‘bog’, and ‘womb’ terms for sensual pleasures? Someone who is besotted by sensual greed and shackled by lustful desire is not freed from wombs in the present life or in lives to come. That is why ‘womb’ is a term for sensual pleasures.

Danger, suffering, and disease, boil, dart, and snare, and bogs and wombs both. These describe the sensual pleasures to which ordinary people are attached.

Swamped by things that seem pleasant, you go to another womb. But when a mendicant is keen, and doesn’t forget awareness, in this way they transcend this grueling swamp. They watch this population flounder, fallen into rebirth and old age.”

AN 8.57

AN 8.57
Worthy of Offerings Dedicated to the Gods (1st)
Paṭhamaāhuneyyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What eight?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They have good friends, companions, and associates.

They have right view, possessing right perspective.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They recollect many kinds of past lives, with features and details.

With clairvoyance that is purified and surpasses the human, they see how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 8.58

AN 8.58
Worthy of Offerings Dedicated to the Gods (2nd)
Dutiyaāhuneyyasutta

“A mendicant with eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What eight?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s totally full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reciting them, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They live with energy roused up. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities.

They live in the wilderness, in remote lodgings.

They prevail over desire and discontent, and live having mastered desire and discontent whenever they arose.

They prevail over fear and dread, and live having mastered fear and dread whenever they arose.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these eight qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 8.59

AN 8.59
Eight People (1st)
Paṭhamapuggalasutta

“Mendicants, these eight people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What eight? The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The perfected one, and the one practicing for perfection. These are the eight people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.

Four practicing the path, and four established in the fruit. This is the upright Saṅgha, with wisdom, ethics, and immersion.

For humans, those merit-seeking creatures, who sponsor sacrifices, making worldly merit, what is given to the Saṅgha is very fruitful.”

AN 8.60

AN 8.60
Eight People (2nd)
Dutiyapuggalasutta

“Mendicants, these eight people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What eight? The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The perfected one, and the one practicing for perfection. These are the eight people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.

Four practicing the path, and four established in the fruit. This is the exalted Saṅgha, the eight people among sentient beings.

For humans, those merit-seeking creatures, who sponsor sacrifices, making worldly merit, what’s given here is very fruitful.”

AN 8.61

AN 8.61
Desire
Icchāsutta

“Mendicants, there are eight kinds of people found in the world. What eight?

First, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions don’t come to them. And so they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions don’t come to them, they sorrow and lament. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions do come to them. And so they become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions come to them, they become intoxicated and negligent. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions don’t come to them. And so they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions don’t come to them, they sorrow and lament. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions do come to them. And so they become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions come to them, they become intoxicated and negligent. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions don’t come to them. But they don’t sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions don’t come to them, they don’t sorrow and lament. They haven’t fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions do come to them. But they don’t become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions come to them, they don’t become intoxicated and negligent. They haven’t fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions don’t come to them. But they don’t sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions don’t come to them, they don’t sorrow and lament. They haven’t fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions do come to them. But they don’t become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions come to them, they don’t become intoxicated and negligent. They haven’t fallen from the true teaching.

These are the eight people found in the world.”

AN 8.62

AN 8.62
Good Enough
Alaṁsutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with six qualities is good enough for themselves and others. What six? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these six qualities is good enough for themselves and others.

A mendicant with five qualities is good enough for themselves and others. What five? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these five qualities is good enough for themselves and others.

A mendicant with four qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What four? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. But they’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these four qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with four qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What four? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. But they don’t examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these four qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.

A mendicant with three qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What three? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. But they’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these three qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with three qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What three? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. But they don’t examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these three qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.

A mendicant with two qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What two? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. And they don’t readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. But they examine the meaning of teachings they have memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these two qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with two qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What two? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. And they don’t readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. Nor do they examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. But they’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these two qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.”

AN 8.63

AN 8.63
A Teaching in Brief
Saṁkhittasutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief. When I've heard it, I'll live alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute."

"This is exactly how some foolish people ask me for something. But when the teaching has been explained they think only of following me around."

"Sir, may the Buddha please teach me Dhamma in brief! May the Holy One teach me the Dhamma in brief! Hopefully I can understand the meaning of what the Buddha says! Hopefully I can be an heir of the Buddha's teaching!"

"Well then, mendicant, you should train like this: 'My mind will be steady and well settled internally. And bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen will not occupy my mind.' That's how you should train.

When your mind is steady and well settled internally, and bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen don't occupy your mind, then you should train like this: 'I will develop the heart's release by love. I'll cultivate it, make it my vehicle and my basis, keep it up, consolidate it, and properly implement it.' That's how you should train.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should develop it while placing the mind and keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind, but just keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind or keeping it connected. You should develop it with rapture. You should develop it without rapture. You should develop it with pleasure. You should develop it with equanimity.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should train like this: 'I will develop the heart's release by compassion …' … 'I will develop the heart's release by rejoicing …' … 'I will develop the heart's release by equanimity. I'll cultivate it, make it my vehicle and my basis, keep it up, consolidate it, and properly implement it.' That's how you should train.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should develop it while placing the mind and keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind, but just keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind or keeping it connected. You should develop it with rapture. You should develop it without rapture. You should develop it with pleasure. You should develop it with equanimity.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should train like this: ‘I’ll meditate observing an aspect of the body—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world.’ That’s how you should train.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should develop it while placing the mind and keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind, but just keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind or keeping it connected. You should develop it with rapture. You should develop it without rapture. You should develop it with pleasure. You should develop it with equanimity.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should train like this: ‘I’ll meditate on an aspect of feelings …’ … ‘I’ll meditate on an aspect of the mind …’ … ‘I’ll meditate on an aspect of principles—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world.’ That’s how you should train.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, you should develop it while placing the mind and keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind, but just keeping it connected. You should develop it without placing the mind or keeping it connected. You should develop it with rapture. You should develop it without rapture. You should develop it with pleasure. You should develop it with equanimity.

When this immersion is well developed and cultivated in this way, wherever you walk, you’ll walk comfortably. Wherever you stand, you’ll stand comfortably. Wherever you sit, you’ll sit comfortably. Wherever you lie down, you’ll lie down comfortably.”

When that mendicant had been given this advice by the Buddha, he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

Then that mendicant, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme culmination of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” And that mendicant became one of the perfected.

AN 8.64

AN 8.64
At Gayā Head
Gayāsīsasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Gayā on Gayā Head. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

“Mendicants, before my awakening—when I was still not awake but intent on awakening—I perceived light but did not see forms.

Then it occurred to me, ‘What if I were to both perceive light and see forms? Then my knowledge and vision would become even more purified.’

So after some time, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, I perceived light and saw visions. But I didn’t associate with those deities, converse, or engage in discussion.

Then it occurred to me, ‘What if I were to perceive light and see forms; and associate with those deities, converse, and engage in discussion? Then my knowledge and vision would become even more purified.’

So after some time … I perceived light and saw visions. And I associated with those deities, conversed, and engaged in discussion. But I didn’t know which orders of gods those deities came from.

Then it occurred to me, ‘What if I were to perceive light and see forms; and associate with those deities, converse, and engage in discussion; and find out which orders of gods those deities come from? Then my knowledge and vision would become even more purified.’

So after some time … I perceived light and saw visions. And I associated with those deities … And I found out which orders of gods those deities came from. But I didn’t know what deeds caused those deities to be reborn there after passing away from here.

So after some time … I found out what deeds caused those deities to be reborn there after passing away from here. But I didn’t know what deeds caused those deities to have such food and such an experience of pleasure and pain.

So after some time … I found out what deeds caused those deities to have such food and such an experience of pleasure and pain. But I didn’t know that these deities have a life-span of such a length.

So after some time … I found out that these deities have a life-span of such a length. But I didn’t know whether or not I had previously lived together with those deities.

Then it occurred to me, ‘What if I were to perceive light and see forms; and associate with those deities, converse, and engage in discussion; and find out which orders of gods those deities come from; and what deeds caused those deities to be reborn there after passing away from here; and what deeds caused those deities to have such food and such an experience of pleasure and pain; and that these deities have a life-span of such a length; and whether or not I have previously lived together with those deities? Then my knowledge and vision would become even more purified.’

So after some time … I found out whether or not I have previously lived together with those deities.

As long as my knowledge and vision about the deities was not fully purified from these eight perspectives, I didn’t announce my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.

But when my knowledge and vision about the deities was fully purified from these eight perspectives, I announced my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans. Knowledge and vision arose in me: ‘My freedom is unshakable; this is my last rebirth; now there’ll be no more future lives.’”

AN 8.65

AN 8.65
Dimensions of Mastery
Abhibhāyatanasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight dimensions of mastery. What eight?

Perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the first dimension of mastery.

Perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the second dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the third dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the fourth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, blue, with blue color and blue appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the fifth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, yellow, with yellow color and yellow appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the sixth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, red, with red color and red appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the seventh dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, white, with white color and white appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the eighth dimension of mastery.

These are the eight dimensions of mastery.”

AN 8.66

AN 8.66
Liberations
Vimokkhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight liberations. What eight? Having physical form, they see forms. This is the first liberation.

Not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally. This is the second liberation.

They’re focused only on beauty. This is the third liberation.

Going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space. This is the fourth liberation.

Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness. This is the fifth liberation.

Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. This is the sixth liberation.

Going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. This is the seventh liberation.

Going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, they enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling. This is the eighth liberation.

These are the eight liberations.”

AN 8.67

AN 8.67
Ignoble Expressions
Anariyavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight ignoble expressions. What eight? Saying you’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, but you haven’t. And saying you haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you have. These are the eight ignoble expressions.”

AN 8.68

AN 8.68
Noble Expressions
Ariyavohārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight noble expressions. What eight? Saying you haven’t seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you haven’t. And saying you’ve seen, heard, thought, or known something, and you have. These are the eight noble expressions.”

AN 8.69

AN 8.69
Assemblies
Parisāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight assemblies. What eight? The assemblies of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, and ascetics. An assembly of the gods under the Four Great Kings. An assembly of the gods under the Thirty-Three. An assembly of Māras. An assembly of Brahmās.

I recall having approached an assembly of hundreds of aristocrats. There I used to sit with them, converse, and engage in discussion. And my appearance and voice became just like theirs. I educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired them with a Dhamma talk. But when I spoke they didn’t know: ‘Who is this that speaks? Is it a god or a human?’ And when my Dhamma talk was finished I vanished. But when I vanished they didn’t know: ‘Who was that who vanished? Was it a god or a human?’

I recall having approached an assembly of hundreds of brahmins … householders … ascetics … the gods under the Four Great Kings … the gods under the Thirty-Three … Māras … Brahmās. There too I used to sit with them, converse, and engage in discussion. And my appearance and voice became just like theirs. I educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired them with a Dhamma talk. But when I spoke they didn’t know: ‘Who is this that speaks? Is it a god or a human?’ And when my Dhamma talk was finished I vanished. But when I vanished they didn’t know: ‘Who was that who vanished? Was it a god or a human?’ These are the eight assemblies.”

AN 8.70

AN 8.70
Earthquakes
Bhūmicālasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for alms. Then, after the meal, on his return from almsround, he addressed Venerable Ānanda, "Ānanda, get your sitting cloth. Let's go to the Cāpāla shrine for the day's meditation."

"Yes, sir," replied Ānanda. Taking his sitting cloth he followed behind the Buddha.

Then the Buddha went up to the Cāpāla shrine, where he sat on the seat spread out. When he was seated he said to Venerable Ānanda:

"Ānanda, Vesālī is lovely. And the Udena, Gotamaka, Seven Maidens, Many Sons, Sārandada, and Cāpāla Tree-shrines are all lovely. Whoever has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power—made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them—may, if they wish, live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it. The Realized One has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power, made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them. If he wished, the Realized One could live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it."

But Ānanda didn't get it, even though the Buddha dropped such an obvious hint, such a clear sign. He didn't beg the Buddha, "Sir, may the Blessed One please remain for the eon! May the Holy One please remain for the eon! That would be for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans." For his mind was as if possessed by Māra.

For a second time …

And for a third time, the Buddha said to him:

"Ānanda, Vesālī is lovely. And the Udena, Gotamaka, Seven Maidens, Many Sons, Sārandada, and Cāpāla Tree-shrines are all lovely. Whoever has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power—made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them—may, if they wish, live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it. The Realized One has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power, made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them. If he wished, the Realized One could live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it."

But Ānanda didn't get it, even though the Buddha dropped such an obvious hint, such a clear sign. He didn't beg the Buddha, "Sir, may the Blessed One please remain for the eon! May the Holy One please remain for the eon! That would be for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans." For his mind was as if possessed by Māra.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, "Go now, Ānanda, at your convenience."

"Yes, sir," replied Ānanda. He rose from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before sitting at the root of a tree close by.

And then, not long after Ānanda had left, Māra the Wicked said to the Buddha:

"Sir, may the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished.

Sir, you once made this statement: 'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have monk disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned, have memorized the teachings, and practice in line with the teachings; not until they practice appropriately, living in line with the teaching; not until they've learned their tradition, and explain, teach, assert, establish, clarify, analyze, and reveal; not until they can legitimately and completely refute the doctrines of others that come up, and teach with a demonstrable basis.' Today you do have such monk disciples.

May the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished.

Sir, you once made this statement: 'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have nun disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' …

'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have layman disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' …

'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have laywoman disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' … Today you do have such laywoman disciples.

Sir, may the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished. Sir, you once made this statement:

'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until my spiritual path is successful and prosperous, extensive, popular, widespread, and well proclaimed wherever there are gods and humans.' Today your spiritual path is successful and prosperous, extensive, popular, widespread, and well proclaimed wherever there are gods and humans.

Sir, may the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished."

“Relax, Wicked One. The final extinguishment of the Realized One will be soon. Three months from now the Realized One will finally be extinguished.”

So at the Cāpāla Tree-shrine the Buddha, mindful and aware, surrendered the life force. When he did so there was a great earthquake, awe-inspiring and hair-raising, and thunder cracked the sky. Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Comparing the incomparable with the creation of prolonged life, the sage surrendered the life force. Happy inside, serene, he shattered self-creation like a suit of armor.”

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “That was a really big earthquake! That was really a very big earthquake; awe-inspiring and hair-raising, and thunder cracked the sky! What’s the cause, what’s the reason for a great earthquake?”

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, that was a really big earthquake! That was really a very big earthquake; awe-inspiring and hair-raising, and thunder cracked the sky! What’s the cause, what’s the reason for a great earthquake?”

“Ānanda, there are these eight causes and reasons for a great earthquake. What eight?

This great earth is grounded on water, the water is grounded on air, and the air stands in space. At a time when a great wind blows, it stirs the water, and the water stirs the earth. This is the first cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, there is an ascetic or brahmin with psychic power who has achieved mastery of the mind, or a god who is mighty and powerful. They’ve developed a limited perception of earth and a limitless perception of water. They make the earth shake and rock and tremble. This is the second cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the being intent on awakening passes away from the host of Joyful Gods, he’s conceived in his mother’s belly, mindful and aware. Then the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the third cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the being intent on awakening comes out of his mother’s belly mindful and aware, the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the fourth cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the Realized One realizes the supreme perfect awakening, the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the fifth cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the Realized One rolls forth the supreme Wheel of Dhamma, the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the sixth cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the Realized One, mindful and aware, surrenders the life force, the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the seventh cause and reason for a great earthquake.

Furthermore, when the Realized One becomes fully extinguished in the element of extinguishment with nothing left over, the earth shakes and rocks and trembles. This is the eighth cause and reason for a great earthquake.

These are the eight causes and reasons for a great earthquake.”

AN 8.71

AN 8.71
Inspiring All Around (1st)
Paṭhamasaddhāsutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant is faithful but not ethical. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful and ethical?’ When the mendicant is faithful and ethical, they’re complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but not learned. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned?’ When the mendicant is faithful, ethical, and learned, they’re complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful, ethical, and learned, but not a Dhamma speaker. … they don’t frequent assemblies … they don’t teach Dhamma to the assembly with assurance … they don’t get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty … they don’t realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, one who gets the four absorptions when they want, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements?’

When they’re faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, one who gets the four absorptions when they want, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements, they’re complete in that respect. A mendicant who has these eight qualities is inspiring all around, and is complete in every respect.”

AN 8.72

AN 8.72
Inspiring All Around (2nd)
Dutiyasaddhāsutta

“A mendicant is faithful, but not ethical. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful and ethical?’ When the mendicant is faithful and ethical, they’re complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but not learned. … they’re not a Dhamma speaker … they don’t frequent assemblies … they don’t teach Dhamma to the assembly with assurance … they don’t have direct meditative experience of the peaceful liberations that are formless, transcending form … they don’t realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, one who gets the formless liberations, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements?’

When they’re faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, one who gets the formless liberations, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements, they’re complete in that respect. A mendicant who has these eight qualities is inspiring all around, and is complete in every respect.”

AN 8.73

AN 8.73
Mindfulness of Death (1st)
Paṭhamamaraṇassatisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, when mindfulness of death is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death. But do you develop mindfulness of death?”

When he said this, one of the mendicants said to the Buddha, “Sir, I develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live for another day and night, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live for another day, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live for half a day, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to eat a single almsmeal, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to eat half an almsmeal, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to chew and swallow four or five mouthfuls, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to chew and swallow a single mouthful, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

Another mendicant said to the Buddha, “Sir, I too develop mindfulness of death.”

“But mendicant, how do you develop it?”

“In this case, sir, I think: ‘Oh, if I’d only live as long as it takes to breathe out after breathing in, or to breathe in after breathing out, I’d focus on the Buddha’s instructions and I could really achieve a lot.’ That’s how I develop mindfulness of death.”

When this was said, the Buddha said to those mendicants:

“The mendicants who develop mindfulness of death by wishing to live for a day and night … or to live for a day … or to live for half a day … or to live as long as it takes to eat a meal of almsfood … or to live as long as it takes to eat half a meal of almsfood … or to live as long as it takes to chew and swallow four or five mouthfuls … These are called mendicants who live negligently. They slackly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.

But the mendicants who develop mindfulness of death by wishing to live as long as it takes to chew and swallow a single mouthful … or to live as long as it takes to breathe out after breathing in, or to breathe in after breathing out … These are called mendicants who live diligently. They keenly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.

So you should train like this: ‘We will live diligently. We will keenly develop mindfulness of death for the ending of defilements.’ That’s how you should train.”

AN 8.74

AN 8.74
Mindfulness of Death (2nd)
Dutiyamaraṇassatisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, when mindfulness of death is developed and cultivated it’s very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death.

And how is mindfulness of death developed and cultivated to be very fruitful and beneficial, to culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death? As day passes by and night draws close, a mendicant reflects: ‘I might die of many causes. A snake might bite me, or a scorpion or centipede might sting me. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. Or I might stumble off a cliff, or get food poisoning, or suffer a disturbance of bile, phlegm, or piercing winds. Or I might be attacked by humans or non-humans. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress.’ That mendicant should reflect: ‘Are there any bad, unskillful qualities that I haven’t given up, which might be an obstacle to my progress if I die tonight?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are such bad, unskillful qualities. Then in order to give them up they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness.

Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you’d apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are no such bad, unskillful qualities. Then that mendicant should meditate with rapture and joy, training day and night in skillful qualities.

Or else, as night passes by and day draws close, a mendicant reflects: ‘I might die of many causes. A snake might bite me, or a scorpion or centipede might sting me. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress. Or I might stumble off a cliff, or get food poisoning, or suffer a disturbance of bile, phlegm, or piercing winds. Or I might be attacked by humans or non-humans. And if I died from that it would be an obstacle to my progress.’ That mendicant should reflect: ‘Are there any bad, unskillful qualities that I haven’t given up, which might be an obstacle to my progress if I die today?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are such bad, unskillful qualities. Then in order to give them up they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness.

Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you'd apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows that there are no such bad, unskillful qualities. Then that mendicant should meditate with rapture and joy, training day and night in skillful qualities. Mindfulness of death, when developed and cultivated in this way, is very fruitful and beneficial. It culminates in freedom from death and ends in freedom from death."

AN 8.75

AN 8.75
Accomplishments (1st)
Paṭhamasampadāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight accomplishments. What eight? Accomplishment in initiative, protection, good friendship, and balanced finances. And accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. These are the eight accomplishments.

They’re enterprising in the workplace, diligent in managing things, they balance their finances, and preserve their wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess, they always purify the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so these eight qualities of a faithful householder are declared by the one who is truly named to lead to happiness in both spheres, welfare and benefit in this life, and happiness in lives to come. This is how, for a householder, merit grows by generosity.”

AN 8.76

AN 8.76
Accomplishments (2nd)
Dutiyasampadāsutta

“Mendicants, there are these eight accomplishments. What eight? Accomplishment in initiative, protection, good friendship, and balanced finances. And accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom.

And what is accomplishment in initiative? It’s when a gentleman earns a living by means such as farming, trade, raising cattle, archery, government service, or one of the professions. He understands how to go about these things in order to complete and organize the work. This is called accomplishment in initiative.

And what is accomplishment in protection? It’s when a gentleman owns legitimate wealth that he has earned by his own efforts and initiative, built up with his own hands, gathered by the sweat of the brow. He ensures it is guarded and protected, thinking: ‘How can I prevent my wealth from being taken by rulers or bandits, consumed by fire, swept away by flood, or taken by unloved heirs?’ This is called accomplishment in protection.

And what is accomplishment in good friendship? It’s when a gentleman resides in a town or village. And in that place there are householders or their children who may be young or old, but are mature in conduct, accomplished in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. He associates with them, converses and engages in discussion. And he emulates the same kind of accomplishment in faith, ethics, generosity, and wisdom. This is called accomplishment in good friendship.

And what is accomplishment in balanced finances? It’s when a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ It’s like an appraiser or their apprentice who, holding up the scales, knows that it’s low by this much or high by this much. In the same way, a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, balances his finances, being neither too extravagant nor too frugal. He thinks, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ If a gentleman has little income but an opulent life, people will say: ‘This gentleman eats their wealth like a fig-eater!’ If a gentleman has a large income but a spartan life, people will say: ‘This gentleman is starving themselves to death!’ But a gentleman, knowing his income and expenditure, leads a balanced life, neither too extravagant nor too frugal, thinking, ‘In this way my income will exceed my expenditure, not the reverse.’ This is called accomplishment in balanced finances.

And what is accomplishment in faith? It’s when a gentleman has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha … teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ This is called accomplishment in faith.

And what is accomplishment in ethics? It’s when a gentleman doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or consume alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. This is called accomplishment in ethics.

And what is accomplishment in generosity? It’s when a gentleman lives at home rid of the stain of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share. This is called accomplishment in generosity.

And what is accomplishment in wisdom? It’s when a gentleman is wise. He has the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is called accomplishment in wisdom.

These are the eight accomplishments.

They’re enterprising in the workplace, diligent in managing things, they balance their finances, and preserve their wealth.

Faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess, they always purify the path to well-being in lives to come.

And so these eight qualities of a faithful householder are declared by the one who is truly named to lead to happiness in both spheres, welfare and benefit in this life, and happiness in the next. This is how, for a householder, merit grows by generosity.”

AN 8.77

AN 8.77
Desires
Icchāsutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“Reverends, these eight people are found in the world. What eight?

First, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions don’t come to them. And so they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions don’t come to them, they sorrow and lament. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions do come to them. And so they become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions come to them, they become intoxicated and negligent. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions don’t come to them. And so they sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don’t get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions don’t come to them, they sorrow and lament. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions do come to them. And so they become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don’t try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions come to them, they become intoxicated and negligent. They’ve fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions don't come to them. But they don't sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don't get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions don't come to them, they don't sorrow and lament. They haven't fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions do come to them. But they don't become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But when possessions come to them, they don't become intoxicated and negligent. They haven't fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don't try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And material possessions don't come to them. But they don't sorrow and wail and lament, beating their breast and falling into confusion because they don't get those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don't try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions don't come to them, they don't sorrow and lament. They haven't fallen from the true teaching.

Next, when a mendicant stays secluded, living independently, a desire arises for material possessions. They don't try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. But material possessions do come to them. But they don't become indulgent and fall into negligence regarding those material possessions. This is called a mendicant who lives desiring material possessions. They don't try hard, strive, and make an effort to get them. And when possessions come to them, they don't become intoxicated and negligent. They haven't fallen from the true teaching.

These eight people are found in the world."

AN 8.78

AN 8.78
Good Enough
Alaṁsutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, a mendicant with six qualities is good enough for themselves and others. What six? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these six qualities is good enough for themselves and others.

A mendicant with five qualities is good enough for themselves and others. What five? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these five qualities is good enough for themselves and others.

A mendicant with four qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What four? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these four qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with four qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What four? A mendicant is quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. But they don’t examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these four qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.

A mendicant with three qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What three? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly.

They’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these three qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with three qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What three? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. They readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. But they don’t examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these three qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.

A mendicant with two qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others. What two? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. And they don’t readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. They examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they practice accordingly. They’re not a good speaker. Their voice isn’t polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning. They don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these two qualities is good enough for themselves but not for others.

A mendicant with two qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves. What two? A mendicant is not quick-witted when it comes to skillful teachings. And they don’t readily memorize the teachings they’ve heard. Nor do they examine the meaning of teachings they’ve memorized. Understanding the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. They’re a good speaker. Their voice is polished, clear, articulate, and expresses the meaning. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. A mendicant with these two qualities is good enough for others but not for themselves.”

AN 8.79

AN 8.79
Decline
Parihānasutta

“These eight things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What eight? They relish work, talk, sleep, and company. They don’t guard the sense doors and they eat too much. They relish closeness and proliferation. These eight things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These eight things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What eight? They don’t relish work, talk, and sleep. They guard the sense doors, and they don’t eat too much. They don’t relish closeness and proliferation. These eight things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.”

AN 8.80

AN 8.80
Grounds for Laziness and Arousing Energy
Kusītārambhavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are eight grounds for laziness. What eight?

Firstly, a mendicant has some work to do. They think: ‘I have some work to do. But while doing it my body will get tired. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the first ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has done some work. They think: ‘I’ve done some work. But while working my body got tired. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the second ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has to go on a journey. They think: ‘I have to go on a journey. But while walking my body will get tired. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the third ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has gone on a journey. They think: ‘I’ve gone on a journey. But while walking my body got tired. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the fourth ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has wandered for alms, but they didn’t get to fill up on as much food as they like, rough or fine. They think: ‘I’ve wandered for alms, but I didn’t get to fill up on as much food as I like, rough or fine. My body is tired and unfit for work. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for achieving the unachieved, attaining the unattained, and realizing the unrealized. This is the fifth ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has wandered for alms, and they got to fill up on as much food as they like, rough or fine. They think: ‘I’ve wandered for alms, and I got to fill up on as much food as I like, rough or fine. My body is heavy, unfit for work, like I’ve just eaten a load of beans. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for achieving the unachieved, attaining the unattained, and realizing the unrealized. This is the sixth ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant feels a little sick. They think: ‘I feel a little sick. Lying down would be good for me. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for achieving the unachieved, attaining the unattained, and realizing the unrealized. This is the seventh ground for laziness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has recently recovered from illness. They think: ‘I’ve recently recovered from illness. My body is weak and unfit for work. I’d better have a lie down.’ They lie down, and don’t rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the eighth ground for laziness. These are the eight grounds for laziness.

There are eight grounds for arousing energy. What eight? Firstly, a mendicant has some work to do. They think: ‘I have some work to do. While working it’s not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ They rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the first ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has done some work. They think: ‘I’ve done some work. While I was working I wasn’t able to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ They rouse up energy … This is the second ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has to go on a journey. They think: ‘I have to go on a journey. While walking it’s not easy to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy …’ … This is the third ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has gone on a journey. They think: ‘I’ve gone on a journey. While I was walking I wasn’t able to focus on the instructions of the Buddhas. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy …’ … This is the fourth ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has wandered for alms, but they didn’t get to fill up on as much food as they like, rough or fine. They think: ‘I’ve wandered for alms, but I didn’t get to fill up on as much food as I like, rough or fine. My body is light and fit for work. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy …’ … This is the fifth ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has wandered for alms, and they got to fill up on as much food as they like, rough or fine. They think: ‘I’ve wandered for alms, and I got to fill up on as much food as I like, rough or fine. My body is strong and fit for work. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy …’ … This is the sixth ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant feels a little sick. They think: ‘I feel a little sick. It’s possible this illness will worsen. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy …’ … This is the seventh ground for arousing energy.

Furthermore, a mendicant has recently recovered from illness. They think: ‘I’ve recently recovered from illness. It’s possible the illness will come back. I’d better preemptively rouse up energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized.’ They rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. This is the eighth ground for arousing energy.

These are the eight grounds for arousing energy.”

AN 8.81

AN 8.81
Mindfulness and Situational Awareness
Satisampajaññasutta

“Mendicants, when there is no mindfulness and situational awareness, one who lacks mindfulness and situational awareness has destroyed a vital condition for conscience and prudence. When there is no conscience and prudence, one who lacks conscience and prudence has destroyed a vital condition for sense restraint. When there is no sense restraint, one who lacks sense restraint has destroyed a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is no ethical conduct, one who lacks ethics has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is no mindfulness and situational awareness, one who lacks mindfulness and situational awareness has destroyed a vital condition for conscience and prudence. When there is no conscience and prudence … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

When there is mindfulness and situational awareness, one who has fulfilled mindfulness and situational awareness has fulfilled a vital condition for conscience and prudence. When there is conscience and prudence, a person who has fulfilled conscience and prudence has fulfilled a vital condition for sense restraint. When there is sense restraint, one who has sense restraint has fulfilled a vital condition for ethical conduct. When there is ethical conduct, one who has fulfilled ethical conduct has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, when there is mindfulness and situational awareness, one who has fulfilled mindfulness and situational awareness has fulfilled a vital condition for conscience and prudence. When there is conscience and prudence … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 8.82

AN 8.82
With Puṇṇiya
Puṇṇiyasutta

Then Venerable Puṇṇiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, what is the cause, what is the reason why sometimes the Realized One feels inspired to teach, and other times not?”

“Puṇṇiya, when a mendicant has faith but doesn’t approach, the Realized One doesn’t feel inspired to teach. But when a mendicant has faith and approaches, the Realized One feels inspired to teach. When a mendicant has faith and approaches, but doesn’t pay homage … they pay homage, but don’t ask questions … they ask questions, but don’t actively listen … they actively listen, but don’t remember the teaching they’ve heard … they remember the teaching they’ve heard, but don’t reflect on the meaning of the teachings they’ve remembered … they reflect on the meaning of the teachings they’ve remembered, but, having understood the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly. The Realized One doesn’t feel inspired to teach.

But when a mendicant has faith, approaches, pays homage, asks questions, actively listens, remembers the teachings, reflects on the meaning, and practices accordingly, the Realized One feels inspired to teach. When someone has these eight qualities, the Realized One feels totally inspired to teach.”

AN 8.83

AN 8.83
Rooted
Mūlakasutta

“Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: ‘Reverends, all things have what as their root? What produces them? What is their origin? What is their meeting place? What is their chief? What is their ruler? What is their overseer? What is their core?’ How would you answer them?”

“Our teachings are rooted in the Buddha. He is our guide and our refuge. Sir, may the Buddha himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Well then, mendicants, I will teach it. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: ‘Reverends, all things have what as their root? What produces them? What is their origin? What is their meeting place? What is their chief? What is their ruler? What is their overseer? What is their core?’ You should answer them: ‘Reverends, all things are rooted in desire. They are produced by application of mind. Contact is their origin. Feeling is their meeting place. Immersion is their chief. Mindfulness is their ruler. Wisdom is their overseer. Freedom is their core.’ When questioned by wanderers of other religions, that’s how you should answer them.”

AN 8.84

AN 8.84
A Master Thief
Corasutta

“Mendicants, a master thief with eight factors is soon executed, and doesn’t have long to live. What eight? He attacks unprovoked. He steals everything without exception. He kills a woman. He rapes a girl. He robs a monk. He robs the royal treasury. He works close to home. He’s not skilled at hiding his booty. A master thief with these eight factors is soon executed, and doesn’t have long to live.

A master thief with eight factors is not soon executed, and lives long. What eight? He doesn’t attack unprovoked. He doesn’t steal everything without exception. He doesn’t kill a woman. He doesn’t rape a girl. He doesn’t rob a monk. He doesn’t rob the royal treasury. He doesn’t work close to home. He’s skilled at hiding his booty. A master thief with these eight factors is not soon executed, and lives long.”

AN 8.85

AN 8.85
Terms for the Realized One
Samaṇasutta

“‘Ascetic’ is a term for the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. ‘Brahmin’, ‘Knowledge Master’, ‘Healer’, ‘Unstained’, ‘Immaculate’, ‘Knower’, and ‘Freed’ are terms for the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha.

The supreme should be attained by an ascetic, a brahmin who has lived the life; it should be attained by a knowledge master, a healer.

The supreme should be attained by the unstained, stainless and pure; it should be attained by a knower, who is free.

I am victorious in battle! Released, I release others from their chains. I am a dragon completely tamed, an adept, I am extinguished.”

AN 8.86

AN 8.86
With Nāgita
Yasasutta

At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a village of the Kosalan brahmins named Icchānaṅgala. He stayed in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. The brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala heard:

“It seems the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—has arrived at Icchānaṅgala. He is staying in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. He has this good reputation: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ … It’s good to see such perfected ones.”

Then, when the night had passed, they took abundant fresh and cooked foods and went to the forest near Icchānaṅgala, where they stood outside the gates making a dreadful racket.

Now, at that time Venerable Nāgita was the Buddha’s attendant. Then the Buddha said to Nāgita, “Nāgita, who’s making that dreadful racket? You’d think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!”

“Sir, it’s these brahmins and householders of Icchānaṅgala. They’ve brought abundant fresh and cooked foods, and they’re standing outside the gates wanting to offer it specially to the Buddha and the mendicant Saṅgha.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.”

“Sir, may the Blessed One please relent now! May the Holy One relent! Now is the time for the Buddha to relent. Wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. It’s like when it rains heavily and the water flows downhill. In the same way, wherever the Buddha now goes, the brahmins and householders will incline the same way, as will the people of town and country. Why is that? Because of the Buddha’s ethics and wisdom.”

“Nāgita, may I never become famous. May fame not come to me. There are those who can’t get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. Let them enjoy the filthy, lazy pleasure of possessions, honor, and popularity.

Even some of the deities can't get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. When you all come together to enjoy each other's company, I think: 'These venerables mustn't get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. That must be because they come together to enjoy each other's company.'

Take mendicants I see poking each other with their fingers, giggling and playing together. I think to myself: 'These venerables mustn't get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. That must be because they're poking each other with their fingers, giggling and playing together.'

Take mendicants I see eat as much as they like until their bellies are full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing. I think to myself: 'These venerables mustn't get the bliss of renunciation, the bliss of seclusion, the bliss of peace, the bliss of awakening when they want, without trouble or difficulty like I can. That must be because they eat as much as they like until their bellies are full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing.'

Take a mendicant living within a village who I see sitting immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: 'Now a monastery worker, a novice, or a fellow practitioner will make this venerable fall from immersion.' So I'm not pleased that that mendicant is living within a village.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting nodding in meditation. I think to myself: 'Now this venerable, having dispelled that sleepiness and weariness, will focus just on the unified perception of wilderness.' So I'm pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting without being immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: 'Now if this venerable's mind is not immersed in samādhi they will immerse it; or if it is immersed in samādhi, they will preserve it.' So I'm pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant in the wilderness who I see sitting immersed in samādhi. I think to myself: 'Now this venerable will free the unfreed mind or preserve the freed mind.' So I'm pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Take a mendicant who I see living within a village receiving robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Enjoying possessions, honor, and popularity they neglect retreat, and they neglect remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. They come down to villages, towns and capital cities and make their homes there. So I'm not pleased that that mendicant is living within a village.

Take a mendicant who I see in the wilderness receiving robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Fending off possessions, honor, and popularity they don't neglect retreat, and they don't neglect remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. So I'm pleased that that mendicant is living in the wilderness.

Nāgita, when I’m walking along a road and I don’t see anyone ahead or behind I feel relaxed, even if I need to urinate or defecate.”

AN 8.87

AN 8.87
Turning the Bowl Upside Down
Pattanikujjanasutta

“Mendicants, the Saṅgha may, if it wishes, turn the bowl upside down for a lay follower on eight grounds. What eight? They try to prevent the mendicants from getting material possessions. They try to harm mendicants. They try to drive mendicants from a monastery. They insult and abuse mendicants. They divide mendicants against each other. They criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, turn the bowl upside down for a lay follower on these eight grounds.

The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, turn the bowl upright for a lay follower on eight grounds. What eight? They don’t try to prevent the mendicants from getting material possessions. They don’t try to harm mendicants. They don’t try to drive mendicants from a monastery. They don’t insult and abuse mendicants. They don’t divide mendicants against each other. They don’t criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, turn the bowl upright for a lay follower on these eight grounds.”

AN 8.88

AN 8.88
A Proclamation of No Confidence
Appasādapavedanīyasutta

“Mendicants, the lay followers may, if they wish, make a proclamation of no confidence in a mendicant who has eight qualities. What eight? They try to prevent the lay people from getting material possessions. They try to harm lay people. They insult and abuse lay people. They divide lay people against each other. They criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They’re seen at an inappropriate place for collecting alms. The lay followers may, if they wish, make a proclamation of no confidence in a mendicant who has these eight qualities.

The lay followers may, if they wish, make a proclamation of confidence in a mendicant who has eight qualities. What eight? They don’t try to prevent the lay people from getting material possessions. They don’t try to harm lay people. They don’t insult and abuse lay people. They don’t divide lay people against each other. They don’t criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They’re not seen at an inappropriate place for collecting alms. The lay followers may, if they wish, make a proclamation of confidence in a mendicant who has these eight qualities.”

AN 8.89

AN 8.89
Reconciliation
Paṭisāraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, the Saṅgha may, if it wishes, perform an act requiring that a mendicant who has eight qualities should pursue reconciliation. What eight? They try to prevent the lay people from getting material possessions. They try to harm lay people. They insult and abuse lay people. They divide lay people against each other. They criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They don’t keep a legitimate promise made to a lay person. The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, perform an act requiring that a mendicant who has eight qualities should pursue reconciliation.

The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, revoke the act requiring that a mendicant who has eight qualities should pursue reconciliation. What eight? They don’t try to prevent the lay people from getting material possessions. They don’t try to harm lay people. They don’t insult and abuse lay people. They don’t divide lay people against each other. They don’t criticize the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They keep a legitimate promise made to a lay person. The Saṅgha may, if it wishes, revoke the act requiring that a mendicant who has eight qualities should pursue reconciliation.”

AN 8.90

AN 8.90
Proper Behavior in a Case of Aggravated Misconduct
Sammāvattanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant who has been convicted of aggravated misconduct must behave themselves properly in eight respects. They must not perform an ordination, give dependence, or be attended by a novice. They must not consent to being appointed as adviser for nuns, and if they are appointed they should not give such advice. They must not consent to any Saṅgha appointment. They must not be put in an isolated place. They must not resolve others from any offense similar to that which they have transgressed. A mendicant who has been convicted of aggravated misconduct must behave themselves properly in these eight respects.”

AN 8.91-117

AN 8.91–117
Untitled Discourses With Various Laywomen on the Sabbath
Sāmaññavagga

And then the lay woman Bojjhā … Sirīmā … Padumā … Sutanā … Manujā … Uttarā … Muttā … Khemā … Somā … Rucī … Cundī … Bimbī … Sumanā … Mallikā … Tissā … Tissamātā … Soṇā … Soṇā's mother … Kāṇā … Kāṇamātā … Uttarā Nanda's mother … Visākhā Migāra's mother … the lay woman Khujjuttarā … the lay woman Sāmāvatī … Suppavāsā the Koliyan … the lay woman Suppiyā … the housewife Nakula's mother …

AN 8.118

AN 8.118
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“For insight into greed, eight things should be developed. What eight? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, and right immersion. For insight into greed, these eight things should be developed.”

AN 8.119

AN 8.119
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)

~

“For insight into greed, eight things should be developed. What eight? Perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ Perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. … Not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. … Not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. … Not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, blue, with blue color and blue appearance. … yellow … red … Not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally, white, with white color and white appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ For insight into greed, these eight things should be developed.”

AN 8.120

AN 8.120
Untitled Discourse on Greed (3rd)

~

“For insight into greed, eight things should be developed. What eight? Having physical form, they see forms … not perceiving form internally, they see forms externally … they’re focused only on beauty … going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space … going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness … going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness … going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception … going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, they enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling … For insight into greed, these eight things should be developed.”

AN 8.121-147

AN 8.121–147
Untitled Discourses on Greed

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go … these eight things should be developed.”

AN 8.148-627

AN 8.148–627
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

"Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for insight into negligence … complete understanding … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of negligence these eight things should be developed."

The Book of the Eights is finished.

AN 9.1

AN 9.1
Awakening
Sambodhisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

"Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: 'Reverends, what is the vital condition for the development of the awakening factors?' How would you answer them?"

"Our teachings are rooted in the Buddha. … The mendicants will listen and remember it."

"Well then, mendicants, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: 'Reverends, what is the vital condition for the development of the awakening factors?' You should answer them:

'It's when a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. This is the first vital condition for the development of the awakening factors.

Furthermore, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they've undertaken. This is the second vital condition for the development of the awakening factors.

Furthermore, a mendicant gets to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. This is the third vital condition for the development of the awakening factors.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is the fourth vital condition for the development of the awakening factors.

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is the fifth vital condition for the development of the awakening factors.'

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be ethical …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to live with energy roused up …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be wise …

But then, a mendicant grounded on these five things should develop four further things. They should develop the perception of ugliness to give up greed, love to give up hate, mindfulness of breathing to cut off thinking, and perception of impermanence to uproot the conceit ‘I am’. When you perceive impermanence, the perception of not-self becomes stabilized. Perceiving not-self, you uproot the conceit ‘I am’ and attain extinguishment in this very life.”

AN 9.2

AN 9.2
Supported
Nissayasutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, they speak of being ‘supported’. How is a mendicant who is supported defined?”

“Mendicant, if a mendicant supported by faith gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, the unskillful is actually given up by them.

If a mendicant supported by conscience …

If a mendicant supported by prudence …

If a mendicant supported by energy …

If a mendicant supported by wisdom gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful, the unskillful is actually given up by them. What’s been given up is completely given up when it has been given up by seeing with noble wisdom.

But then, a mendicant grounded on these five things should rely on four things. What four? After appraisal, a mendicant uses some things, endures some things, avoids some things, and gets rid of some things. That’s how a mendicant is supported.”

AN 9.3

AN 9.3
With Meghiya
Meghiyasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Cālikā, on the Cālikā mountain.

Now, at that time Venerable Meghiya was the Buddha's attendant. Then Venerable Meghiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, "Sir, I'd like to enter Jantu village for alms."

"Please, Meghiya, go at your convenience."

Then Meghiya robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Jantu village for alms. After the meal, on his return from almsround in Jantu village, he went to the shore of Kimikālā river. As he was going for a walk along the shore of the river he saw a lovely and delightful mango grove.

It occurred to him, "Oh, this mango grove is lovely and delightful! This is good enough for striving for a gentleman wanting to strive. If the Buddha allows me, I'll come back to this mango grove to meditate."

Then Venerable Meghiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened, adding, "If the Buddha allows me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate."

"We're alone, Meghiya. Wait until another mendicant comes."

For a second time Meghiya said to the Buddha, "Sir, the Buddha has nothing more to do, and nothing that needs improvement. But I have. If you allow me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate."

"We're alone, Meghiya. Wait until another mendicant comes."

For a third time Meghiya said to the Buddha, "Sir, the Buddha has nothing more to do, and nothing that needs improvement. But I have. If you allow me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate."

"Meghiya, since you speak of striving in meditation, what can I say? Please, Meghiya, go at your convenience."

Then Meghiya got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right. Then he went to that mango grove, and, having plunged deep into it, sat at the root of a certain tree for the day's meditation. But while Meghiya was meditating in that mango grove he was beset mostly by three kinds of bad, unskillful thoughts, namely, sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts.

Then he thought, “Oh, how incredible, how amazing! I’ve gone forth from the lay life to homelessness out of faith, but I’m still harassed by these three kinds of bad, unskillful thoughts: sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts.”

Then Venerable Meghiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

“Meghiya, when the heart’s release is not ripe, five things help it ripen. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. This is the first thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant gets to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. This is the third thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is the fifth thing that, when the heart’s release is not ripe, helps it ripen.

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be ethical …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be energetic …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be wise …

But then, a mendicant grounded on these five things should develop four further things. They should develop the perception of ugliness to give up greed, love to give up hate, mindfulness of breathing to cut off thinking, and perception of impermanence to uproot the conceit ‘I am’. When you perceive impermanence, the perception of not-self becomes stabilized. Perceiving not-self, you uproot the conceit ‘I am’ and attain extinguishment in this very life.”

AN 9.4

AN 9.4
With Nandaka
Nandakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time Venerable Nandaka was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants in the assembly hall with a Dhamma talk. Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall. He stood outside the door waiting for the talk to end. When he knew the talk had ended he cleared his throat and knocked with the latch. The mendicants opened the door for the Buddha, and he entered the assembly hall, where he sat on the seat spread out.

He said to Nandaka, "Nandaka, that was a long exposition of the teaching you gave to the mendicants. My back was aching while I stood outside the door waiting for the talk to end."

When he said this, Nandaka felt embarrassed and said to the Buddha, "Sir, we didn't know that the Buddha was standing outside the door. If we'd known, I wouldn't have said so much."

Then the Buddha, knowing that Nandaka was embarrassed, said to him, "Good, good, Nandaka! It's appropriate for gentlemen like you, who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness, to sit together for a Dhamma talk. When you're sitting together you should do one of two things: discuss the teachings or keep noble silence.

Nandaka, a mendicant is faithful but not ethical. So they're incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking, 'How can I become faithful and ethical?' When a mendicant is faithful and ethical, they're complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but does not get internal serenity of heart. So they're incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking, 'How can I become faithful and ethical and get internal serenity of heart?' When a mendicant is faithful and ethical and gets internal serenity of heart, they're complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful, ethical, and gets internal serenity of heart, but they don't get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles. So they're incomplete in that respect. Suppose, Nandaka, there was a four-footed animal that was lame and disabled. It would be incomplete in that respect. In the same way, a mendicant is faithful, ethical, and gets internal serenity of heart, but they don't get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles. So they're incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking, 'How can I become faithful and ethical and get internal serenity of heart and get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles?'

When a mendicant is faithful and ethical and gets internal serenity of heart and gets the higher wisdom of discernment of principles, they're complete in that respect."

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Then soon after the Buddha left, Venerable Nandaka said to the mendicants, "Just now, reverends, the Buddha explained a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure in four statements, before getting up from his seat and entering his dwelling:

'Nandaka, a mendicant is faithful but not ethical. So they're incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking, "How can I become faithful and ethical?" When a mendicant is faithful and ethical, they're complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but does not get internal serenity of heart. …

They get internal serenity of heart, but they don't get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles. So they're incomplete in that respect. Suppose, Nandaka, there was a four-footed animal that was lame and disabled. It would be incomplete in that respect. In the same way, a mendicant is faithful, ethical, and gets internal serenity of heart, but they don't get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles. So they're incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: "How can I become faithful and ethical and get internal serenity of heart and get the higher wisdom of discernment of principles?" When a mendicant is faithful and ethical and gets internal serenity of heart and gets the higher wisdom of discernment of principles, they're complete in that respect.'

Reverends, there are these five benefits of listening to the teachings at the right time and discussing the teachings at the right time. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant teaches the mendicants the Dhamma that's good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And they reveal a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. Whenever they do this, they become liked and approved by the Teacher, respected and admired. This is the first benefit …

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches the mendicants the Dhamma … Whenever they do this, they feel inspired by the meaning and the teaching in that Dhamma. This is the second benefit …

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches the mendicants the Dhamma … Whenever they do this, they see the meaning of a deep saying in that Dhamma with penetrating wisdom. This is the third benefit …

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches the mendicants the Dhamma … Whenever they do this, their spiritual companions esteem them more highly, thinking, 'For sure this venerable has attained or will attain.' This is the fourth benefit …

Furthermore, a mendicant teaches the mendicants the Dhamma … Whenever they do this, there may be trainee mendicants present, who haven't achieved their heart's desire, but live aspiring to the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. Hearing that teaching, they rouse energy for attaining the unattained, achieving the unachieved, and realizing the unrealized. There may be perfected mendicants present, who have ended the defilements, completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and are rightly freed through enlightenment. Hearing that teaching, they simply live happily in the present life. This is the fifth benefit …

These are the five benefits of listening to the teachings at the right time and discussing the teachings at the right time."

AN 9.5

AN 9.5
Powers
Balasutta

“Mendicants, there are these four powers. What four? The powers of wisdom, energy, blamelessness, and inclusiveness.

And what is the power of wisdom? One has clearly seen and clearly contemplated with wisdom those qualities that are skillful and considered to be skillful; those that are unskillful … blameworthy … blameless … dark … bright … to be cultivated … not to be cultivated … not worthy of the noble ones … worthy of the noble ones and considered to be worthy of the noble ones. This is called the power of wisdom.

And what is the power of energy? One generates enthusiasm, tries, makes an effort, exerts the mind, and strives to give up those qualities that are unskillful and considered to be unskillful; those that are blameworthy … dark … not to be cultivated … not worthy of the noble ones and considered to be not worthy of the noble ones. One generates enthusiasm, tries, makes an effort, exerts the mind, and strives to gain those qualities that are skillful and considered to be skillful; those that are blameless … bright … to be cultivated … worthy of the noble ones and considered to be worthy of the noble ones. This is called the power of energy.

And what is the power of blamelessness? It’s when a noble disciple has blameless conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. This is called the power of blamelessness.

And what is the power of inclusiveness? There are these four ways of being inclusive. Giving, kindly words, taking care, and equality. The best of gifts is the gift of the teaching. The best sort of kindly speech is to teach the Dhamma again and again to someone who is engaged and who actively listens. The best way of taking care is to encourage, settle, and ground the unfaithful in faith, the unethical in ethics, the stingy in generosity, and the ignorant in wisdom. The best kind of equality is the equality of a stream-enterer with another stream-enterer, a once-returner with another once-returner, a non-returner with another non-returner, and a perfected one with another perfected one. This is called the power of inclusiveness. These are the four powers.

A noble disciple who has these four powers has got past five fears. What five? Fear regarding livelihood, disrepute, feeling insecure in an assembly, death, and bad rebirth.

Then that noble disciple reflects: ‘I have no fear regarding livelihood. Why would I be afraid of that? I have these four powers: the powers of wisdom, energy, blamelessness, and inclusiveness. A witless person might fear for their livelihood. A lazy person might fear for their livelihood. A person who does blameworthy things by way of body, speech, and mind might fear for their livelihood. A person who does not include others might fear for their livelihood. I have no fear of disrepute … I have no fear about feeling insecure in an assembly … I have no fear of death … I have no fear of a bad rebirth. Why would I be afraid of that? I have these four powers: the powers of wisdom, energy, blamelessness, and inclusiveness. A witless person might be afraid of a bad rebirth. A lazy person might be afraid of a bad rebirth. A person who does blameworthy things by way of body, speech, and mind might be afraid of a bad rebirth. A person who does not include others might be afraid of a bad rebirth.'

A noble disciple who has these four powers has got past these five fears."

AN 9.6

AN 9.6
Association
Sevanāsutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“Reverends, you should distinguish two kinds of people: those you should associate with, and those you shouldn’t associate with. You should distinguish two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn’t wear. You should distinguish two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn’t eat. You should distinguish two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent. You should distinguish two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent. You should distinguish two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.

You should distinguish two kinds of people: those you should associate with, and those you shouldn’t associate with.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a person: ‘When I associate with this person, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline. And the necessities of life that a renunciate requires—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—are hard to come by. And the goal of the ascetic life for which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness is not being fully developed.’ In this case you should leave that person at that very time of the day or night, without asking. You shouldn’t follow them.

Whereas, should you know of a person: ‘When I associate with this person, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline. But the necessities of life that a renunciate requires—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—are easy to come by. However, the goal of the ascetic life for which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness is not being fully developed.’ In this case you should leave that person after reflecting, without asking. You shouldn’t follow them.

Well, should you know of a person: ‘When I associate with this person, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow. And the necessities of life that a renunciate requires—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—are hard to come by. But the goal of the ascetic life for which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness is being fully developed.’ In this case you should follow that person after appraisal. You shouldn’t leave them.

Whereas, should you know of a person: ‘When I associate with this person, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow. And the necessities of life that a renunciate requires—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—are easy to come by. And the goal of the ascetic life for which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness is being fully developed.’ In this case you should follow that person. You shouldn't leave them, even if they send you away. 'You should distinguish two kinds of people: those you should associate with, and those you shouldn't associate with.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'You should distinguish two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn't wear.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a robe: 'When I wear this robe, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.' You should not wear that kind of robe. Whereas, should you know of a robe: 'When I wear this robe, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.' You should wear that kind of robe. 'You should distinguish two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn't wear.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'You should distinguish two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn't eat.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of almsfood: 'When I eat this almsfood, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.' You should not eat that kind of almsfood. Whereas, should you know of almsfood: 'When I eat this almsfood, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.' You should eat that kind of almsfood. 'You should distinguish two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn't eat.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'You should distinguish two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a lodging: 'When I frequent this lodging, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.' You should not frequent that kind of lodging. Whereas, should you know of a lodging: 'When I frequent this lodging, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.' You should frequent that kind of lodging. 'You should distinguish two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'You should distinguish two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a market town: 'When I frequent this market town, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.' You should not frequent that kind of village or town. Whereas, should you know of a market town: 'When I frequent this market town, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.' You should frequent that kind of village or town. 'You should distinguish two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it.

'You should distinguish two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a country: 'When I frequent this country, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.' You should not frequent that kind of country. Whereas, should you know of a country: 'When I frequent this country, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.' You should frequent that kind of country. 'You should distinguish two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn't frequent.' That's what I said, and this is why I said it."

AN 9.7

AN 9.7
With Sutavā the Wanderer
Sutavāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain. Then the wanderer Sutavā went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

"Sir, one time the Buddha was staying right here in Rājagaha, the Mountainfold. There I heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in five respects. A mendicant with defilements ended can't deliberately take the life of a living creature, take something with the intention to steal, have sex, tell a deliberate lie, or store up goods for their own enjoyment like they did as a lay person.' I trust I properly heard, learned, applied the mind, and remembered that from the Buddha?"

"Indeed, Sutavā, you properly heard, learned, applied the mind, and remembered that. In the past, as today, I say this: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in nine respects. A mendicant with defilements ended can't deliberately take the life of a living creature, take something with the intention to steal, have sex, tell a deliberate lie, or store up goods for their own enjoyment like they did as a lay person. And they can't make decisions prejudiced by favoritism, hostility, stupidity, or cowardice.' In the past, as today, I say this: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in these nine respects.'"

AN 9.8

AN 9.8
With the Wanderer Sajjha
Sajjhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain. Then the wanderer Sajjha went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

"Sir, one time the Buddha was staying right here in Rājagaha, the Mountainfold. There I heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in five respects. A mendicant with defilements ended can't deliberately take the life of a living creature, take something with the intention to steal, have sex, tell a deliberate lie, or store up goods for their own enjoyment like they did as a lay person.' I trust I properly heard, learned, applied the mind, and remembered that from the Buddha?"

"Indeed, Sajjha, you properly heard, learned, applied the mind, and remembered that. In the past, as today, I say this: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in nine respects. A mendicant with defilements ended can't deliberately kill a living creature, take something with the intention to steal, have sex, tell a deliberate lie, or store up goods for their own enjoyment like they used to as a lay person. And they can't abandon the Buddha, the teaching, the Saṅgha, or the training.' In the past, as today, I say this: 'A mendicant who is perfected—with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment—can't transgress in these nine respects.'"

AN 9.9

AN 9.9
Persons
Puggalasutta

“Mendicants, these nine people are found in the world. What nine? The perfected one and the one practicing for perfection. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. And the ordinary person. These are the nine people found in the world.”

AN 9.10

AN 9.10
Worthy of Offerings Dedicated to the Gods
Āhuneyyasutta

“Mendicants, these nine people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What nine? The perfected one and the one practicing for perfection. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. And a member of the spiritual family. These are the nine people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 9.11

AN 9.11
Sāriputta's Lion's Roar
Sīhanādasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then Venerable Sāriputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, I have completed the rainy season residence at Sāvatthī. I wish to depart to wander the countryside."

"Please, Sāriputta, go at your convenience." Then Sāriputta got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

And then, not long after Sāriputta had left, a certain monk said to the Buddha, "Sir, Venerable Sāriputta attacked me and left without saying sorry."

So the Buddha addressed one of the monks, "Please, monk, in my name tell Sāriputta that the teacher summons him."

"Yes, sir," that monk replied. He went to Sāriputta and said to him, "Reverend Sāriputta, the teacher summons you."

"Yes, reverend," Sāriputta replied.

Now at that time the venerables Mahāmoggallāna and Ānanda took a key and went from dwelling to dwelling, saying: "Come forth, venerables! Come forth, venerables! Now Venerable Sāriputta will roar his lion's roar in the presence of the Buddha!"

Then Venerable Sāriputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Sāriputta, one of your spiritual companions has made this complaint: 'Venerable Sāriputta attacked me and left without saying sorry.'"

"Sir, someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose they were to toss both clean and unclean things on the earth, like feces, urine, spit, pus, and blood. The earth isn't horrified, repelled, and disgusted because of this. In the same way, I live with a heart like the earth, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose they were to wash both clean and unclean things in water, like feces, urine, spit, pus, and blood. The water isn't horrified, repelled, and disgusted because of this. In the same way, I live with a heart like water, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose a fire were to burn both clean and unclean things, like feces, urine, spit, pus, and blood. The fire isn't horrified, repelled, and disgusted because of this. In the same way, I live with a heart like fire, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose the wind was to blow on both clean and unclean things, like feces, urine, spit, pus, and blood. The wind isn't horrified, repelled, and disgusted because of this. In the same way, I live with a heart like the wind, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose a rag was to wipe up both clean and unclean things, like feces, urine, spit, pus, and blood. The rag isn't horrified, repelled, and disgusted because of this. In the same way, I live with a heart like a rag, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose a boy or girl of a corpse-worker tribe, holding a pot and clad in rags, were to enter a town or village. They'd enter with a humble mind. In the same way, I live with a heart like a boy or girl of a corpse-worker tribe, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose there was a bull with his horns cut, gentle, well tamed and well trained. He'd wander from street to street and square to square without hurting anyone with his feet or horns. In the same way, I live with a heart like a bull with horns cut, abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and had bathed their head. If the carcass of a snake or a dog or a human were hung around their neck, they'd be horrified, repelled, and disgusted. In the same way, I'm horrified, repelled, and disgusted by this rotten body. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry.

Suppose someone was to carry around a bowl of fat that was leaking and oozing from holes and cracks. In the same way, I carry around this body that's leaking and oozing from holes and cracks. Someone who had not established mindfulness of the body might well attack one of their spiritual companions and leave without saying sorry."

Then that monk rose from his seat, placed his robe over one shoulder, bowed with his head at the Buddha's feet, and said, "I have made a mistake, sir. It was foolish, stupid, and unskillful of me to speak ill of Venerable Sāriputta with an incorrect, hollow, false, untruthful claim. Please, sir, accept my mistake for what it is, so I will restrain myself in future."

"Indeed, monk, you made a mistake. It was foolish, stupid, and unskillful of you to act in that way. But since you have recognized your mistake for what it is, and have dealt with it properly, I accept it. For it is growth in the training of the Noble One to recognize a mistake for what it is, deal with it properly, and commit to restraint in the future."

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Sāriputta, "Sāriputta, forgive that silly man before his head explodes into seven pieces right here."

"I will pardon that venerable if he asks me: 'May the venerable please pardon me too.'"

AN 9.12

AN 9.12
With Something Left Over
Saupādisesasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then Venerable Sāriputta robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then it occurred to him, "It's too early to wander for alms in Sāvatthī. Why don't I visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?" Then he went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions and exchanged greetings with the wanderers there. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side.

Now at that time while those wanderers of other religions were sitting together this discussion came up among them:

"Reverends, no-one who dies with something left over is exempt from hell, the animal realm, or the ghost realm. They're not exempt from places of loss, bad places, the underworld."

Sāriputta neither approved nor dismissed that statement of the wanderers of other religions. He got up from his seat, thinking, "I will learn the meaning of this statement from the Buddha himself."

Then Sāriputta wandered for alms in Sāvatthī. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"Sāriputta, these foolish, incompetent wanderers following other religions: who are they to know whether someone has something left over or not?

There are these nine people who, dying with something left over, are exempt from hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. They're exempt from places of loss, bad places, the underworld. What nine?

There's a person who has fulfilled ethics and immersion, but has limited wisdom. With the ending of the five lower fetters they're extinguished between one life and the next. This is the first person …

Furthermore, there's a person who has fulfilled ethics and immersion, but has limited wisdom. With the ending of the five lower fetters they're extinguished upon landing. This is the second person …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they're extinguished without extra effort. This is the third person …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they're extinguished with extra effort. This is the fourth person …

With the ending of the five lower fetters they head upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. This is the fifth person …

Furthermore, there's a person who has fulfilled ethics, but has limited immersion and wisdom. With the ending of three fetters, and the weakening of greed, hate, and delusion, they're a once-returner. They come back to this world once only, then make an end of suffering. This is the sixth person …

Furthermore, there's a person who has fulfilled ethics, but has limited immersion and wisdom. With the ending of three fetters, they're a one-seeder. They will be reborn just one time in a human existence, then make an end of suffering. This is the seventh person …

Furthermore, there's a person who has fulfilled ethics, but has limited immersion and wisdom. With the ending of three fetters, they go from family to family. They will transmigrate between two or three families and then make an end of suffering. This is the eighth person …

Furthermore, there's a person who has fulfilled ethics, but has limited immersion and wisdom. With the ending of three fetters, they have at most seven rebirths. They will transmigrate at most seven times among gods and humans and then make an end of suffering. This is the ninth person …

These foolish, incompetent wanderers following other religions: who are they to know whether someone has something left over or not? These are the nine people who, dying with something left over, are exempt from hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. They're exempt from places of loss, bad places, the underworld.

Up until now, Sāriputta, I have not felt the need to give this exposition of the teaching to the monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen. Why is that? For I didn't want those who heard it to introduce negligence. However, I have spoken it in order to answer your question."

AN 9.13

AN 9.13
With Koṭṭhita
Koṭṭhikasutta

Then Venerable Mahākoṭṭhita went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to Sāriputta:

“Reverend Sāriputta, is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced in this life be experienced by me in lives to come’?”

“Certainly not, reverend.”

“Then is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced in lives to come be experienced by me in this life’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced as pleasant be experienced by me as painful’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Then is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced as painful be experienced by me as pleasant’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced when ripe be experienced by me when unripe’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Then is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced when unripe be experienced by me when ripe’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced a lot be experienced by me a little’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Then is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced a little be experienced by me a lot’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds to be experienced by me be not experienced’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Then is the spiritual life lived under the Buddha for this purpose: ‘May deeds not to be experienced be experienced’?”

“Certainly not.”

“Reverend Sāriputta, when you were asked whether the spiritual life was lived under the Buddha so that deeds to be experienced in this life are experienced in lives to come, you said, ‘Certainly not’.

When you were asked whether the spiritual life was lived under the Buddha so that deeds to be experienced in lives to come are experienced in this life …

deeds to be experienced as pleasant are experienced as painful …

deeds to be experienced as painful are experienced as pleasant …

deeds to be experienced when ripe are experienced when unripe …

deeds to be experienced when unripe are experienced when ripe …

deeds to be experienced a lot are experienced a little …

deeds to be experienced a little are experienced a lot …

deeds to be experienced are not experienced …

When you were asked whether the spiritual life was lived under the Buddha so that deeds not to be experienced are experienced, you said, ‘Certainly not.’ Then what exactly is the purpose of leading the spiritual life under the Buddha?”

“Reverend, the spiritual life is lived under the Buddha to know, see, attain, realize, and comprehend that which is unknown, unseen, unattained, unrealized, and uncomprehended.”

“But what is the unknown, unseen, unattained, unrealized, and uncomprehended?”

“‘This is suffering.’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering.’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering.’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering.’ … This is the unknown, unseen, unattained, unrealized, and uncomprehended. The spiritual life is lived under the Buddha to know, see, attain, realize, and comprehend this.”

AN 9.14

AN 9.14
With Samiddhi
Samiddhisutta

Then Venerable Samiddhi went up to Venerable Sāriputta, bowed, and sat to one side. Venerable Sāriputta said to him:

“Samiddhi, based on what do thoughts arise in a person?”

“Based on name and form, sir.”

“Where do they become diversified?”

“In the elements.”

“What is their origin?”

“Contact is their origin.”

“What is their meeting place?”

“Feeling is their meeting place.”

“What is their chief?”

“Immersion is their chief.”

“What is their ruler?”

“Mindfulness is their ruler.”

“What is their overseer?”

“Wisdom is their overseer.”

“What is their core?”

“Freedom is their core.”

“What is their culmination?”

“They culminate in freedom from death.”

“Samiddhi, when you were asked what is the basis on which thoughts arise in a person, you answered ‘name and form’. When you were asked … what is their culmination, you answered ‘freedom from death’. Good, good, Samiddhi! It’s good that you answered each question. But don’t get conceited because of that.”

AN 9.15

AN 9.15
The Simile of the Boil
Gaṇḍasutta

“Mendicants, suppose there was a boil that was many years old. And that boil had nine orifices that were continually open wounds. Whatever oozed out of them would be filthy, stinking, and disgusting. Whatever leaked out them would be filthy, stinking, and disgusting.

‘Boil’ is a term for this body made up of the four primary elements, produced by mother and father, built up from rice and porridge, liable to impermanence, to wearing away and erosion, to breaking up and destruction. And that boil has nine orifices that are continually open wounds. Whatever oozes out of them is filthy, stinking, and disgusting. Whatever leaks out of them is filthy, stinking, and disgusting. So, mendicants, have no illusion about this body.”

AN 9.16

AN 9.16
Perceptions
Saññāsutta

“Mendicants, these nine perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What nine? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, not-self in suffering, giving up, and fading away. These nine perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 9.17

AN 9.17
Families
Kulasutta

“Mendicants, visiting a family with nine factors is not worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is not worthwhile. What nine? They don’t politely rise, bow, or offer a seat. They hide what they have. Even when they have much they give little. Even when they have refined things they give coarse things. They give carelessly, not carefully. They don’t sit nearby to listen to the teachings. When you’re speaking, they don’t listen well. Visiting a family with these nine factors is not worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is not worthwhile.

Visiting a family with nine factors is worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is worthwhile. What nine? They politely rise, bow, and offer a seat. They don’t hide what they have. When they have much they give much. When they have refined things they give refined things. They give carefully, not carelessly. They sit nearby to listen to the teachings. When you’re speaking, they listen well. Visiting a family with these nine factors is worthwhile, or if you’ve already arrived, sitting down is worthwhile.”

AN 9.18

AN 9.18
The Sabbath with Nine Factors
Navaṅguposathasutta

“Mendicants, the observance of the sabbath with its nine factors is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful. And how should it be observed?

It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘As long as they live, the perfected ones give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They are scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I, too, for this day and night will give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. I’ll be scrupulous and kind, and live full of compassion for all living beings. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.’ This is its first factor. …

‘As long as they live, the perfected ones give up high and luxurious beds. They sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I, too, for this day and night will give up high and luxurious beds. I’ll sleep in a low place, either a small bed or a straw mat. I will observe the sabbath by doing as the perfected ones do in this respect.’ This is its eighth factor.

They meditate spreading a heart full of love to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of love to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. This is its ninth factor.

The observance of the sabbath with its nine factors in this way is very fruitful and beneficial and splendid and bountiful.”

AN 9.19

AN 9.19
A Deity
Devatāsutta

“Mendicants, tonight, several glorious deities, lighting up the entire Jeta’s Grove, came to me, bowed, stood to one side, and said to me: ‘Sir, formerly when we were human beings, renunciates came to our homes. We politely rose for them, but we didn’t bow. And so, having not fulfilled our duty, full of remorse and regret, we were reborn in a lesser realm.’

Then several other deities came to me and said: ‘Sir, formerly when we were human beings, renunciates came to our homes. We politely rose for them and bowed, but we didn’t offer a seat. And so, having not fulfilled our duty, full of remorse and regret, we were reborn in a lesser realm.’

Then several other deities came to me and said: ‘Sir, formerly when we were human beings, renunciates came to our homes. We politely rose for them, bowed, and offered a seat, but we didn’t share as best we could. …’

‘… we didn’t sit nearby to listen to the teachings. …’

‘… we didn’t actively listen to the teachings. …’

‘… we didn’t memorize the teachings. …’

‘… we didn’t examine the meaning of teachings we’d memorized. …’

‘… having understood the meaning and the teaching, we didn’t practice accordingly. And so, having not fulfilled our duty, full of remorse and regret, we were reborn in a lesser realm.’

Then several other deities came to me and said: ‘Sir, formerly when we were human beings, renunciates came to our homes. We politely rose, bowed, and offered them a seat. We shared as best we could. We sat nearby to listen to the teachings, lent an ear, memorized them, and examined their meaning. Understanding the teaching and the meaning we practiced accordingly. And so, having fulfilled our duty, free of remorse and regret, we were reborn in a superior realm.’

Here, mendicants, are these roots of trees, and here are these empty huts. Practice absorption, mendicants! Don’t be negligent! Don’t regret it later, like those former deities.”

AN 9.20

AN 9.20
About Velāma
Velāmasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, "Householder, I wonder whether your family gives gifts?"

"It does, sir. But only coarse gruel with pickles."

"Householder, someone might give a gift that's either coarse or fine. But they give it carelessly, thoughtlessly, not with their own hand. They give the dregs, and they give without consideration for consequences. Then wherever the result of any such gift manifests, their mind doesn't incline toward enjoyment of nice food, clothes, vehicles, or the five refined kinds of sensual stimulation. And their children, wives, bondservants, servants, and workers don't want to listen to them. They don't actively listen or try to understand. Why is that? Because that is the result of deeds done carelessly.

Someone might give a gift that's either coarse or fine. And they give it carefully, thoughtfully, with their own hand. They don't give the dregs, and they give with consideration for consequences. Then wherever the result of any such gift manifests, their mind inclines toward enjoyment of nice food, clothes, vehicles, or the five refined kinds of sensual stimulation. And their children, wives, bondservants, servants, and workers want to listen. They actively listen and try to understand. Why is that? Because that is the result of deeds done carefully.

Once upon a time, householder, there was a brahmin named Velāma. He gave the following gift, a great offering. 84,000 gold bowls filled with silver. 84,000 silver bowls filled with gold. 84,000 bronze bowls filled with gold coins. 84,000 elephants with gold adornments and banners, covered with gold netting. 84,000 chariots upholstered with the hide of lions, tigers, and leopards, and cream rugs, with gold adornments and banners, covered with gold netting. 84,000 milk cows with silken reins and bronze pails. 84,000 maidens bedecked with jeweled earrings. 84,000 couches spread with woolen covers—shag-piled, pure white, or embroidered with flowers—and spread with a fine deer hide, with canopies above and red pillows at both ends. 8,400,000,000 fine cloths of linen, cotton, silk, and wool. And who can say how much food, drink, snacks, meals, refreshments, and beverages? It seemed like an overflowing river.

Householder, you might think: 'Surely the brahmin Velāma must have been someone else at that time?' But you should not see it like this. I myself was the brahmin Velāma at that time. I gave that gift, a great offering. But at that event there was no-one worthy of a religious donation, and no-one to purify the religious donation.

It would be more fruitful to feed one person accomplished in view than that great offering of Velāma.

It would be more fruitful to feed one once-returner than a hundred persons accomplished in view.

It would be more fruitful to feed one non-returner than a hundred once-returners.

It would be more fruitful to feed one perfected one than a hundred non-returners.

It would be more fruitful to feed one independent Buddha than a hundred perfected ones.

It would be more fruitful to feed one Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha than a hundred independent Buddhas.

It would be more fruitful to feed the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha than to feed one Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha.

It would be more fruitful to build a dwelling especially for the Saṅgha of the four quarters than to feed the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha.

It would be more fruitful to go for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha with a confident heart than to build a dwelling for the Saṅgha of the four quarters.

It would be more fruitful to undertake the training rules—not to kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence—than to go for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha with a confident heart.

It would be more fruitful to develop a heart of love—even just as long as it takes to pull a cow's udder—than to undertake the training rules.

It would be more fruitful to develop the perception of impermanence—even for as long as a finger-snap—than to do all of these things, including developing a heart of love for as long as it takes to pull a cow's udder."

AN 9.21

AN 9.21
In Three Particulars
Tiṭhānasutta

“The humans of Uttarakuru surpass the Gods of the Thirty-Three and the humans of India in three particulars. What three? They’re selfless and not possessive. They have a fixed life span. They have a distinctive nature. The humans of Uttarakuru surpass the Gods of the Thirty-Three and the humans of India in these three particulars.

The Gods of the Thirty-Three surpass the humans of Uttarakuru and India in three particulars. What three? Divine life span, beauty, and happiness. The Gods of the Thirty-Three surpass the humans of Uttarakuru and India in these three particulars.

The humans of India surpass the humans of Uttarakuru and the Gods of the Thirty-Three in three particulars. What three? Bravery, mindfulness, and the spiritual life is lived here. The humans of India surpass the humans of Uttarakuru and the Gods of the Thirty-Three in these three particulars.”

AN 9.22

AN 9.22
A Wild Colt
Assakhaḷuṅkasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you about three wild colts and three wild people; three excellent horses and three excellent people; and three fine thoroughbred horses and three fine thoroughbred people. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.

And what are the three wild colts? One wild colt is fast, but not beautiful or well proportioned. Another wild colt is fast and beautiful, but not well proportioned. While another wild colt is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three wild colts.

And what are the three wild people? One wild person is fast, but not beautiful or well proportioned. Another wild person is fast and beautiful, but not well proportioned. While another wild person is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned.

And how is a wild person fast, but not beautiful or well proportioned? It’s when a mendicant truly understands: ‘This is suffering’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering’. This is how they’re fast, I say. But when asked a question about the teaching or training, they falter without answering. This is how they’re not beautiful, I say. And they don’t receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is how they’re not well proportioned, I say. This is how a wild person is fast, but not beautiful or well proportioned.

And how is a wild person fast and beautiful, but not well proportioned? They truly understand: ‘This is suffering’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering’. This is how they’re fast, I say. When asked a question about the teaching or training, they answer without faltering. This is how they’re beautiful, I say. But they don’t receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is how they’re not well proportioned, I say. This is how a wild person is fast and beautiful, but not well proportioned.

And how is a wild person fast, beautiful, and well proportioned? They truly understand: ‘This is suffering’ … ‘This is the origin of suffering’ … ‘This is the cessation of suffering’ … ‘This is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering’. This is how they’re fast, I say. When asked a question about the teaching or training, they answer without faltering. This is how they’re beautiful, I say. They receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is how they’re well proportioned, I say. This is how a wild person is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three wild people.

And what are the three excellent horses? One excellent horse … is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three excellent horses.

What are the three excellent people? One excellent person … is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned.

And how is an excellent person … fast, beautiful, and well proportioned? It's when a mendicant, with the ending of the five lower fetters, is reborn spontaneously. They're extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This is how they're fast, I say. When asked a question about the teaching or training, they answer without faltering. This is how they're beautiful, I say. They receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is how they're well proportioned, I say. This is how an excellent person fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three excellent people.

And what are the three fine thoroughbred horses? One fine thoroughbred horse … is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three fine thoroughbred horses.

And what are the three fine thoroughbred people? One fine thoroughbred person … is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned.

And how is a fine thoroughbred person … fast, beautiful, and well proportioned? It's a mendicant who realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is how they're fast, I say. When asked a question about the teaching or training, they answer without faltering. This is how they're beautiful, I say. They receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is how they're well proportioned, I say. This is how a fine thoroughbred person is fast, beautiful, and well proportioned. These are the three fine thoroughbred people."

AN 9.23

AN 9.23
Rooted in Craving
Taṇhāmūlakasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you about nine things rooted in craving. And what are the nine things rooted in craving? Craving is a cause of seeking. Seeking is a cause of gaining material possessions. Gaining material possessions is a cause of evaluation. Evaluation is a cause of desire and lust. Desire and lust is a cause of attachment. Attachment is a cause of ownership. Ownership is a cause of stinginess. Stinginess is a cause of safeguarding. Owing to safeguarding, many bad, unskillful things come to be: taking up the rod and the sword, quarrels, arguments, and fights, accusations, divisive speech, and lies. These are the nine things rooted in craving.”

AN 9.24

AN 9.24
Abodes of Sentient Beings
Sattāvāsasutta

“Mendicants, there are nine abodes of sentient beings. What nine?

There are sentient beings that are diverse in body and diverse in perception, such as human beings, some gods, and some beings in the underworld. This is the first abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that are diverse in body and unified in perception, such as the gods reborn in Brahmā’s Host through the first absorption. This is the second abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that are unified in body and diverse in perception, such as the gods of streaming radiance. This is the third abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that are unified in body and unified in perception, such as the gods replete with glory. This is the fourth abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that are non-percipient and do not experience anything, such as the gods who are non-percipient beings. This is the fifth abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond perceptions of form. With the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, they have been reborn in the dimension of infinite space. This is the sixth abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond the dimension of infinite space. Aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, they have been reborn in the dimension of infinite consciousness. This is the seventh abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness. Aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they have been reborn in the dimension of nothingness. This is the eighth abode of sentient beings.

There are sentient beings that have gone totally beyond the dimension of nothingness. They have been reborn in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. This is the ninth abode of sentient beings.

These are the nine abodes of sentient beings.”

AN 9.25

AN 9.25
Consolidated by Wisdom
Paññāsutta

“Mendicants, when a mendicant’s mind has been well consolidated with wisdom it’s appropriate for them to say: ‘I understand: “Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.”’

And how is a mendicant’s mind well consolidated with wisdom? The mind is well consolidated with wisdom when they know: ‘My mind is without greed.’ … ‘My mind is without hate.’ … ‘My mind is without delusion.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to become greedy.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to become hateful.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to become deluded.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the sensual realm.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the realm of luminous form.’ … ‘My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the formless realm.’ When a mendicant’s mind has been well consolidated with wisdom it’s appropriate for them to say: ‘I understand: “Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.”’”

AN 9.26

AN 9.26
The Simile of the Stone Pillar
Silāyūpasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground.

There Venerable Candikāputta addressed the mendicants, "Reverends, Devadatta teaches the mendicants like this: 'When a mendicant's mind is solidified by heart, it's appropriate for them to say: "I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'"'"

When he said this, Venerable Sāriputta said to him, "Reverend Candikāputta, Devadatta does not teach the mendicants like that. He teaches like this: 'When a mendicant's mind is well consolidated by heart, it's appropriate for them to say: "I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'"'"

For a second time …

And for a third time Venerable Candikāputta addressed the mendicants …

And for a third time, Sāriputta said to him, "Reverend Candikāputta, Devadatta does not teach the mendicants like that. He teaches like this: 'When a mendicant's mind is well consolidated by heart, it's appropriate for them to say: "I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'"'

And how is a mendicant's mind well consolidated by heart? The mind is well consolidated by heart when they know: 'My mind is without greed.' … 'My mind is without hate.' … 'My mind is without delusion.' … 'My mind is not liable to become greedy.' … 'My mind is not liable to become hateful.' … 'My mind is not liable to become deluded.' … 'My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the sensual realm.' … 'My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the realm of luminous form.' … 'My mind is not liable to return to rebirth in the formless realm.'

When a mendicant's mind is rightly freed like this, even if compelling sights come into the range of vision they don't occupy their mind. The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance.

Suppose there was a stone pillar, sixteen feet long. Eight feet were buried underground, and eight above ground. And violent storms were to blow up out of the east, the west, the north, and the south. They couldn't make it tremor and tremble and quake. Why is that?

It’s because that stone pillar is firmly embedded, with deep foundations. In the same way, when a mendicant’s mind is rightly freed like this, even if compelling sights come into the range of vision they don’t occupy their mind. The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance.

If even compelling sounds … smells … tastes … touches … and ideas come into the range of the mind they don’t occupy the mind. The mind remains unaffected. It is steady, imperturbable, observing disappearance.”

AN 9.27

AN 9.27
Dangers and Threats (1st)
Paṭhamaverasutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Householder, when a noble disciple has quelled five dangers and threats, and has the four factors of stream-entry, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: 'I've finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I've finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I'm not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.'

What are the five dangers and threats they have quelled? Anyone who kills living creatures creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from killing living creatures creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn't experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from killing living creatures.

Anyone who steals …

Anyone who commits sexual misconduct …

Anyone who lies …

Anyone who uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn't experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence.

These are the five dangers and threats they have quelled.

What are the four factors of stream-entry that they have? It's when a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the Buddha: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.'

They have experiential confidence in the teaching: 'The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.'

They have experiential confidence in the Saṅgha: ‘The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is practicing the way that’s good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.’

And a noble disciple’s ethical conduct is loved by the noble ones, unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. These are the four factors of stream-entry that they have.

When a noble disciple has quelled these five dangers and threats, and has these four factors of stream-entry, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: ‘I’ve finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I’ve finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I’m not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.’”

AN 9.28

AN 9.28
Dangers and Threats (2nd)
Dutiyaverasutta

“Mendicants, when a noble disciple has quelled five dangers and threats, and has the four factors of stream-entry, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: ‘I’ve finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I’ve finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I’m not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.’

What are the five dangers and threats they have quelled? Anyone who kills living creatures creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from killing living creatures creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from killing living creatures.

Anyone who steals … commits sexual misconduct … lies … Anyone who uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five dangers and threats they have quelled.

What are the four factors of stream-entry that they have? When a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the Buddha … the teaching … the Saṅgha … And a noble disciple’s ethical conduct is loved by the noble ones, unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. These are the four factors of stream-entry that they have.

When a noble disciple has quelled these five dangers and threats, and has these four factors of stream-entry, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: ‘I’ve finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I’ve finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I’m not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.’”

AN 9.29

AN 9.29
Grounds for Resentment
Āghātavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are nine grounds for resentment. What nine? Thinking: ‘They did wrong to me,’ you harbor resentment. Thinking: ‘They are doing wrong to me’ … ‘They will do wrong to me’ … ‘They did wrong to someone I love’ … ‘They are doing wrong to someone I love’ … ‘They will do wrong to someone I love’ … ‘They helped someone I dislike’ … ‘They are helping someone I dislike’ … Thinking: ‘They will help someone I dislike,’ you harbor resentment. These are the nine grounds for resentment.”

AN 9.30

AN 9.30
Getting Rid of Resentment
Āghātapaṭivinayasutta

“Mendicants, there are these nine methods to get rid of resentment. What nine? Thinking: ‘They harmed me, but what can I possibly do?’ you get rid of resentment. Thinking: ‘They are harming me …’ … ‘They will harm me …’ … ‘They harmed someone I love …’ … ‘They are harming someone I love …’ ‘They will harm someone I love …’ … ‘They helped someone I dislike …’ … ‘They are helping someone I dislike …’ … Thinking: ‘They will help someone I dislike, but what can I possibly do?’ you get rid of resentment. These are the nine methods to get rid of resentment.”

AN 9.31

AN 9.31
Progressive Cessations
Anupubbanirodhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these nine progressive cessations. What nine?

For someone who has attained the first absorption, sensual perceptions have ceased.

For someone who has attained the second absorption, the placing of the mind and keeping it connected have ceased.

For someone who has attained the third absorption, rapture has ceased.

For someone who has attained the fourth absorption, breathing has ceased.

For someone who has attained the dimension of infinite space, the perception of form has ceased.

For someone who has attained the dimension of infinite consciousness, the perception of the dimension of infinite space has ceased.

For someone who has attained the dimension of nothingness, the perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness has ceased.

For someone who has attained the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, the perception of the dimension of nothingness has ceased.

For someone who has attained the cessation of perception and feeling, perception and feeling have ceased.

These are the nine progressive cessations.”

AN 9.32

AN 9.32
Progressive Meditations
Anupubbavihārasutta

“Mendicants, there are these nine progressive meditations. What nine? The first absorption, the second absorption, the third absorption, the fourth absorption, the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness, the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and the cessation of perception and feeling. These are the nine progressive meditations.”

AN 9.33

AN 9.33
The Nine Progressive Meditative Attainments
Anupubbavihārasamāpattisutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the nine progressive meditative attainments … And what are the nine progressive meditative attainments?

Where sensual pleasures cease, and those who have thoroughly ended sensual pleasures meditate, I say: ‘Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.’ If someone should say, ‘I do not know or see where sensual pleasures cease’, they should be told: ‘Reverend, it’s when a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. That’s where sensual pleasures cease.’ Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They’d say ‘Good!’ and bowing down, they’d pay homage with joined palms.

Where the placing of the mind and keeping it connected cease, and those who have thoroughly ended the placing of the mind and keeping it connected meditate, I say: ‘Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.’ If someone should say, ‘I do not know or see where the placing of the mind and keeping it connected cease’, they should be told: ‘It’s when a mendicant, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enters and remains in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. That’s where the placing of the mind and keeping it connected cease.’ Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They’d say ‘Good!’ and bowing down, they’d pay homage with joined palms.

Where rapture ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended rapture meditate, I say: ‘Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.’ If someone should say, ‘I do not know or see where rapture ceases’, they should be told: ‘It’s when a mendicant, with the fading away of rapture, enters and remains in the third absorption, where they meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, “Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss”. That’s where rapture ceases.’ Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They’d say ‘Good!’ and bowing down, they’d pay homage with joined palms.

Where bliss with equanimity ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended bliss with equanimity meditate, I say: ‘Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.’ If someone should say, ‘I do not know or see where bliss with equanimity ceases’, they should be told: ‘It’s when a mendicant, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, enters and remains in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. That's where bliss with equanimity ceases.' Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They'd say 'Good!' and bowing down, they'd pay homage with joined palms.

Where perceptions of form ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended perceptions of form meditate, I say: 'Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.' If someone should say, 'I do not know or see where perceptions of form ceases', they should be told: 'It's when a mendicant, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that "space is infinite", enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. That's where perceptions of form cease.' Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They'd say 'Good!' and bowing down, they'd pay homage with joined palms.

Where the perception of the dimension of infinite space ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended the perception of the dimension of infinite space meditate, I say: 'Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.' If someone should say, 'I do not know or see where the perception of the dimension of infinite space ceases', they should be told: 'It's when a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that "consciousness is infinite", enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. That's where the perception of the dimension of infinite space ceases.' Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They'd say 'Good!' and bowing down, they'd pay homage with joined palms.

Where the perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended the perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness meditate, I say: 'Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.' If someone should say, 'I do not know or see where the perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness ceases', they should be told: 'It's when a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that "there is nothing at all", enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. That's where the perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness ceases.' Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They'd say 'Good!' and bowing down, they'd pay homage with joined palms.

Where the perception of the dimension of nothingness ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended the perception of the dimension of nothingness meditate, I say: 'Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.' If someone should say, 'I do not know or see where the perception of the dimension of nothingness ceases', they should be told: 'It's when a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enters and remains in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. That's where the perception of the dimension of nothingness ceases.' Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They'd say 'Good!' and bowing down, they'd pay homage with joined palms.

Where the perception of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception ceases, and those who have thoroughly ended the perception of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception meditate, I say: ‘Clearly those venerables are desireless, extinguished, crossed over, and gone beyond in that respect.’ If someone should say, ‘I do not know or see where the perception of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception ceases’, they should be told: ‘It’s when a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. That’s where the perception of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception ceases.’ Clearly someone who is not devious or deceitful would approve and agree with that statement. They’d say ‘Good!’ and bowing down, they’d pay homage with joined palms.

These are the nine progressive meditative attainments.”

AN 9.34

AN 9.34
Extinguishment is Bliss
Nibbānasukhasutta

At one time Venerable Sāriputta was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground.

There he addressed the mendicants: "Reverends, extinguishment is bliss! Extinguishment is bliss!"

When he said this, Venerable Udāyī said to him, "But Reverend Sāriputta, what's blissful about it, since nothing is felt?"

"The fact that nothing is felt is precisely what's blissful about it.

Reverend, there are these five kinds of sensual stimulation. What five? Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. These are the five kinds of sensual stimulation. The pleasure and happiness that arise from these five kinds of sensual stimulation is called sensual pleasure.

First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by sensual pleasures beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by sensual pleasures beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That's the way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enters and remains in the second absorption. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by placing of the mind and keeping it connected beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by placing of the mind and keeping it connected beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, with the fading away of rapture, enters and remains in the third absorption. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by rapture beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by rapture beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, enters and remains in the fourth absorption. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by bliss with equanimity beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by bliss with equanimity beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by form beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by form beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite space beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite space beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that 'there is nothing at all', enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite consciousness beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite consciousness beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enters and remains in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. While a mendicant is in such a meditation, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of nothingness beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, should perceptions accompanied by the dimension of nothingness beset them due to loss of focus, that's an affliction for them. And affliction has been called suffering by the Buddha. That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end.

That too is a way to understand how extinguishment is bliss."

AN 9.35

AN 9.35
The Simile of the Cow
Gāvīupamāsutta

“Mendicants, suppose there was a mountain cow who was foolish, incompetent, unskillful, and lacked common sense when roaming on rugged mountains. She might think, ‘Why don’t I go somewhere I’ve never been before? I could eat grass and drink water that I’ve never tried before.’ She’d take a step with a fore-hoof; but before it was properly set down, she’d lift up a hind-hoof. She wouldn’t go somewhere she’d never been before, or eat grass and drink water that she’d never tried before. And she’d never return safely to the place she had started from. Why is that? Because that mountain cow was foolish, incompetent, unskillful, and lacked common sense when roaming on rugged mountains.

In the same way, some foolish, incompetent, unskillful mendicant, lacking common sense, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. But they don’t cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation; they don’t ensure it is properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enter and remain in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected.’ But they’re not able to enter and remain in the second absorption. They think, ‘Why don’t I, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enter and remain in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected.’ But they’re not able to enter and remain in the first absorption. This is called a mendicant who has slipped and fallen from both sides. They’re like the mountain cow who was foolish, incompetent, unskillful, and lacking in common sense when roaming on rugged mountains.

Suppose there was a mountain cow who was astute, competent, skillful, and used common sense when roaming on rugged mountains. She might think, ‘Why don’t I go somewhere I’ve never been before? I could eat grass and drink water that I’ve never tried before.’ She’d take a step with a fore-hoof; and after it was properly set down, she’d lift up a hind-hoof. She’d go somewhere she’d never been before, and eat grass and drink water that she’d never tried before. And she’d return safely to the place she had started from. Why is that? Because that mountain cow was astute, competent, skillful, and used common sense when roaming on rugged mountains. In the same way, some astute, competent, skillful mendicant, using common sense, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enter and remain in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected.’ Without charging at the second absorption, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, they enter and remain in the second absorption. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, with the fading away of rapture, enter and remain in the third absorption, where I will meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, “Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.”’ Without charging at the third absorption, with the fading away of rapture, they enter and remain in the third absorption. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, with the giving up of pleasure and pain, and the ending of former happiness and sadness, enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness.’ Without charging at the fourth absorption, with the giving up of pleasure and pain, and the ending of former happiness and sadness, they enter and remain in the fourth absorption. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that “space is infinite”, enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space.’ Without charging at the dimension of infinite space, with the fading away of rapture, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that “consciousness is infinite”, enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness.’ Without charging at the dimension of infinite consciousness, they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that “there is nothing at all”, enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness.’ Without charging at the dimension of nothingness, they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception.’ Without charging at the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They cultivate, develop, and make much of that foundation, ensuring that it’s properly stabilized.

They think, ‘Why don’t I, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling.’ Without charging at the cessation of perception and feeling, they enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling.

When a mendicant enters and emerges from all these attainments, their mind becomes pliable and workable. With a pliable and workable mind, their immersion becomes limitless and well developed. They become capable of realizing anything that can be realized by insight to which they extend the mind, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'May I wield the many kinds of psychic power: multiplying myself and becoming one again … controlling my body as far as the Brahmā realm.' They are capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, may I hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.' They are capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'May I understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with my mind. May I understand mind with greed as "mind with greed", and mind without greed as "mind without greed"; mind with hate as "mind with hate", and mind without hate as "mind without hate"; mind with delusion as "mind with delusion", and mind without delusion as "mind without delusion"; constricted mind … scattered mind … expansive mind … unexpansive mind … mind that is not supreme … mind that is supreme … mind immersed in samādhi … mind not immersed in samādhi … freed mind … and unfreed mind as "unfreed mind".' They are capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'May I recollect many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: "There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here." May I recollect my many past lives, with features and details.' They're capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, may I see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place—and understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.' They're capable of realizing it, in each and every case.

They might wish: 'May I realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with my own insight due to the ending of defilements.' They're capable of realizing it, in each and every case."

AN 9.36

AN 9.36
Depending on Absorption
Jhānasutta

“Mendicants, I say that the first absorption is a basis for ending the defilements. The second absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements. The third absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements. The fourth absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements. The dimension of infinite space is also a basis for ending the defilements. The dimension of infinite consciousness is also a basis for ending the defilements. The dimension of nothingness is also a basis for ending the defilements. The dimension of neither perception nor non-perception is also a basis for ending the defilements. The cessation of perception and feeling is also a basis for ending the defilements.

‘The first absorption is a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption. They contemplate the phenomena there—included in form, feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness—as impermanent, as suffering, as diseased, as a boil, as a dart, as misery, as an affliction, as alien, as falling apart, as empty, as not-self. They turn their mind away from those things, and apply it to freedom from death: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world.

It’s like an archer or their apprentice who first practices on a straw man or a clay model. At a later time they become a long-distance shooter, a marksman, who shatters large objects. In the same way a noble disciple, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, enters and remains in the first absorption. They contemplate the phenomena there—included in form, feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness—as impermanent, as suffering, as diseased, as a boil, as a dart, as misery, as an affliction, as alien, as falling apart, as empty, as not-self. They turn their mind away from those things, and apply it to freedom from death: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. ‘The first absorption is a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘The second absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements.’ …

‘The third absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements.’ …

‘The fourth absorption is also a basis for ending the defilements.’ …

‘The dimension of infinite space is also a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Take a mendicant who, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. They contemplate the phenomena there—included in feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness—as impermanent, as suffering, as diseased, as a boil, as a dart, as misery, as an affliction, as alien, as falling apart, as empty, as not-self. They turn their mind away from those things, and apply it to freedom from death: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world.

It’s like an archer or their apprentice who first practices on a straw man or a clay model. At a later time they become a long-distance shooter, a marksman, who shatters large objects. In the same way, take a mendicant who enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. … ‘The dimension of infinite space is a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘The dimension of infinite consciousness is a basis for ending the defilements.’ …

‘The dimension of nothingness is a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. They contemplate the phenomena there—included in feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness—as impermanent, as suffering, as diseased, as a boil, as a dart, as misery, as an affliction, as alien, as falling apart, as empty, as not-self. They turn their mind away from those things, and apply it to freedom from death: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world.

It’s like an archer or their apprentice who first practices on a straw man or a clay model. At a later time they become a long-distance shooter, a marksman, who shatters large objects. In the same way, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. They contemplate the phenomena there—included in feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness—as impermanent, as suffering, as diseased, as a boil, as a dart, as misery, as an affliction, as alien, as falling apart, as empty, as not-self. They turn their mind away from those things, and apply it to freedom from death: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. ‘The dimension of nothingness is a basis for ending the defilements.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

And so, mendicants, penetration to enlightenment extends as far as attainments with perception. But the two dimensions that depend on these—the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and the cessation of perception and feeling—are properly explained by mendicants who are skilled in these attainments and skilled in emerging from them, after they’ve entered them and emerged from them.”

AN 9.37

AN 9.37
By Ānanda
Ānandasutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. There Ānanda addressed the mendicants: "Reverends, mendicants!"

"Reverend," they replied. Ānanda said this:

"It's incredible, reverends, it's amazing! How this Blessed One who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, has found an opportunity amid confinement. It's in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to discover the system, and to realize extinguishment.

The eye itself is actually present, and so are those sights. Yet one will not experience that sense-field. The ear itself is actually present, and so are those sounds. Yet one will not experience that sense-field. The nose itself is actually present, and so are those smells. Yet one will not experience that sense-field. The tongue itself is actually present, and so are those tastes. Yet one will not experience that sense-field. The body itself is actually present, and so are those touches. Yet one will not experience that sense-field."

When he said this, Venerable Udāyī said to Venerable Ānanda:

"Reverend Ānanda, is one who doesn't experience that sense-field actually percipient or not?"

"Reverend, one who doesn't experience that sense-field is actually percipient, not non-percipient."

"But what does one who doesn't experience that sense-field perceive?"

"It's when a mendicant, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. One who doesn't experience that sense-field perceives in this way.

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. One who doesn't experience that sense-field perceives in this way.

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that 'there is nothing at all', enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. One who doesn't experience that sense-field perceives in this way.

Reverend, one time I was staying near Sāketa in the deer park in Añjana Wood. Then the nun Jaṭilagāhikā came up to me, bowed, stood to one side, and said to me: ‘Honorable Ānanda, regarding the immersion that does not lean forward or pull back, and is not held in place by forceful suppression. Being free, it’s stable. Being stable, it’s content. Being content, one is not anxious. What did the Buddha say was the fruit of this immersion?’

When she said this, I said to her: ‘Sister, regarding the immersion that does not lean forward or pull back, and is not held in place by forceful suppression. Being free, it’s stable. Being stable, it’s content. Being content, one is not anxious. The Buddha said that the fruit of this immersion is enlightenment.’ One who doesn’t experience that sense-field perceives in this way, too.”

AN 9.38

AN 9.38
Brahmin Cosmologists
Lokāyatikasutta

Then two brahmin cosmologists went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, Pūraṇa Kassapa claims to be all-knowing and all-seeing, to know and see everything without exception, thus: ‘Knowledge and vision are constantly and continually present to me, while walking, standing, sleeping, and waking.’ He says: ‘With infinite knowledge I know and see that the cosmos is infinite.’ And the Jain ascetic of the Ñātika clan also claims to be all-knowing and all-seeing, to know and see everything without exception, thus: ‘Knowledge and vision are constantly and continually present to me, while walking, standing, sleeping, and waking.’ He says: ‘With infinite knowledge I know and see that the cosmos is finite.’ These two claim to speak from knowledge, but they directly contradict each other. Which one of them speaks the truth, and which falsehood?”

“Enough, brahmins, let that be. I will teach you the Dhamma. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes sir,” those brahmins replied. The Buddha said this:

“Suppose there were four men standing in the four quarters. Each of them was extremely fast, with an extremely mighty stride. They’re as fast as a light arrow easily shot across the shadow of a palm tree by a well-trained expert archer with a strong bow. Their stride was such that it spanned from the eastern ocean to the western ocean. Then the man standing in the east would say: ‘I will reach the end of the world by traveling.’ Though he’d travel for his whole lifespan of a hundred years—pausing only to eat and drink, go to the toilet, and sleep to dispel weariness—he’d die along the way, never reaching the end of the world. Then the man standing in the west … Then the man standing in the north … Then the man standing in the south would say: ‘I will reach the end of the world by traveling.’ Though he’d travel for his whole lifespan of a hundred years—pausing only to eat and drink, go to the toilet, and sleep to dispel weariness—he’d die along the way, never reaching the end of the world. Why is that? I say it’s not possible to know or see or reach the end of the world by running like this. But I also say there’s no making an end of suffering without reaching the end of the world.

These five kinds of sensual stimulation are called the world in the training of the Noble One. What five? Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. These five kinds of sensual stimulation are called the world in the training of the Noble One.

Take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. This is called a mendicant who, having gone to the end of the world, meditates at the end of the world. Others say of them: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.' And I also say this: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.'

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enters and remains in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. This is called a mendicant who, having gone to the end of the world, meditates at the end of the world. Others say of them: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.' And I also say this: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.'

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. This is called a mendicant who, having gone to the end of the world, meditates at the end of the world. Others say of them: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.' And I also say this: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.'

Furthermore, take a mendicant who enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. … the dimension of nothingness … the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. This is called a mendicant who, having gone to the end of the world, meditates at the end of the world. Others say of them: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.' And I also say this: 'They're included in the world, and haven't yet left the world.'

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. This is called a mendicant who, having gone to the end of the world, meditates at the end of the world. And they've crossed over clinging to the world."

AN 9.39

AN 9.39
The War Between the Gods and the Titans
Devāsurasaṅgāmasutta

“Once upon a time, mendicants, a battle was fought between the gods and the titans. In that battle the titans won and the gods lost. Defeated, the gods fled north with the titans in pursuit.

Then the gods thought, ‘The titans are still in pursuit. Why don’t we engage them in battle a second time?’ And so a second battle was fought between the gods and the titans. And for a second time the titans won and the gods lost. Defeated, the gods fled north with the titans in pursuit.

Then the gods thought, ‘The titans are still in pursuit. Why don’t we engage them in battle a third time?’ And so a third battle was fought between the gods and the titans. And for a third time the titans won and the gods lost. Defeated and terrified, the gods fled right into the castle of the gods.

When they had entered their castle, they thought, ‘Now we’re in a secure location and the titans can’t do anything to us.’ The titans also thought, ‘Now the gods are in a secure location and we can’t do anything to them.’

Once upon a time, a battle was fought between the gods and the titans. In that battle the gods won and the titans lost. Defeated, the titans fled south with the gods in pursuit.

Then the titans thought, ‘The gods are still in pursuit. Why don’t we engage them in battle a second time?’ And so a second battle was fought between the gods and the titans. And for a second time the gods won and the titans lost. Defeated, the titans fled south with the gods in pursuit.

Then the titans thought, ‘The gods are still in pursuit. Why don’t we engage them in battle a third time?’ And so a third battle was fought between the gods and the titans. And for a third time the gods won and the titans lost. Defeated and terrified, the titans fled right into the citadel of the titans.

When they had entered their citadel, they thought, ‘Now we’re in a secure location and the gods can’t do anything to us.’ And the gods also thought, ‘Now the titans are in a secure location and we can’t do anything to them.’

In the same way, a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. At such a time the mendicant thinks, ‘Now I’m in a secure location and Māra can’t do anything to me.’

And Māra the Wicked also thinks, ‘Now the mendicant is in a secure location and we can’t do anything to them.’

When, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, a mendicant enters and remains in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. At such a time the mendicant thinks, ‘Now I’m in a secure location and Māra can’t do anything to me.’ And Māra the Wicked also thinks, ‘Now the mendicant is in a secure location and we can’t do anything to them.’

A mendicant, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. At such a time they are called a mendicant who has blinded Māra, put out his eyes without a trace, and gone where the Wicked One cannot see.

A mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. … Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. … Going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. …

Going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, they enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. At such a time they are called a mendicant who has blinded Māra, put out his eyes without a trace, and gone where the Wicked One cannot see. And they’ve crossed over clinging to the world.”

AN 9.40

AN 9.40
The Simile of the Bull Elephant in the Forest
Nāgasutta

“Mendicants, when a wild bull elephant is engrossed in the pasture, but other elephants—males, females, younglings, or cubs—got there first and trampled the grass, the wild bull elephant is horrified, repelled, and disgusted by that. When the wild bull elephant is engrossed in the pasture, but other elephants—males, females, younglings, or cubs—eat the broken branches that he has dragged down, the wild bull elephant is horrified, repelled, and disgusted by that. When a wild bull elephant has plunged into the pool, but other elephants—males, females, younglings, or cubs—got there first and stirred up the water with their trunks, the wild bull elephant is horrified, repelled, and disgusted by that. When a wild bull elephant has come out of the pool and the female elephants bump into him, the wild bull elephant is horrified, repelled, and disgusted by that.

At that time the wild bull elephant thinks: ‘These days I live crowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. I eat the grass they’ve trampled, and they eat the broken branches I’ve dragged down. I drink muddy water, and after my bath the female elephants bump into me. Why don’t I live alone, withdrawn from the herd?’ After some time he lives alone, withdrawn from the herd, and he eats untrampled grass, and other elephants don’t eat the broken branches he has dragged down. He doesn’t drink muddy water, and the female elephants don’t bump into him after his bath.

At that time the wild bull elephant thinks: ‘Formerly I lived crowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. I ate the grass they’d trampled, and they ate the broken branches I’d dragged down. I drank muddy water, and after my bath the female elephants bumped into me. Now I live alone, and I’m free of all these things.’ He breaks off a branch and scratches his body, happily relieving his itches.

In the same way, when a mendicant lives crowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and by monastics of other religions and their disciples, they think: ‘These days I live crowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and monastics of other religions and their disciples. Why don’t I live alone, withdrawn from the group?’ They frequent a secluded lodging—a wilderness, the root of a tree, a hill, a ravine, a mountain cave, a charnel ground, a forest, the open air, a heap of straw. Gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, they sit down cross-legged, set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence.

Giving up covetousness for the world, they meditate with a heart rid of covetousness, cleansing the mind of covetousness. Giving up ill will and malevolence, they meditate with a mind rid of ill will, full of compassion for all living beings, cleansing the mind of ill will. Giving up dullness and drowsiness, they meditate with a mind free of dullness and drowsiness, perceiving light, mindful and aware, cleansing the mind of dullness and drowsiness. Giving up restlessness and remorse, they meditate without restlessness, their mind peaceful inside, cleansing the mind of restlessness and remorse. Giving up doubt, they meditate having gone beyond doubt, not undecided about skillful qualities, cleansing the mind of doubt. They give up these five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. Then, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, they enter and remain in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. They happily relieve their itches. As the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, they enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. They happily relieve their itches.

Going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space. They happily relieve their itches. Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', they enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness. … Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that 'there is nothing at all', they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. … Going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. … Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. They happily relieve their itches."

AN 9.41

AN 9.41
With the Householder Tapussa
Tapussasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Mallas, near the Mallian town named Uruvelakappa.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Uruvelakappa for alms. Then, after the meal, on his return from almsround, he addressed Venerable Ānanda, "Ānanda, you stay right here, while I plunge deep into the Great Wood for the day's meditation."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied. Then the Buddha plunged deep into the Great Wood and sat at the root of a tree for the day's meditation.

The householder Tapussa went up to Venerable Ānanda, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Honorable Ānanda, we are laypeople who enjoy sensual pleasures. We like sensual pleasures, we love them and take joy in them. But renunciation seems like an abyss. I have heard that in this teaching and training there are very young mendicants whose minds are secure in renunciation; they're confident, settled, and decided about it. They see it as peaceful. Renunciation is the dividing line between the multitude and the mendicants in this teaching and training."

"Householder, we should see the Buddha about this matter. Come, let's go to the Buddha and inform him about this. As he answers, so we'll remember it."

"Yes, sir," replied Tapussa. Then Ānanda together with Tapussa went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Ānanda told him what had happened.

"That's so true, Ānanda! That's so true! Before my awakening—when I was still unawakened but intent on awakening—I too thought, 'Renunciation is good! Seclusion is good!' But my mind wasn't secure in renunciation; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in renunciation, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of renunciation, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in renunciation, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of renunciation, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in renunciation; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of sensual pleasures and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of renunciation and developed that. Then my mind became secure in renunciation; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, I entered and remained in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by sensual pleasures beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by sensual pleasures beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled … enter and remain in the second absorption?' But my mind wasn't secure in not placing the mind; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in not placing the mind, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of placing the mind, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of not placing the mind, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in not placing the mind, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of placing the mind, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of not placing the mind, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would be secure in not placing the mind; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of placing the mind and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of not placing the mind and developed that. Then my mind was secure in not placing the mind; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected were stilled … I entered and remained in the second absorption. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by placing the mind beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by placing the mind and keeping it connected beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, with the fading away of rapture, enter and remain in the third absorption, where I will meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, "Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss"?' But my mind wasn't secure in freedom from rapture; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in freedom from rapture, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of rapture, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of freedom from rapture, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in freedom from rapture, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of rapture, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of freedom from rapture, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would be secure in being free from rapture; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of rapture and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of freedom from rapture and developed that. Then my mind became secure in freedom from rapture; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, with the fading away of rapture … I entered and remained in the third absorption. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by rapture beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by rapture beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, with the giving up of pleasure and pain, and the ending of former happiness and sadness, enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness?' But my mind wasn't secure in being without pleasure and pain; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in being without pleasure and pain, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of bliss with equanimity, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of being without pleasure and pain, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in being without pleasure and pain, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of bliss with equanimity, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of being without pleasure and pain, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would be secure in being without pleasure and pain; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of bliss with equanimity and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of being without pleasure and pain and developed that. Then my mind was secure in being without pleasure and pain; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, giving up pleasure and pain … I entered and remained in the fourth absorption. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by bliss with equanimity beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by bliss with equanimity beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that "space is infinite", enter and remain in the dimension of infinite space?' But my mind wasn't secure in the dimension of infinite space; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of infinite space, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of forms, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of the dimension of infinite space, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of infinite space, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of forms, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of the dimension of infinite space, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in the dimension of infinite space; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of forms and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of the dimension of infinite space and developed that. Then my mind became secure in the dimension of infinite space; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', I entered and remained in the dimension of infinite space. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by forms beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by forms beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that "consciousness is infinite", enter and remain in the dimension of infinite consciousness?' But my mind wasn't secure in the dimension of infinite consciousness; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of infinite consciousness, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite space, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of the dimension of infinite consciousness, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of infinite consciousness, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite space, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of the dimension of infinite consciousness, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in the dimension of infinite consciousness; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite space and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of the dimension of infinite consciousness and developed that. Then my mind became secure in the dimension of infinite consciousness; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', I entered and remained in the dimension of infinite consciousness. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite space beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite space beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that "there is nothing at all", enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness?' But my mind wasn't secure in the dimension of nothingness; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of nothingness, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite consciousness, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of the dimension of nothingness, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of nothingness, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite consciousness, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of the dimension of nothingness, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in the dimension of nothingness; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of the dimension of infinite consciousness and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of the dimension of nothingness and developed that. Then my mind became secure in the dimension of nothingness; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that 'there is nothing at all', I entered and remained in the dimension of nothingness. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite consciousness beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by the dimension of infinite consciousness beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception?' But my mind wasn't secure in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of the dimension of nothingness, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of the dimension of nothingness, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of the dimension of nothingness and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception and developed that. Then my mind became secure in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, I entered and remained in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. While I was in that meditation, perceptions accompanied by the dimension of nothingness beset me due to loss of focus, and that was an affliction for me. Suppose a happy person were to experience pain; that would be an affliction for them. In the same way, when perceptions accompanied by the dimension of nothingness beset me due to loss of focus, that was an affliction for me.

Then I thought, 'Why don't I, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling?' But my mind wasn't secure in the cessation of perception and feeling; it wasn't confident, settled, and decided about it. I didn't see it as peaceful. Then I thought, 'What is the cause, what is the reason why my mind isn't secure in the cessation of perception and feeling, and not confident, settled, and decided about it? Why don't I see it as peaceful?' Then I thought, 'I haven't seen the drawbacks of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and so I haven't cultivated that. I haven't realized the benefits of the cessation of perception and feeling, and so I haven't developed that. That's why my mind isn't secure in the cessation of perception and feeling, and not confident, settled, and decided about it. And it's why I don't see it as peaceful.' Then I thought, 'Suppose that, seeing the drawbacks of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, I were to cultivate that. And suppose that, realizing the benefits of the cessation of perception and feeling, I were to develop that. It's possible that my mind would become secure in the cessation of perception and feeling; it would be confident, settled, and decided about it. And I would see it as peaceful.' And so, after some time, I saw the drawbacks of the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception and cultivated that, and I realized the benefits of the cessation of perception and feeling and developed that. Then my mind became secure in the cessation of perception and feeling; it was confident, settled, and decided about it. I saw it as peaceful. And so, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, I entered and remained in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, my defilements were ended.

As long as I hadn't entered into and withdrawn from these nine progressive meditative attainments in both forward and reverse order, I didn't announce my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.

But when I had entered into and withdrawn from these nine progressive meditative attainments in both forward and reverse order, I announced my supreme perfect awakening in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans.

Knowledge and vision arose in me: 'My freedom is unshakable; this is my last rebirth; now there'll be no more future lives.'"

AN 9.42

AN 9.42
Cramped Sambādhasutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. Then Venerable Udāyī went up to Venerable Ānanda and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to Ānanda, "Reverend, this was said by the god Pañcālacaṇḍa:

'The opportunity amid confinement was discovered by the Buddha of vast intelligence, who woke up to absorption, the sage, the solitary bull.'

But what is confinement, and what is the opportunity amid confinement that the Buddha spoke of?"

"Reverend, these five kinds of sensual stimulation are called 'confinement' by the Buddha. What five? Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. These are the five kinds of sensual stimulation that are called 'confinement' by the Buddha.

Now, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever placing of the mind and keeping it connected has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled … enters and remains in the second absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever rapture has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, with the fading away of rapture … enters and remains in the third absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of creating an opening amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever bliss with equanimity has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, giving up pleasure and pain … enters and remains in the fourth absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever perception of form has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever perception of the dimension of infinite space has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that ‘consciousness is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, enters and remains in the dimension of nothingness. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever perception of the dimension of nothingness has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enters and remains in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a qualified sense. But it is still confined. Confined by what? Whatever perception of neither perception nor non-perception has not ceased is the confinement there.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha spoke of an opportunity amid confinement in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.43

AN 9.43
A Direct Witness
Kāyasakkhīsutta

“Reverend, they speak of a person called ‘direct witness’. What is the direct witness that the Buddha spoke of?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the direct witness in a qualified sense.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, enters and remains in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the personal witness in a qualified sense.

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that ‘space is infinite’, enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the direct witness in a qualified sense. Furthermore, take a mendicant who enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness … the dimension of nothingness … the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the direct witness in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.44

AN 9.44
Freed by Wisdom
Paññāvimuttasutta

“Reverend, they speak of a person called ‘freed by wisdom’. What is the one freed by wisdom that the Buddha spoke of?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. And they understand that with wisdom. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the one freed by wisdom in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. And they understand that with wisdom. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the one freed by wisdom in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.45

AN 9.45
Freed Both Ways
Ubhatobhāgavimuttasutta

“Reverend, they speak of a person called ‘freed both ways’. What is the one freed both ways that the Buddha spoke of?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. And they understand that with wisdom. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the one freed both ways in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. They meditate directly experiencing that dimension in every way. And they understand that with wisdom. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the one freed both ways in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.46

AN 9.46
In This Very Life
Sandiṭṭhikadhammasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘a teaching apparent in the present life’. In what way did the Buddha speak of a teaching apparent in the present life?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the teaching apparent in the present life in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha spoke of the teaching apparent in the present life in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.47

AN 9.47
Extinguishment Is Apparent in This Very Life
Sandiṭṭhikanibbānasutta

“Reverend, they say that ‘extinguishment is apparent in the present life’. In what way did the Buddha say extinguishment is apparent in the present life?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha said that extinguishment is apparent in the present life in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha said that extinguishment is apparent in the present life in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.48

AN 9.48
Extinguishment
Nibbānasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘extinguishment’. …”

AN 9.49

AN 9.49
Final Extinguishment
Parinibbānasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘final extinguishment’. …”

AN 9.50

AN 9.50
Extinguishment in a Certain Respect
Tadaṅganibbānasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘extinguishment in a certain respect’. …”

AN 9.51

AN 9.51
Extinguishment in the Present Life
Diṭṭhadhammanibbānasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘extinguishment in the present life’. In what way did the Buddha speak of extinguishment in the present life?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of extinguishment in the present life in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha spoke of extinguishment in the present life in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.52

AN 9.52
A Safe Place
Khemasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘a safe place’. In what way did the Buddha speak of a safe place?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of a safe place in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha spoke of a safe place in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.53

AN 9.53
Reaching a Safe Place
Khemappattasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘reaching a safe place’. …”

AN 9.54

AN 9.54
Freedom From Death
Amatasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘freedom from death’. …”

AN 9.55

AN 9.55
Reaching Freedom From Death
Amatappattasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘reaching freedom from death’. …”

AN 9.56

AN 9.56
A Place Without Fear
Abhayasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘a place without fear’. …”

AN 9.57

AN 9.57
Reaching a Place Without Fear
Abhayappattasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘reaching a place without fear’. …”

AN 9.58

AN 9.58
Tranquility
Passaddhisutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘tranquility’. …”

AN 9.59

AN 9.59
Progressive Tranquility
Anupubbapassaddhisutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘progressive tranquility’. …”

AN 9.60

AN 9.60
Cessation
Nirodhasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘cessation’. …”

AN 9.61

AN 9.61
Progressive Cessation
Anupubbanirodhasutta

“Reverend, they speak of ‘progressive cessation’. What is the progressive cessation that the Buddha spoke of?”

“First, take a mendicant who, quite secluded from sensual pleasures … enters and remains in the first absorption. To this extent the Buddha spoke of progressive cessation in a qualified sense. …

Furthermore, take a mendicant who, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, enters and remains in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. To this extent the Buddha spoke of progressive cessation in a definitive sense.”

AN 9.62

AN 9.62
Requirements for Perfection
Abhabbasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up nine things you can’t realize perfection. What nine? Greed, hate, delusion, anger, hostility, disdain, contempt, jealousy, and stinginess. Without giving up these nine things you can’t realize perfection.

After giving up nine things you can realize perfection. What nine? Greed, hate, delusion, anger, hostility, disdain, contempt, jealousy, and stinginess. After giving up these nine things you can realize the fruit of perfection.”

AN 9.63

AN 9.63
Weaknesses in Training and Mindfulness Meditation
Sikkhādubbalyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five weaknesses when you’re training. What five? Killing living creatures, stealing, sexual misconduct, lying, and using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five weaknesses when you’re training.

To give up these five weaknesses in your training you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. What four? It’s when a mendicant meditates by observing an aspect of the body—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. They meditate observing an aspect of feelings … They meditate observing an aspect of the mind … They meditate observing an aspect of principles—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. To give up those five weaknesses in your training you should develop these four kinds of mindfulness meditation.”

AN 9.64

AN 9.64
Hindrances
Nīvaraṇasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five hindrances. What five? Sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. These are the five hindrances.

To give up these five hindrances you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. What four? It’s when a mendicant meditates by observing an aspect of the body—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. They meditate observing an aspect of feelings … They meditate observing an aspect of the mind … They meditate observing an aspect of principles—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. To give up those five hindrances you should develop these four kinds of mindfulness meditation.”

AN 9.65

AN 9.65
Kinds of Sensual Stimulation
Kāmaguṇasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of sensual stimulation. What five? Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. These are the five kinds of sensual stimulation.

To give up these five kinds of sensual stimulation you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.66

AN 9.66
Grasping Aggregates
Upādānakkhandhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five grasping aggregates. What five? The grasping aggregates of form, feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness. These are the five grasping aggregates.

To give up these five grasping aggregates you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.67

AN 9.67
Lower Fetters
Orambhāgiyasutta

“Mendicants, there are five lower fetters. What five? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, sensual desire, and ill will. These are the five lower fetters.

To give up these five lower fetters you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.68

AN 9.68
Places of Rebirth
Gatisutta

“Mendicants, there are five destinations. What five? Hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, humanity, and the gods. These are the five destinations.

To give up these five destinations you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.69

AN 9.69
Stinginess
Macchariyasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five kinds of stinginess. What five? Stinginess with dwellings, families, material possessions, praise, and the teaching. These are the five kinds of stinginess.

To give up these five kinds of stinginess you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.70

AN 9.70
Higher Fetters
Uddhambhāgiyasutta

“Mendicants, there are five higher fetters. What five? Desire for rebirth in the realm of luminous form, desire for rebirth in the formless realm, conceit, restlessness, and ignorance. These are the five higher fetters.

To give up these five higher fetters you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.71

AN 9.71
Emotional Barrenness
Cetokhilasutta

“Mendicants, there are five kinds of emotional barrenness. What five? Firstly, a mendicant has doubts about the Teacher. They’re uncertain, undecided, and lacking confidence. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first kind of emotional barrenness.

Furthermore, a mendicant has doubts about the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … A mendicant is angry and upset with their spiritual companions, resentful and closed off. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth kind of emotional barrenness.

To give up these five kinds of emotional barrenness you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. …”

AN 9.72

AN 9.72
Emotional Shackles
Cetasovinibandhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five emotional shackles. What five? Firstly, a mendicant isn’t free of greed, desire, fondness, thirst, passion, and craving for sensual pleasures. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first emotional shackle.

Furthermore, a mendicant isn’t free of greed for the body … They’re not free of greed for form … They eat as much as they like until their belly is full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing … They lead the spiritual life wishing to be reborn in one of the orders of gods: ‘By this precept or observance or fervent austerity or spiritual life, may I become one of the gods!’ This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth emotional shackle. These are the five emotional shackles.

To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. What four? It’s when a mendicant meditates by observing an aspect of the body—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. They meditate observing an aspect of feelings … They meditate observing an aspect of the mind … They meditate observing an aspect of principles—keen, aware, and mindful, rid of covetousness and displeasure for the world. To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop these four kinds of mindfulness meditation.”

AN 9.73

AN 9.73
Weaknesses in Training and Effort
Sikkhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five weaknesses when you’re training. What five? Killing living creatures, stealing, sexual misconduct, lying, and using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five weaknesses when you’re training.

To give up these five weaknesses in your training you should develop the four right efforts. What four? It’s when a mendicant generates enthusiasm, tries, makes an effort, exerts the mind, and strives so that bad, unskillful qualities don’t arise. They generate enthusiasm, try, make an effort, exert the mind, and strive so that bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen are given up. They generate enthusiasm, try, make an effort, exert the mind, and strive so that skillful qualities arise. They generate enthusiasm, try, make an effort, exert the mind, and strive so that skillful qualities that have arisen remain, are not lost, but increase, mature, and are completed by development. To give up these five weaknesses in your training you should develop these four right efforts.”

AN 9.74-81

AN 9.74–81
Hindrances, Etc.
Nīvaraṇasuttādi

(Tell in full as in the chapter on mindfulness meditation.)

AN 9.82

AN 9.82
Emotional Shackles
Cetasovinibandhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five emotional shackles. What five? Firstly, a mendicant isn’t free of greed, desire, fondness, thirst, passion, and craving for sensual pleasures. … These are the five emotional shackles.

To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop the four right efforts. What four? It’s when a mendicant generates enthusiasm, tries, makes an effort, exerts the mind, and strives so that bad, unskillful qualities don’t arise. … so that unskillful qualities are given up … so that skillful qualities arise … They generate enthusiasm, try, make an effort, exert the mind, and strive so that skillful qualities that have arisen remain, are not lost, but increase, mature, and are completed by development. To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop these four right efforts.”

AN 9.83

AN 9.83
Weaknesses in Training and the Bases of Psychic Power
Sikkhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five weaknesses when you’re training. What five? Killing living creatures, stealing, sexual misconduct, lying, and using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five weaknesses when you’re training.

To give up these five weaknesses in your training you should develop the four bases of psychic power. What four? It’s when a mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to enthusiasm, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to energy, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to mental development, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to inquiry, and active effort. To give up these five weaknesses in your training you should develop these four bases of psychic power.”

AN 9.84-91

AN 9.84–91
Hindrances, Etc.
Nīvaraṇasuttādi

(Tell in full as in the chapter on mindfulness meditation.)

AN 9.92

AN 9.92
Emotional Shackles
Cetasovinibandhasutta

“Mendicants, there are these five emotional shackles. What five? Firstly, a mendicant isn’t free of greed for sensual pleasures. … These are the five emotional shackles.

To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop the four bases of psychic power. What four? It’s when a mendicant develops the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to enthusiasm, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to energy, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to mental development, and active effort. They develop the basis of psychic power that has immersion due to inquiry, and active effort. To give up these five emotional shackles you should develop these four bases of psychic power.”

AN 9.93

AN 9.93
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“For insight into greed, nine things should be developed. What nine? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, not-self in suffering, giving up, and fading away. For insight into greed, these nine things should be developed.”

AN 9.94

AN 9.94
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)

~

“For insight into greed, nine things should be developed. What nine? The first absorption, the second absorption, the third absorption, the fourth absorption, the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness, the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, and the cessation of perception and feeling. For insight into greed, these nine things should be developed.”

AN 9.95-112

AN 9.95–112
Untitled Discourses on Greed

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of greed … these nine things should be developed.”

AN 9.113-432

AN 9.113–432
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

“For insight into hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for insight into negligence … complete understanding … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … ceasing … giving away … letting go of negligence … these nine things should be developed.”

The Book of the Nines is finished.

AN 10.1

AN 10.1
What's the Purpose?
Kimatthiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, what is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics?"

"Ānanda, having no regrets is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics."

"But what is the purpose and benefit of having no regrets?"

"Joy is the purpose and benefit of having no regrets."

"But what is the purpose and benefit of joy?"

"Rapture …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of rapture?"

"Tranquility …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of tranquility?"

"Bliss …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of bliss?"

"Immersion …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of immersion?"

"Truly knowing and seeing …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing?"

"Disillusionment and dispassion …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment and dispassion?"

"Knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment and dispassion.

So, Ānanda, the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics is not having regrets. Joy is the purpose and benefit of not having regrets. Rapture is the purpose and benefit of joy. Tranquility is the purpose and benefit of rapture. Bliss is the purpose and benefit of tranquility. Immersion is the purpose and benefit of bliss. Truly knowing and seeing is the purpose and benefit of immersion. Disillusionment and dispassion is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing. Knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment and dispassion. So, Ānanda, skillful ethics progressively lead up to the highest."

AN 10.2

AN 10.2
Making a Wish
Cetanākaraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethical conduct, need not make a wish: ‘May I have no regrets!’ It’s only natural that an ethical person has no regrets. When you have no regrets you need not make a wish: ‘May I feel joy!’ It’s only natural that joy springs up when you have no regrets. When you feel joy you need not make a wish: ‘May I experience rapture!’ It’s only natural that rapture arises when you’re joyful. When your mind is full of rapture you need not make a wish: ‘May my body become tranquil!’ It’s only natural that your body becomes tranquil when your mind is full of rapture. When your body is tranquil you need not make a wish: ‘May I feel bliss!’ It’s only natural to feel bliss when your body is tranquil. When you feel bliss you need not make a wish: ‘May my mind be immersed in samādhi!’ It’s only natural for the mind to be immersed in samādhi when you feel bliss. When your mind is immersed in samādhi you need not make a wish: ‘May I truly know and see!’ It’s only natural to truly know and see when your mind is immersed in samādhi. When you truly know and see you need not make a wish: ‘May I become disillusioned and dispassionate!’ It’s only natural to become disillusioned and dispassionate when you truly know and see. When you’re disillusioned and dispassionate you need not make a wish: ‘May I realize the knowledge and vision of freedom!’ It’s only natural to realize the knowledge and vision of freedom when you’re disillusioned and dispassionate.

And so, mendicants, the knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment and dispassion. Disillusionment and dispassion is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing. Truly knowing and seeing is the purpose and benefit of immersion. Immersion is the purpose and benefit of bliss. Bliss is the purpose and benefit of tranquility. Tranquility is the purpose and benefit of rapture. Rapture is the purpose and benefit of joy. Joy is the purpose and benefit of not having regrets. Not having regrets is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics. And so, mendicants, good qualities flow on and fill up from one to the other, for going from the near shore to the far shore.”

AN 10.3

AN 10.3
Vital Conditions (1st)
Paṭhamaupanisasutta

“Mendicants, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. When there is no joy, one who lacks joy has destroyed a vital condition for rapture. When there is no rapture, one who lacks rapture has destroyed a vital condition for tranquility. When there is no tranquility, one who lacks tranquility has destroyed a vital condition for bliss. When there is no bliss, one who lacks bliss has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. When there is joy, one who has fulfilled joy has fulfilled a vital condition for rapture. When there is rapture, one who has fulfilled rapture has fulfilled a vital condition for tranquility. When there is tranquility, one who has fulfilled tranquility has fulfilled a vital condition for bliss. When there is bliss, one who has fulfilled bliss has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.”

AN 10.4

AN 10.4
Vital Conditions (2nd)
Dutiyaupanisasutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants … “Reverends, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom. Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness. In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom. Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness. In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.”

AN 10.5

AN 10.5
Vital Conditions (3rd)
Tatiyaupanisasutta

There Venerable Ānanda addressed the mendicants … “Reverends, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. When there is no joy, one who lacks joy has destroyed a vital condition for rapture. When there is no rapture, one who lacks rapture has destroyed a vital condition for tranquility. When there is no tranquility, one who lacks tranquility has destroyed a vital condition for bliss. When there is no bliss, one who lacks bliss has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is no disillusionment and dispassion, one who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … One who lacks disillusionment and dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. When there is joy, one who has fulfilled joy has fulfilled a vital condition for rapture. When there is rapture, one who has fulfilled rapture has fulfilled a vital condition for tranquility. When there is tranquility, one who has fulfilled tranquility has fulfilled a vital condition for bliss. When there is bliss, one who has fulfilled bliss has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment and dispassion. When there is disillusionment and dispassion, one who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … One who has fulfilled disillusionment and dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 10.6

AN 10.6
Immersion
Samādhisutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Could it be, sir, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. And they wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And yet they would still perceive.”

“It could be, Ānanda, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. And they wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And yet they would still perceive.”

“But how could this be, sir?”

“Ānanda, it’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’

That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. And they wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And yet they would still perceive.”

AN 10.7

AN 10.7
Sāriputta
Sāriputtasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to Sāriputta:

“Could it be, reverend Sāriputta, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. And they wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And yet they would still perceive.”

“It could be, Reverend Ānanda.”

“But how could this be?”

“Reverend Ānanda, one time I was staying right here at Sāvatthī in the Dark Forest. There I gained a state of immersion like this. I didn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And I didn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. And I didn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And yet I still perceived.”

“But at that time what did Reverend Sāriputta perceive?”

“One perception arose in me and another perception ceased: ‘The cessation of continued existence is extinguishment. The cessation of continued existence is extinguishment.’ Suppose there was a burning pile of twigs. One flame would arise and another would cease. In the same way, one perception arose in me and another perception ceased: ‘The cessation of continued existence is extinguishment. The cessation of continued existence is extinguishment.’ At that time I perceived that the cessation of continued existence is extinguishment.”

AN 10.8

AN 10.8
Inspiring All Around: the Absorptions
Jhānasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant is faithful but not ethical. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful and ethical?’ When the mendicant is faithful and ethical, they’re complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but not learned. … they’re not a Dhamma speaker … they don’t frequent assemblies … they don’t teach Dhamma to the assembly with assurance … they’re not an expert in the monastic law … they don’t stay in the wilderness, in remote lodgings … they don’t get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty … they don’t realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the training, one who lives in the wilderness, in remote lodgings, one who gets the four absorptions when they want, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements?’

When they’re faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the training, one who lives in the wilderness, in remote lodgings, one who gets the four absorptions when they want, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements, they’re complete in that respect. A mendicant who has these ten qualities is inspiring all around, and is complete in every respect.”

AN 10.9

AN 10.9
Inspiring All Around: the Peaceful Liberations
Santavimokkhasutta

“A mendicant is faithful, but not ethical. … they’re not learned. … they’re not a Dhamma speaker … they don’t frequent assemblies … they don’t teach Dhamma to the assembly with assurance … they’re not an expert in the training … they don’t stay in the wilderness, in remote lodgings … they don’t have direct meditative experience of the peaceful liberations that are formless, transcending form … they don’t realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the training, one who lives in the wilderness, in remote lodgings, one who gets the formless liberations, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements?’

When they’re faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the monastic law, one who lives in the wilderness, in remote lodgings, one who gets the formless liberations, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements, they’re complete in that respect. A mendicant who has these ten qualities is inspiring all around, and is complete in every respect.”

AN 10.10

AN 10.10
Inspiring All Around: the Three Knowledges
Vijjāsutta

“A mendicant is faithful, but not ethical. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful and ethical?’ When the mendicant is faithful and ethical, they’re complete in that respect.

A mendicant is faithful and ethical, but not learned … they’re not a Dhamma speaker … they don’t frequent assemblies … they don’t teach Dhamma to the assembly with assurance … they’re not an expert in the monastic law … they don’t recollect their many kinds of past lives … they don’t, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, see sentient beings passing away and being reborn … they don’t realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. So they’re incomplete in that respect, and should fulfill it, thinking: ‘How can I become faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the training, one who recollects their many kinds of past lives, one who with clairvoyance that surpasses the human sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements?’

When they are faithful, ethical, and learned, a Dhamma speaker, one who frequents assemblies, one who teaches Dhamma to the assembly with assurance, an expert in the training, one who recollects their many kinds of past lives, one who with clairvoyance that surpasses the human sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn, and one who lives having realized the ending of defilements, they’re complete in that respect. A mendicant who has these ten qualities is inspiring all around, and is complete in every respect.”

AN 10.11

AN 10.11
Lodgings
Senāsanasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with five factors, using and frequenting lodgings with five factors, will soon realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

And how does a mendicant have five factors? It’s when a noble disciple has faith in the Realized One’s awakening: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ They are rarely ill or unwell. Their stomach digests well, being neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and fit for meditation. They’re not devious or deceitful. They reveal themselves honestly to the Teacher or sensible spiritual companions. They live with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They’re strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. They’re wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. That’s how a mendicant has five factors.

And how does a lodging have five factors? It’s when a lodging is neither too far nor too near, but convenient for coming and going. It’s not bothered by people by day, and at night it’s quiet and still. There’s little disturbance from flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles. While staying in that lodging the necessities of life—robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick—are easy to come by. And in that lodging there are several senior mendicants who are very learned, inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines. From time to time they go up to those mendicants and ask them questions: ‘Why, sir, does it say this? What does that mean?’ Those venerables clarify what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters. That’s how a lodging has five factors. A mendicant with five factors, using and frequenting lodgings with five factors, will soon realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.”

AN 10.12

AN 10.12
Five Factors
Pañcaṅgasutta

“Mendicants, in this teaching and training a mendicant who has given up five factors and possesses five factors is called consummate, accomplished, a supreme person.

And how has a mendicant given up five factors? It’s when a mendicant has given up sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. That’s how a mendicant has given up five factors.

And how does a mendicant have five factors? It’s when a mendicant has the entire spectrum of an adept’s ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and knowledge and vision of freedom. That’s how a mendicant has five factors.

In this teaching and training a mendicant who has given up five factors and possesses five factors is called consummate, accomplished, a supreme person.

Sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness, and doubt are not found in a mendicant at all.

One like this is accomplished in an adept’s ethics, an adept’s immersion, and freedom and knowledge.

Possessing these five factors, and rid of five factors, in this teaching and training they’re called ‘consummate’.”

AN 10.13

AN 10.13
Fetters
Saṁyojanasutta

“Mendicants, there are ten fetters. What ten? The five lower fetters and the five higher fetters. What are the five lower fetters? Substantialist view, doubt, misapprehension of precepts and observances, sensual desire, and ill will. These are the five lower fetters.

What are the five higher fetters? Desire for rebirth in the realm of luminous form, desire for rebirth in the formless realm, conceit, restlessness, and ignorance. These are the five higher fetters. These are the ten fetters.”

AN 10.14

AN 10.14
Emotional Barrenness
Cetokhilasutta

“Mendicants, a monk or nun who has not given up five kinds of emotional barrenness and has not cut off five emotional shackles can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

What are the five kinds of emotional barrenness they haven’t given up?

Firstly, a mendicant has doubts about the Teacher. They’re uncertain, undecided, and lacking confidence. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first kind of emotional barrenness they haven’t given up.

Furthermore, a mendicant has doubts about the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … A mendicant is angry and upset with their spiritual companions, resentful and closed off. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth kind of emotional barrenness they haven’t given up. These are the five kinds of emotional barrenness they haven’t given up.

What are the five emotional shackles they haven’t cut off? Firstly, a mendicant isn’t free of greed, desire, fondness, thirst, passion, and craving for sensual pleasures. This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first emotional shackle they haven’t cut off.

Furthermore, a mendicant isn’t free of greed for the body … They’re not free of greed for form … They eat as much as they like until their belly is full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing … They lead the spiritual life wishing to be reborn in one of the orders of gods: ‘By this precept or observance or fervent austerity or spiritual life, may I become one of the gods!’ This being so, their mind doesn’t incline toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth emotional shackle they haven’t cut off. These are the five emotional shackles they haven’t cut off.

A monk or nun who has not given up these five kinds of emotional barrenness and has not cut off these five emotional shackles can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

It’s like the moon in the waning fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only decline. In the same way, monk or nun who has not given up these five kinds of emotional barrenness and has not cut off these five emotional shackles can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A monk or nun who has given up five kinds of emotional barrenness and has cut off five emotional shackles can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

What are the five kinds of emotional barrenness they've given up? Firstly, a mendicant has no doubts about the Teacher. They're not uncertain, undecided, or lacking confidence. This being so, their mind inclines toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first kind of emotional barrenness they've given up.

Furthermore, a mendicant has no doubts about the teaching … the Saṅgha … the training … A mendicant is not angry and upset with their spiritual companions, not resentful or closed off. This being so, their mind inclines toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth kind of emotional barrenness they've given up. These are the five kinds of emotional barrenness they've given up.

What are the five emotional shackles they've cut off? Firstly, a mendicant is rid of greed, desire, fondness, thirst, passion, and craving for sensual pleasures. This being so, their mind inclines toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the first emotional shackle they've cut off.

Furthermore, a mendicant is rid of greed for the body … They're rid of greed for form … They don't eat as much as they like until their belly is full, then indulge in the pleasures of sleeping, lying down, and drowsing … They don't lead the spiritual life wishing to be reborn in one of the orders of gods: 'By this precept or observance or fervent austerity or spiritual life, may I become one of the gods!' This being so, their mind inclines toward keenness, commitment, persistence, and striving. This is the fifth emotional shackle they've cut off. These are the five emotional shackles they've cut off.

A monk or nun who has given up these five kinds of emotional barrenness and has cut off these five emotional shackles can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

It's like the moon in the waxing fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only grow. In the same way, a monk or nun who has given up these five kinds of emotional barrenness and has cut off these five emotional shackles can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night."

AN 10.15

AN 10.15
Diligence
Appamādasutta

“Mendicants, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, is said to be the best of all sentient beings—be they footless, with two feet, four feet, or many feet; with form or formless; with perception or without perception or with neither perception nor non-perception. In the same way, all skillful qualities are rooted in diligence and meet at diligence, and diligence is said to be the best of them.

The footprints of all creatures that walk can fit inside an elephant’s footprint, so an elephant’s footprint is said to be the biggest of them all. In the same way, all skillful qualities are rooted in diligence and meet at diligence, and diligence is said to be the best of them.

The rafters of a bungalow all lean to the peak, slope to the peak, and meet at the peak, so the peak is said to be the topmost of them all. In the same way, all skillful qualities are rooted in diligence and meet at diligence, and diligence is said to be the best of them.

Of all kinds of fragrant root, spikenard is said to be the best. In the same way …

Of all kinds of fragrant heartwood, red sandalwood is said to be the best. In the same way …

Of all kinds of fragrant flower, jasmine is said to be the best. In the same way …

All lesser kings are vassals of a wheel-turning monarch, so the wheel-turning monarch is said to be the foremost of them all. In the same way …

The radiance of all the stars is not worth a sixteenth part of the moon’s radiance, so the moon’s radiance is said to be the best of them all. In the same way …

After the rainy season the sky is clear and cloudless. And when the sun rises, it dispels all the darkness from the sky as it shines and glows and radiates. In the same way …

All the great rivers—that is, the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—flow, slant, slope, and incline towards the ocean, and the ocean is said to be the greatest of them. In the same way, all skillful qualities are rooted in diligence and meet at diligence, and diligence is said to be the best of them.”

AN 10.16

AN 10.16
Worthy of Offerings Dedicated to the Gods
Āhuneyyasutta

“Mendicants, these ten people are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world. What ten? A Realized One, a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha; an independent Buddha; one freed both ways; one freed by wisdom; a direct witness; one attained to view; one freed by faith; a follower by faith; a follower of teachings; a member of the spiritual family. These are the ten people who are worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and are the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 10.17

AN 10.17
A Protector (1st)
Paṭhamanāthasutta

“Mendicants, you should live with a protector, not without one. Living without a protector is suffering. There are ten qualities that serve as protector. What ten? Firstly, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. This is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is easy to admonish, having qualities that make them easy to admonish. They’re patient, and take instruction respectfully. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties for their spiritual companions, understanding how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant loves the teachings and is a delight to converse with, being full of joy in the teaching and training. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

You should live with a protector, not without one. Living without a protector is suffering. These are the ten qualities that serve as protector.”

AN 10.18

AN 10.18
A Protector (2nd)
Dutiyanāthasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, you should live with a protector, not without one. Living without a protector is suffering. There are ten qualities that serve as protector. What ten? Firstly, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they've undertaken. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is very learned, remembering and keeping what they've learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is easy to admonish, having qualities that make them easy to admonish. They're patient, and take instruction respectfully. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties for their spiritual companions, understanding how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant loves the teachings and is a delight to converse with, being full of joy in the teaching and training. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. Knowing this, the mendicants—whether senior, middle, or junior—think that mendicant is worth advising and instructing. Being treated with such kindness by the senior, middle, and junior mendicants, that mendicant can expect only growth, not decline. This too is a quality that serves as protector.

You should live with a protector, not without one. Living without a protector is suffering. These are the ten qualities that serve as protector.”

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

AN 10.19

AN 10.19
Abodes of the Noble Ones (1st)
Paṭhamaariyāvāsasutta

“There are these ten abodes of the noble ones in which the noble ones of the past, present, and future abide. What ten? A mendicant has given up five factors, is endowed with six factors, has a single guard, has four supports, has eliminated idiosyncratic interpretations of the truth, has totally given up searching, has pure intentions, has stilled the physical process, and is well freed in mind and well freed by wisdom. These are the ten abodes of the noble ones in which the noble ones of the past, present, and future abide.”

AN 10.20

AN 10.20
Abodes of the Noble Ones (2nd)
Dutiyaariyāvāsasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Kurus, near the Kuru town named Kammāsadamma. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants:

“There are these ten abodes of the noble ones in which the noble ones of the past, present, and future abide. What ten? A mendicant has given up five factors, possesses six factors, has a single guard, has four supports, has eliminated idiosyncratic interpretations of the truth, has totally given up searching, has unsullied intentions, has stilled the physical process, and is well freed in mind and well freed by wisdom.

And how has a mendicant given up five factors? It’s when a mendicant has given up sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. That’s how a mendicant has given up five factors.

And how does a mendicant possess six factors? It’s when a mendicant, seeing a sight with their eyes, is neither happy nor sad. They remain equanimous, mindful and aware. Hearing a sound with their ears … Smelling an odor with their nose … Tasting a flavor with their tongue …

Feeling a touch with their body … Knowing an idea with their mind, they’re neither happy nor sad. They remain equanimous, mindful and aware. That’s how a mendicant possesses six factors.

And how does a mendicant have a single guard? It’s when a mendicant’s heart is guarded by mindfulness. That’s how a mendicant has a single guard.

And how does a mendicant have four supports? After appraisal, a mendicant uses some things, endures some things, avoids some things, and gets rid of some things. That’s how a mendicant has four supports.

And how has a mendicant eliminated idiosyncratic interpretations of the truth? Different ascetics and brahmins have different idiosyncratic interpretations of the truth. For example: the cosmos is eternal, or not eternal, or finite, or infinite; the soul and the body are the same thing, or they are different things; after death, a realized one still exists, or no longer exists, or both still exists and no longer exists, or neither still exists nor no longer exists. A mendicant has dispelled, eliminated, thrown out, rejected, let go of, given up, and relinquished all these. That’s how a mendicant has eliminated idiosyncratic interpretations of the truth.

And how has a mendicant totally given up searching? It's when they've given up searching for sensual pleasures, for continued existence, and for a spiritual life. That's how a mendicant has totally given up searching.

And how does a mendicant have unsullied intentions? It's when a mendicant has given up intentions of sensuality, malice, and cruelty. That's how a mendicant has unsullied intentions.

And how has a mendicant stilled the physical process? It's when, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, they enter and remain in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. That's how a mendicant has stilled the physical process.

And how is a mendicant well freed in mind? It's when a mendicant's mind is freed from greed, hate, and delusion. That's how a mendicant is well freed in mind.

And how is a mendicant well freed by wisdom? It's when a mendicant understands: 'I've given up greed, hate, and delusion, cut them off at the root, made them like a palm stump, obliterated them, so they're unable to arise in the future.' That's how a mendicant's mind is well freed by wisdom.

Mendicants, whether in the past, future, or present, all noble ones abide in these same ten abodes of the noble ones. These are the ten abodes of the noble ones in which the noble ones of the past, present, and future abide."

AN 10.21

AN 10.21
The Lion's Roar
Sīhanādasutta

"Mendicants, towards evening the lion, king of beasts, emerges from his den, yawns, looks all around the four quarters, and roars his lion's roar three times. Then he sets out on the hunt. Why is that? 'May I not injure any little creatures on unclear ground.'

'Lion' is a term for the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. When the Realized One teaches Dhamma to an assembly, this is his lion's roar.

The Realized One possesses ten powers of a Realized One. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel. What ten? Firstly, the Realized One truly understands the possible as possible and the impossible as impossible. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. Relying on this he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel.

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the result of deeds undertaken in the past, future, and present in terms of grounds and causes. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands where all paths of practice lead. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the world with its many and diverse elements. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the diverse convictions of sentient beings. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the faculties of other sentient beings and other individuals after comprehending them with his mind. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands corruption, cleansing, and emergence regarding the absorptions, liberations, immersions, and attainments. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. He remembers: 'There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.' Thus he recollects his many past lives, with features and details. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Realized One sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. 'These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.' And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, he sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

These are the ten powers of a Realized One that the Realized One possesses. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel."

AN 10.22

AN 10.22
Hypotheses
Adhivuttipadasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Ānanda, I claim to be assured regarding the teachings that lead to realizing by insight the various different hypotheses. So I am able to teach the Dhamma in appropriate ways to different people. Practicing accordingly, when something exists they'll know it exists. When it doesn't exist they'll know it doesn't exist. When something is inferior they'll know it's inferior. When it's superior they'll know it's superior. When something is not supreme they'll know it's not supreme. When it is supreme they'll know it's supreme. And they will know or see or realize it in whatever way it should be known or seen or realized. This is possible. But this is the unsurpassable knowledge, that is: truly knowing each and every case. And Ānanda, I say that there is no other knowledge better or finer than this.

The Realized One possesses ten powers of a Realized One. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel. What ten? Firstly, the Realized One truly understands the possible as possible, and the impossible as impossible. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. Relying on this he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel.

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the result of deeds undertaken in the past, future, and present in terms of grounds and causes. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands where all paths of practice lead. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the world with its many and diverse elements. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the diverse convictions of sentient beings. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands the faculties of other sentient beings and other individuals after comprehending them with his mind. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One truly understands corruption, cleansing, and emergence regarding the absorptions, liberations, immersions, and attainments. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One recollects many kinds of past lives, with features and details. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Realized One sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

Furthermore, the Realized One has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements. Since he truly understands this, this is a power of the Realized One. …

These are the ten powers of a Realized One that the Realized One possesses. With these he claims the bull's place, roars his lion's roar in the assemblies, and turns the divine wheel."

AN 10.23

AN 10.23
Body
Kāyasutta

“Mendicants, there are things that should be given up by the body, not by speech. There are things that should be given up by speech, not by the body. There are things that should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom.

And what are the things that should be given up by the body, not by speech? It’s when a mendicant has committed a certain unskillful offense by way of body. After examination, sensible spiritual companions say this to them: ‘Venerable, you’ve committed a certain unskillful offense by way of body. Please give up that bad bodily conduct and develop good bodily conduct.’ When spoken to by their sensible spiritual companions they give up that bad bodily conduct and develop good bodily conduct. These are the things that should be given up by the body, not by speech.

And what are the things that should be given up by speech, not by the body? It’s when a mendicant has committed a certain unskillful offense by way of speech. After examination, sensible spiritual companions say this to them: ‘Venerable, you’ve committed a certain unskillful offense by way of speech. Please give up that bad verbal conduct and develop good verbal conduct.’ When spoken to by their sensible spiritual companions they give up that bad verbal conduct and develop good verbal conduct. These are the things that should be given up by speech, not by the body.

And what are the things that should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom? Greed … hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … and stinginess are things that should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom.

Nasty jealousy should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom. And what is nasty jealousy? It’s when a householder or their child is prospering in money, grain, silver, or gold. And a bondservant or dependent thinks: ‘Oh, may that householder or their child not prosper in money, grain, silver, or gold!’ Or an ascetic or brahmin receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And some other ascetic or brahmin thinks: ‘Oh, may that ascetic or brahmin not receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.’ This is called nasty jealousy.

Corrupt wishes should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom. And what are corrupt wishes? It’s when a faithless person wishes to be known as faithful. An unethical person wishes to be known as ethical. An unlearned person wishes to be known as learned. A lover of company wishes to be known as secluded. A lazy person wishes to be known as energetic. An unmindful person wishes to be known as mindful. A person without immersion wishes to be known as having immersion. A witless person wishes to be known as wise. A person who has not ended the defilements wishes to be known as having ended the defilements. These are called corrupt wishes. Corrupt wishes should be given up neither by the body, nor by speech, but by seeing again and again with wisdom.

Suppose that greed masters that mendicant and keeps going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes master them and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable does not have the understanding that would eliminate greed, so greed masters them and keeps going. They don't have the understanding that would eliminate hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes master them and keep going.'

Suppose that greed does not master that mendicant and keep going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes don't master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable has the understanding that eliminates greed, so greed doesn't master them and keep going. They have the understanding that eliminates hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … and corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes don't master them and keep going.'"

AN 10.24

AN 10.24
By Mahācunda
Mahācundasutta

At one time Venerable Mahācunda was staying in the land of the Cetīs at Sahajāti. There he addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Venerable Mahācunda said this:

“Reverends, a mendicant who makes a declaration of knowledge says: ‘I know this teaching, I see this teaching.’ Suppose that greed masters that mendicant and keeps going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: ‘This venerable does not have the understanding that would eliminate greed, so greed masters them and keeps going. They don’t have the understanding that would eliminate hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes master them and keep going.’

A mendicant who makes a declaration of development says: ‘I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.’ Suppose that greed masters that mendicant and keeps going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: ‘This venerable does not have the understanding that would eliminate greed, so greed masters them and keeps going. They don’t have the understanding that would eliminate hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes master them and keep going.’

A mendicant who makes a declaration of both knowledge and development says: ‘I know this teaching, I see this teaching. And I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.’ Suppose that greed masters that mendicant and keeps going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: ‘This venerable does not have the understanding that would eliminate greed, so greed masters them and keeps going. They don’t have the understanding that would eliminate hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes master them and keep going.’

Suppose a poor, needy, and penniless person was to declare themselves to be rich, affluent, and wealthy. But when it came time to make a payment they weren’t able to come up with any money, grain, silver, or gold. Then they would know of them: ‘This person declares themselves to be rich, affluent, and wealthy, but they are in fact poor, penniless, and needy.' Why is that? Because when it came time to make a payment they weren't able to come up with any money, grain, silver, or gold.

In the same way, a mendicant who makes a declaration of knowledge and development says: 'I know this teaching, I see this teaching. And I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.' Suppose that greed masters that mendicant and keeps going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable does not have the understanding that would eliminate greed, so greed masters them and keeps going. They don't have the understanding that would eliminate hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes master them and keep going.'

A mendicant who makes a declaration of knowledge says: 'I know this teaching, I see this teaching.' Suppose that greed does not master that mendicant and keep going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes don't master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable has the understanding that eliminates greed, so greed doesn't master them and keep going. They have the understanding that eliminates hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … and corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes don't master them and keep going.'

A mendicant who makes a declaration of development says: 'I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.' Suppose that greed does not master that mendicant and keep going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes don't master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable has the understanding that eliminates greed, so greed doesn't master them and keep going. They have the understanding that eliminates hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … and corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes don't master them and keep going.'

A mendicant who makes a declaration of both knowledge and development says: 'I know this teaching, I see this teaching. And I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.' Suppose that greed does not master that mendicant and keep going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes don't master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: 'This venerable has the understanding that eliminates greed, so greed doesn't master them and keep going. They have the understanding that eliminates hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … and corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes don't master them and keep going.'

Suppose a rich, affluent, and wealthy person was to declare themselves to be rich, affluent, and wealthy. And whenever it came time to make a payment they were able to come up with the money, grain, silver, or gold. Then they would know of them: 'This person declares themselves to be rich, affluent, and wealthy, and they are in fact rich, affluent, and wealthy.' Why is that? Because when it came time to make a payment they were able to come up with the money, grain, silver, or gold.

In the same way, a mendicant who makes a declaration of knowledge and development says: ‘I know this teaching, I see this teaching. And I am developed in physical endurance, ethics, mind, and wisdom.’ Suppose that greed does not master that mendicant and keep going. Or that hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … or corrupt wishes don’t master that mendicant and keep going. You should know of them: ‘This venerable has the understanding that eliminates greed, so greed doesn’t master them and keep going. They have the understanding that eliminates hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … stinginess … nasty jealousy … and corrupt wishes, so corrupt wishes don’t master them and keep going.’”

AN 10.25

AN 10.25
Meditation on Universals
Kasiṇasutta

“Mendicants, there are these ten universal dimensions of meditation. What ten? Someone perceives the meditation on universal earth above, below, across, undivided and limitless. They perceive the meditation on universal water … the meditation on universal fire … the meditation on universal air … the meditation on universal blue … the meditation on universal yellow … the meditation on universal red … the meditation on universal white … the meditation on universal space … They perceive the meditation on universal consciousness above, below, across, undivided and limitless. These are the ten universal dimensions of meditation.”

AN 10.26

AN 10.26
With Kāḷī
Kāḷīsutta

At one time Venerable Mahākaccāna was staying in the land of the Avantis near Kuraraghara on Steep Mountain.

Then the laywoman Kāḷī of Kurughara went up to Venerable Mahākaccāna, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, this was said by the Buddha in ‘The Maidens’ Questions’:

‘I’ve reached the goal, peace of heart. Having conquered the army of the likable and pleasant, alone, practicing absorption, I awakened to bliss. That’s why I don’t get too close to people, and no-one gets too close to me.’

How should we see the detailed meaning of the Buddha’s brief statement?”

“Sister, some ascetics and brahmins regard the attainment of the meditation on universal earth to be the ultimate. Thinking ‘this is the goal’, they are reborn. The Buddha directly knew the extent to which the attainment of the meditation on universal earth was the ultimate. Directly knowing this he saw the beginning, the drawback, and the escape. And he saw the knowledge and vision of what is the path and what is not the path. Because he saw the beginning, the drawback, and the escape, and he saw the knowledge and vision of what is the path and what is not the path, he knew that he had reached the goal, peace of heart.

Some ascetics and brahmins regard the attainment of the meditation on universal water to be the ultimate. Thinking ‘this is the goal’, they are reborn. … Some ascetics and brahmins regard the attainment of the meditation on universal fire … universal air … universal blue … universal yellow … universal red … universal white … universal space … universal consciousness to be the ultimate. Thinking ‘this is the goal’, they are reborn. The Buddha directly knew the extent to which the attainment of the meditation on universal consciousness was the ultimate. Directly knowing this he saw the beginning, the drawback, and the escape. And he saw the knowledge and vision of what is the path and what is not the path. Because he saw the beginning, the drawback, and the escape, and he saw the knowledge and vision of what is the path and what is not the path, he knew that he had reached the goal, peace of heart.

So, sister, that’s how to understand the detailed meaning of what the Buddha said in brief in ‘The Maiden’s Questions’:

‘I’ve reached the goal, peace of heart. Having conquered the army of the likable and pleasant, alone, practicing absorption, I awakened to bliss. That’s why I don’t get too close to people, and no-one gets too close to me.’”

AN 10.27

AN 10.27
The Great Questions (1st)
Paṭhamamahāpañhāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then it occurred to him, "It's too early to wander for alms in Sāvatthī. Why don't we visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?"

Then they went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions and exchanged greetings with the wanderers there. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side. The wanderers said to them:

"Reverends, the ascetic Gotama teaches his disciples like this: 'Please, mendicants, directly know all things. Meditate having directly known all things.' We too teach our disciples: 'Please, reverends, directly know all things. Live having directly known all things.' What, then, is the difference between the ascetic Gotama's teaching and instruction and ours?"

Those mendicants neither approved nor dismissed that statement of the wanderers of other religions. They got up from their seat, thinking, "We will learn the meaning of this statement from the Buddha himself."

Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"Mendicants, when wanderers of other religions say this, you should say to them: 'One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer. Two … three … four … five … six … seven … eight … nine … ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.' Questioned like this, the wanderers of other religions would be stumped, and, in addition, would get frustrated. Why is that? Because they're out of their element. I don't see anyone in this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—who could provide a satisfying answer to these questions except for the Realized One or his disciple or someone who has heard it from them.

'One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer.' That's what I said, but why did I say it? Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding one thing, seeing its limits and fully comprehending its meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What one thing? 'All sentient beings are sustained by food.' Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding this one thing, seeing its limits and fully comprehending its meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. ‘One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

What two? Name and form. …

What three? Three feelings. …

What four? The four foods. …

What five? The five grasping aggregates. …

What six? The six interior sense fields. …

What seven? The seven planes of consciousness. …

What eight? The eight worldly conditions. …

What nine? The nine abodes of sentient beings. …

‘Ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding ten things, seeing their limits and fully comprehending their meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What ten? The ten ways of performing unskillful deeds. Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding these ten things, seeing their limits and fully comprehending their meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. ‘Ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.28

AN 10.28
The Great Questions (2nd)
Dutiyamahāpañhāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kajaṅgalā in a bamboo grove. Then several lay followers of Kajaṅgalā went to the nun Kajaṅgalikā, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to her:

"Ma'am, this was said by the Buddha in 'The Great Questions': 'One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer. Two … three … four … five … six … seven … eight … nine … ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.' How should we see the detailed meaning of the Buddha's brief statement?"

"Good people, I haven't heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha or from esteemed mendicants. But as to how it seems to me, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, ma'am," replied the lay followers. The nun Kajaṅgalikā said this:

"'One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer.' That's what the Buddha said, but why did he say it? Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding one thing, seeing its limits and fully comprehending its meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What one thing? 'All sentient beings are sustained by food.' Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding this one thing, seeing its limits and fully comprehending its meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. 'One thing: question, passage for recitation, and answer.' That's what the Buddha said, and this is why he said it.

What two? Name and form. … What three? Three feelings. …

With a mind well developed in four things—seeing their limits and fully comprehending their meaning—a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What four? The four kinds of mindfulness meditation. … With a mind well developed in these four things—seeing their limits and fully fathoming their meaning—a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. …

What five? The five faculties. … What six? The six elements of escape. … What seven? The seven awakening factors. … What eight? The noble eightfold path. …

Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding nine things, seeing their limits and fully comprehending their meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What nine? The nine abodes of sentient beings. Becoming completely disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed regarding these nine things, seeing their limits and fully comprehending their meaning, a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life.

‘Ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.’ That’s what the Buddha said, but why did he say it? Becoming well developed in ten things—seeing their limits and fully fathoming their meaning—a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. What ten? The ten ways of performing skillful deeds. With a mind well developed in these ten things—seeing their limits and fully fathoming their meaning—a mendicant makes an end of suffering in this very life. ‘Ten things: question, passage for recitation, and answer.’ That’s what the Buddha said, and this is why he said it.

That’s how I understand the detailed meaning of what the Buddha said in brief in ‘The Great Questions’. If you wish, you may go to the Buddha and ask him about this. You should remember it in line with the Buddha’s answer.”

“Yes, ma’am,” replied those lay followers, approving and agreeing with what the nun Kajaṅgalikā said. Then they got up from their seat, bowed, and respectfully circled her, keeping her on their right. Then they went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and informed the Buddha of all they had discussed.

“Good, good, householders. The nun Kajaṅgalikā is astute, she has great wisdom. If you came to me and asked this question, I would answer it in exactly the same way as the nun Kajaṅgalikā. That is what it means, and that’s how you should remember it.”

AN 10.29

AN 10.29
Kosala (1st)
Paṭhamakosalasutta

“As far as Kāsi and Kosala extend, and as far as the dominion of King Pasenadi of Kosala extends, King Pasenadi is said to be the foremost. But even King Pasenadi decays and perishes.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

A galaxy extends a thousand times as far as the moon and sun revolve and the shining ones light up the quarters. In that galaxy there are a thousand moons, a thousand suns, a thousand Sinerus king of mountains, a thousand Indias, a thousand Western Continents, a thousand Northern Continents, a thousand Eastern Continents, four thousand oceans, four thousand Great Kings, a thousand realms of the Gods of the Four Great Kings, a thousand realms of the Gods of the Thirty-Three, of the Gods of Yama, of the Joyful Gods, of the Gods who Love to Imagine, of the Gods who Control what is Imagined by Others, and a thousand Brahmā realms. As far as the galaxy extends, the Great Brahmā is said to be the foremost. But even the Great Brahmā decays and perishes.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There comes a time when this cosmos contracts. As it contracts, most sentient beings migrate to the realm of streaming radiance. There they are mind-made, feeding on rapture, self-luminous, moving through the sky, steadily glorious, and they remain like that for a very long time. When the cosmos is contracting, the gods of streaming radiance are said to be the foremost. But even the gods of streaming radiance decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are these ten universal dimensions of meditation. What ten? Someone perceives the meditation on universal earth above, below, across, undivided and limitless. They perceive the meditation on universal water … the meditation on universal fire … the meditation on universal air … the meditation on universal blue … the meditation on universal yellow … the meditation on universal red … the meditation on universal white … the meditation on universal space … They perceive the meditation on universal consciousness above, below, across, undivided and limitless. These are the ten universal dimensions of meditation.

The best of these ten universal dimensions of meditation is when someone perceives the meditation on universal consciousness above, below, across, undivided and limitless.

Some sentient beings perceive like this. But even the sentient beings who perceive like this decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are these eight dimensions of mastery. What eight? Perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the first dimension of mastery.

Perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the second dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limited, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the third dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, limitless, both pretty and ugly. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the fourth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, blue, with blue color and blue appearance. They’re like a flax flower that’s blue, with blue color and blue appearance. Or a cloth from Varanasi that’s smoothed on both sides, blue, with blue color and blue appearance. In the same way, not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, blue, with blue color and blue appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the fifth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, yellow, with yellow color and yellow appearance. They’re like a champak flower that’s yellow, with yellow color and yellow appearance. Or a cloth from Varanasi that’s smoothed on both sides, yellow, with yellow color and yellow appearance. In the same way, not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, yellow, with yellow color and yellow appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the sixth dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, red, with red color and red appearance. They’re like a scarlet mallow flower that’s red, with red color and red appearance. Or a cloth from Varanasi that’s smoothed on both sides, red, with red color and red appearance. In the same way, not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, red, with red color and red appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the seventh dimension of mastery.

Not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, white, with white color and white appearance. They’re like the morning star that’s white, with white color and white appearance. Or a cloth from Varanasi that’s smoothed on both sides, white, with white color and white appearance. In the same way, not perceiving form internally, someone sees forms externally, white, with white color and white appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ This is the eighth dimension of mastery. These are the eight dimensions of mastery.

The best of these dimensions of mastery is when someone, not perceiving form internally, sees forms externally, white, with white color and white appearance. Mastering them, they perceive: ‘I know and see.’ Some sentient beings perceive like this. But even the sentient beings who perceive like this decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are four ways of practice. What four?

Painful practice with slow insight, painful practice with swift insight, pleasant practice with slow insight, and pleasant practice with swift insight.

These are the four ways of practice.

The best of these four ways of practice is the pleasant practice with swift insight. Some sentient beings practice like this. But even the sentient beings who practice like this decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are these four perceptions. What four?

One person perceives the limited.
One person perceives the expansive.
One person perceives the limitless.
One person, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, perceives the dimension of nothingness.

These are the four perceptions.

The best of these four perceptions is when a person, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, perceives the dimension of nothingness. Some sentient beings perceive like this. But even the sentient beings who perceive like this decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

This is the best of the convictions of outsiders, that is: ‘I might not be, and it might not be mine. I will not be, and it will not be mine.’ When someone has such a view, you can expect that they will be repulsed by continued existence, and they will not be repulsed by the cessation of continued existence. Some sentient beings have such a view. But even the sentient beings who have views like this decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are some ascetics and brahmins who advocate the ultimate purity of the spirit. This is the best of the advocates of the ultimate purity of the spirit, that is, when someone, going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, enters and remains in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They teach Dhamma in order to directly know and realize this. Some sentient beings have such a doctrine. But even the sentient beings who have such a doctrine decay and perish.

Seeing this, a learned noble disciple grows disillusioned with it. Their desire fades away even for the foremost, let alone the inferior.

There are some ascetics and brahmins who advocate ultimate extinguishment in this very life. This is the best of those who advocate extinguishment in this very life, that is, liberation by not grasping after truly understanding the origin, ending, gratification, drawback, and escape of the six fields of contact. Though I state and assert this, certain ascetics and brahmins misrepresent me with the incorrect, hollow, false, untruthful claim: ‘The ascetic Gotama doesn’t advocate the complete understanding of sensual pleasures, forms, or feelings.’ But I do advocate the complete understanding of sensual pleasures, forms, and feelings. And I advocate complete extinguishment by not grasping in this very life, wishless, extinguished, and cooled.”

AN 10.30

AN 10.30
Kosala (2nd)
Dutiyakosalasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time King Pasenadi of Kosala returned from combat after winning a battle and succeeding in his objective. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala went to the monastery. He went by carriage as far as the terrain allowed, then descended and entered the monastery on foot.

At that time several mendicants were walking mindfully in the open air. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala went up to them and said, "Sirs, where is the Blessed One at present, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha? For I want to see the Buddha."

"Great king, that's his dwelling, with the door closed. Approach it quietly, without hurrying; go onto the porch, clear your throat, and knock with the latch. The Buddha will open the door."

So the king approached the Buddha's dwelling, cleared his throat and knocked, and the Buddha opened the door. Then King Pasenadi entered the Buddha's dwelling. He bowed with his head at the Buddha's feet, caressing them and covering them with kisses, and pronounced his name: "Sir, I am Pasenadi, king of Kosala! I am Pasenadi, king of Kosala!"

"But great king, for what reason do you demonstrate such utmost devotion for this body, conveying your manifest love?"

"Sir, it's because of my gratitude and thanks for the Buddha that I demonstrate such utmost devotion, conveying my manifest love.

The Buddha is practicing for the welfare and happiness of the people. He has established many people in the noble system, that is, the principles of goodness and skillfulness. This is a reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha is ethical, possessing ethical conduct that is mature, noble, and skillful. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha lives in the wilderness, frequenting remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha is content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha gets to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart, when he wants, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha gets the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when he wants, without trouble or difficulty. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. He remembers: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ And so he recollects his many kinds of past lives, with features and details. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Buddha sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. ‘These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ He understands how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Furthermore, the Buddha has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is another reason that I demonstrate such utmost devotion for the Buddha, conveying my manifest love.

Well, now, sir, I must go. I have many duties, and much to do."

"Please, great king, go at your convenience." Then King Pasenadi got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving.

AN 10.31

AN 10.31
With Upāli
Upālisutta

Then Venerable Upāli went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, for how many reasons did the Realized One lay down training rules for his disciples and recite the monastic code?”

“Upāli, the Realized One laid down training rules for his disciples and recited the monastic code for ten reasons. What ten? For the well-being of the Saṅgha and for the comfort of the Saṅgha. For keeping difficult persons in check and for the comfort of good-hearted mendicants. For restraining defilements that affect the present life and protecting against defilements that affect lives to come. For inspiring confidence in those without it, and increasing confidence in those who have it. For the continuation of the true teaching and the support of the training. The Realized One laid down training rules for his disciples and recited the monastic code for these ten reasons.”

AN 10.32

AN 10.32
Suspending the Recitation of the Monastic Code
Pātimokkhaṭṭhapanāsutta

“Sir, how many grounds are there to suspend the recitation of the monastic code?”

“Upāli, there are ten grounds to suspend the recitation of the monastic code. What ten? A mendicant who has committed an expulsion offense is sitting in the assembly. A discussion about whether someone has committed an expulsion offense is unfinished. A person who is not fully ordained is sitting in the assembly. A discussion about whether someone is fully ordained or not is unfinished. Someone who has resigned the training is sitting in the assembly. A discussion about whether someone has rejected the training or not is unfinished. A eunuch is sitting in the assembly. A discussion about whether someone is a eunuch is unfinished. A raper of nuns is sitting in the assembly. A discussion about whether or not someone is a raper of nuns is unfinished. These are the ten grounds to suspend the recitation of the monastic code.”

AN 10.33

AN 10.33
A Judge
Ubbāhikāsutta

“Sir, how many qualities should a mendicant have to be deemed a judge?”

“Upāli, a mendicant should have ten qualities to be deemed a judge. What ten? It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They’re firm and unfaltering in the training. When there are opposing parties, they’re able to persuade, advocate, and convince them, make them see the other side and trust each other. They’re skilled in raising and settling disciplinary issues. They know what a disciplinary issue is. They know how a disciplinary issue originates. They know how a disciplinary issue ceases. They know the practical way leading to the cessation of a disciplinary issue. A mendicant should have these ten qualities to be deemed a judge.”

AN 10.34

AN 10.34
Ordination
Upasampadāsutta

“Sir, how many qualities should a mendicant have to give ordination?”

“Upāli, a mendicant should have ten qualities to give ordination. What ten? It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They’re able to care for the sick or get someone else to do so. They’re able to settle dissatisfaction or get someone else to do so. They’re able to dispel remorse when it has come up. They’re able to rationally dissuade someone from misconceptions that come up. They’re able to encourage someone in the higher ethics, the higher mind, and the higher wisdom. A mendicant should have these ten qualities to give ordination.”

AN 10.35

AN 10.35
Dependence
Nissayasutta

“Sir, how many qualities should a mendicant have to give dependence?”

“Upāli, a mendicant should have ten qualities to give dependence. What ten? It’s when a mendicant is ethical … They’re learned … Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They’re able to care for the sick or get someone else to do so. They’re able to settle dissatisfaction or get someone else to do so. They’re able to dispel remorse when it has come up. They’re able to rationally dissuade someone from misconceptions that come up. They’re able to encourage someone in the higher ethics, the higher mind, and the higher wisdom. A mendicant should have these ten qualities to give dependence.”

AN 10.36

AN 10.36
A Novice
Sāmaṇerasutta

“Sir, how many qualities should a mendicant have to be attended on by a novice?”

“Upāli, a mendicant should have ten qualities to be attended on by a novice. What ten? It’s when a mendicant is ethical … They’re learned … Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material. They’re able to care for the sick or get someone else to do so. They’re able to settle dissatisfaction or get someone else to do so. They’re able to dispel remorse when it has come up. They’re able to rationally dissuade someone from misconceptions that come up. They’re able to encourage someone in the higher ethics, the higher mind, and the higher wisdom. A mendicant should have these ten qualities to be attended on by a novice.”

AN 10.37

AN 10.37
Schism in the Saṅgha
Saṁghabhedasutta

“Sir, they speak of ‘schism in the Saṅgha’. How is schism in the Saṅgha defined?”

“Upāli, it’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as the teaching, and what is the teaching as not the teaching. They explain what is not the training as the training, and what is the training as not the training. They explain what was not spoken and stated by the Realized One as spoken and stated by the Realized One, and what was spoken and stated by the Realized One as not spoken and stated by the Realized One. They explain what was not practiced by the Realized One as practiced by the Realized One, and what was practiced by the Realized One as not practiced by the Realized One. They explain what was not prescribed by the Realized One as prescribed by the Realized One, and what was prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One. On these ten grounds they split off and go their own way. They perform legal acts autonomously and recite the monastic code autonomously. That is how schism in the Saṅgha is defined.”

AN 10.38

AN 10.38
Harmony in the Saṅgha
Saṁghasāmaggīsutta

“Sir, they speak of ‘harmony in the Saṅgha’. How is harmony in the Saṅgha defined?”

“Upāli, it’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as not the teaching, and what is the teaching as the teaching. They explain what is not the training as not the training, and what is the training as the training. They explain what was not spoken and stated by the Realized One as not spoken and stated by the Realized One, and what was spoken and stated by the Realized One as spoken and stated by the Realized One. They explain what was not practiced by the Realized One as not practiced by the Realized One, and what was practiced by the Realized One as practiced by the Realized One. They explain what was not prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One, and what was prescribed by the Realized One as prescribed by the Realized One. On these ten grounds they don’t split off and go their own way. They don’t perform legal acts autonomously or recite the monastic code autonomously. That is how harmony in the Saṅgha is defined.”

AN 10.39

AN 10.39
With Ānanda (1st)
Paṭhamaānandasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

“Sir, they speak of ‘schism in the Saṅgha’. How is schism in the Saṅgha defined?”

“Ānanda, it’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as the teaching … and what was prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One. On these ten grounds they split off and go their own way. They perform legal acts autonomously and recite the monastic code autonomously. That is how schism in the Saṅgha is defined.”

“But sir, what does someone who has split a harmonious Saṅgha bring upon themselves?”

“They bring upon themselves evil that lasts for an eon.”

“But sir, what is the evil that lasts for an eon?”

“They burn in hell for an eon, Ānanda.

A schismatic remains for the eon in a place of loss, in hell. Taking a stand against the teaching, favoring factions, they ruin their sanctuary. After causing schism in a harmonious Saṅgha, they burn in hell for an eon.”

AN 10.40

AN 10.40
With Ānanda (2nd)
Dutiyaānandasutta

“Sir, they speak of ‘harmony in the Saṅgha’. How is harmony in the Saṅgha defined?”

“Ānanda, it’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as not the teaching, and what is the teaching as the teaching. They explain what is not the training as not the training, and what is the training as the training. They explain what was not spoken and stated by the Realized One as not spoken and stated by the Realized One, and what was spoken and stated by the Realized One as spoken and stated by the Realized One. They explain what was not practiced by the Realized One as not practiced by the Realized One, and what was practiced by the Realized One as practiced by the Realized One. They explain what was not prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One, and what was prescribed by the Realized One as prescribed by the Realized One. On these ten grounds they don’t split off and go their own way. They don’t perform legal acts autonomously or recite the monastic code autonomously. That is how harmony in the Saṅgha is defined.”

“But sir, what does someone who has created harmony in a schismatic Saṅgha bring upon themselves?”

“They bring divine merit upon themselves.”

“But what is divine merit?”

“They rejoice in heaven for an eon, Ānanda.

A Saṅgha in harmony is happy, as is support for those in harmony. Taking a stand on the teaching, favoring harmony, they ruin no sanctuary. After creating harmony in the Saṅgha, they rejoice in heaven for an eon.”

AN 10.41

AN 10.41
Arguments
Vivādasutta

Then Venerable Upāli went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason, why arguments, quarrels, and disputes arise in the Saṅgha, and the mendicants don’t live happily?”

“Upāli, it’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as the teaching, and what is the teaching as not the teaching. They explain what is not the training as the training, and what is the training as not the training. They explain what was not spoken and stated by the Realized One as spoken and stated by the Realized One, and what was spoken and stated by the Realized One as not spoken and stated by the Realized One. They explain what was not practiced by the Realized One as practiced by the Realized One, and what was practiced by the Realized One as not practiced by the Realized One. They explain what was not prescribed by the Realized One as prescribed by the Realized One, and what was prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One. This is the cause, this is the reason why arguments, quarrels, and disputes arise in the Saṅgha, and the mendicants don’t live happily.”

AN 10.42

AN 10.42
Roots of Arguments (1st)
Paṭhamavivādamūlasutta

“Sir, how many roots of arguments are there?”

“Upāli, there are ten roots of arguments. What ten? It’s when a mendicant explains what is not the teaching as the teaching, and what is the teaching as not the teaching. They explain what is not the training as the training, and what is the training as not the training. They explain what was not spoken and stated by the Realized One as spoken and stated by the Realized One, and what was spoken and stated by the Realized One as not spoken and stated by the Realized One. They explain what was not practiced by the Realized One as practiced by the Realized One, and what was practiced by the Realized One as not practiced by the Realized One. They explain what was not prescribed by the Realized One as prescribed by the Realized One, and what was prescribed by the Realized One as not prescribed by the Realized One. These are the ten roots of arguments.”

AN 10.43

AN 10.43
Roots of Arguments (2nd)
Dutiyavivādamūlasutta

“Sir, how many roots of arguments are there?”

“Upāli, there are ten roots of arguments. What ten? It’s when a mendicant explains what is not an offense as an offense, and what is an offense as not an offense. They explain a light offense as a serious offense, and a serious offense as a light offense. They explain an offense committed with corrupt intention as an offense not committed with corrupt intention, and an offense not committed with corrupt intention as an offense committed with corrupt intention. They explain an offense requiring rehabilitation as an offense not requiring rehabilitation, and an offense not requiring rehabilitation as an offense requiring rehabilitation. They explain an offense with redress as an offense without redress, and an offense without redress as an offense with redress. These are the ten roots of arguments.”

AN 10.44

AN 10.44
At Kusinārā
Kusinārasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Kusinārā, in the Forest of Offerings. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should first check five things in themselves and establish five things in themselves. What five things should they check in themselves? A mendicant who wants to accuse another should check this: ‘Is my bodily behavior pure? Do I have pure bodily behavior that is impeccable and irreproachable? Is this thing found in me or not?’ If it’s not, there will be people who say: ‘Come on, venerable, train your own bodily behavior first.’

Furthermore, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should check this: ‘Is my verbal behavior pure? Do I have pure verbal behavior that is impeccable and irreproachable? Is this thing found in me or not?’ If it’s not, there will be people who say: ‘Come on, venerable, train your own verbal behavior first.’

Furthermore, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should check this: ‘Is my heart established in love for my spiritual companions, without resentment? Is this thing found in me or not?’ If it’s not, there will be people who say: ‘Come on, venerable, establish your heart in love for your spiritual companions first.’

Furthermore, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should check this: ‘Am I very learned, remembering and keeping what I’ve learned? These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. Am I very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically? Is this thing found in me or not?’ If it’s not, there will be people who say: ‘Come on, venerable, memorize the scriptures first.’

Furthermore, a mendicant who wants to accuse another should check this: ‘Have both monastic codes been passed down to me in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, and well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material? Is this thing found in me or not?’ If it’s not, and if they are unable to respond when asked “Venerable, where was this spoken by the Buddha?” there will be people who say: ‘Come on, venerable, train in the monastic code first.’ These are the five things they should check in themselves.

What five things should they establish in themselves? ‘I will speak at the right time, not at the wrong time. I will speak truthfully, not falsely. I will speak gently, not harshly. I will speak beneficially, not harmfully. I will speak lovingly, not from secret hate.' These are the five things they should establish in themselves. A mendicant who wants to accuse another should first check these five things in themselves and establish these five things in themselves."

AN 10.45

AN 10.45
Entering a Royal Compound
Rājantepurappavesanasutta

“Mendicants, there are ten drawbacks to entering a royal compound. What ten?

Firstly, a king is sitting with his chief queen when a monk enters. When the queen sees the monk she smiles, or when the monk sees the queen he smiles. So the king thinks: ‘They’ve done it for sure, or they will do it.’ This is the first drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, a king has many duties, and much to do. He has sex with one of the women but doesn’t remember. She gets pregnant from that. So the king thinks: ‘No-one else has entered here, except for that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the second drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, a gem is lost somewhere in the royal compound. So the king thinks: ‘No-one else has entered here, except for that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the third drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, secret deliberations in the royal compound are leaked outside. So the king thinks: ‘No-one else has entered here, except for that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the fourth drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, in a royal compound, a father longs for their son, or a son longs for his father. They think: ‘No-one else has entered here, except for that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the fifth drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, the king promotes someone to a higher position. Those who are upset by this think: ‘The king is close to that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the sixth drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, the king demotes someone to a lower position. Those who are upset by this think: ‘The king is close to that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the seventh drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, the king dispatches the army at the wrong time. Those who are upset by this think: ‘The king is close to that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the eighth drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, the king dispatches the army at the right time, but orders it to turn back while still on the road. Those who are upset by this think: ‘The king is close to that monk. Could this be the monk’s doing?’ This is the ninth drawback of entering a royal compound.

Furthermore, in the royal compound there is a trampling of elephants, horses, and chariots, as well as arousing sights, sounds, smells, tastes, and touches that do not befit a monk. This is the tenth drawback of entering a royal compound.

These are the ten drawbacks of entering a royal compound."

AN 10.46

AN 10.46
With the Sakyans
Sakkasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Then on the sabbath several Sakyan lay followers went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to them:

“Sakyans, do you observe the sabbath with its eight factors?”

“Sir, sometimes we do, sometimes we don’t.”

“That’s your loss, Sakyans, it’s your misfortune. In this life with its fear of sorrow and death, you sometimes keep the sabbath and you sometimes don’t.

What do you think, Sakyans? Take a man who earns half a dollar for an honest day’s work. Is this enough to call him a deft and industrious man?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, Sakyans? Take a man who earns a dollar for an honest day’s work. Is this enough to call him a deft and industrious man?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, Sakyans? Take a man who, for an honest day’s work, earns two dollars … three dollars … four dollars … five dollars … six dollars … seven dollars … eight dollars … nine dollars … ten dollars … twenty dollars … thirty dollars … forty dollars … fifty dollars … a hundred dollars. Is this enough to call him a deft and industrious man?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, Sakyans? Suppose that man earned a hundred or a thousand dollars every day and saved it all up. If he lived for a hundred years, would he not accumulate a large mass of wealth?”

“Yes, sir.”

“What do you think, Sakyans? Would that man, on account of that wealth, experience perfect happiness for a single day or night, or even half a day or night?”

“No, sir.”

“Why is that?”

“Because sensual pleasures, sir, are impermanent, hollow, false, and deceptive.”

“But take one of my disciples who lives diligent, keen, and resolute for ten years, practicing in line with my instructions. They can experience perfect happiness for a hundred years, ten thousand years, or a hundred thousand years. And they could become a once-returner or a non-returner, or unfailingly a stream-enterer. Let alone ten years, take one of my disciples who lives diligent, keen, and resolute for nine years … eight years … seven years … six years … five years … four years … three years … two years … one year … ten months … nine months … eight months … seven months … six months … five months … four months … three months … two months … one month … a fortnight … ten days … nine days … eight days … seven days … six days … five days … four days … three days … two days …

Let alone two days, take one of my disciples who lives diligent, keen, and resolute for one day, practicing in line with my instructions. They can experience perfect happiness for a hundred years, ten thousand years, or a hundred thousand years. And they could become a once-returner or a non-returner, or unfailingly a stream-enterer. It’s your loss, Sakyans, it’s your misfortune. In this life with its fear of sorrow and death, you sometimes keep the sabbath and you sometimes don’t.”

“Well, sir, from this day forth we will observe the sabbath with its eight factors.”

AN 10.47

AN 10.47
With Mahāli
Mahālisutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then Mahāli the Licchavi went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason for doing bad deeds, for performing bad deeds?”

“Greed is a cause, Mahāli, greed is a reason for doing bad deeds, for performing bad deeds. Hate is a cause of bad deeds … Delusion is a cause of bad deeds … Irrational application of mind is a cause of bad deeds … A wrongly directed mind is a cause of bad deeds … This is the cause, Mahāli, this is the reason for doing bad deeds, for performing bad deeds.”

“What is the cause, sir, what is the reason for doing good deeds, for performing good deeds?”

“Contentment is a cause, Mahāli, contentment is a reason for doing good deeds, for performing good deeds. Love is a cause of good deeds … Understanding is a cause of good deeds … Rational application of mind is a cause of good deeds … A rightly directed mind is a cause of good deeds … This is the cause, Mahāli, this is the reason for doing good deeds, for performing good deeds. If these ten things were not found in the world, we wouldn’t see either unprincipled and immoral conduct, or principled and moral conduct. But since these ten things are found in the world, we see both unprincipled and immoral conduct, and principled and moral conduct.”

AN 10.48

AN 10.48
Ten Regular Reflections for a Renunciate
Pabbajitaabhiṇhasutta

“Mendicants, one who has gone forth should often review these ten things. What ten?

One who has gone forth should often review this: ‘I have secured freedom from class.’

‘My livelihood is tied up with others.’

‘My behavior should be different.’

‘I hope there’s no reason to blame myself when it comes to ethical conduct?’

‘I hope that, after examination, sensible spiritual companions don’t reproach any aspect of my ethics?’

‘I must be parted and separated from all I hold dear and beloved.’

‘I am the owner of my deeds and heir to my deeds. Deeds are my womb, my relative, and my refuge.

I shall be the heir of whatever deeds I do, whether good or bad.’

‘As the days and nights flit by, what sort of person am I becoming?’

‘Do I love to stay in empty huts?’

‘Do I have any superhuman distinctions in knowledge and vision worthy of the noble ones, so that when my spiritual companions question me on my deathbed I will not be embarrassed?’

One who has gone forth should often review these ten things.”

AN 10.49

AN 10.49
Existing Because of the Body
Sarīraṭṭhadhammasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things exist because of the body. What ten? Cold, heat, hunger, thirst, feces, urine, restraint of body, speech, and livelihood, and the will to live that leads to future lives. These ten things exist because of the body.”

AN 10.50

AN 10.50
Arguments
Bhaṇḍanasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the assembly hall. They were arguing, quarreling, and disputing, wounding each other with barbed words.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall. He sat down on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?"

"Sir, after the meal, on return from almsround, we sat together in the assembly hall, arguing, quarreling, and disputing, wounding each other with barbed words."

"Mendicants, this is not appropriate for you gentlemen who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness.

There are ten warm-hearted qualities that make for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling. What ten? Firstly, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they've undertaken. When a mendicant is ethical, this warm-hearted quality makes for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling.

Furthermore, a mendicant is very learned, remembering and keeping what they've learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. …

Furthermore, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is easy to admonish, having qualities that make them easy to admonish. They're patient, and take instruction respectfully. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties for their spiritual companions, understanding how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. …

Furthermore, a mendicant loves the teachings and is a delight to converse with, being full of joy in the teaching and training. …

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is mindful. They have utmost mindfulness and alertness, and can remember and recall what was said and done long ago. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. When a mendicant is wise, this warm-hearted quality makes for fondness and respect, helping the Saṅgha to live in harmony and unity, without quarreling.

These ten warm-hearted qualities make for fondness and respect, conducing to inclusion, harmony, and unity, without quarreling.”

AN 10.51

AN 10.51
Your Own Mind
Sacittasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, if a mendicant isn't skilled in the ways of another's mind, then they should train themselves: 'I will be skilled in the ways of my own mind.'

And how is a mendicant skilled in the ways of their own mind? Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and they check their own reflection in a clean bright mirror or a clear bowl of water. If they see any dirt or blemish there, they'd try to remove it. But if they don't see any dirt or blemish there, they're happy with that, as they've got all they wished for: 'How fortunate that I'm clean!' In the same way, checking is very helpful for a mendicant's skillful qualities. 'Am I often covetous or not? Am I often malicious or not? Am I often overcome with dullness and drowsiness or not? Am I often restless or not? Am I often doubtful or not? Am I often irritable or not? Am I often corrupted in mind or not? Am I often disturbed in body or not? Am I often energetic or not? Am I often immersed in samādhi or not?'

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: 'I am often covetous, malicious, overcome with dullness and drowsiness, restless, doubtful, irritable, defiled in mind, disturbed in body, lazy, and not immersed in samādhi.' In order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you'd apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: 'I am often content, kind-hearted, free of dullness and drowsiness, calm, confident, loving, pure in mind, undisturbed in body, energetic, and immersed in samādhi.' Grounded on those skillful qualities, they should practice meditation further to end the defilements."

AN 10.52

AN 10.52
With Sāriputta
Sāriputtasutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“Reverends, if a mendicant isn’t skilled in the ways of another’s mind, then they should train themselves: ‘I will be skilled in the ways of my own mind.’

And how is a mendicant skilled in the ways of their own mind? Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and they check their own reflection in a clean bright mirror or a clear bowl of water. If they see any dirt or blemish there, they’d try to remove it. But if they don’t see any dirt or blemish there, they’re happy with that, as they’ve got all they wished for: ‘How fortunate that I’m clean!’

In the same way, checking is very helpful for a mendicant’s skillful qualities. ‘Am I often covetous or not? Am I often malicious or not? Am I often overcome with dullness and drowsiness or not? Am I often restless or not? Am I often doubtful or not? Am I often irritable or not? Am I often defiled in mind or not? Am I often disturbed in body or not? Am I often energetic or not? Am I often immersed in samādhi or not?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I am often covetous, malicious, overcome with dullness and drowsiness, restless, doubtful, angry, defiled in mind, disturbed in body, lazy, and not immersed in samādhi.’ In order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you’d apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I am often content, kind-hearted, rid of dullness and drowsiness, calm, confident, loving, pure in mind, undisturbed in body, energetic, and immersed in samādhi.’ Grounded on those skillful qualities, they should practice meditation further to end the defilements.”

AN 10.53

AN 10.53
Stagnation
Ṭhitisutta

“Mendicants, I don’t praise stagnation in skillful qualities, let alone decline. I praise growth in skillful qualities, not stagnation or decline.

And how is there decline in skillful qualities, not stagnation or growth? It’s when a mendicant has a certain degree of faith, ethics, generosity, wisdom, and eloquence. Those qualities neither stagnate nor grow in them. I call this decline in skillful qualities, not stagnation or growth. This is how there’s decline in skillful qualities, not stagnation or growth.

And how is there stagnation in skillful qualities, not decline or growth? It’s when a mendicant has a certain degree of faith, ethics, generosity, wisdom, and eloquence. Those qualities neither decline nor grow in them. I call this stagnation in skillful qualities, not decline or growth. This is how there’s stagnation in skillful qualities, not decline or growth.

And how is there growth in skillful qualities, not stagnation or decline? It’s when a mendicant has a certain degree of faith, ethics, generosity, wisdom, and eloquence. Those qualities neither stagnate nor decline in them. I call this growth in skillful qualities, not stagnation or decline. This is how there’s growth in skillful qualities, not stagnation or decline.

If a mendicant isn’t skilled in the ways of another’s mind, then they should train themselves: ‘I will be skilled in the ways of my own mind.’

And how is a mendicant skilled in the ways of their own mind? Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and they check their own reflection in a clean bright mirror or a clear bowl of water. If they see any dirt or blemish there, they’d try to remove it. But if they don’t see any dirt or blemish there, they’re happy with that, as they’ve got all they wished for: ‘How fortunate that I’m clean!’ In the same way, checking is very helpful for a mendicant’s skillful qualities. ‘Am I often covetous or not? Am I often malicious or not? Am I often overcome with dullness and drowsiness or not? Am I often restless or not? Am I often doubtful or not? Am I often irritable or not? Am I often defiled in mind or not? Am I often disturbed in body or not? Am I often energetic or not? Am I often immersed in samādhi or not?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I am often covetous, malicious, overcome with dullness and drowsiness, restless, doubtful, irritable, defiled in mind, disturbed in body, lazy, and not immersed in samādhi.’ In order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you'd apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to give up those bad, unskillful qualities, that mendicant should apply intense enthusiasm …

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: 'I am often content, kind-hearted, rid of dullness and drowsiness, calm, confident, loving, pure in mind, undisturbed in body, energetic, and immersed in samādhi.' Grounded on those skillful qualities, they should practice meditation further to end the defilements."

AN 10.54

AN 10.54
Serenity
Samathasutta

“Mendicants, if a mendicant isn’t skilled in the ways of another’s mind, then they should train themselves: ‘I will be skilled in the ways of my own mind.’

And how is a mendicant skilled in the ways of their own mind? Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and they check their own reflection in a clean bright mirror or a clear bowl of water. If they see any dirt or blemish there, they’d try to remove it. But if they don’t see any dirt or blemish there, they’re happy with that, as they’ve got all they wished for: ‘How fortunate that I’m clean!’ In the same way, checking is very helpful for a mendicant’s skillful qualities. ‘Do I have internal serenity of heart or not? Do I have the higher wisdom of discernment of principles or not?’

Suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I have serenity but not discernment.’ Grounded on serenity, they should practice meditation to get discernment. After some time they have both serenity and discernment.

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I have discernment but not serenity.’ Grounded on discernment, they should practice meditation to get serenity. After some time they have both serenity and discernment.

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I have neither serenity nor discernment.’ In order to get those skillful qualities, they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you’d apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, in order to get those skillful qualities, that person should apply intense enthusiasm … After some time they have both serenity and discernment.

But suppose that, upon checking, a mendicant knows this: ‘I have both serenity and discernment.’ Grounded on those skillful qualities, they should practice meditation further to end the defilements.

I say that there are two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn’t wear. I say that there are two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn’t eat. I say that there are two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent. I say that there are two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent. I say that there are two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent. I say that there are two kinds of people: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.

‘I say that there are two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn’t wear.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a robe: ‘When I wear this robe, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not wear that kind of robe. Whereas, should you know of a robe: ‘When I wear this robe, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should wear that kind of robe. ‘I say that there are two kinds of robes: those you should wear, and those you shouldn’t wear.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘I say that there are two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn’t eat.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of almsfood: ‘When I eat this almsfood, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not eat that kind of almsfood. Whereas, should you know of almsfood: ‘When I eat this almsfood, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should eat that kind of almsfood. ‘I say that there are two kinds of almsfood: that which you should eat, and that which you shouldn’t eat.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘I say that there are two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a lodging: ‘When I frequent this lodging, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not frequent that kind of lodging. Whereas, should you know of a lodging: ‘When I frequent this lodging, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should frequent that kind of lodging. ‘I say that there are two kinds of lodging: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘I say that there are two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a market town: ‘When I frequent this market town, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not frequent that kind of market town. Whereas, should you know of a market town: ‘When I frequent this market town, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should frequent that kind of market town. ‘I say that there are two kinds of market town: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘I say that there are two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a country: ‘When I frequent this country, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not frequent that kind of country. Whereas, should you know of a country: ‘When I frequent this country, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should frequent that kind of country. ‘I say that there are two kinds of country: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.

‘I say that there are two kinds of people: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, but why did I say it? Well, should you know of a person: ‘When I frequent this person, unskillful qualities grow, and skillful qualities decline.’ You should not frequent that kind of person. Whereas, should you know of a person: ‘When I frequent this person, unskillful qualities decline, and skillful qualities grow.’ You should frequent that kind of person. ‘I say that there are two kinds of people: those you should frequent, and those you shouldn’t frequent.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.55

AN 10.55
Decline
Parihānasutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“Reverends, they speak of a person liable to decline, and one not liable to decline. But how did the Buddha define a person liable to decline, and one not liable to decline?”

“Reverend, we would travel a long way to learn the meaning of this statement in the presence of Venerable Sāriputta. May Venerable Sāriputta himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Then listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“How did the Buddha define a person liable to decline? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t get to hear a teaching they haven’t heard before. They forget those teachings they have heard. They don’t keep rehearsing the teachings they’ve already got to know. And they don’t come to understand what they haven’t understood before. That’s how the Buddha defined a person liable to decline.

And how did the Buddha define a person not liable to decline? It’s when a mendicant gets to hear a teaching they haven’t heard before. They remember those teachings they have heard. They keep rehearsing the teachings they’ve already got to know. And they come to understand what they haven’t understood before. That’s how the Buddha defined a person not liable to decline.

If a mendicant isn’t skilled in the ways of another’s mind, then they should train themselves: ‘I will be skilled in the ways of my own mind.’

And how is a mendicant skilled in the ways of their own mind? Suppose there was a woman or man who was young, youthful, and fond of adornments, and they check their own reflection in a clean bright mirror or a clear bowl of water. If they see any dirt or blemish there, they’d try to remove it. But if they don’t see any dirt or blemish there, they’re happy with that, as they’ve got all they wished for: ‘How fortunate that I’m clean!’

In the same way, checking is very helpful for a mendicant’s skillful qualities. ‘Is contentment often found in me or not? Is kind-heartedness often found in me or not? Is freedom from dullness and drowsiness often found in me or not? Is calm often found in me or not? Is confidence often found in me or not? Is love often found in me or not? Is purity of mind often found in me or not? Is internal joy with the teaching found in me or not? Is internal serenity of heart found in me or not? Is the higher wisdom of discernment of principles found in me or not?'

Suppose a mendicant, while checking, doesn't see any of these skillful qualities in themselves. In order to get them they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you'd apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, they should apply intense enthusiasm to get those skillful qualities …

Suppose a mendicant, while checking, sees some of these skillful qualities in themselves, but doesn't see others. Grounded on the skillful qualities they see, they should apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness in order to get the skillful qualities they don't see. Suppose your clothes or head were on fire. In order to extinguish it, you'd apply intense enthusiasm, effort, zeal, vigor, perseverance, mindfulness, and situational awareness. In the same way, grounded on the skillful qualities they see, they should apply intense enthusiasm to get those skillful qualities they don't see.

But suppose a mendicant, while checking, sees all of these skillful qualities in themselves. Grounded on all these skillful qualities they should practice meditation further to end the defilements."

AN 10.56

AN 10.56
Perceptions (1st)
Paṭhamasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these ten perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What ten? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, and not-self in suffering, giving up, fading away, and cessation. These ten perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 10.57

AN 10.57
Perceptions (2nd)
Dutiyasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, these ten perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death. What ten? The perceptions of impermanence, not-self, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, a skeleton, a worm-infested corpse, a livid corpse, a split open corpse, and a bloated corpse. These ten perceptions, when developed and cultivated, are very fruitful and beneficial. They culminate in freedom from death and end in freedom from death.”

AN 10.58

AN 10.58
Rooted
Mūlakasutta

“Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: ‘Reverends, all things have what as their root? What produces them? What is their origin? What is their meeting place? What is their chief? What is their ruler? What is their overseer? What is their core? What is their culmination? What is their final end?’ How would you answer them?”

“Our teachings are rooted in the Buddha. He is our guide and our refuge. Sir, may the Buddha himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Well then, mendicants, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, if wanderers of other religions were to ask: ‘Reverends, all things have what as their root? What produces them? What is their origin? What is their meeting place? What is their chief? What is their ruler? What is their overseer? What is their core? What is their culmination? What is their final end?’ You should answer them: ‘Reverends, all things are rooted in desire. They are produced by application of mind. Contact is their origin. Feeling is their meeting place. Immersion is their chief. Mindfulness is their ruler. Wisdom is their overseer. Freedom is their core. They culminate in freedom from death. And extinguishment is their final end.’ When questioned by wanderers of other religions, that’s how you should answer them.”

AN 10.59

AN 10.59
Going Forth
Pabbajjāsutta

“So you should train like this: ‘Our minds will be consolidated as they were when we went forth, and arisen bad unskillful qualities will not occupy our minds. Our minds will be consolidated in the perceptions of impermanence, not-self, ugliness, and drawbacks. Knowing what is fair and unfair in the world, our minds will be consolidated in that perception. Knowing continued existence and ending of existence in the world, our minds will be consolidated in that perception. Knowing the origination and ending of the world, our minds will be consolidated in that perception. Our minds will be consolidated in the perceptions of giving up, fading away, and cessation.’ That’s how you should train.

When your minds are consolidated in these ten perceptions, you can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

AN 10.60

AN 10.60
With Girimānanda
Girimānandasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Girimānanda was sick, suffering, gravely ill. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, Venerable Girimānanda is sick, suffering, gravely ill. Sir, please go to Venerable Girimānanda out of compassion."

"Ānanda, if you were to recite to the mendicant Girimānanda these ten perceptions, it's possible that after hearing them his illness will die down on the spot.

What ten? The perceptions of impermanence, not-self, ugliness, drawbacks, giving up, fading away, cessation, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence of all conditions, and mindfulness of breathing.

And what is the perception of impermanence? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, and reflects like this: 'Form, feeling, perception, choices, and consciousness are impermanent.' And so they meditate observing impermanence in the five grasping aggregates. This is called the perception of impermanence.

And what is the perception of not-self? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, and reflects like this: 'The eye and sights, ear and sounds, nose and smells, tongue and tastes, body and touches, and mind and ideas are not-self.' And so they meditate observing not-self in the six interior and exterior sense fields. This is called the perception of not-self.

And what is the perception of ugliness? It's when a mendicant examines their own body up from the soles of the feet and down from the tips of the hairs, wrapped in skin and full of many kinds of filth. 'In this body there is head hair, body hair, nails, teeth, skin, flesh, sinews, bones, bone marrow, kidneys, heart, liver, diaphragm, spleen, lungs, intestines, mesentery, undigested food, feces, bile, phlegm, pus, blood, sweat, fat, tears, grease, saliva, snot, synovial fluid, urine.' And so they meditate observing ugliness in this body. This is called the perception of ugliness.

And what is the perception of drawbacks? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, and reflects like this: 'This body has much suffering and many drawbacks. For this body is beset with many kinds of affliction, such as the following. Diseases of the eye, inner ear, nose, tongue, body, head, outer ear, mouth, teeth, and lips. Cough, asthma, catarrh, inflammation, fever, stomach ache, fainting, dysentery, gastric pain, cholera, leprosy, boils, eczema, tuberculosis, epilepsy, herpes, itch, scabs, smallpox, scabies, hemorrhage, diabetes, piles, pimples, and ulcers. Afflictions stemming from disorders of bile, phlegm, wind, or their conjunction. Afflictions caused by change in weather, by not taking care of yourself, by overexertion, or as the result of past deeds. Cold, heat, hunger, thirst, defecation, and urination.' And so they meditate observing drawbacks in this body. This is called the perception of drawbacks.

And what is the perception of giving up? It's when a mendicant doesn't tolerate a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought that has arisen, and they don't tolerate any bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen, but give them up, get rid of them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. This is called the perception of giving up.

And what is the perception of fading away? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, and reflects like this: 'This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, extinguishment.' This is called the perception of fading away.

And what is the perception of cessation? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, and reflects like this: 'This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, cessation, extinguishment.' This is called the perception of cessation.

And what is the perception of dissatisfaction with the whole world? It's when a mendicant lives giving up and not grasping on to the attraction and grasping to the world, the mental fixation, insistence, and underlying tendencies. This is called the perception of dissatisfaction with the whole world.

And what is the perception of the impermanence of all conditions? It's when a mendicant is horrified, repelled, and disgusted with all conditions. This is called the perception of the impermanence of all conditions.

And what is mindfulness of breathing? It's when a mendicant has gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, sits down cross-legged, sets their body straight, and establishes mindfulness in their presence. Just mindful, they breathe in. Mindful, they breathe out. Breathing in heavily they know: 'I'm breathing in heavily.' Breathing out heavily they know: 'I'm breathing out heavily.' When breathing in lightly they know: 'I'm breathing in lightly.' Breathing out lightly they know: 'I'm breathing out lightly.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in experiencing the whole body.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out experiencing the whole body.'They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in stilling the physical process.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out stilling the physical process.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in experiencing rapture.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out experiencing rapture.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in experiencing bliss.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out experiencing bliss.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in experiencing mental processes.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out experiencing mental processes.'They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in stilling mental processes.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out stilling mental processes.'They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in experiencing the mind.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe out experiencing the mind.' They practice like this: 'I'll breathe in gladdening the mind.' They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out gladdening the mind.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in immersing the mind in samādhi.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out immersing the mind in samādhi.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in freeing the mind.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out freeing the mind.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in observing impermanence.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out observing impermanence.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in observing fading away.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out observing fading away.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in observing cessation.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out observing cessation.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe in observing letting go.’ They practice like this: ‘I’ll breathe out observing letting go.’ This is called mindfulness of breathing.

If you were to recite to the mendicant Girimānanda these ten perceptions, it’s possible that after hearing them his illness will die down on the spot.”

Then Ānanda, having learned these ten perceptions from the Buddha himself, went to Girimānanda and recited them. Then after Girimānanda heard these ten perceptions his illness died down on the spot. And that’s how he recovered from that illness.

AN 10.61

AN 10.61
Ignorance
Avijjāsutta

“Mendicants, it is said that no first point of ignorance is evident, before which there was no ignorance, and afterwards it came to be. And yet it is evident that there is a specific condition for ignorance.

I say that ignorance is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for ignorance? You should say: ‘The five hindrances.’ I say that the five hindrances are fueled by something, they’re not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the five hindrances? You should say: ‘The three kinds of misconduct.’ I say that the three kinds of misconduct are fueled by something, they’re not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the three kinds of misconduct? You should say: ‘Lack of sense restraint.’ I say that lack of sense restraint is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of sense restraint? You should say: ‘Lack of mindfulness and situational awareness.’ I say that lack of mindfulness and situational awareness is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of mindfulness and situational awareness? You should say: ‘Irrational application of mind.’ I say that irrational application of mind is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for irrational application of mind? You should say: ‘Lack of faith.’ I say that lack of faith is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of faith? You should say: ‘Listening to an untrue teaching.’ I say that listening to an untrue teaching is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for listening to an untrue teaching? You should say: ‘Associating with untrue persons.’

In this way, when the factor of associating with untrue persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to an untrue teaching. When the factor of listening to an untrue teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of lack of faith … irrational application of mind … lack of mindfulness and situational awareness … lack of sense restraint …the three kinds of misconduct … the five hindrances. When the five hindrances are fulfilled, they fulfill ignorance. That’s the fuel for ignorance, and that’s how it’s fulfilled.

It’s like when the rain pours down on a mountain top, and the water flows downhill to fill the hollows, crevices, and creeks. As they become full, they fill up the pools. The pools fill up the lakes, the lakes fill up the streams, and the streams fill up the rivers. And as the rivers become full, they fill up the ocean. That’s the fuel for the ocean, and that’s how it’s filled up.

In the same way, when the factor of associating with untrue persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to an untrue teaching. When the factor of listening to an untrue teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of lack of faith … irrational application of mind … lack of mindfulness and situational awareness … lack of sense restraint …the three kinds of misconduct … the five hindrances. When the five hindrances are fulfilled, they fulfill ignorance. That's the fuel for ignorance, and that's how it's fulfilled.

I say that knowledge and freedom are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for knowledge and freedom? You should say: 'The seven awakening factors.' I say that the seven awakening factors are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the seven awakening factors? You should say: 'The four kinds of mindfulness meditation.' I say that the four kinds of mindfulness meditation are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the four kinds of mindfulness meditation? You should say: 'The three kinds of good conduct.' I say that the three kinds of good conduct are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the three kinds of good conduct? You should say: 'Sense restraint.' I say that sense restraint is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for sense restraint? You should say: 'Mindfulness and situational awareness.' I say that mindfulness and situational awareness is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for mindfulness and situational awareness? You should say: 'Rational application of mind.' I say that rational application of mind is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for rational application of mind? You should say: 'Faith.' I say that faith is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for faith? You should say: 'Listening to the true teaching.' I say that listening to the true teaching is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for listening to the true teaching? You should say: 'Associating with true persons.'

In this way, when the factor of associating with true persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to the true teaching. When the factor of listening to the true teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of faith … rational application of mind … mindfulness and situational awareness … sense restraint …the three kinds of good conduct … the four kinds of mindfulness meditation … the seven awakening factors. When the seven awakening factors are fulfilled, they fulfill knowledge and freedom. That's the fuel for knowledge and freedom, and that's how it's fulfilled.

It's like when it rains heavily on a mountain top, and the water flows downhill to fill the hollows, crevices, and creeks. As they become full, they fill up the pools. The pools fill up the lakes, the lakes fill up the streams, and the streams fill up the rivers. And as the rivers become full, they fill up the ocean. That's the fuel for the ocean, and that's how it's filled up.

In the same way, when the factor of associating with true persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to the true teaching. When the factor of listening to the true teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of faith … rational application of mind … mindfulness and situational awareness … sense restraint …the three kinds of good conduct … the four kinds of mindfulness meditation … the seven awakening factors. When the seven awakening factors are fulfilled, they fulfill knowledge and freedom. That's the fuel for knowledge and freedom, and that's how it's fulfilled."

AN 10.62

AN 10.62
Craving
Taṇhāsutta

“Mendicants, it is said that no first point of craving for continued existence is evident, before which there was no craving for continued existence, and afterwards it came to be. And yet it is evident that there is a specific condition for craving for continued existence.

I say that craving for continued existence is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for craving for continued existence? You should say: ‘Ignorance.’

I say that ignorance is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for ignorance? You should say: ‘The five hindrances.’

I say that the five hindrances are fueled by something, they’re not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the five hindrances? You should say: ‘The three kinds of misconduct.’

I say that the three kinds of misconduct are fueled by something, they’re not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the three kinds of misconduct? You should say: ‘Lack of sense restraint.’

I say that lack of sense restraint is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of sense restraint? You should say: ‘Lack of mindfulness and situational awareness.’

I say that lack of mindfulness and situational awareness is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of mindfulness and situational awareness? You should say: ‘Irrational application of mind.’

I say that irrational application of mind is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for irrational application of mind? You should say: ‘Lack of faith.’

I say that lack of faith is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for lack of faith? You should say: ‘Listening to an untrue teaching.’

I say that listening to an untrue teaching is fueled by something, it’s not unfueled. And what is the fuel for listening to an untrue teaching? You should say: ‘Associating with untrue persons.’

In this way, when the factor of associating with untrue persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to an untrue teaching. When the factor of listening to an untrue teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of lack of faith … irrational application of mind … lack of mindfulness and situational awareness … lack of sense restraint …the three kinds of misconduct … the five hindrances … ignorance. When ignorance is fulfilled, it fulfills craving for continued existence. That's the fuel for craving for continued existence, and that's how it's fulfilled.

It's like when it rains heavily on a mountain top, and the water flows downhill to fill the hollows, crevices, and creeks. As they become full, they fill up the pools. The pools fill up the lakes, the lakes fill up the streams, and the streams fill up the rivers. And as the rivers become full, they fill up the ocean. That's the fuel for the ocean, and that's how it's filled up.

In the same way, when the factor of associating with untrue persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to an untrue teaching. When the factor of listening to an untrue teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of lack of faith … irrational application of mind … lack of mindfulness and situational awareness … lack of sense restraint …the three kinds of misconduct … the five hindrances … ignorance. When ignorance is fulfilled, it fulfills craving for continued existence. That's the fuel for craving for continued existence, and that's how it's fulfilled.

I say that knowledge and freedom are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for knowledge and freedom? You should say: 'The seven awakening factors.'

I say that the seven awakening factors are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the seven awakening factors? You should say: 'The four kinds of mindfulness meditation.'

I say that the four kinds of mindfulness meditation are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the four kinds of mindfulness meditation? You should say: 'The three kinds of good conduct.'

I say that the three kinds of good conduct are fueled by something, they're not unfueled. And what is the fuel for the three kinds of good conduct? You should say: 'Sense restraint.'

I say that sense restraint is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for sense restraint? You should say: 'Mindfulness and situational awareness.'

I say that mindfulness and situational awareness is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for mindfulness and situational awareness? You should say: 'Rational application of mind.'

I say that rational application of mind is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for rational application of mind? You should say: 'Faith.'

I say that faith is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for faith? You should say: 'Listening to the true teaching.'

I say that listening to the true teaching is fueled by something, it's not unfueled. And what is the fuel for listening to the true teaching? You should say: 'Associating with true persons.'

In this way, when the factor of associating with true persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to the true teaching. When the factor of listening to the true teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of faith … rational application of mind … mindfulness and situational awareness … sense restraint …the three kinds of good conduct … the four kinds of mindfulness meditation … the seven awakening factors. When the seven awakening factors are fulfilled, they fulfill knowledge and freedom. That's the fuel for knowledge and freedom, and that's how it's fulfilled.

It's like when it rains heavily on a mountain top, and the water flows downhill to fill the hollows, crevices, and creeks. As they become full, they fill up the pools. The pools fill up the lakes, the lakes fill up the streams, and the streams fill up the rivers. And as the rivers become full, they fill up the ocean. That's the fuel for the ocean, and that's how it's filled up. In this way, when the factor of associating with true persons is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of listening to the true teaching. When the factor of listening to the true teaching is fulfilled, it fulfills the factor of faith … rational application of mind … mindfulness and situational awareness … sense restraint …the three kinds of good conduct … the four kinds of mindfulness meditation … the seven awakening factors. When the seven awakening factors are fulfilled, they fulfill knowledge and freedom. That's the fuel for knowledge and freedom, and that's how it's fulfilled."

AN 10.63

AN 10.63
Come to a Conclusion
Niṭṭhaṅgatasutta

“Mendicants, all those who have come to a conclusion about me are accomplished in view. Of those who are accomplished in view, five conclude their path in this realm, and five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind. Which five conclude their path in this realm? The one who has seven rebirths at most, the one who goes from family to family, the one-seeder, the once returner, and the one who is perfected in the present life. These five conclude their path in this realm. Which five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind? The one who is extinguished between one life and the next, the one who is extinguished upon landing, the one who is extinguished without extra effort, the one who is extinguished with extra effort, and the one who heads upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. These five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind. All those who have come to a conclusion about me are accomplished in view. Of those who are accomplished in view, these five conclude their path in this realm, and these five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind.”

AN 10.64

AN 10.64
Experiential Confidence
Aveccappasannasutta

“Mendicants, all those who have experiential confidence in me have entered the stream. Of those who have entered the stream, five conclude their path in this realm, and five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind. Which five conclude their path in this realm? The one who has seven rebirths at most, the one who goes from family to family, the one-seeder, the once returner, and the one who is perfected in the present life. These five conclude their path in this realm. Which five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind? The one who is extinguished between one life and the next, the one who is extinguished upon landing, the one who is extinguished without extra effort, the one who is extinguished with extra effort, and the one who heads upstream, going to the Akaniṭṭha realm. These five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind. All those who have experiential confidence in me have entered the stream. Of those who have entered the stream, these five conclude their path in this realm, and these five conclude their path after leaving this realm behind.”

AN 10.65

AN 10.65
Happiness (1st)
Paṭhamasukhasutta

At one time Venerable Sāriputta was staying in the land of the Magadhans near the little village of Nālaka. Then the wanderer Sāmaṇḍakāni went up to Venerable Sāriputta and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Sāmaṇḍakāni sat down to one side, and said to Sāriputta:

“Reverend Sāriputta, what is happiness and what is suffering?”

“Rebirth is suffering, reverend, no rebirth is happiness. When there is rebirth, you can expect this kind of suffering. Cold, heat, hunger, thirst, defecation, and urination. Contact with fire, clubs, and knives. And relatives and friends get together and annoy you. When there is rebirth, this is the kind of suffering you can expect. When there is no rebirth, you can expect this kind of happiness. No cold, heat, hunger, thirst, defecation, or urination. No contact with fire, clubs, or knives. And relatives and friends don’t get together and annoy you. When there is no rebirth, this is the kind of happiness you can expect.”

AN 10.66

AN 10.66
Happiness (2nd)
Dutiyasukhasutta

At one time Venerable Sāriputta was staying in the land of the Magadhans near the little village of Nālaka. Then the wanderer Sāmaṇḍakāni went up to Venerable Sāriputta and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, Sāmaṇḍakāni sat down to one side and said to Sāriputta:

“Reverend Sāriputta, in this teaching and training, what is happiness and what is suffering?”

“Reverend, in this teaching and training dissatisfaction is suffering and satisfaction is happiness. When you’re dissatisfied, you can expect this kind of suffering. You find no happiness or pleasure while walking … standing … sitting … or lying down … or when in a village … a wilderness … at the root of a tree … an empty hut … the open air … or when among the mendicants. When you’re dissatisfied, this is the kind of suffering you can expect.

When you’re satisfied, you can expect this kind of happiness. You find happiness or pleasure while walking … standing … sitting … or lying down … or when in a village … a wilderness … at the root of a tree … an empty hut … the open air … or when among the mendicants. When you’re satisfied, this is the kind of happiness you can expect.”

AN 10.67

AN 10.67
At Naḷakapāna (1st)
Paṭhamanaḷakapānasutta

At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a town of the Kosalans named Naḷakapāna. There the Buddha stayed near Naḷakapāna in the grove of flame-of-the-forest trees. Now, at that time it was the sabbath, and the Buddha was sitting surrounded by a Saṅgha of monks. The Buddha spent much of the night educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk. Then he looked around the Saṅgha of mendicants, who were so very silent. He addressed Venerable Sāriputta:

"Sāriputta, the Saṅgha of mendicants is rid of dullness and drowsiness. Give them some Dhamma talk as you feel inspired. My back is sore, I'll stretch it."

"Yes, sir," Sāriputta replied.

And then the Buddha spread out his outer robe folded in four and laid down in the lion's posture—on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other—mindful and aware, and focused on the time of getting up. There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: "Reverends, mendicants!"

"Reverend," they replied. Sāriputta said this:

"Reverends, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waning fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only decline. In the same way, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A faithless individual is in decline. An individual with no conscience is in decline. An imprudent individual is in decline. A lazy individual is in decline. A witless individual is in decline. An irritable individual is in decline. A hostile individual is in decline. An individual with corrupt wishes is in decline. An individual with bad friends is in decline. An individual with wrong view is in decline.

Whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waxing fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only grow. In the same way, whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A faithful individual doesn't decline. An individual with a conscience doesn't decline. A prudent individual doesn't decline. An energetic individual doesn't decline. A wise individual doesn't decline. A loving individual doesn't decline. A kind individual doesn't decline. An individual with few desires doesn't decline. An individual with good friends doesn't decline. An individual with right view doesn't decline."

Then the Buddha got up and said to Venerable Sāriputta:

"Good, good, Sāriputta! Whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waning fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only decline. In the same way, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A faithless individual is in decline. An individual with no conscience … imprudent … lazy … witless … irritable … hostile … with corrupt wishes … bad friends … An individual with wrong view is in decline.

Whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waxing fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only grow. In the same way, whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

A faithful individual doesn't decline. A conscientious individual … prudent … energetic … wise … loving … kind … with few desires … good friends … An individual with right view doesn't decline."

AN 10.68

AN 10.68
At Naḷakapāna (2nd)
Dutiyanaḷakapānasutta

At one time the Buddha stayed near Naḷakapāna in the grove of flame-of-the-forest trees.

Now, at that time it was the sabbath, and the Buddha was sitting surrounded by a Saṅgha of monks. The Buddha spent much of the night educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk. Then he looked around the Saṅgha of mendicants, who were so very silent. He addressed Venerable Sāriputta, "Sāriputta, the Saṅgha of mendicants is rid of dullness and drowsiness. Give them some Dhamma talk as you feel inspired. My back is sore, I'll stretch it."

"Yes, sir," Sāriputta replied.

And then the Buddha spread out his outer robe folded in four and laid down in the lion's posture—on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other—mindful and aware, and focused on the time of getting up.

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: "Reverends, mendicants!"

"Reverend," they replied. Sāriputta said this:

"Reverends, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who doesn't want to listen, doesn't memorize the teachings, examine their meaning, or practice accordingly, and is not diligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waning fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only decline. In the same way, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who doesn't want to listen, doesn't memorize the teachings, examine their meaning, or practice accordingly, and is negligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

Whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who wants to listen, memorizes the teachings, examines their meaning, and practices accordingly, and is diligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It's like the moon in the waxing fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only grow. In the same way, whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who wants to listen, memorizes the teachings, examines their meaning, and practices accordingly, and is diligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night."

Then the Buddha got up and said to Venerable Sāriputta:

“Good, good, Sāriputta! Whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who doesn’t want to listen, doesn’t memorize the teachings, examine their meaning, or practice accordingly, and is negligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It’s like the moon in the waning fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only decline. In the same way, whoever has no faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who doesn’t want to listen, doesn’t memorize the teachings, examine their meaning, or practice accordingly, and is negligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect decline, not growth, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.

Whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who wants to listen, memorizes the teachings, examines their meaning, and practices accordingly, and is diligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night. It’s like the moon in the waxing fortnight. Whether by day or by night, its beauty, roundness, light, and diameter and circumference only grow. In the same way, whoever has faith, conscience, prudence, energy, and wisdom; who wants to listen, memorizes the teachings, examines their meaning, and practices accordingly, and is diligent when it comes to skillful qualities can expect growth, not decline, in skillful qualities, whether by day or by night.”

AN 10.69

AN 10.69
Topics of Discussion (1st)
Paṭhamakathāvatthusutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the assembly hall. They engaged in all kinds of low talk, such as talk about kings, bandits, and ministers; talk about armies, threats, and wars; talk about food, drink, clothes, and beds; talk about garlands and fragrances; talk about family, vehicles, villages, towns, cities, and countries; talk about women and heroes; street talk and well talk; talk about the departed; motley talk; tales of land and sea; and talk about being reborn in this or that state of existence.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall, where he sat on the seat spread out and addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?"

And they told him what had happened.

"Mendicants, it is not appropriate for you gentlemen who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness to engage in these kinds of low talk.

There are, mendicants, these ten topics of discussion. What ten? Talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. These are the ten topics of discussion.

Mendicants, if you bring up these topics of conversation again and again then your glory could surpass even the sun and moon, so mighty and powerful, let alone the wanderers of other religions."

AN 10.70

AN 10.70
Topics of Discussion (2nd)
Dutiyakathāvatthusutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the assembly hall. They engaged in all kinds of low talk, such as talk about kings, bandits, and ministers; talk about armies, threats, and wars; talk about food, drink, clothes, and beds; talk about garlands and fragrances; talk about family, vehicles, villages, towns, cities, and nations; talk about women and heroes; street talk and well talk; talk about the departed; miscellaneous talk; tales of land and sea; and talk about being reborn in this or that state of existence.

"Mendicants, there are ten grounds for praise. What ten? It's when a mendicant personally has few wishes, and speaks to the mendicants on having few wishes. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is content, and speaks to the mendicants on contentment. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is secluded, and speaks to the mendicants on seclusion. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally doesn't mix closely with others, and speaks to the mendicants on not mixing closely with others. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is energetic, and speaks to the mendicants on rousing energy. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is accomplished in ethics, and speaks to the mendicants on being accomplished in ethics. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is accomplished in immersion, and speaks to the mendicants on being accomplished in immersion. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is accomplished in wisdom, and speaks to the mendicants on being accomplished in wisdom. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is accomplished in freedom, and speaks to the mendicants on being accomplished in freedom. This is a ground for praise.

A mendicant personally is accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom, and speaks to the mendicants on being accomplished in the knowledge and vision of freedom. This is a ground for praise.

These are the ten grounds for praise.”

AN 10.71

AN 10.71
One Might Wish
Ākaṅkhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, live by the ethical precepts and the monastic code. Live restrained in the monastic code, conducting yourselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, keep the rules you've undertaken.

A mendicant might wish: 'May I be liked and approved by my spiritual companions, respected and admired.' So let them fulfill their precepts, be committed to inner serenity of the heart, not neglect absorption, be endowed with discernment, and frequent empty huts.

A mendicant might wish: 'May I receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.' So let them fulfill their precepts, be committed to inner serenity of the heart, not neglect absorption, be endowed with discernment, and frequent empty huts.

A mendicant might wish: 'May the services of those whose robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick I enjoy be very fruitful and beneficial for them.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: 'When deceased family and relatives who have passed away recollect me with a confident mind, may this be very fruitful and beneficial for them.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: 'May I be content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: 'May I endure cold, heat, hunger, and thirst. May I endure the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, and reptiles. May I endure rude and unwelcome criticism. And may I put up with physical pain—sharp, severe, acute, unpleasant, disagreeable, and life-threatening.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: 'May I prevail over desire and discontent, and may desire and discontent not prevail over me. May I live having mastered desire and discontent whenever they have arisen.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: 'May I prevail over fear and dread, and may fear and dread not prevail over me. May I live having mastered fear and dread whenever they arise.' So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: ‘May I get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when I want, without trouble or difficulty.’ So let them fulfill their precepts …

A mendicant might wish: ‘May I realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with my own insight due to the ending of defilements.’ So let them fulfill their precepts, be committed to inner serenity of the heart, not neglect absorption, be endowed with discernment, and frequent empty huts.

‘Live by the ethical precepts and the monastic code. Live restrained in the monastic code, conducting yourselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, keep the rules you’ve undertaken.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.72

AN 10.72
Thorns
Kaṇṭakasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof, together with several well-known senior disciples. They included Venerables Cāla, Upacāla, Kakkaṭa, Kaṭimbha, Kaṭa, Kaṭissaṅga, and other well-known senior disciples.

Now at that time several well-known Licchavis plunged deep into the Great Wood to see the Buddha. Driving a succession of fine carriages, they made a dreadful racket. Then those venerables thought:

“These several well-known Licchavis have plunged deep into the Great Wood to see the Buddha. Driving a succession of fine carriages, they’re making a dreadful racket. But the Buddha has said that sound is a thorn to absorption. Let’s go to the Gosiṅga Sal Wood. There we can meditate comfortably, free of noise and crowds.” Then those venerables went to the Gosiṅga Sal Wood, where they meditated comfortably, free of noise and crowds.

Then the Buddha said to the mendicants:

“Mendicants, where are Cāla, Upacāla, Kakkaṭa, Kaṭimbha, Kaṭa, and Kaṭissaṅga? Where have these senior disciples gone?”

And the mendicants told him what had happened.

“Good, good, mendicants! It’s just as those great disciples have so rightly explained. I have said that sound is a thorn to absorption.

Mendicants, there are these ten thorns. What ten? Relishing company is a thorn for someone who loves seclusion. Focusing on the beautiful feature of things is a thorn for someone pursuing the meditation on ugliness. Seeing shows is a thorn to someone restraining the senses. Lingering in the neighborhood of females is a thorn to celibacy. Sound is a thorn to the first absorption. Placing the mind and keeping it connected are a thorn to the second absorption. Rapture is a thorn to the third absorption. Breathing is a thorn to the fourth absorption. Perception and feeling are a thorn to the attainment of the cessation of perception and feeling. Greed, hate, and delusion are thorns.

Mendicants, live free of thorns! Live rid of thorns! Mendicants, live free of thorns and rid of thorns! The perfected ones live free of thorns, rid of thorns, free and rid of thorns.”

AN 10.73

AN 10.73
Likable
Iṭṭhadhammasutta

“Mendicants, these ten likable, desirable, and agreeable things are rare in the world. What ten? Wealth, beauty, health, ethical conduct, the spiritual life, friends, learning, wisdom, good qualities, and heaven are likable, desirable, and agreeable things that are rare in the world.

Ten things hinder the ten likable, desirable, and agreeable things that are rare in the world. Sloth and lack of initiative hinder wealth. Lack of adornment and decoration hinder beauty. Unsuitable activity hinders health. Bad friendship hinders ethical conduct. Lack of sense restraint hinders the spiritual life. Dishonesty hinders friends. Not reciting hinders learning. Not wanting to listen and ask questions hinders wisdom. Lack of commitment and reviewing hinder good qualities. Wrong practice hinders heaven. These ten things hinder the ten likable, desirable, and agreeable things that are rare in the world.

Ten things nourish the ten likable, desirable, and agreeable things that are rare in the world. Application and initiative nourish wealth. Adornment and decoration nourish beauty. Suitable activity nourishes health. Good friendship nourishes ethical conduct. Sense restraint nourishes the spiritual life. Honesty nourishes friends. Reciting nourishes learning. Eagerness to listen and ask questions nourishes wisdom. Commitment and reviewing nourish good qualities. Right practice nourishes heaven. These ten things nourish the ten likable, desirable, and agreeable things that are rare in the world.”

AN 10.74

AN 10.74
Growth
Vaḍḍhisutta

“Mendicants, a noble disciple who grows in ten ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life. What ten? He grows in fields and lands, money and grain, wives and children, in bondservants, workers, and staff, and in livestock. And he grows in faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. A noble disciple who grows in ten ways grows nobly, taking on what is essential and excellent in this life.

Someone who grows in money and grain, in wives, children, and livestock, is wealthy, famous, and respected by relatives and friends, and even by royals.

When someone grows in faith and ethics, wisdom, and both generosity and learning—a good man such as he sees clearly, and in the present life he grows in both ways.”

AN 10.75

AN 10.75
With Migasālā
Migasālāsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Venerable Ānanda robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of the laywoman Migasālā, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then the laywoman Migasālā went up to Ānanda, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Honorable Ānanda, how on earth are we supposed to understand the teaching taught by the Buddha, when the chaste and the unchaste are both reborn in exactly the same place in the next life? My father Purāṇa was celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex. When he passed away the Buddha declared that, since he was a once-returner, he was reborn in the host of Joyful Gods. But my uncle Isidatta was not celibate; he lived content with his wife. When he passed away the Buddha also declared that, since he was a once-returner, he was reborn in the host of Joyful Gods.

How on earth are we supposed to understand the teaching taught by the Buddha, when the chaste and the unchaste are both reborn in exactly the same place in the next life?"

"You're right, sister, but that's how the Buddha declared it."

Then Ānanda, after receiving almsfood at Migasālā's home, rose from his seat and left. Then after the meal, on his return from almsround, Ānanda went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

"Ānanda, who is this laywoman Migasālā, a foolish incompetent aunty, with an aunty's wit? And who is it that knows how to assess individuals?

These ten people are found in the world. What ten? Take a certain person who is unethical. And they don't truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that unethical conduct ceases without anything left over. And they've not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they're headed for a lower place, not a higher. They're going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take a certain person who is unethical. But they truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that unethical conduct ceases without anything left over. And they have listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they're headed for a higher place, not a lower. They're going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them, saying: ‘This one has just the same qualities as the other, so why is one worse and one better?’ This will be for their lasting harm and suffering.

In this case, the person who is unethical, but truly understands the freedom of heart … and has listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom is better and finer than the other person. Why is that? Because the stream of the teaching carries them along. But who knows the difference between them except a Realized One? So, Ānanda, don’t be judgmental about people. Don’t pass judgment on people. Those who pass judgment on people harm themselves. I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take a certain person who is ethical. But they don’t truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that ethical conduct ceases without anything left over. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take a certain person who is ethical. And they truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that ethical conduct ceases without anything left over. And they’ve listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a higher place, not a lower. They’re going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them … I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take a certain person who is very lustful. And they don’t truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that lust ceases without anything left over. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take a certain person who is very lustful. But they truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that lust ceases without anything left over. And they’ve listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a higher place, not a lower. They’re going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them … I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take a certain person who is irritable. And they don’t truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that anger ceases without anything left over. And they’ve not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re headed for a lower place, not a higher. They’re going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take a certain person who is irritable. But they truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that anger ceases without anything left over. And they’ve listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they're headed for a higher place, not a lower. They're going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them … I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Take a certain person who is restless. And they don't truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that restlessness ceases without anything left over. And they've not listened or learned or comprehended theoretically or found even temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they're headed for a lower place, not a higher. They're going to a lower place, not a higher.

Take a certain person who is restless. But they truly understand the freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom where that restlessness ceases without anything left over. And they've listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom. When their body breaks up, after death, they're headed for a higher place, not a lower. They're going to a higher place, not a lower.

Judgmental people compare them, saying: 'This one has just the same qualities as the other, so why is one worse and one better?' This will be for their lasting harm and suffering.

In this case the person who is restless, but truly understands the freedom of heart … and has listened and learned and comprehended theoretically and found at least temporary freedom is better and finer than the other person. Why is that? Because the stream of the teaching carries them along. But who knows the difference between them except a Realized One? So, Ānanda, don't be judgmental about people. Don't pass judgment on people. Those who pass judgment on people harm themselves. I, or someone like me, may pass judgment on people.

Who is this laywoman Migasālā, a foolish incompetent aunty, with an aunty's wit? And who is it that knows how to assess individuals? These ten people are found in the world.

If Isidatta had achieved Purāṇa's level of ethical conduct, Purāṇa could not have even known Isidatta's destination. And if Purāṇa had achieved Isidatta's level of wisdom, Isidatta could not have even known Purāṇa's destination. So both individuals were lacking in one respect."

AN 10.76

AN 10.76
Three Things
Tayodhammasutta

“Mendicants, if three things were not found, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha would not arise in the world, and the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One would not shine in the world. What three? Rebirth, old age, and death. If these three things were not found, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha would not arise in the world, and the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One would not shine in the world. But since these three things are found, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha arises in the world, and the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One shines in the world.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up rebirth, old age, and death. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up rebirth, old age, and death.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up greed, hate, and delusion. What three? Substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up greed, hate, and delusion.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. What three? Irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. What three? Unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and scattered mind. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and scattered mind. What three? Not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and scattered mind.

Without giving up three things you can’t give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. What three? Restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. Without giving up these three things you can’t give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind.

Without giving up three things you can't give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. What three? Faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. Without giving up these three things you can't give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct.

Without giving up three things you can't give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. What three? Disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. Without giving up these three things you can't give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness.

Without giving up three things you can't give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. What three? Lack of conscience, imprudence, and negligence. Without giving up these three things you can't give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends.

Mendicants, someone who lacks conscience and prudence is negligent. When you're negligent you can't give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. When you've got bad friends you can't give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. When you're lazy you can't give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. When you're unethical you can't give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. When you've got a fault-finding mind you can't give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and a scattered mind. When your mind is scattered you can't give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. When your mind is sluggish you can't give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. When you have doubts you can't give up greed, hate, and delusion. Without giving up greed, hate, and delusion you can't give up rebirth, old age, and death.

After giving up three things you can give up rebirth, old age, and death. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion. After giving up these three things you can give up rebirth, old age, and death.

After giving up three things you can give up greed, hate, and delusion. What three? Substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. After giving up these three things you can give up greed, hate, and delusion.

After giving up three things you can give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. What three? Irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. After giving up these three things you can give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances.

After giving up three things you can give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. What three? Unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and a scattered mind. After giving up these three things you can give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness.

After giving up three things you can give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and scattered mind. What three? Not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. After giving up these three things you can give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and scattered mind.

After giving up three things you can give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. What three? Restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. After giving up these three things you can give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind.

After giving up three things you can give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. What three? Faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. After giving up these three things you can give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct.

After giving up three things you can give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. What three? Disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. After giving up these three things you can give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness.

After giving up three things you can give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. What three? Lack of conscience, imprudence, and negligence. After giving up these three things you can give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends.

Mendicants, someone who has conscience and prudence is diligent. When you're diligent you can give up disregard, being hard to admonish, and having bad friends. When you've got good friends you can give up faithlessness, uncharitableness, and laziness. When you're energetic you can give up restlessness, lack of restraint, and unethical conduct. When you're ethical you can give up not wanting to see the noble ones, not wanting to hear the teaching of the noble ones, and a fault-finding mind. When you don't have a fault-finding mind you can give up unmindfulness, lack of situational awareness, and a scattered mind. When your mind isn't scattered you can give up irrational application of mind, following a wrong path, and mental sluggishness. When your mind isn't sluggish you can give up substantialist view, doubt, and misapprehension of precepts and observances. When you have no doubts you can give up greed, hate, and delusion. After giving up greed, hate, and delusion you can give up rebirth, old age, and death."

AN 10.77

AN 10.77
A Crow
Kākasutta

“Mendicants, a crow has ten bad qualities. What ten? They’re rude and impudent, gluttonous and voracious, cruel and pitiless, weak and raucous, unmindful and acquisitive. A crow has these ten bad qualities. In the same way, a bad mendicant has these ten bad qualities. What ten? They’re rude and impudent, gluttonous and voracious, cruel and pitiless, weak and raucous, unmindful and acquisitive. A bad mendicant has these ten bad qualities.”

AN 10.78

AN 10.78
Jains
Niganṭhasutta

“Mendicants, Jain ascetics have ten bad qualities. What ten? They’re faithless and unethical, without conscience or prudence, and devoted to untrue persons. They glorify themselves and put others down. They’re attached to their own views, holding them tight, and refusing to let go. They’re deceptive, with corrupt wishes and bad friends. Jain ascetics have these ten bad qualities.”

AN 10.79

AN 10.79
Grounds for Resentment
Āghātavatthusutta

“Mendicants, there are ten grounds for resentment. What ten? Thinking: ‘They did wrong to me,’ you harbor resentment. Thinking: ‘They are doing wrong to me’ … ‘They will do wrong to me’ … ‘They did wrong by someone I love’ … ‘They are doing wrong by someone I love’ … ‘They will do wrong by someone I love’ … ‘They helped someone I dislike’ … ‘They are helping someone I dislike’ … Thinking: ‘They will help someone I dislike,’ you harbor resentment. You get angry for no reason. These are the ten grounds for resentment.”

AN 10.80

AN 10.80
Getting Rid of Resentment
Āghātapaṭivinayasutta

“Mendicants, there are these ten methods to get rid of resentment. What ten? Thinking: ‘They harmed me, but what can I possibly do?’ you get rid of resentment. Thinking: ‘They are harming me …’ … ‘They will harm me …’ … ‘They harmed someone I love …’ … ‘They are harming someone I love …’ ‘They will harm someone I love …’ … They helped someone I dislike …’ … ‘They are helping someone I dislike …’ … Thinking: ‘They will help someone I dislike, but what can I possibly do?’ you get rid of resentment. And you don’t get angry for no reason. These are the ten ways of getting rid of resentment.”

AN 10.81

AN 10.81
With Bāhuna
Vāhanasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Campā on the banks of the Gaggarā Lotus Pond. Then Venerable Bāhuna went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, how many things has the Realized One escaped from, so that he lives detached, liberated, his mind free of limits?”

“Bāhuna, the Realized One has escaped from ten things, so that he lives detached, liberated, his mind free of limits. What ten? Form … feeling … perception … choices … consciousness … rebirth … old age … death … suffering … defilements … Suppose there was a blue water lily, or a pink or white lotus. Though it sprouted and grew in the water, it would rise up above the water and stand with no water clinging to it. In the same way, the Realized One has escaped from ten things, so that he lives detached, liberated, his mind free of limits.”

AN 10.82

AN 10.82
With Ānanda
Ānandasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Ānanda, it's quite impossible for a faithless mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant who is unethical …

unlearned …

hard to admonish …

with bad friends …

lazy …

unmindful …

lacking contentment …

of corrupt wishes …

of wrong view to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

It's quite impossible for a mendicant with these ten qualities to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

It is quite possible for a faithful mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

It is quite possible for a mendicant who is ethical …

a learned memorizer …

easy to admonish …

with good friends …

energetic …

mindful …

contented …

of few desires …

of right view to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

It is quite possible for a mendicant with these ten qualities to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.”

AN 10.83

AN 10.83
With Puṇṇiya
Puṇṇiyasutta

Then Venerable Puṇṇiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, what is the cause, what is the reason why sometimes the Realized One feels inspired to teach, and other times not?”

“Puṇṇiya, when a mendicant has faith but doesn’t approach, the Realized One doesn’t feel inspired to teach. But when a mendicant has faith and approaches, the Realized One feels inspired to teach.

When a mendicant has faith and approaches, but doesn’t pay homage … they pay homage, but don’t ask questions … they ask questions, but don’t actively listen … they actively listen, but don’t remember the teaching they’ve heard … they remember the teaching they’ve heard, but don’t reflect on the meaning of the teachings they’ve remembered … they reflect on the meaning of the teachings they’ve remembered, but, having understood the meaning and the teaching, they don’t practice accordingly … they practice accordingly, but they’re not a good speaker. Their voice is not polished, clear, articulate, and doesn’t express the meaning … They’re a good speaker, but they don’t educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire their spiritual companions. The Realized One doesn’t feel inspired to teach.

But when a mendicant has faith, approaches, pays homage, asks questions, actively listens, remembers the teachings, reflects on the meaning, practices accordingly, has a good voice, and encourages their spiritual companions, the Realized One feels inspired to teach. When someone has these ten qualities, the Realized One feels totally inspired to teach.”

AN 10.84

AN 10.84
Declaration
Byākaraṇasutta

There Venerable Mahāmoggallāna addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Venerable Mahāmoggallāna said this:

“Take a mendicant who declares enlightenment: ‘I understand: “Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.”’ They’re pursued, pressed, and grilled by the Realized One, or by one of his disciples who has the absorptions, and is skilled in attainments, in the minds of others, and in the ways of another’s mind. Grilled in this way they get stuck or lose their way. They fall to ruin and disaster.

The Realized One or one of his disciples comprehends their mind and investigates: ‘Why does this venerable declare enlightenment, saying:

“I understand: ‘Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.’?”’

They understand:

‘This venerable gets irritable, and often lives with a heart full of anger. But being full of anger means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.

This venerable is hostile …

prone to disdain …

contemptuous …

jealous …

stingy …

devious …

deceitful …

This venerable has corrupt wishes, and often lives with a heart full of desire. But being full of desire means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.

When there is still more to be done, this venerable stopped half-way after achieving some insignificant distinction. But stopping half-way means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.'

It's quite impossible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training without giving up these ten qualities. It is quite possible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training after giving up these ten qualities."

AN 10.85

AN 10.85
A Boaster
Katthīsutta

At one time Venerable Mahācunda was staying in the land of the Cetīs at Sahajāti. There he addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Venerable Mahācunda said this:

“Take a mendicant who boasts and brags about their achievements: ‘I enter and emerge from the first absorption, the second absorption, the third absorption, and the fourth absorption. And I enter and emerge from the dimensions of infinite space, infinite consciousness, nothingness, and neither perception nor non-perception. And I enter and emerge from the cessation of perception and feeling.’

They’re pursued, pressed, and grilled by the Realized One, or by one of his disciples who has the absorptions, and is skilled in attainments, in the minds of others, and in the ways of another’s mind. Grilled in this way they get stuck or lose their way. They fall to ruin and disaster.

The Realized One or one of his disciples comprehends their mind and investigates: ‘Why does this venerable boast and brag about their achievements, saying, “I enter and emerge from the first absorption … and the cessation of perception and feeling.”’

They understand, ‘For a long time this venerable’s deeds have been broken, tainted, spotty, and marred. Their deeds and behavior are inconsistent. This venerable is unethical, and unethical conduct means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.

This venerable is unfaithful, and lack of faith means decline …

This venerable is unlearned and unpracticed, and lack of learning means decline …

This venerable is hard to admonish, and being hard to admonish means decline …

This venerable has bad friends, and bad friends mean decline …

This venerable is lazy, and laziness means decline …

This venerable is unmindful, and unmindfulness means decline …

This venerable is deceptive, and deceitfulness means decline …

This venerable is burdensome, and being burdensome means decline …

This venerable is witless, and lack of wisdom means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.'

Suppose one friend was to say to another: 'My dear friend, when you need money for some payment, just ask me and I'll give it.' Then when some payment falls due, that friend says to their friend: 'I need some money, my dear friend. Give me some.' They'd say: 'Well then, my dear friend, dig here.' So they dig there, but don't find anything. They'd say: 'You lied to me, my dear friend, you spoke hollow words when you told me to dig here.' They'd say: 'My dear friend, I didn't lie or speak hollow words. Well then, dig here.' So they dig there as well, but don't find anything. They'd say: 'You lied to me, my dear friend, you spoke hollow words when you said dig here.' They'd say: 'My dear friend, I didn't lie or speak hollow words. Well then, dig here.' So they dig there as well, but don't find anything. They'd say: 'You lied to me, my dear friend, you spoke hollow words when you said dig here.' They'd say: 'My dear friend, I didn't lie or speak hollow words. But I had gone mad, I was out of my mind.'

In the same way, take a mendicant who boasts and brags about their achievements: 'I enter and emerge from the first absorption … and the cessation of perception and feeling.'

They're pursued, pressed, and grilled by the Realized One, or by one of his disciples … Grilled in this way they get stuck or lose their way. They fall to ruin and disaster.

The Realized One or one of his disciples comprehends their mind and investigates: 'Why does this venerable boast and brag about their achievements, saying, "I enter and emerge from the first absorption … and the cessation of perception and feeling."'

They understand, 'For a long time this venerable's deeds have been broken, tainted, spotty, and marred. Their deeds and behavior are inconsistent. This venerable is unethical, and unethical conduct means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.

This venerable is unfaithful …

unlearned and unpracticed …

hard to admonish …

with bad friends …

lazy …

unmindful …

deceptive …

burdensome …

This venerable is witless, and lack of wisdom means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.'

It’s quite impossible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training without giving up these ten qualities. It is quite possible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training after giving up these ten qualities.”

AN 10.86

AN 10.86
Overestimation
Adhimānasutta

At one time Venerable Mahākassapa was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. There he addressed the mendicants: "Reverends, mendicants!"

"Reverend," they replied. Venerable Mahākassapa said this:

"Take a mendicant who declares enlightenment: 'I understand: "Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence."' They're pursued, pressed, and grilled by the Realized One, or by one of his disciples who has the absorptions, and is skilled in attainments, in the minds of others, and in the ways of another's mind. Grilled in this way they get stuck or lose their way. They fall to ruin and disaster.

The Realized One or one of his disciples comprehends their mind and investigates: 'Why does this venerable declare enlightenment, saying, "I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'?"'

They understand, 'This venerable overestimates themselves and takes that to be the truth. They perceive that they've attained what they haven't attained, done what they haven't done, and achieved what they haven't achieved. And they declare enlightenment out of overestimation:

"I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'"'

The Realized One or one of his disciples comprehends their mind and investigates: 'Why does this venerable overestimate themselves and take that to be the truth? Why do they perceive that they've attained what they haven't attained, done what they haven't done, and achieved what they haven't achieved? And why do they declare enlightenment out of overestimation:

"I understand: 'Rebirth is ended, the spiritual journey has been completed, what had to be done has been done, there is no return to any state of existence.'"'

They understand, 'This venerable is very learned, remembering and keeping what they've learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. Therefore this venerable overestimates themselves and takes that to be the truth. …'

They understand, 'This venerable is covetous, and often lives with a heart full covetousness. Being full of covetousness means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.

This venerable has ill will …

dullness and drowsiness …

restlessness …

doubt …

This venerable relishes work. They love it and like to relish it …

This venerable relishes talk …

sleep …

company …

When there is still more to be done, this venerable stopped half-way after achieving some insignificant distinction. Stopping half-way means decline in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One.'

It's quite impossible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training without giving up these ten qualities. It is quite possible for a mendicant to achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training after giving up these ten qualities."

AN 10.87

AN 10.87
Disciplinary Issues
Nappiyasutta

There the Buddha addressed the mendicants concerning the mendicant Kalandaka:

“Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Firstly, a mendicant raises disciplinary issues and doesn’t praise the settlement of disciplinary issues. This quality doesn’t conduce to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

Furthermore, a mendicant doesn’t want to train, and doesn’t praise taking up the training. …

Furthermore, a mendicant has corrupt wishes, and doesn’t praise getting rid of wishes. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is irritable, and doesn’t praise getting rid of anger. …

Furthermore, a mendicant denigrates others, and doesn’t praise getting rid of denigration. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is devious, and doesn’t praise getting rid of deviousness. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is deceitful, and doesn’t praise getting rid of deceitfulness. …

Furthermore, a mendicant doesn’t pay attention to the teachings, and doesn’t praise attending to the teachings. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is not in retreat, and doesn’t praise retreat. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is inhospitable to their spiritual companions, and doesn’t praise hospitality. This quality doesn’t conduce to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

Even though a mendicant such as this might wish: ‘If only my spiritual companions would honor, respect, esteem, and venerate me!’ Still they don’t honor, respect, esteem, and venerate them. Why is that? Because their sensible spiritual companions see that they haven’t given up those bad unskillful qualities.

Suppose a wild colt was to wish: ‘If only the humans would put me in a thoroughbred’s place, feed me a thoroughbred’s food, and give me a thoroughbred’s grooming.’ Still the humans wouldn’t put them in a thoroughbred’s place, feed them a thoroughbred’s food, or give them a thoroughbred's grooming. Why is that? Because sensible humans see that they haven't given up their tricks, bluffs, ruses, and feints. In the same way, even though a mendicant such as this might wish: 'If only my spiritual companions would honor, respect, esteem, and venerate me!' Still they don't honor, respect, esteem, and venerate them. Why is that? Because their sensible spiritual companions see that they haven't given up those bad unskillful qualities.

Next, a mendicant doesn't raise disciplinary issues and praises the settlement of disciplinary issues. This quality conduces to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

Furthermore, a mendicant wants to train, and praises taking up the training. …

Furthermore, a mendicant has few desires, and praises getting rid of desires. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is not irritable, and praises getting rid of anger. …

Furthermore, a mendicant doesn't denigrate others, and praises getting rid of denigration. …

Furthermore, a mendicant isn't devious, and praises getting rid of deviousness. …

Furthermore, a mendicant isn't deceitful, and praises getting rid of deceitfulness. …

Furthermore, a mendicant pays attention to the teachings, and praises attending to the teachings. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is in retreat, and praises retreat. …

Furthermore, a mendicant is hospitable to their spiritual companions, and praises hospitality. This quality conduces to fondness, respect, esteem, harmony, and unity.

Even though a mendicant such as this might never wish: 'If only my spiritual companions would honor, respect, esteem, and venerate me!' Still they honor, respect, esteem, and venerate them. Why is that? Because their sensible spiritual companions see that they've given up those bad unskillful qualities.

Suppose a fine thoroughbred never wished: 'If only the humans would put me in a thoroughbred's place, feed me a thoroughbred's food, and give me a thoroughbred's grooming.' Still the humans would put them in a thoroughbred's place, feed them a thoroughbred's food, and give them a thoroughbred's grooming. Why is that? Because sensible humans see that they've given up their tricks, bluffs, ruses, and feints.

In the same way, even though a mendicant such as this might never wish: 'If only my spiritual companions would honor, respect, esteem, and venerate me!' Still they honor, respect, esteem, and venerate them. Why is that? Because their sensible spiritual companions see that they've given up those bad unskillful qualities."

AN 10.88

AN 10.88
An Abuser
Akkosakasutta

“Mendicants, any mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, fall into one or other of these ten disasters. What ten? They don’t achieve the unachieved. What they have achieved falls away. They don’t refine their good qualities. They overestimate their good qualities, or lead the spiritual life dissatisfied, or commit a corrupt offense, or contract a severe illness, or go mad and lose their mind. They feel lost when they die. And when their body breaks up, after death, they are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. Any mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, fall into one or other of these ten disasters.”

AN 10.89

AN 10.89
With Kokālika
Kokālikasutta

Then the mendicant Kokālika went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have corrupt wishes. They’ve fallen under the sway of corrupt wishes.”

“Don’t say that, Kokālika! Don’t say that, Kokālika! Have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they’re good monks.”

For a second time Kokālika said to the Buddha, “Despite my faith and trust in the Buddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have corrupt wishes. They’ve fallen under the sway of corrupt wishes.”

“Don’t say that, Kokālika! Don’t say that, Kokālika! Have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they’re good monks.”

For a third time Kokālika said to the Buddha, “Despite my faith and trust in the Buddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have corrupt wishes. They’ve fallen under the sway of corrupt wishes.”

“Don’t say that, Kokālika! Don’t say that, Kokālika! Have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they’re good monks.”

Then Kokālika got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving. Not long after he left his body erupted with boils the size of mustard seeds. The boils grew to the size of mung beans, then chickpeas, then jujube seeds, then jujubes, then myrobalans, then unripe wood apples, then ripe wood apples. Finally they burst open, and pus and blood oozed out. He just laid down on banana leaves like a poisoned fish.

Then Tudu the independent brahmā went to Kokālika, and standing in the sky he said to him, “Kokālika, have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they’re good monks.”

“Who are you, reverend?”

“I am Tudu the independent brahmā.”

“Didn’t the Buddha declare you a non-returner? So what exactly are you doing back here? See how far you have strayed!”

Then Tudu addressed Kokālika in verse:

“A person is born with an axe in their mouth. A fool cuts themselves with it when they say bad words.

When you praise someone worthy of criticism, or criticize someone worthy of praise, you choose bad luck with your own mouth: you’ll never find happiness that way.

Bad luck at dice is a trivial thing, if all you lose is your money and all you own, even yourself. What’s really terrible luck is to hate the holy ones.

For more than two quinquadecillion years, and another five quattuordecillion years, a slanderer of noble ones goes to hell, having aimed bad words and thoughts at them.”

Then the mendicant Kokālika died of that illness. He was reborn in the Pink Lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.

Then, late at night, the beautiful Brahmā Sahampati, lighting up the entire Jeta’s Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, “Sir, the mendicant Kokālika has passed away. He was reborn in the pink lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.”

That’s what Brahmā Sahampati said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened.

When he said this, one of the mendicants asked the Buddha, “Sir, how long is the life span in the Pink Lotus hell?”

“It’s long, mendicant. It’s not easy to calculate how many years, how many hundreds or thousands or hundreds of thousands of years it lasts.”

“But sir, is it possible to give a simile?”

“It’s possible,” said the Buddha.

“Suppose there was a Kosalan cartload of twenty bushels of sesame seed. And at the end of every hundred years someone would remove a single seed from it. By this means the Kosalan cartload of twenty bushels of sesame seed would run out faster than a single lifetime in the Abbuda hell. Now, twenty lifetimes in the Abbuda hell equal one lifetime in the Nirabbuda hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Nirabbuda hell equal one lifetime in the Ababa hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Ababa hell equal one lifetime in the Aṭaṭa hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Aṭaṭa hell equal one lifetime in the Ahaha hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Ahaha hell equal one lifetime in the Yellow Lotus hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Yellow Lotus hell equal one lifetime in the Sweet-Smelling hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Sweet-Smelling hell equal one lifetime in the Blue Water Lily hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Blue Water Lily hell equal one lifetime in the White Lotus hell. Twenty lifetimes in the White Lotus hell equal one lifetime in the Pink Lotus hell. The mendicant Kokālika has been reborn in the Pink Lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna."

That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

"A person is born with an axe in their mouth. A fool cuts themselves with it when they say bad words.

When you praise someone worthy of criticism, or criticize someone worthy of praise, you choose bad luck with your own mouth: you'll never find happiness that way.

Bad luck at dice is a trivial thing, if all you lose is your money and all you own, even yourself. What's really terrible luck is to hate the holy ones.

For more than two quinquadecillion years, and another five quattuordecillion years, a slanderer of noble ones goes to hell, having aimed bad words and thoughts at them."

AN 10.90

AN 10.90
The Powers of One Who has Ended Defilements
Khīṇāsavabalasutta

Then Venerable Sāriputta went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Sāriputta, how many powers does a mendicant who has ended the defilements have that qualify them to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'"

"Sir, a mendicant who has ended the defilements has ten powers that qualify them to claim: 'My defilements have ended.' What ten? Firstly, a mendicant with defilements ended has clearly seen with right wisdom all conditions as truly impermanent. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has clearly seen with right wisdom that sensual pleasures are truly like a pit of glowing coals. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'

Furthermore, the mind of a mendicant with defilements ended slants, slopes, and inclines to seclusion. They're withdrawn, loving renunciation, and they've totally done with defiling influences. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has well developed the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'

Furthermore, a mendicant with defilements ended has well developed the four right efforts. … the four bases of psychic power … the five faculties … the five powers … the seven awakening factors … the noble eightfold path. This is a power that a mendicant who has ended the defilements relies on to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'

A mendicant who has ended the defilements has these ten powers that qualify them to claim: 'My defilements have ended.'"

AN 10.91

AN 10.91
Pleasure Seekers
Kāmabhogīsutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Seated to one side, the Buddha said to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika:

"These ten pleasure seekers are found in the world. What ten? First, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. They don't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. They make themselves happy and pleased, but don't share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. They make themselves happy and pleased, and they share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive. They don't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive. They make themselves happy and pleased, but don't share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive. They make themselves happy and pleased, and they share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. They don't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. They make themselves happy and pleased, but don't share it and make merit.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. They make themselves happy and pleased, and they share it and make merit. But they enjoy that wealth tied, infatuated, attached, blind to the drawbacks, and not understanding the escape.

Next, a pleasure seeker seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. They make themselves happy and pleased, and they share it and make merit. And they enjoy that wealth untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means, and who doesn't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit. They may be criticized on three grounds. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the first ground for criticism. They don't make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for criticism. They don't share it and make merit. This is the third ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be criticized on these three grounds.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, but doesn't share it and make merit. They may be criticized on two grounds, and praised on one. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the first ground for criticism. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the one ground for praise. They don't share it and make merit. This is the second ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be criticized on these two grounds, and praised on this one.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using illegitimate, coercive means, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and makes merit. They may be criticized on one ground, and praised on two. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the one ground for criticism. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the first ground for praise. They share it and make merit. This is the second ground for praise. This pleasure seeker may be criticized on this one ground, and praised on these two.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive, and who doesn't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit. They may be praised on one ground, and criticized on three. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the one ground for praise. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the first ground for criticism. They don't make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for criticism. They don't share it and make merit. This is the third ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be praised on this one ground, and criticized on these three.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, but doesn't share it and make merit. They may be praised on two grounds, and criticized on two. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the first ground for praise. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the first ground for criticism. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for praise. They don't share it and make merit. This is the second ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be praised on these two grounds, and criticized on these two.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using means both legitimate and illegitimate, and coercive and non-coercive, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and make merit. They may be praised on three grounds, and criticized on one. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the first ground for praise. They seek for wealth using illegitimate, coercive means. This is the one ground for criticism. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for praise. They share it and make merit. This is the third ground for praise. This pleasure seeker may be praised on these three grounds, and criticized on this one.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, and who doesn't make themselves happy and pleased, nor share it and make merit. They may be praised on one ground and criticized on two. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the one ground for praise. They don't make themselves happy and pleased. This is the first ground for criticism. They don't share it and make merit. This is the second ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be praised on this one ground, and criticized on these two.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, but doesn't share it and make merit. They may be praised on two grounds and criticized on one. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the first ground for praise. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for praise. They don't share it and make merit. This is the one ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be praised on these two grounds, and criticized on this one.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and makes merit. But they enjoy that wealth tied, infatuated, attached, blind to the drawbacks, and not understanding the escape. They may be praised on three grounds and criticized on one. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the first ground for praise. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for praise. They share it and make merit. This is the third ground for praise. They enjoy that wealth tied, infatuated, attached, blind to the drawbacks, and not understanding the escape. This is the one ground for criticism. This pleasure seeker may be praised on these three grounds, and criticized on this one.

Now, consider the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, and who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and makes merit. And they enjoy that wealth untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape. They may be praised on four grounds. They seek for wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means. This is the first ground for praise. They make themselves happy and pleased. This is the second ground for praise. They share it and make merit. This is the third ground for praise. They enjoy that wealth untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape. This is the fourth ground for praise. This pleasure seeker may be praised on these four grounds.

These are the ten pleasure seekers found in the world. The pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and makes merit, and who uses that wealth untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the ten. From a cow comes milk, from milk comes curds, from curds come butter, from butter comes ghee, and from ghee comes cream of ghee. And the cream of ghee is said to be the best of these.

In the same way, the pleasure seeker who seeks wealth using legitimate, non-coercive means, who makes themselves happy and pleased, and shares it and makes merit, and who uses that wealth untied, uninfatuated, unattached, seeing the drawbacks, and understanding the escape is the foremost, best, chief, highest, and finest of the ten."

AN 10.92

AN 10.92
Dangers
Bhayasutta

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Householder, when a noble disciple has quelled five dangers and threats, has the four factors of stream-entry, and has clearly seen and comprehended the noble system with wisdom, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: ‘I’ve finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I’ve finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I’m not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.’

What are the five dangers and threats they have quelled? Anyone who kills living creatures creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from killing living creatures creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from killing living creatures.

Anyone who steals … Anyone who commits sexual misconduct … Anyone who lies … Anyone who uses alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates dangers and threats both in the present life and in lives to come, and experiences mental pain and sadness. Anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence creates no dangers and threats either in the present life or in lives to come, and doesn’t experience mental pain and sadness. So that danger and threat is quelled for anyone who refrains from using alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. These are the five dangers and threats they have quelled.

What are the four factors of stream-entry that they have? It’s when a noble disciple has experiential confidence in the Buddha: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ They have experiential confidence in the teaching: ‘The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.’ They have experiential confidence in the Saṅgha: ‘The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is practicing the way that’s good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.’ And a noble disciple’s ethical conduct is loved by the noble ones, unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. These are the four factors of stream-entry that they have.

And what is the noble system that they have clearly seen and comprehended with wisdom? It's when a noble disciple reflects: 'When this exists, that is; due to the arising of this, that arises. When this doesn't exist, that is not; due to the cessation of this, that ceases. That is: Ignorance is a condition for choices. Choices are a condition for consciousness. Consciousness is a condition for name and form. Name and form are conditions for the six sense fields. The six sense fields are conditions for contact. Contact is a condition for feeling. Feeling is a condition for craving. Craving is a condition for grasping. Grasping is a condition for continued existence. Continued existence is a condition for rebirth. Rebirth is a condition for old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress to come to be. That is how this entire mass of suffering originates. When ignorance fades away and ceases with nothing left over, choices cease. When choices cease, consciousness ceases. When consciousness ceases, name and form cease. When name and form cease, the six sense fields cease. When the six sense fields cease, contact ceases. When contact ceases, feeling ceases. When feeling ceases, craving ceases. When craving ceases, grasping ceases. When grasping ceases, continued existence ceases. When continued existence ceases, rebirth ceases. When rebirth ceases, old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress cease. That is how this entire mass of suffering ceases.' This is the noble system that they have clearly seen and comprehended with wisdom.

When a noble disciple has quelled five dangers and threats, has the four factors of stream-entry, and has clearly seen and comprehended the noble cycle with wisdom, they may, if they wish, declare of themselves: 'I've finished with rebirth in hell, the animal realm, and the ghost realm. I've finished with all places of loss, bad places, the underworld. I am a stream-enterer! I'm not liable to be reborn in the underworld, and am bound for awakening.'"

AN 10.93

AN 10.93
What Is Your View?
Kiṁdiṭṭhikasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika left Sāvatthī in the middle of the day to see the Buddha. Then it occurred to him, "It's the wrong time to see the Buddha, as he's in retreat. And it's the wrong time to see the esteemed mendicants, as they're in retreat. Why don't I visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?"

Then he went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions. Now at that time, the wanderers of other religions had come together, making an uproar, a dreadful racket as they sat and talked about all kinds of low topics.

They saw Anāthapiṇḍika coming off in the distance, and stopped each other, saying, "Be quiet, good sirs, don't make a sound. The householder Anāthapiṇḍika, a disciple of the ascetic Gotama, is coming into our monastery. He is included among the white-clothed lay disciples of the ascetic Gotama, who is residing in Sāvatthī. Such venerables like the quiet, are educated to be quiet, and praise the quiet. Hopefully if he sees that our assembly is quiet he'll see fit to approach."

Then those wanderers of other religions fell silent. Then Anāthapiṇḍika went up to them, and exchanged greetings with those wanderers. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side. The wanderers said to him, "Tell us, householder, what is the view of the ascetic Gotama?"

"Sirs, I don't know all his views."

"Well then, since it seems you don't know all the views of the ascetic Gotama, tell us, what are the views of the mendicants?"

"Sirs, I don't know all the mendicants' views."

"Well then, since it seems you don't know all the views of the ascetic Gotama or of the mendicants, tell us, householder, what is your view?"

"Sirs, it's not hard for me to explain what my views are. But please, let the venerables explain their own convictions first. Afterwards it won't be hard for me to explain my views."

When he said this, one of the wanderers said to him, "The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That's my view, householder."

Another wanderer said, “The cosmos is not eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That’s my view, householder.”

Another wanderer said, “The cosmos is finite …” … “The cosmos is infinite …” … “The soul and the body are the same thing …” … “The soul and the body are different things …” … “A realized one still exists after death …” … “A realized one no longer exists after death …” … “A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death …” … “A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That’s my view, householder.”

When this was said, Anāthapiṇḍika said this, “Sirs, regarding the venerable who said this: ‘The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That’s my view, householder.’ This view of his has either arisen from his own irrational application of mind, or is conditioned by what someone else says. But that view is created, conditioned, chosen, dependently originated. Anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. What he clings to and holds to is just suffering.

Regarding the venerable who said this: ‘The cosmos is not eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That’s my view, householder.’ This view of his has either arisen from his own irrational application of mind, or is conditioned by what someone else says. But that view is created, conditioned, chosen, dependently originated. Anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. What he clings to and holds to is just suffering.

Regarding the venerable who said this: ‘The cosmos is finite …’ … ‘The cosmos is infinite …’ … ‘The soul and the body are the same thing …’ … ‘The soul and the body are different things …’ … ‘A realized one still exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly. That’s my view, householder.’ This view of his has either arisen from his own irrational application of mind, or is conditioned by what someone else says. But that view is created, conditioned, chosen, dependently originated. Anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. What he clings to and holds to is just suffering.”

When he said this the wanderers said to him, “Householder, we’ve each explained our own convictions. Tell us, householder, what is your view?”

“Sirs, anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. And what’s suffering is not mine, I am not this, this is not my self. That’s my view, sirs.”

“Householder, anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. What you cling to and hold to is just suffering.”

“Sirs, anything that is created, conditioned, chosen, and dependently originated is impermanent. And what’s impermanent is suffering. And I’ve truly seen clearly with right wisdom that what's suffering is not mine, I am not this, it's not my self. And I truly understand the escape beyond that."

When this was said, those wanderers sat silent, dismayed, shoulders drooping, downcast, depressed, with nothing to say. Seeing this, Anāthapiṇḍika got up from his seat. He went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and informed the Buddha of all they had discussed.

"Good, good, householder! That's how you should legitimately and completely refute those foolish men from time to time."

Then the Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired the householder Anāthapiṇḍika with a Dhamma talk, after which Anāthapiṇḍika got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha before leaving.

Then, not long after Anāthapiṇḍika had left, the Buddha addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, even a mendicant who has ordained for a hundred years in this teaching and training would legitimately and completely refute those wanderers of other religions just as the householder Anāthapiṇḍika did."

AN 10.94

AN 10.94
With Vajjiyamāhita
Vajjiyamāhitasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Campā on the banks of the Gaggarā Lotus Pond.

Then the householder Vajjiyamāhita left Sāvatthī in the middle of the day to see the Buddha. Then it occurred to him, “It’s the wrong time to see the Buddha, as he’s in retreat. And it’s the wrong time to see the esteemed mendicants, as they’re in retreat. Why don’t I visit the monastery of the wanderers of other religions?”

Then he went to the monastery of the wanderers of other religions. Now at that time, the wanderers of other religions had come together, making an uproar, a dreadful racket as they sat and talked about all kinds of low topics.

They saw Vajjiyamāhita coming off in the distance, and stopped each other, saying, “Be quiet, good sirs, don’t make a sound. The householder Vajjiyamāhita, a disciple of the ascetic Gotama, is coming into our monastery. He is included among the white-clothed lay disciples of the ascetic Gotama, who is residing near Campā. Such venerables like the quiet, are educated to be quiet, and praise the quiet. Hopefully if he sees that our assembly is quiet he’ll see fit to approach.”

Then those wanderers of other religions fell silent. Then Vajjiyamāhita went up to them, and exchanged greetings with the wanderers there. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side. The wanderers said to him:

“Is it really true, householder? Does the ascetic Gotama criticize all forms of mortification? Does he categorically condemn and denounce those fervent mortifiers who live rough?”

“No, sirs, the Buddha does not criticize all forms of mortification. Nor does he categorically condemn and denounce those fervent mortifiers who live rough. The Buddha criticizes where it is due, and praises where it is due. In doing so he is one who speaks after analyzing the question, and is not one-sided on this point.”

When he said this, one of the wanderers said to him, “Hold on, householder! That ascetic Gotama who you praise is an exterminator who refrains from making statements.”

“On this point, also, I reasonably respond to the venerables. The Buddha has stated ‘This is skillful’ and ‘This is unskillful’. So when it comes to what is skillful and unskillful the Buddha makes a statement. He is not an exterminator who refrains from making statements.”

When this was said, those wanderers sat silent, dismayed, shoulders drooping, downcast, depressed, with nothing to say. Seeing this, Vajjiyamāhita got up from his seat. He went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and informed the Buddha of all they had discussed.

“Good, good, householder! That’s how you should legitimately and completely refute those foolish men from time to time. Householder, I don’t say that all mortifications should be undergone. But I don’t say that no mortifications should be undergone. I don’t say that all observances should be undertaken. But I don’t say that no observances should be undertaken. I don’t say that all efforts should be tried. But I don’t say that no efforts should be tried. I don’t say that everything should be given up. But I don’t say that nothing should be given up. I don’t say that you should be liberated with all kinds of freedom. But I don’t say that you should not be liberated with any kind of freedom.

When undergoing certain mortifications, unskillful qualities grow while skillful qualities decline. I say that you shouldn’t undergo those mortifications. When undergoing certain mortifications, unskillful qualities decline while skillful qualities grow. I say that you should undergo those mortifications.

When undertaking certain observances, unskillful qualities grow while skillful qualities decline. I say that you shouldn’t undertake those observances. When undertaking certain observances, unskillful qualities decline while skillful qualities grow. I say that you should undertake those observances.

When trying certain efforts, unskillful qualities grow while skillful qualities decline. I say that you shouldn’t try those efforts. When trying certain efforts, unskillful qualities decline while skillful qualities grow. I say that you should try those efforts.

When giving up certain things, unskillful qualities grow while skillful qualities decline. I say that you shouldn’t give up those things. When giving up certain things, unskillful qualities decline while skillful qualities grow. I say that you should give up those things.

When being liberated with certain kinds of freedom, unskillful qualities grow while skillful qualities decline. I say that you shouldn’t be liberated with those kinds of freedom. When being liberated with certain kinds of freedom, unskillful qualities decline while skillful qualities grow. I say that you should be liberated with those kinds of freedom.”

After Vajjiyamāhita had been educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired with a Dhamma talk by the Buddha, he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha before leaving.

Then, not long after Vajjiyamāhita had left, the Buddha addressed the mendicants: “Mendicants, even a mendicant who for a long time has had little dust in their eye in this teaching and training would legitimately and completely refute those wanderers of other religions just as the householder Vajjiyamāhita did.”

AN 10.95

AN 10.95
With Uttiya
Uttiyasutta

Then the wanderer Uttiya went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him.

When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha, “Mister Gotama, is this right: ‘The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“This has not been declared by me, Uttiya.”

“Then is this right: ‘The cosmos is not eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“This has not been declared by me, Uttiya.”

“Then is this right: ‘The cosmos is finite …’ … ‘The cosmos is infinite …’ … ‘The soul and the body are the same thing …’ … ‘The soul and the body are different things …’ … ‘A realized one still exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“This has not been declared by me, Uttiya.”

“When asked about all these points, Mister Gotama says that they have not been declared by him.

So what exactly has been declared by Mister Gotama?”

“Uttiya, I teach my disciples from my own insight in order to purify sentient beings, to get past sorrow and crying, to make an end of pain and sadness, to end the cycle of suffering, and to realize extinguishment.”

“But when Mister Gotama teaches in this way, is the whole world saved, or half, or a third?” But when he said this, the Buddha kept silent.

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “The wanderer Uttiya must not get the harmful misconception: ‘When the ascetic Gotama was asked this all-important question he falters without answering. He just can’t do it!’ That would be for his lasting harm and suffering.”

Then Ānanda said to the wanderer Uttiya, “Well then, Reverend Uttiya, I shall give you a simile. For by means of a simile some sensible people understand the meaning of what is said. Suppose there was a king's frontier citadel with fortified embankments, ramparts, and arches, and a single gate. And it has a gatekeeper who is astute, competent, and clever. He keeps strangers out and lets known people in. As he walks around the patrol path, he doesn't see a hole or cleft in the wall, not even one big enough for a cat to slip out. He doesn't know how many creatures enter or leave the citadel. But he does know that whatever sizable creatures enter or leave the citadel, all of them do so via this gate.

In the same way, it's not the Realized One's concern whether the whole world is saved by this, or half, or a third. But the Realized One knows that whoever is saved from the world —whether in the past, the future, or the present—all have given up the five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. They have firmly established their mind in the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. And they have truly developed the seven awakening factors. That's how they're saved from the world, in the past, future, or present. Uttiya, you were just asking the Buddha the same question as before in a different way. That's why he didn't answer."

AN 10.96

AN 10.96
With Kokanada
Kokanudasutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying near Rājagaha in the Hot Springs Monastery. Then Ānanda rose at the crack of dawn and went to the hot springs to bathe. When he had bathed and emerged from the water he stood in one robe drying himself. The wanderer Kokanada also rose at the crack of dawn and went to the hot springs to bathe.

He saw Ānanda coming off in the distance and said to him, “Who’s here, reverend?”

“I’m a mendicant, reverend.”

“Of which mendicants?”

“Of the ascetics who follow the Sakyan.”

“I’d like to ask the venerable about a certain point, if you’d take the time to answer.”

“Ask, reverend. When I’ve heard it I’ll know.”

“Is this your view: ‘The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“That’s not my view, reverend.”

“Then is this your view: ‘The cosmos is not eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“That’s not my view, reverend.”

“Then is this your view: ‘The cosmos is finite …’ … ‘The cosmos is infinite …’ … ‘The soul and the body are the same thing …’ … ‘The soul and the body are different things …’ … ‘A realized one still exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly’?”

“That’s not my view, reverend.”

“Then, sir, do you neither know nor see?”

“That’s not so, reverend. I do know and see.”

“When asked about all these points, you say that’s not your view.

Yet when asked whether you neither know nor see, you say, ‘That’s not so, reverend. I do know and see.’ How then should we see the meaning of this statement?”

“‘The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly:’ that’s a misconception. ‘The cosmos is not eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly:’ that’s a misconception. ‘The cosmos is finite …’ … ‘The cosmos is infinite …’ … ‘The soul and the body are the same thing …’ … ‘The soul and the body are different things …’ … ‘A realized one still exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death …’ … ‘A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly:’ that’s a misconception.

I know and see the scope of convictions, the scope of grounds for views, fixation on views, obsession with views, the origin of views, and the uprooting of views. Knowing and seeing thus, why should I say: ‘I neither know nor see?’ I do know and see.”

“What is the venerable’s name? And how are you known among your spiritual companions?”

“Reverend, my name is Ānanda. And that’s how I’m known among my spiritual companions.”

“Goodness! I had no idea I was consulting such a great teacher as Venerable Ānanda! If I had known who you were, I wouldn’t have said so much. May Venerable Ānanda please forgive me.”

AN 10.97

AN 10.97
Worthy of Offerings Dedicated to the Gods
Āhuneyyasutta

“Mendicants, a mendicant with ten qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. What ten?

It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

They have good friends, companions, and associates.

They have right view, possessing right perspective.

They wield the many kinds of psychic power: multiplying themselves and becoming one again; appearing and disappearing; going unimpeded through a wall, a rampart, or a mountain as if through space; diving in and out of the earth as if it were water; walking on water as if it were earth; flying cross-legged through the sky like a bird; touching and stroking with the hand the sun and moon, so mighty and powerful. They control the body as far as the Brahmā realm.

With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, they hear both kinds of sounds, human and divine, whether near or far.

They understand the minds of other beings and individuals, having comprehended them with their own mind. They understand mind with greed as ‘mind with greed’, and mind without greed as ‘mind without greed’. They understand mind with hate … mind without hate … mind with delusion … mind without delusion … constricted mind … scattered mind … expansive mind … unexpansive mind … mind that is not supreme … mind that is supreme … mind immersed in samādhi … mind not immersed in samādhi … freed mind … They understand unfreed mind as ‘unfreed mind’.

They recollect many kinds of past lives, that is, one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ Thus they recollect their many past lives, with features and details.

With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. ‘These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A mendicant with these ten qualities is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of veneration with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.”

AN 10.98

AN 10.98
A Senior Mendicant
Therasutta

“Mendicants, a senior mendicant with ten qualities lives comfortably in whatever region they live. What ten?

They are senior and have long gone forth.

They’re ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken.

They’re very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically.

Both monastic codes have been passed down to them in detail, well analyzed, well mastered, well evaluated in both the rules and accompanying material.

They’re skilled in raising and settling disciplinary issues.

They love the teachings and are a delight to converse with, being full of joy in the teaching and training.

They’re content with any kind of robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.

They look impressive when going out and coming back, and are well restrained when sitting in an inhabited area.

They get the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty.

They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements.

A senior mendicant with these ten qualities lives comfortably in whatever region they live.”

AN 10.99

AN 10.99
With Upāli
Upālisutta

Then Venerable Upāli went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, I wish to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.”

“Upāli, remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest are challenging. It’s hard to maintain seclusion and hard to find joy in it. Staying alone, the forests seem to rob the mind of a mendicant who isn’t immersed in samādhi. If someone should say this, ‘Though I don’t have immersion, I’m going to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.’ You can expect that they’ll sink down or float away.

Suppose there was a large lake, and along comes a bull elephant with a height of seven or eight cubits. He’d think, ‘Why don’t I plunge into this lake and play around while washing my ears and back? When I’ve bathed and drunk, I’ll emerge from the water and go wherever I want.’ And that’s just what he does. Why is that? Because his large life-form finds a footing in the depths.

Then along comes a rabbit or a cat. They’d think, ‘What difference is there between me and a bull elephant? Why don’t I plunge into this lake and play around while washing my ears and back? When I’ve bathed and drunk, I’ll emerge from the water and go wherever I want.’ They jump into the lake rashly, without thinking. You can expect that they’ll sink down or float away. Why is that? Because their little life-form finds no footing in the depths. If someone should say this, ‘Though I don’t have immersion, I’m going to frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest.’ You can expect that they’ll sink down or float away.

Suppose there was a little baby boy playing in his own urine and feces. What do you think, Upāli? Isn’t that a totally foolish game?”

“Yes, sir.”

“After some time that boy grows up and his faculties mature. He accordingly plays childish games such as toy plows, tip-cat, somersaults, pinwheels, toy measures, toy carts, and toy bows. What do you think, Upāli? Aren’t such games better than what he did before?”

“Yes, sir.”

“After some time that boy grows up and his faculties mature further. He accordingly amuses himself, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation. Sights known by the eye that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing.

Sounds known by the ear … Smells known by the nose … Tastes known by the tongue … Touches known by the body that are likable, desirable, agreeable, pleasant, sensual, and arousing. What do you think, Upāli? Aren't such games better than what he did before?"

"Yes, sir."

"But then a Realized One arises in the world, perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed. He has realized with his own insight this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—and he makes it known to others. He teaches Dhamma that's good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that's entirely full and pure.

A householder hears that teaching, or a householder's child, or someone reborn in a good family. They gain faith in the Realized One and reflect, 'Living in a house is cramped and dirty, but the life of one gone forth is wide open. It's not easy for someone living at home to lead the spiritual life utterly full and pure, like a polished shell. Why don't I shave off my hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness?'

After some time they give up a large or small fortune, and a large or small family circle. They shave off hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from the lay life to homelessness.

Once they've gone forth, they take up the training and livelihood of the mendicants. They give up killing living creatures, renouncing the rod and the sword. They're scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They give up stealing. They take only what's given, and expect only what's given. They keep themselves clean by not thieving.

They give up unchastity. They are celibate, set apart, avoiding the vulgar act of sex.

They give up lying. They speak the truth and stick to the truth. They're honest and trustworthy, and don't trick the world with their words.

They give up divisive speech. They don't repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. Instead, they reconcile those who are divided, supporting unity, delighting in harmony, loving harmony, speaking words that promote harmony.

They give up harsh speech. They speak in a way that's mellow, pleasing to the ear, lovely, going to the heart, polite, likable and agreeable to the people.

They give up talking nonsense. Their words are timely, true, and meaningful, in line with the teaching and training. They say things at the right time which are valuable, reasonable, succinct, and beneficial.

They avoid injuring plants and seeds. They eat in one part of the day, abstaining from eating at night and food at the wrong time. They avoid seeing shows of dancing, singing, and music . They avoid beautifying and adorning themselves with garlands, perfumes, and makeup. They avoid high and luxurious beds. They avoid receiving gold and money, raw grains, raw meat, women and girls, male and female bondservants, goats and sheep, chickens and pigs, elephants, cows, horses, and mares, and fields and land. They avoid running errands and messages; buying and selling; falsifying weights, metals, or measures; bribery, fraud, cheating, and duplicity; mutilation, murder, abduction, banditry, plunder, and violence.

They're content with robes to look after the body and almsfood to look after the belly. Wherever they go, they set out taking only these things. They're like a bird: wherever it flies, wings are its only burden. In the same way, a mendicant is content with robes to look after the body and almsfood to look after the belly. Wherever they go, they set out taking only these things. When they have this entire spectrum of noble ethics, they experience a blameless happiness inside themselves.

When they see a sight with their eyes, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of sight were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of sight, and achieving restraint over it. When they hear a sound with their ears … When they smell an odor with their nose … When they taste a flavor with their tongue … When they feel a touch with their body … When they know an idea with their mind, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of mind were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of mind, and achieving its restraint. When they have this noble sense restraint, they experience an unsullied bliss inside themselves.

They act with situational awareness when going out and coming back; when looking ahead and aside; when bending and extending the limbs; when bearing the outer robe, bowl and robes; when eating, drinking, chewing, and tasting; when urinating and defecating; when walking, standing, sitting, sleeping, waking, speaking, and keeping silent.

When they have this entire spectrum of noble ethics, this noble sense restraint, and this noble mindfulness and situational awareness, they frequent a secluded lodging—a wilderness, the root of a tree, a hill, a ravine, a mountain cave, a charnel ground, a forest, the open air, a heap of straw. Gone to a wilderness, or to the root of a tree, or to an empty hut, they sit down cross-legged, set their body straight, and establish mindfulness in their presence.

Giving up covetousness for the world, they meditate with a heart rid of covetousness, cleansing the mind of covetousness. Giving up ill will and malevolence, they meditate with a mind rid of ill will, full of compassion for all living beings, cleansing the mind of ill will. Giving up dullness and drowsiness, they meditate with a mind rid of dullness and drowsiness, perceiving light, mindful and aware, cleansing the mind of dullness and drowsiness. Giving up restlessness and remorse, they meditate without restlessness, their mind peaceful inside, cleansing the mind of restlessness and remorse. Giving up doubt, they meditate having gone beyond doubt, not undecided about skillful qualities, cleansing the mind of doubt.

They give up these five hindrances, corruptions of the heart that weaken wisdom. Then, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, they enter and remain in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. What do you think, Upāli? Isn't this state better than what they had before?"

"Yes, sir."

"When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. But so far they haven't achieved their own goal.

Furthermore, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, a mendicant enters and remains in the second absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of immersion, with internal clarity and mind at one, without placing the mind and keeping it connected. What do you think, Upāli? Isn't this state better than what they had before?"

"Yes, sir."

"When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. But so far they haven't achieved their own goal.

Furthermore, with the fading away of rapture, a mendicant enters and remains in the third absorption. They meditate with equanimity, mindful and aware, personally experiencing the bliss of which the noble ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, one meditates in bliss.' What do you think, Upāli? Isn't this state better than what they had before?"

"Yes, sir."

"When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. But so far they haven't achieved their own goal.

Furthermore, giving up pleasure and pain, and ending former happiness and sadness, a mendicant enters and remains in the fourth absorption, without pleasure or pain, with pure equanimity and mindfulness. …" …

"Furthermore, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', a mendicant enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. What do you think, Upāli? Isn't this state better than what they had before?"

"Yes, sir."

"When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. But so far they haven't achieved their own goal.

Furthermore, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', a mendicant enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. …” …

“Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that ‘there is nothing at all’, they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. …” …

“Going totally beyond the dimension of nothingness, aware that ‘this is peaceful, this is sublime’, they enter and remain in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. What do you think, Upāli? Isn’t this state better than what they had before?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. But so far they haven’t achieved their own goal.

Furthermore, going totally beyond the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception, they enter and remain in the cessation of perception and feeling. And, having seen with wisdom, their defilements come to an end. What do you think, Upāli? Isn’t this state better than what they had before?”

“Yes, sir.”

“When my disciples see this quality inside themselves they frequent remote lodgings in the wilderness and the forest. And they have achieved their own goal. Come on, Upāli, stay with the Saṅgha. If you stay with the Saṅgha you’ll be comfortable.”

AN 10.100

AN 10.100
Cannot Abhabbasutta

“Mendicants, without giving up ten things you can’t realize perfection. What ten? Greed, hate, delusion, anger, hostility, disdain, contempt, jealousy, stinginess, and conceit. Without giving up these ten things you can’t realize perfection.

After giving up ten things you can realize perfection. What ten? Greed, hate, delusion, anger, hostility, disdain, contempt, jealousy, stinginess, and conceit. After giving up these ten things you can realize perfection.”

AN 10.101

AN 10.101
Perceptions for Ascetics
Samaṇasaññāsutta

“Mendicants, when these three perceptions for ascetics are developed and cultivated they fulfill seven things. What three? ‘I have secured freedom from class.’ ‘My livelihood is tied up with others.’ ‘My behavior should be different.’ When these three perceptions for ascetics are developed and cultivated they fulfill seven things.

What seven? Their deeds and behavior are always consistent with the precepts. They’re content, kind-hearted, and humble. They want to train. They use the necessities of life after reflecting on their purpose. They’re energetic. When those three perceptions for ascetics are developed and cultivated they fulfill these seven things.”

AN 10.102

AN 10.102
Awakening Factors
Bojjhaṅgasutta

“Mendicants, when the seven awakening factors are developed and cultivated they fulfill three knowledges. What seven? The awakening factors of mindfulness, investigation of principles, energy, rapture, tranquility, immersion, and equanimity. When these seven awakening factors are developed and cultivated they fulfill three knowledges. What three? It’s when a mendicant recollects their many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. With clairvoyance that is purified and surpasses the human, they understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. They realize the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. When those seven awakening factors are developed and cultivated they fulfill these three knowledges.”

AN 10.103

AN 10.103
The Wrong Way
Micchattasutta

“Mendicants, relying on the wrong way leads to failure, not success. And how does relying on the wrong way lead to failure, not success? Wrong view gives rise to wrong thought. Wrong thought gives rise to wrong speech. Wrong speech gives rise to wrong action. Wrong action gives rise to wrong livelihood. Wrong livelihood gives rise to wrong effort. Wrong effort gives rise to wrong mindfulness. Wrong mindfulness gives rise to wrong immersion. Wrong immersion gives rise to wrong knowledge. Wrong knowledge gives rise to wrong freedom. That’s how relying on the wrong way leads to failure, not success.

Relying on the right way leads to success, not failure. And how does relying on the right way lead to success, not failure? Right view gives rise to right thought. Right thought gives rise to right speech. Right speech gives rise to right action. Right action gives rise to right livelihood. Right livelihood gives rise to right effort. Right effort gives rise to right mindfulness. Right mindfulness gives rise to right immersion. Right immersion gives rise to right knowledge. Right knowledge gives rise to right freedom. That’s how relying on the right way leads to success, not failure.”

AN 10.104

AN 10.104
A Seed
Bījasutta

“Mendicants, consider a person who has wrong view, thought, speech, action, livelihood, effort, mindfulness, immersion, knowledge, and freedom. Whatever bodily, verbal, or mental deeds they undertake in line with that view, their intentions, aims, wishes, and choices all lead to what is unlikable, undesirable, disagreeable, harmful, and suffering. Why is that? Because their view is bad.

Suppose a seed of neem, angled gourd, or bitter gourd was planted in moist earth. Whatever nutrients it takes up from the earth and water would lead to its bitter, acerbic, and unpleasant taste. Why is that? Because the seed is bad. In the same way, consider a person who has wrong view, thought, speech, action, livelihood, effort, mindfulness, immersion, knowledge, and freedom. Whatever bodily, verbal, or mental deeds they undertake in line with that view, their intentions, aims, wishes, and choices all lead to what is unlikable, undesirable, disagreeable, harmful, and suffering. Why is that? Because their view is bad.

Consider a person who has right view, thought, speech, action, livelihood, effort, mindfulness, immersion, knowledge, and freedom. Whatever bodily, verbal, or mental deeds they undertake in line with that view, their intentions, aims, wishes, and choices all lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, beneficial, and pleasant. Why is that? Because their view is good.

Suppose a seed of sugar cane, fine rice, or grape was planted in moist earth. Whatever nutrients it takes up from the earth and water would lead to its sweet, pleasant, and delicious taste. Why is that? Because the seed is fine. In the same way, consider a person who has right view, thought, speech, action, livelihood, effort, mindfulness, immersion, knowledge, and freedom. Whatever bodily, verbal, or mental deeds they undertake in line with that view, their intentions, aims, wishes, and choices all lead to what is likable, desirable, agreeable, beneficial, and pleasant. Why is that? Because their view is good.”

AN 10.105

AN 10.105
Knowledge
Vijjāsutta

“Mendicants, ignorance precedes the attainment of unskillful qualities, with lack of conscience and prudence following along. An ignoramus, sunk in ignorance, gives rise to wrong view. Wrong view gives rise to wrong thought. Wrong thought gives rise to wrong speech. Wrong speech gives rise to wrong action. Wrong action gives rise to wrong livelihood. Wrong livelihood gives rise to wrong effort. Wrong effort gives rise to wrong mindfulness. Wrong mindfulness gives rise to wrong immersion. Wrong immersion gives rise to wrong knowledge. Wrong knowledge gives rise to wrong freedom.

Knowledge precedes the attainment of skillful qualities, with conscience and prudence following along. A sage, firm in knowledge, gives rise to right view. Right view gives rise to right thought. Right thought gives rise to right speech. Right speech gives rise to right action. Right action gives rise to right livelihood. Right livelihood gives rise to right effort. Right effort gives rise to right mindfulness. Right mindfulness gives rise to right immersion. Right immersion gives rise to right knowledge. Right knowledge gives rise to right freedom.”

AN 10.106

AN 10.106
Wearing Away
Nijjarasutta

“Mendicants, there are these ten grounds for wearing away. What ten?

For one of right view, wrong view is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong view are worn away. And because of right view, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right thought, wrong thought is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong thought are worn away. And because of right thought, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right speech, wrong speech is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong speech are worn away. And because of right speech, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right action, wrong action is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong action are worn away. And because of right action, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right livelihood, wrong livelihood is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong livelihood are worn away. And because of right livelihood, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right effort, wrong effort is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong effort are worn away. And because of right effort, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right mindfulness, wrong mindfulness is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong mindfulness are worn away. And because of right mindfulness, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right immersion, wrong immersion is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong immersion are worn away. And because of right immersion, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right knowledge, wrong knowledge is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong knowledge are worn away. And because of right knowledge, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right freedom, wrong freedom is worn away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong freedom are worn away. And because of right freedom, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

These are the ten grounds for wearing away.”

AN 10.107

AN 10.107
The Bone-Washing Ceremony
Dhovanasutta

“Mendicants, in the southern lands there is a ceremony named ‘bone-washing’. There they have food, drink, snacks, meals, refreshments, and beverages, as well as dancing, singing, and music. There is such a washing, I don’t deny it. But that washing is low, crude, ordinary, ignoble, and pointless. It doesn’t lead to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment.

I will teach a noble washing that leads solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. Relying on that washing, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what is that noble washing?

For one of right view, wrong view is washed away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong view are washed away. And because of right view, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right thought, wrong thought is washed away. … For one of right speech, wrong speech is washed away. … For one of right action, wrong action is washed away. … For one of right livelihood, wrong livelihood is washed away. … For one of right effort, wrong effort is washed away. … For one of right mindfulness, wrong mindfulness is washed away. … For one of right immersion, wrong immersion is washed away. … For one of right knowledge, wrong knowledge is washed away. …

For one of right freedom, wrong freedom is washed away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities that arise because of wrong freedom are washed away. And because of right freedom, many skillful qualities are fully developed. This is the noble washing that leads solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment. Relying on this washing, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things.”

AN 10.108

AN 10.108
Doctors
Tikicchakasutta

“Mendicants, doctors prescribe a purgative for eliminating illnesses stemming from disorders of bile, phlegm, and wind. There is such a purgative, I don’t deny it. But this kind of purgative sometimes works and sometimes fails.

I will teach a noble purgative that works without fail. Relying on that purgative, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what is the noble purgative that works without fail?

For one of right view, wrong view is purged. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are purged. And because of right view, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right thought, wrong thought is purged. … For one of right speech, wrong speech is purged. … For one of right action, wrong action is purged. … For one of right livelihood, wrong livelihood is purged. … For one of right effort, wrong effort is purged. For one of right mindfulness, wrong mindfulness is purged. … For one of right immersion, wrong immersion is purged. … For one of right knowledge, wrong knowledge is purged. …

For one of right freedom, wrong freedom is purged. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are purged. And because of right freedom, many skillful qualities are fully developed. This is the noble purgative that works without fail. Relying on this purgative, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things.”

AN 10.109

AN 10.109
Emetic
Vamanasutta

“Mendicants, doctors prescribe an emetic for eliminating illnesses stemming from disorders of bile, phlegm, and wind. There is such an emetic, I don’t deny it. But this kind of emetic sometimes works and sometimes fails.

I will teach a noble emetic that works without fail. Relying on that emetic, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. …

And what is that noble emetic that works without fail?

For one of right view, wrong view is vomited up. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are vomited up. And because of right view, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right thought, wrong thought is vomited up. … For one of right speech, wrong speech is vomited up. … For one of right action, wrong action is vomited up. … For one of right livelihood, wrong livelihood is vomited up. … For one of right effort, wrong effort is vomited up. … For one of right mindfulness, wrong mindfulness is vomited up. … For one of right immersion, wrong immersion is vomited up. … For one of right knowledge, wrong knowledge is vomited up. …

For one of right freedom, wrong freedom is vomited up. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are vomited up. And because of right freedom, many skillful qualities are fully developed. This is the noble emetic that works without fail. Relying on this emetic, sentient beings who are liable to rebirth, old age, and death, to sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress are freed from all these things.”

AN 10.110

AN 10.110
Blown Away
Niddhamanīyasutta

“Mendicants, these ten qualities should be blown away. What ten? For one of right view, wrong view is blown away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are blown away. And because of right view, many skillful qualities are fully developed.

For one of right thought, wrong thought is blown away. … For one of right speech, wrong speech is blown away. … For one of right action, wrong action is blown away. … For one of right livelihood, wrong livelihood is blown away. … For one of right effort, wrong effort is blown away. … For one of right mindfulness, wrong mindfulness is blown away. … For one of right immersion, wrong immersion is blown away. … For one of right knowledge, wrong knowledge is blown away. …

For one of right freedom, wrong freedom is blown away. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are blown away. And because of right freedom, many skillful qualities are fully developed. These are the ten qualities that should be blown away.”

AN 10.111

AN 10.111
An Adept (1st)
Paṭhamaasekhasutta

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Sir, they speak of this person called ‘an adept’. How is an adept mendicant defined?”

“Mendicant, it’s when a mendicant has an adept’s right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. That’s how a mendicant is an adept.”

AN 10.112

AN 10.112
An Adept (2nd)
Dutiyaasekhasutta

“Mendicants, there are ten qualities of an adept. What ten? An adept's right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten qualities of an adept.”

AN 10.113

AN 10.113
Bad Principles (1st)
Paṭhamaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles with bad results. And you should know good principles with good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.

And what are bad principles with bad results? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. These are called bad principles with bad results.

And what are good principles with good results? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are called good principles with good results.

‘You should know bad principles with bad results. And you should know good principles with good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.114

AN 10.114
Bad Principles (2nd)
Dutiyaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.

So what are bad principles? What are good principles? What are bad results? And what are good results?

Wrong view is a bad principle. Right view is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right view are good results.

Wrong thought is a bad principle. Right thought is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong thought are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right thought are good results.

Wrong speech is a bad principle. Right speech is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong speech are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right speech are good results.

Wrong action is a bad principle. Right action is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong action are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right action are good results.

Wrong livelihood is a bad principle. Right livelihood is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong livelihood are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right livelihood are good results.

Wrong effort is a bad principle. Right effort is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong effort are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right effort are good results.

Wrong mindfulness is a bad principle. Right mindfulness is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong mindfulness are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right mindfulness are good results.

Wrong immersion is a bad principle. Right immersion is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong immersion are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right immersion are good results.

Wrong knowledge is a bad principle. Right knowledge is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong knowledge are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right knowledge are good results.

Wrong freedom is a bad principle. Right freedom is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right freedom are good results.

‘You should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.115

AN 10.115
Bad Principles (3rd)
Tatiyaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Soon after the Buddha left, those mendicants considered, “The Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail. Who can explain in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha?”

Then they considered, “This Venerable Ānanda is praised by the Buddha and esteemed by his sensible spiritual companions. He is capable of explaining in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha. Let’s go to him, and ask him about this matter. As he answers, so we’ll remember it.”

Then those mendicants went to Ānanda, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side. They told him what had happened, and said, “May Venerable Ānanda please explain this.”

“Reverends, suppose there was a person in need of heartwood. And while wandering in search of heartwood he’d come across a large tree standing with heartwood. But he’d pass over the roots and trunk, imagining that the heartwood should be sought in the branches and leaves. Such is the consequence for the venerables. Though you were face to face with the Buddha, you overlooked him, imagining that you should ask me about this matter. For he is the Buddha, the one who knows and sees. He is vision, he is knowledge, he is the manifestation of principle, he is the manifestation of divinity. He is the teacher, the proclaimer, the elucidator of meaning, the bestower of freedom from death, the lord of truth, the Realized One. That was the time to approach the Buddha and ask about this matter. You should have remembered it in line with the Buddha’s answer.”

“Certainly he is the Buddha, the one who knows and sees. He is vision, he is knowledge, he is the manifestation of principle, he is the manifestation of divinity. He is the teacher, the proclaimer, the elucidator of meaning, the bestower of freedom from death, the lord of truth, the Realized One. That was the time to approach the Buddha and ask about this matter. We should have remembered it in line with the Buddha’s answer. Still, Venerable Ānanda is praised by the Buddha and esteemed by his sensible spiritual companions. You are capable of explaining in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha. Please explain this, if it's no trouble."

"Then listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, reverend," they replied. Ānanda said this:

"Reverends, the Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail: 'You should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.'

So what are bad principles? What are good principles? What are bad results? And what are good results?

Wrong view is a bad principle. Right view is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right view are good results.

Wrong thought is a bad principle. Right thought is a good principle. … Wrong speech is a bad principle. Right speech is a good principle. … Wrong action is a bad principle. Right action is a good principle. … Wrong livelihood is a bad principle. Right livelihood is a good principle. … Wrong effort is a bad principle. Right effort is a good principle. … Wrong mindfulness is a bad principle. Right mindfulness is a good principle. … Wrong immersion is a bad principle. Right immersion is a good principle. … Wrong knowledge is a bad principle. Right knowledge is a good principle. …

Wrong freedom is a bad principle. Right freedom is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right freedom are good results.

The Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail: 'You should know bad principles and good principles … and practice accordingly.' And this is how I understand the detailed meaning of this passage for recitation. If you wish, you may go to the Buddha and ask him about this. You should remember it in line with the Buddha's answer."

"Yes, reverend," said those mendicants, approving and agreeing with what Ānanda said. Then they rose from their seats and went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened. Then they said:

"Sir, we went to Ānanda and asked him about this matter. And Ānanda clearly explained the meaning to us in this manner, with these words and phrases."

"Good, good, mendicants! Ānanda is astute, he has great wisdom. If you came to me and asked this question, I would answer it in exactly the same way as Ānanda. That is what it means, and that's how you should remember it."

AN 10.116

AN 10.116
With Ajita
Ajitasutta

Then the wanderer Ajita went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha, “Mister Gotama, we have a spiritual companion called ‘The Philosopher’. He has worked out around five hundred arguments by which followers of other religions will know when they’ve been refuted.”

Then the Buddha said to the mendicants, “Mendicants, do you remember this philosopher’s points?”

“Now is the time, Blessed One! Now is the time, Holy One! Let the Buddha speak and the mendicants will remember it.”

“Well then, mendicants, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Mendicants, take a certain person who rebuts and quashes unprincipled statements with unprincipled statements. This delights an unprincipled assembly, who make a dreadful racket: ‘He’s a true philosopher! He’s a true philosopher!’

Another person rebuts and quashes principled statements with unprincipled statements. This delights an unprincipled assembly, who make a dreadful racket: ‘He’s a true philosopher! He’s a true philosopher!’

Another person rebuts and quashes principled and unprincipled statements with unprincipled statements. This delights an unprincipled assembly, who make a dreadful racket: ‘He’s a true philosopher! He’s a true philosopher!’

Mendicants, you should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.

So what are bad principles? What are good principles? What are bad results? And what are good results? Wrong view is a bad principle. Right view is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right view are good results.

Wrong thought is a bad principle. Right thought is a good principle. … Wrong speech is a bad principle. Right speech is a good principle. … Wrong action is a bad principle. Right action is a good principle. … Wrong livelihood is a bad principle. Right livelihood is a good principle. … Wrong effort is a bad principle. Right effort is a good principle. … Wrong mindfulness is a bad principle. Right mindfulness is a good principle. … Wrong immersion is a bad principle. Right immersion is a good principle. … Wrong knowledge is a bad principle. Right knowledge is a good principle. …

Wrong freedom is a bad principle. Right freedom is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong freedom are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right freedom are good results.

‘You should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.117

AN 10.117
With Saṅgārava
Saṅgāravasutta

Then Saṅgārava the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, what is the near shore? And what is the far shore?”

“Wrong view is the near shore, brahmin, and right view is the far shore. Wrong thought is the near shore, and right thought is the far shore. Wrong speech is the near shore, and right speech is the far shore. Wrong action is the near shore, and right action is the far shore. Wrong livelihood is the near shore, and right livelihood is the far shore. Wrong effort is the near shore, and right effort is the far shore. Wrong mindfulness is the near shore, and right mindfulness is the far shore. Wrong immersion is the near shore, and right immersion is the far shore. Wrong knowledge is the near shore, and right knowledge is the far shore. Wrong freedom is the near shore, and right freedom is the far shore. This is the near shore, and this is the far shore.

Few are those among humans who cross to the far shore. The rest just run around on the near shore.

When the teaching is well explained, those who practice accordingly are the ones who will cross over Death’s domain so hard to pass.

Rid of dark qualities, an astute person should develop the bright. Leaving home behind for the seclusion so hard to enjoy, find delight there, having left behind sensual pleasures. With no possessions, an astute person would cleanse themselves of mental corruptions.

Those whose minds are rightly developed in the awakening factors; who, letting go of attachments, delight in not grasping: with defilements ended, brilliant, they in this world are quenched.”

AN 10.118

AN 10.118
The Near Shore
Orimatīrasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the near shore and the far shore. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, is the near shore? What is the far shore? Wrong view is the near shore, and right view is the far shore. … Wrong freedom is the near shore, and right freedom is the far shore. This is the near shore, and this is the far shore.

Few are those among humans who cross to the far shore. The rest just run around on the near shore.

When the teaching is well explained, those who practice accordingly are the ones who will cross over Death’s domain so hard to pass.

Rid of dark qualities, an astute person should develop the bright. Leaving home behind for the seclusion so hard to enjoy, you should try to find delight there, having left behind sensual pleasures. With no possessions, an astute person should cleanse themselves of mental corruptions.

And those whose minds are rightly developed in the awakening factors; letting go of attachments, they delight in not grasping. With defilements ended, brilliant, they are extinguished in this world.”

AN 10.119

AN 10.119
The Ceremony of Descent (1st)
Paṭhamapaccorohaṇīsutta

Now, at that time it was the sabbath. The brahmin Jānussoṇi had bathed his head and dressed in a new pair of linen robes. Holding a handful of fresh grass, he stood to one side not far from the Buddha.

The Buddha saw him, and said, “Brahmin, why have you bathed your head and dressed in a new pair of linen robes? Why are you standing to one side holding a handful of fresh grass? What’s going on today with the brahmin clan?”

“Mister Gotama, today is the ceremony of descent for the brahmin clan.”

“But how do the brahmins observe the ceremony of descent?”

“Well, Mister Gotama, on the sabbath the brahmins bathe their heads and dress in a new pair of linen robes. They make a heap of fresh cow dung and spread it with green grass. Then they make their beds between the boundary and the fire chamber. That night they rise three times and worship the fire with joined palms: ‘We descend, lord! We descend, lord!’ And they serve the fire with abundant ghee, oil, and butter. And when the night has passed they serve the brahmins with delicious fresh and cooked foods. That’s how the brahmins observe the ceremony of descent.”

“The ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is quite different from that observed in the training of the Noble One.”

“But Mister Gotama, how is the ceremony of descent observed in the training of the Noble One? Mister Gotama, please teach me this.”

“Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes sir,” Jānussoṇi replied. The Buddha said this:

“It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘Wrong view has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong view, they descend from wrong view.

‘Wrong thought has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong thought, they descend from wrong thought.

‘Wrong speech has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong speech, they descend from wrong speech.

‘Wrong action has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong action, they descend from wrong action.

‘Wrong livelihood has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong livelihood, they descend from wrong livelihood.

‘Wrong effort has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong effort, they descend from wrong effort.

‘Wrong mindfulness has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong mindfulness, they descend from wrong mindfulness.

‘Wrong immersion has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong immersion, they descend from wrong immersion.

‘Wrong knowledge has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong knowledge, they descend from wrong knowledge.

‘Wrong freedom has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong freedom, they descend from wrong freedom. This is the ceremony of descent in the training of the Noble One.”

“The ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is quite different from that observed in the training of the Noble One. And, Mister Gotama, the ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is not worth a sixteenth part of a master of the ceremony of descent observed in the training of the Noble One. Excellent, Mister Gotama! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 10.120

AN 10.120
The Ceremony of Descent (2nd)
Dutiyapaccorohaṇīsutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the noble descent. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. … And what is the noble descent? It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘Wrong view has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong view, they descend from wrong view. ‘Wrong thought has a bad result …’ … ‘Wrong speech …’ … ‘Wrong action …’ … ‘Wrong livelihood …’ … ‘Wrong effort …’ … ‘Wrong mindfulness …’ … ‘Wrong immersion …’ … ‘Wrong knowledge …’ … ‘Wrong freedom has a bad result in both this life and the next.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong freedom, they descend from wrong freedom. This is called the noble descent.”

AN 10.121

AN 10.121
Forerunner
Pubbaṅgamasutta

“Mendicants, the dawn is the forerunner and precursor of the sunrise. In the same way right view is the forerunner and precursor of skillful qualities. Right view gives rise to right thought. Right thought gives rise to right speech. Right speech gives rise to right action. Right action gives rise to right livelihood. Right livelihood gives rise to right effort. Right effort gives rise to right mindfulness. Right mindfulness gives rise to right immersion. Right immersion gives rise to right knowledge. Right knowledge gives rise to right freedom.”

AN 10.122

AN 10.122
The Ending of Defilements
Āsavakkhayasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things, when developed and cultivated, lead to the ending of defilements. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These ten things, when developed and cultivated, lead to the ending of defilements.”

AN 10.123

AN 10.123
First
Paṭhamasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things are not purified and cleansed apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These ten things are not purified and cleansed apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.124

AN 10.124
Second
Dutiyasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things don’t arise apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that don’t arise apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.125

AN 10.125
Third
Tatiyasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things are not very fruitful and beneficial apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that are not very fruitful and beneficial apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.126

AN 10.126
Fourth
Catutthasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things don’t culminate in the removal of greed, hate, and delusion apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that don’t culminate in the removal of greed, hate, and delusion apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.127

AN 10.127
Fifth
Pañcamasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things don’t lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that don’t lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.128

AN 10.128
Sixth
Chaṭṭhasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things don’t arise to be developed and cultivated apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that don’t arise to be developed and cultivated apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.129

AN 10.129
Seventh
Sattamasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things when developed and cultivated are not very fruitful and beneficial apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that when developed and cultivated are not very fruitful and beneficial apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.130

AN 10.130
Eighth
Aṭṭhamasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things when developed and cultivated don’t culminate in the removal of greed, hate, and delusion apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that when developed and cultivated don’t culminate in the removal of greed, hate, and delusion apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.131

AN 10.131
Ninth
Navamasutta

“Mendicants, these ten things when developed and cultivated don’t lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment apart from the Holy One’s training. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten things that when developed and cultivated don’t lead solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment apart from the Holy One’s training.”

AN 10.132

AN 10.132
Tenth
Dasamasutta

“Mendicants, there are ten wrong ways. What ten? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. These are the ten wrong ways.”

AN 10.133

AN 10.133
Eleventh
Ekādasamasutta

“Mendicants, there are ten right ways. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. These are the ten right ways.”

AN 10.134

AN 10.134
Good
Sādhusutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you what is good and what is not good. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, is not good? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called what is not good. And what is good? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called what is good.”

AN 10.135

AN 10.135
The Teaching of the Noble Ones
Ariyadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the teaching of the noble ones, and what is not the teaching of the noble ones. … And what is not the teaching of the noble ones? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called what is not the teaching of the noble ones. And what is the teaching of the noble ones? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the teaching of the noble ones.”

AN 10.136

AN 10.136
Unskillful
Akusalasutta

“I will teach you the skillful and the unskillful … And what is the unskillful? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the unskillful. And what is the skillful? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the skillful.”

AN 10.137

AN 10.137
Beneficial
Atthasutta

“I will teach you the beneficial and the harmful. … And what is the harmful? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the harmful. And what is the beneficial? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the beneficial.”

AN 10.138

AN 10.138
The Teaching
Dhammasutta

“I will teach you what is the teaching and what is not the teaching. … And what is not the teaching? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called what is not the teaching. And what is the teaching? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the teaching.”

AN 10.139

AN 10.139
Defiled
Sāsavasutta

“I will teach you the defiled principle and the undefiled. … And what is the defiled principle? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the defiled principle. And what is the undefiled principle? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the undefiled principle.”

AN 10.140

AN 10.140
Blameworthy
Sāvajjasutta

“I will teach you the blameworthy principle and the blameless principle. … And what is the blameworthy principle? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the blameworthy principle. And what is the blameless principle? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the blameless principle.”

AN 10.141

AN 10.141
Mortifying
Tapanīyasutta

“I will teach you the mortifying principle and the unmortifying. … And what is the mortifying principle? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the mortifying principle. And what is the unmortifying principle? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the unmortifying principle.”

AN 10.142

AN 10.142
Accumulation
Ācayagāmisutta

“I will teach you the principle that leads to accumulation and that which leads to dispersal. … And what is the principle that leads to accumulation? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle that leads to accumulation. And what is the principle that leads to dispersal? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle that leads to dispersal.”

AN 10.143

AN 10.143
With Suffering as Outcome
Dukkhudrayasutta

“I will teach you the principle that has suffering as outcome, and that which has happiness as outcome. … And what is the principle whose outcome is suffering? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is the principle whose outcome is suffering. And what is the principle whose outcome is happiness? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is the principle whose outcome is happiness.”

AN 10.144

AN 10.144
Result in Suffering
Dukkhavipākasutta

“I will teach you the principle that results in suffering and that which results in happiness. … And what principle results in suffering? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle that results in suffering. And what principle results in happiness? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle that results in happiness.”

AN 10.145

AN 10.145
The Noble Path
Ariyamaggasutta

“I will teach you the noble path and the ignoble path. … And what is the ignoble path? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the ignoble path. And what is the noble path? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the noble path.”

AN 10.146

AN 10.146
The Dark Path
Kaṇhamaggasutta

“I will teach you the dark path and the bright path. … And what is the dark path? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the dark path. And what is the bright path? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the bright path.”

AN 10.147

AN 10.147
The True Teaching
Saddhammasutta

“I will teach you what is the true teaching and what is not the true teaching. … And what is not the true teaching? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called what is not the true teaching. And what is the true teaching? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the true teaching.”

AN 10.148

AN 10.148
The Teaching of the True Persons
Sappurisadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the teaching of the true persons and the teaching of the untrue persons. … And what is the teaching of the untrue persons? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is the teaching of the untrue persons. And what is the teaching of the true persons? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is the teaching of the true persons.”

AN 10.149

AN 10.149
Should Be Activated Uppādetabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to activate and the principle not to activate. … And what is the principle not to activate? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to activate. And what is the principle to activate? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to activate.”

AN 10.150

AN 10.150
Should Be Cultivated
Āsevitabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to cultivate and the principle not to cultivate. … And what is the principle not to cultivate? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to cultivate. And what is the principle to cultivate? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to cultivate.”

AN 10.151

AN 10.151
Should Be Developed
Bhāvetabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to develop and the principle not to develop. … And what is the principle not to develop? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to develop. And what is the principle to develop? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to develop.”

AN 10.152

AN 10.152
Should Be Made Much Of
Bahulīkātabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to make much of and the principle not to make much of. … And what is the principle not to make much of? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to make much of. And what is the principle to make much of? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to make much of.”

AN 10.153

AN 10.153
Should Be Recollected
Anussaritabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to recollect and the principle not to recollect. … And what is the principle not to recollect? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to recollect. And what is the principle to recollect? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to recollect.”

AN 10.154

AN 10.154
Should Be Realized
Sacchikātabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to realize and the principle not to realize. … And what is the principle not to realize? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. This is called the principle not to realize. And what is the principle to realize? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. This is called the principle to realize.”

AN 10.155

AN 10.155
You Should Associate
Sevitabbasutta

“Mendicants, you should not associate with a person who has ten qualities. What ten? Wrong view, wrong thought, wrong speech, wrong action, wrong livelihood, wrong effort, wrong mindfulness, wrong immersion, wrong knowledge, and wrong freedom. You should not associate with a person who has these ten qualities.

You should associate with a person who has ten qualities. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. You should associate with a person who has these ten qualities.”

AN 10.156-166

AN 10.156–166
Frequenting, Etc.
Bhajitabbādisutta

“Mendicants, you should not frequent a person who has ten qualities. … you should frequent … you should not pay homage … you should pay homage … you should not venerate … you should venerate … you should not praise … you should praise … you should not respect … you should respect … you should not revere … you should revere … is not a success … is a success … is not pure … is pure … does not win over conceit … wins over conceit … does not grow in wisdom … grows in wisdom …

creates much wickedness … creates much merit. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. A person who has these ten qualities creates much merit.”

AN 10.167

AN 10.167
The Brahmin Ceremony of Descent
Brāhmaṇapaccorohaṇīsutta

Now, at that time it was the sabbath. The brahmin Jānussoṇi had bathed his head and dressed in a new pair of linen robes. Holding a handful of fresh grass, he stood to one side not far from the Buddha.

The Buddha saw him, and said, “Brahmin, why have you bathed your head and dressed in a new pair of linen robes? Why are you standing to one side holding a handful of fresh grass? What’s going on today with the brahmin clan?”

“Mister Gotama, today is the ceremony of descent for the brahmin clan.”

“But how do the brahmins observe the ceremony of descent?”

“Well, Mister Gotama, on the sabbath the brahmins bathe their heads and dress in a new pair of linen robes. They make a heap of fresh cow dung and spread it with green grass. Then they make their beds between the boundary and the fire chamber. That night they rise three times and worship the fire with joined palms: ‘We descend, lord! We descend, lord!’ And they serve the fire with abundant ghee, oil, and butter. And when the night has passed they serve the brahmins with delicious fresh and cooked foods. That’s how the brahmins observe the ceremony of descent.”

“The ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is quite different from that observed in the training of the Noble One.”

“But Mister Gotama, how is the ceremony of descent observed in the training of the Noble One? Mister Gotama, please teach me this.”

“Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes sir,” Jānussoṇi replied. The Buddha said this:

“It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘Killing living creatures has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up killing living creatures, they descend from killing living creatures.

… ‘Stealing has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up stealing, they descend from stealing.

… ‘Sexual misconduct has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up sexual misconduct, they descend from sexual misconduct.

… ‘Lying has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up lying, they descend from lying.

… ‘Divisive speech has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up divisive speech, they descend from divisive speech.

… ‘Harsh speech has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up harsh speech, they descend from harsh speech.

… ‘Talking nonsense has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up talking nonsense, they descend from talking nonsense.

… ‘Covetousness has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up covetousness, they descend from covetousness.

… ‘Ill will has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up ill will, they descend from ill will.

‘Wrong view has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong view, they descend from wrong view. This is the ceremony of descent in the training of the Noble One.”

“The ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is quite different from that observed in the training of the Noble One. And, Mister Gotama, the ceremony of descent observed by the brahmins is not worth a sixteenth part of the ceremony of descent observed in the training of the Noble One. Excellent, Mister Gotama, excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 10.168

AN 10.168
The Noble Descent
Ariyapaccorohaṇīsutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the noble descent. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, is the noble descent? It’s when a noble disciple reflects: ‘Killing living creatures has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up killing living creatures, they descend from killing living creatures.

… ‘Stealing has a bad result in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up stealing, they descend from stealing.

… ‘Sexual misconduct has a bad result …’ … they descend from sexual misconduct.

… ‘Lying has a bad result …’ … they descend from lying.

… ‘Divisive speech has a bad result …’ … they descend from divisive speech.

… ‘Harsh speech has a bad result …’ … they descend from harsh speech.

… ‘Talking nonsense has a bad result …’ … they descend from talking nonsense.

… ‘Covetousness has a bad result …’ … they descend from covetousness.

… ‘Ill will has a bad result …’ … they descend from ill will.

… ‘Wrong view has a bad result both in the present life and in lives to come.’ Reflecting like this, they give up wrong view, they descend from wrong view. This is called the noble descent.”

AN 10.169

AN 10.169
With Saṅgārava
Saṅgāravasutta

Then Saṅgārava the brahmin went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“Mister Gotama, what is the near shore? And what is the far shore?”

“Killing living creatures is the near shore, brahmin, and not killing living creatures is the far shore. Stealing is the near shore, and not stealing is the far shore. Sexual misconduct is the near shore, and avoiding sexual misconduct is the far shore. Lying is the near shore, and not lying is the far shore. Divisive speech is the near shore, and avoiding divisive speech is the far shore. Harsh speech is the near shore, and avoiding harsh speech is the far shore. Talking nonsense is the near shore, and avoiding talking nonsense is the far shore. Covetousness is the near shore, and contentment is the far shore. Ill will is the near shore, and good will is the far shore. Wrong view is the near shore, and right view is the far shore. This is the near shore, and this is the far shore.

Few are those among humans who cross to the far shore. The rest just run around on the near shore.

When the teaching is well explained, those who practice accordingly are the ones who will cross over Death’s domain so hard to pass.

Rid of dark qualities, an astute person should develop the bright. Leaving home behind for the seclusion so hard to enjoy, you should try to find delight there, having left behind sensual pleasures. With no possessions, an astute person should cleanse themselves of mental corruptions.

And those whose minds are rightly developed in the awakening factors; letting go of attachments, they delight in not grasping. With defilements ended, brilliant, they are extinguished in this world.”

AN 10.170

AN 10.170
The Near Shore
Orimasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the near shore and the far shore. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. … And what, mendicants, is the near shore? What is the far shore? Killing living creatures is the near shore, mendicants, and not killing living creatures is the far shore. Stealing is the near shore, and not stealing is the far shore. Sexual misconduct is the near shore, and avoiding sexual misconduct is the far shore. Lying is the near shore, and not lying is the far shore. Divisive speech is the near shore, and avoiding divisive speech is the far shore. Harsh speech is the near shore, and avoiding harsh speech is the far shore. Talking nonsense is the near shore, and avoiding talking nonsense is the far shore. Covetousness is the near shore, and contentment is the far shore. Ill will is the near shore, and good will is the far shore. Wrong view is the near shore, and right view is the far shore. This is the near shore, and this is the far shore.

Few are those among humans who cross to the far shore. The rest just run around on the near shore.

When the teaching is well explained, those who practice accordingly are the ones who will cross over Death’s domain so hard to pass.

Rid of dark qualities, an astute person should develop the bright. Leaving home behind for the seclusion so hard to enjoy, you should try to find delight there, having left behind sensual pleasures. With no possessions, an astute person should cleanse themselves of mental corruptions.

And those whose minds are rightly developed in the awakening factors; letting go of attachments, they delight in not grasping. With defilements ended, brilliant, they are extinguished in this world.”

AN 10.171

AN 10.171
Bad Principles (1st)
Paṭhamaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles with bad results. And you should know good principles with good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.

And what are bad principles with bad results? Killing living creatures, stealing, and sexual misconduct; speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical; covetousness, ill will, and wrong view. These are called bad principles with bad results.

And what are good principles with good results? Avoiding killing living creatures, stealing, and sexual misconduct; avoiding speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical; contentment, good will, and right view. These are called good principles with good results.

‘You should know bad principles with bad results. And you should know good principles with good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.172

AN 10.172
Bad Principles (2nd)
Dutiyaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.”

That is what the Buddha said. When he had spoken, the Holy One got up from his seat and entered his dwelling.

Soon after the Buddha left, those mendicants considered, “The Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail. ‘You should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ Who can explain in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha?”

Then those mendicants thought, “This Venerable Mahākaccāna is praised by the Buddha and esteemed by his sensible spiritual companions. He is capable of explaining in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha. Let’s go to him, and ask him about this matter. As he answers, so we’ll remember it.”

Then those mendicants went to Mahākaccāna, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side. They told him what had happened, and said, “May Venerable Mahākaccāna please explain this.”

“Reverends, suppose there was a person in need of heartwood. And while wandering in search of heartwood he’d come across a large tree standing with heartwood. But he’d pass over the roots and trunk, imagining that the heartwood should be sought in the branches and leaves. Such is the consequence for the venerables. Though you were face to face with the Buddha, you overlooked him, imagining that you should ask me about this matter. For he is the Buddha, the one who knows and sees. He is vision, he is knowledge, he is the manifestation of principle, he is the manifestation of divinity. He is the teacher, the proclaimer, the elucidator of meaning, the bestower of freedom from death, the lord of truth, the Realized One. That was the time to approach the Buddha and ask about this matter. You should have remembered it in line with the Buddha’s answer.”

“Certainly he is the Buddha, the one who knows and sees. He is vision, he is knowledge, he is the manifestation of principle, he is the manifestation of divinity. He is the teacher, the proclaimer, the elucidator of meaning, the bestower of freedom from death, the lord of truth, the Realized One. That was the time to approach the Buddha and ask about this matter. We should have remembered it in line with the Buddha’s answer. Still, Venerable Mahākaccāna is praised by the Buddha and esteemed by his sensible spiritual companions. He is capable of explaining in detail the meaning of this brief passage for recitation given by the Buddha. Please explain this, if it's no trouble."

"Well then, reverends, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, reverend," they replied. Mahākaccāna said this:

"Reverends, the Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail: 'You should know bad principles and good principles … and practice accordingly.'

So what are bad principles? What are good principles? What are bad results? And what are good results? Killing living creatures is a bad principle. Not killing living creatures is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by killing living creatures are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of not killing living creatures are good results.

Stealing is a bad principle. Not stealing is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by stealing are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of not stealing are good results.

Sexual misconduct is a bad principle. Avoiding sexual misconduct is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by sexual misconduct are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of avoiding sexual misconduct are good results.

Lying is a bad principle. Not lying is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by lying are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of not lying are good results.

Divisive speech is a bad principle. Avoiding divisive speech is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by divisive speech are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of avoiding divisive speech are good results.

Harsh speech is a bad principle. Avoiding harsh speech is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by harsh speech are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of avoiding harsh speech are good results.

Talking nonsense is a bad principle. Avoiding talking nonsense is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by talking nonsense are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of avoiding talking nonsense are good results.

Covetousness is a bad principle. Contentment is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by covetousness are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of contentment are good results.

Ill will is a bad principle. Good will is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by ill will are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of good will are good results.

Wrong view is a bad principle. Right view is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right view are good results.

The Buddha gave this brief passage for recitation, then entered his dwelling without explaining the meaning in detail: ‘You should know bad principles and good principles … and practice accordingly.’ And this is how I understand the detailed meaning of this passage for recitation. If you wish, you may go to the Buddha and ask him about this. You should remember it in line with the Buddha’s answer.”

“Yes, reverend,” said those mendicants, approving and agreeing with what Mahākaccāna said. Then they rose from their seats and went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened. Then they said:

“Sir, we went to Mahākaccāna and asked him about this matter. And Mahākaccāna clearly explained the meaning to us in this manner, with these words and phrases.”

“Good, good, mendicants! Mahākaccāna is astute, he has great wisdom. If you came to me and asked this question, I would answer it in exactly the same way as Mahākaccāna. That is what it means, and that’s how you should remember it.”

AN 10.173

AN 10.173
Bad Principles (3rd)
Tatiyaadhammasutta

“Mendicants, you should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.

So what are bad principles? What are good principles? What are bad results? And what are good results? Killing living creatures is a bad principle. Not killing living creatures is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by killing living creatures are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of not killing living creatures are good results.

Stealing is a bad principle. Not stealing is a good principle. … Sexual misconduct is a bad principle. Avoiding sexual misconduct is a good principle. … Lying is a bad principle. Not lying is a good principle. … Divisive speech is a bad principle. Avoiding divisive speech is a good principle. … Harsh speech is a bad principle. Avoiding harsh speech is a good principle. … Talking nonsense is a bad principle. Avoiding talking nonsense is a good principle. … Covetousness is a bad principle. Contentment is a good principle. … Ill will is a bad principle. Good will is a good principle. …

Wrong view is a bad principle. Right view is a good principle. And the many bad, unskillful qualities produced by wrong view are bad results. And the many skillful qualities fully developed because of right view are good results.

‘You should know bad principles and good principles. And you should know bad results and good results. Knowing these things, your practice should follow the good principles with good results.’ That’s what I said, and this is why I said it.”

AN 10.174

AN 10.174
Sources of Deeds
Kammanidānasutta

“Mendicants, I say that killing living creatures is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that stealing is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that sexual misconduct is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that lying is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that divisive speech is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that harsh speech is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that talking nonsense is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that covetousness is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that ill will is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion.

I say that wrong view is threefold: caused by greed, hate, or delusion. And so greed, hate, and delusion are sources and origins for deeds. With the ending of greed, hate, and delusion, the sources of deeds are ended.”

AN 10.175

AN 10.175
The Bypass
Parikkamanasutta

“Mendicants, this teaching provides a bypass, it doesn’t lack a bypass. And how does this teaching provide a bypass, not lacking a bypass? Not killing living creatures bypasses killing living creatures. Not stealing bypasses stealing. Avoiding sexual misconduct bypasses sexual misconduct. Not lying bypasses lying. Avoiding divisive speech bypasses divisive speech. Avoiding harsh speech bypasses harsh speech. Avoiding talking nonsense bypasses talking nonsense. Contentment bypasses covetousness. Good will bypasses ill will. Right view bypasses wrong view. That’s how this teaching provides a bypass, it doesn’t lack a bypass.”

AN 10.176

AN 10.176
With Cunda
Cundasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Pāvā in Cunda the smith's mango grove. Then Cunda the smith went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, "Cunda, whose purity do you believe in?"

"Sir, I believe in the purity advocated by the western brahmins draped with moss who carry pitchers, serve the sacred flame, and immerse themselves in water."

"But Cunda, what kind of purity do these western brahmins advocate?"

"The western brahmins encourage their disciples like this: 'Please, good people, rising early you should stroke the earth from your bed. If you don't stroke the earth, stroke fresh cow dung. If you don't stroke fresh cow dung, stroke green grass. If you don't stroke green grass, serve the sacred flame. If you don't serve the sacred flame, revere the sun with joined palms. If you don't revere the sun with joined palms, immerse yourself in water three times, including the evening.' The western brahmins advocate this kind of purity."

"The purity advocated by the western brahmins is quite different from that in the training of the Noble One."

"But what, Mister Gotama, is purity in the training of the Noble One? Mister Gotama, please teach me this."

"Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak."

"Yes, sir," Cunda replied. The Buddha said this:

"Cunda, impurity is threefold by way of body, fourfold by way of speech, and threefold by way of mind.

And how is impurity threefold by way of body? It's when a certain person kills living creatures. They're violent, bloody-handed, a hardened killer, merciless to living beings.

They steal. With the intention to commit theft, they take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They commit sexual misconduct. They have sexual relations with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They have sexual relations with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

This is the threefold impurity by way of body.

And how is impurity fourfold by way of speech? It's when a certain person lies. They're summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: 'Please, mister, say what you know.' Not knowing, they say 'I know.' Knowing, they say 'I don't know.' Not seeing, they say 'I see.' And seeing, they say 'I don't see.' So they deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They speak divisively. They repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. And so they divide those who are harmonious, supporting division, delighting in division, loving division, speaking words that promote division.

They speak harshly. They use the kinds of words that are cruel, nasty, hurtful, offensive, bordering on anger, not leading to immersion.

They talk nonsense. Their speech is untimely, and is neither factual nor beneficial. It has nothing to do with the teaching or the training. Their words have no value, and are untimely, unreasonable, rambling, and pointless. This is the fourfold impurity by way of speech.

And how is impurity threefold by way of mind? It's when a certain person is covetous. They covet the wealth and belongings of others: 'Oh, if only their belongings were mine!'

They have ill will and malicious intentions: 'May these sentient beings be killed, slaughtered, slain, destroyed, or annihilated!'

They have wrong view. Their perspective is distorted: 'There's no meaning in giving, sacrifice, or offerings. There's no fruit or result of good and bad deeds. There's no afterlife. There's no such thing as mother and father, or beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there's no ascetic or brahmin who is rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describes the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.' This is the threefold impurity by way of mind.

These are the ten ways of doing unskillful deeds. When you have these ten ways of doing unskillful deeds, then if you rise early, whether or not you stroke the earth from your bed, you're still impure.

Whether or not you stroke fresh cow dung, you're still impure.

Whether or not you stroke green grass, you're still impure.

Whether or not you serve the sacred flame, you're still impure.

Whether or not you revere the sun with joined palms, you're still impure.

Whether or not you immerse yourself in water three times, you're still impure. Why is that? These ten ways of doing unskillful deeds are impure and make things impure.

It’s because of those who do these ten kinds of unskillful deeds that hell, the animal realm, the ghost realm, or any other bad places are found.

Cunda, purity is threefold by way of body, fourfold by way of speech, and threefold by way of mind.

And how is purity threefold by way of body? It’s when a certain person gives up killing living creatures. They renounce the rod and the sword. They’re scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They give up stealing. They don’t, with the intention to commit theft, take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They give up sexual misconduct. They don’t have sexual relations with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They don’t have sexual relations with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

This is the threefold purity by way of body.

And how is purity fourfold by way of speech? It’s when a certain person gives up lying. They’re summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: ‘Please, mister, say what you know.’ Not knowing, they say ‘I don’t know.’ Knowing, they say ‘I know.’ Not seeing, they say ‘I don’t see.’ And seeing, they say ‘I see.’ So they don’t deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They give up divisive speech. They don’t repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. Instead, they reconcile those who are divided, supporting unity, delighting in harmony, loving harmony, speaking words that promote harmony.

They give up harsh speech. They speak in a way that’s mellow, pleasing to the ear, lovely, going to the heart, polite, likable and agreeable to the people.

They give up talking nonsense. Their words are timely, true, and meaningful, in line with the teaching and training. They say things at the right time which are valuable, reasonable, succinct, and beneficial.

This is the fourfold purity by way of speech.

And how is purity threefold by way of mind? It’s when a certain person is content. They don’t covet the wealth and belongings of others: ‘Oh, if only their belongings were mine!’

They have a kind heart and loving intentions: ‘May these sentient beings live free of enmity and ill will, untroubled and happy!’

They have right view, an undistorted perspective: ‘There is meaning in giving, sacrifice, and offerings. There are fruits and results of good and bad deeds. There is an afterlife. There are such things as mother and father, and beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there are ascetics and brahmins who are rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describe the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.’

This is the threefold purity by way of mind.

These are the ten ways of doing skillful deeds. When you have these ten ways of doing skillful deeds, then if you rise early, whether or not you stroke the earth from your bed, you’re still pure.

Whether or not you stroke fresh cow dung, you’re still pure.

Whether or not you stroke green grass, you’re still pure.

Whether or not you serve the sacred flame, you’re still pure.

Whether or not you revere the sun with joined palms, you’re still pure.

Whether or not you immerse yourself in water three times, you’re still pure. Why is that? These ten ways of doing skillful deeds are pure and make things pure.

It’s because of those who do these ten kinds of skillful deeds that gods, humans, or any other good places are found.”

When he said this, Cunda the smith said to the Buddha, “Excellent, sir! Excellent! … From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life.”

AN 10.177

AN 10.177
With Jānussoṇi
Jāṇussoṇisutta

Then the brahmin Jānussoṇi went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him.

When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha, “We who are known as brahmins give gifts and perform memorial rites for the dead: ‘May this gift aid my departed relatives and family. May they partake of this gift.’ But does this gift really aid departed relatives and family? Do they actually partake of it?”

“It aids them if the conditions are right, brahmin, but not if the conditions are wrong.”

“Then, Mister Gotama, what are the right and wrong conditions?”

“Brahmin, take someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in hell. There they survive feeding on the food of the hell beings. The conditions there are wrong, so the gift does not aid the one who lives there.

Take someone else who kills living creatures … and has wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the animal realm. There they survive feeding on the food of the beings in the animal realm. The conditions there too are wrong, so the gift does not aid the one who lives there.

Take someone else who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, or use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They're contented, kind-hearted, and have right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the human realm. There they survive feeding on human food. The conditions there too are wrong, so the gift does not aid the one who lives there.

Take someone else who doesn’t kill living creatures … and has right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the gods. There they survive feeding on the food of the gods. The conditions there too are wrong, so the gift does not aid the one who lives there.

Take someone else who kills living creatures … and has wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the ghost realm. There they survive feeding on the food of the beings in the ghost realm. Or else they survive feeding on what friends and colleagues, relatives and kin provide them with from here. The conditions there are right, so the gift aids the one who lives there.”

“But Mister Gotama, who partakes of that gift if the departed relative is not reborn in that place?”

“Other departed relatives reborn there will partake of that gift.”

“But who partakes of the gift when neither that relative nor other relatives have been reborn in that place?”

“It’s impossible, brahmin, it cannot happen that that place is vacant of departed relatives in all this long time. It’s never fruitless for the donor.”

“Does Mister Gotama propose this even when the conditions are wrong?”

“I propose this even when the conditions are wrong. Take someone who kills living creatures, steals, and commits sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. They give to ascetics or brahmins such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, perfumes, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of elephants. There they get to have food and drink, garlands and various adornments.

Since in this life they killed living creatures … and had wrong view, they were reborn in the company of elephants. Since they gave to ascetics or brahmins … they get to have food and drink, garlands and various adornments.

Take someone else who kills living creatures … and has wrong view. They give to ascetics or brahmins … When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of horses. … cattle … dogs. There they get to have food and drink, garlands and various adornments.

Since in this life they killed living creatures … and had wrong view, they were reborn in the company of dogs. Since they gave to ascetics or brahmins … they get to have food and drink, garlands and various adornments.

Take someone else who doesn’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. They give to ascetics or brahmins … When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the human realm. There they get to have the five kinds of human sensual stimulation.

Since in this life they didn’t kill living creatures … and had right view, they were reborn in the company of humans. Since they gave to ascetics or brahmins … they get to have the five kinds of human sensual stimulation.

Take someone else who doesn’t kill living creatures … and has right view. They give to ascetics or brahmins … When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in the company of the gods. There they get to have the five kinds of heavenly sensual stimulation.

Since in this life they didn't kill living creatures … and had right view, they were reborn in the company of the gods. Since they gave to ascetics or brahmins … they get to have the five kinds of heavenly sensual stimulation. It's never fruitless for the donor."

"It's incredible, Mister Gotama, it's amazing, This is quite enough to justify giving gifts and performing memorial rites for the dead, since it's never fruitless for the donor."

"That's so true, brahmin. It's never fruitless for the donor."

"Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 10.178

AN 10.178
Good
Sādhusutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you what is good and what is not good. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“And what, mendicants, is not good? Killing living creatures, stealing, and sexual misconduct; speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical; covetousness, ill will, and wrong view. This is called what is not good.

And what is good? Avoiding killing living creatures, stealing, and sexual misconduct; avoiding speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical; contentment, good will, and right view. This is called what is good.”

AN 10.179

AN 10.179
The Teaching of the Noble Ones
Ariyadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the teaching of the noble ones, and what is not the teaching of the noble ones. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. … And what is not the teaching of the noble ones? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called what is not the teaching of the noble ones.

And what is the teaching of the noble ones? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the teaching of the noble ones.”

AN 10.180

AN 10.180
Skillful
Kusalasutta

“I will teach you the skillful and the unskillful … And what is the unskillful? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the unskillful.

And what is the skillful? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the skillful.”

AN 10.181

AN 10.181
Beneficial
Atthasutta

“I will teach you the beneficial and the harmful. … And what is the harmful? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the harmful.

And what is the beneficial? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the beneficial.”

AN 10.182

AN 10.182
The Teaching
Dhammasutta

“I will teach you what is the teaching and what is not the teaching. … And what is not the teaching? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called what is not the teaching.

And what is the teaching? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the teaching.”

AN 10.183

AN 10.183
Defiled
Āsavasutta

“I will teach you the defiled principle and the undefiled. … And what is the defiled principle? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the defiled principle.

And what is the undefiled principle? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the undefiled principle.”

AN 10.184

AN 10.184
Blameworthy
Vajjasutta

“I will teach you the blameworthy principle and the blameless. … And what is the blameworthy principle? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the blameworthy principle.

And what is the blameless principle? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the blameless principle.”

AN 10.185

AN 10.185
Mortifying
Tapanīyasutta

“I will teach you the mortifying principle and the unmortifying. … And what is the mortifying principle? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the mortifying principle.

And what is the unmortifying principle? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the unmortifying principle.”

AN 10.186

AN 10.186
Leading to Accumulation
Ācayagāmisutta

“I will teach you the principle that leads to accumulation and that which leads to dispersal. … And what is the principle that leads to accumulation? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle that leads to accumulation.

And what is the principle that leads to dispersal? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle that leads to dispersal.”

AN 10.187

AN 10.187
With Suffering as Outcome
Dukkhudrayasutta

“I will teach you the principle that has suffering as outcome, and that which has happiness as outcome. … And what is the principle whose outcome is suffering? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is the principle whose outcome is suffering.

And what is the principle whose outcome is happiness? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is the principle whose outcome is happiness.”

AN 10.188

AN 10.188
Result Vipākasutta

“I will teach you the principle that results in suffering and that which results in happiness. … And what is the principle that results in suffering? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle that results in suffering.

And what is the principle that results in happiness? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle that results in happiness.”

AN 10.189

AN 10.189
The Noble Path
Ariyamaggasutta

“I will teach you the noble path and the ignoble path. … And what is the ignoble path? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the ignoble path.

And what is the noble path? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the noble path.”

AN 10.190

AN 10.190
The Dark Path
Kaṇhamaggasutta

“I will teach you the dark path and the bright path. … And what is the dark path? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the dark path.

And what is the bright path? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the bright path.”

AN 10.191

AN 10.191
The True Teaching
Saddhammasutta

“I will teach you what is the true teaching and what is not the true teaching. … And what is not the true teaching? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called what is not the true teaching.

And what is the true teaching? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the true teaching.”

AN 10.192

AN 10.192
The Teaching of the True Persons
Sappurisadhammasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you the teaching of the true persons and the teaching of the untrue persons. And what is the teaching of the untrue persons? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is the teaching of the untrue persons.

And what is the teaching of the true persons? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is the teaching of the true persons.”

AN 10.193

AN 10.193
Principles That Should Be Activated Uppādetabbadhammasutta

“I will teach you the principle to activate and the principle not to activate. … And what is the principle not to activate? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to activate.

And what is the principle to activate? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to activate.”

AN 10.194

AN 10.194
Principles That Should Be Cultivated
Āsevitabbadhammasutta

“I will teach you the principle to cultivate and the principle not to cultivate. … And what is the principle not to cultivate? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to cultivate.

And what is the principle to cultivate? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to cultivate.”

AN 10.195

AN 10.195
Principles That Should Be Developed
Bhāvetabbadhammasutta

“I will teach you the principle to develop and the principle not to develop. … Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak. And what is the principle not to develop? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to develop.

And what is the principle to develop? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to develop.”

AN 10.196

AN 10.196
Principles That Should Be Made Much Of
Bahulīkātabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to make much of and the principle not to make much of. … And what is the principle not to make much of? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to make much of.

And what is the principle to make much of? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to make much of.”

AN 10.197

AN 10.197
Should Be Recollected
Anussaritabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to recollect and the principle not to recollect. … And what is the principle not to recollect? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to recollect.

And what is the principle to recollect? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to recollect.”

AN 10.198

AN 10.198
Should Be Realized
Sacchikātabbasutta

“I will teach you the principle to realize and the principle not to realize. … And what is the principle not to realize? Killing living creatures … wrong view. This is called the principle not to realize.

And what is the principle to realize? Not killing living creatures … right view. This is called the principle to realize.”

AN 10.199-210

AN 10.199–210
Should Not Associate, Etc.
Aparapuggalavagga

“Mendicants, you should not associate with a person who has ten qualities. What ten? They kill living creatures, steal, and commit sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. You should not associate with a person who has these ten qualities.

You should associate with a person who has ten qualities. What ten? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. You should associate with a person who has these ten qualities.”

“Mendicants, you should not frequent a person who has ten qualities. you should frequent … you should not pay homage … you should pay homage … you should not venerate … you should venerate … you should not praise … you should praise … you should not revere … you should revere … you should not defer to … you should defer to … is not a success … is a success … is not pure … is pure … does not win over conceit … wins over conceit … does not grow in wisdom … grows in wisdom …

A person who has these ten qualities creates much wickedness. … creates much merit. What ten? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. A person who has these ten qualities creates much merit.”

AN 10.211

AN 10.211
Heaven and Hell (1st)
Paṭhamanirayasaggasutta

“Someone with ten qualities is cast down to hell. What ten? It’s when a certain person kills living creatures. They’re violent, bloody-handed, a hardened killer, merciless to living beings.

They steal. With the intention to commit theft, they take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They commit sexual misconduct. They have sexual relations with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They have sexual relations with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

They lie. They’re summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: ‘Please, mister, say what you know.’ Not knowing, they say ‘I know.’ Knowing, they say ‘I don’t know.’ Not seeing, they say ‘I see.’ And seeing, they say ‘I don’t see.’ So they deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They speak divisively. They repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. And so they divide those who are harmonious, supporting division, delighting in division, loving division, speaking words that promote division.

They speak harshly. They use the kinds of words that are cruel, nasty, hurtful, offensive, bordering on anger, not leading to immersion.

They talk nonsense. Their speech is untimely, and is neither factual nor beneficial. It has nothing to do with the teaching or the training. Their words have no value, and are untimely, unreasonable, rambling, and pointless.

They’re covetous. They covet the wealth and belongings of others: ‘Oh, if only their belongings were mine!’

They have ill will and malicious intentions: ‘May these sentient beings be killed, slaughtered, slain, destroyed, or annihilated!’

They have wrong view. Their perspective is distorted: ‘There’s no meaning in giving, sacrifice, or offerings. There’s no fruit or result of good and bad deeds. There’s no afterlife. There’s no such thing as mother and father, or beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there’s no ascetic or brahmin who is rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describes the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.’ Someone with these ten qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with ten qualities is raised up to heaven. What ten? It’s when a certain person gives up killing living creatures. They renounce the rod and the sword. They’re scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They give up stealing. They don’t, with the intention to commit theft, take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They give up sexual misconduct. They don’t have sex with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They don’t have sex with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

They give up lying. They’re summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: ‘Please, mister, say what you know.’ Not knowing, they say ‘I don’t know.’ Knowing, they say ‘I know.’ Not seeing, they say ‘I don’t see.’ And seeing, they say ‘I see.’ So they don’t deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They give up divisive speech. They don’t repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. Instead, they reconcile those who are divided, supporting unity, delighting in harmony, loving harmony, speaking words that promote harmony.

They give up harsh speech. They speak in a way that’s mellow, pleasing to the ear, lovely, going to the heart, polite, likable and agreeable to the people.

They give up talking nonsense. Their words are timely, true, and meaningful, in line with the teaching and training. They say things at the right time which are valuable, reasonable, succinct, and beneficial.

They’re content. They don’t covet the wealth and belongings of others: ‘Oh, if only their belongings were mine!’

They have a kind heart and loving intentions: ‘May these sentient beings live free of enmity and ill will, untroubled and happy!’

They have right view, an undistorted perspective: ‘There is meaning in giving, sacrifice, and offerings. There are fruits and results of good and bad deeds. There is an afterlife. There are such things as mother and father, and beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there are ascetics and brahmins who are rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describe the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.’

Someone with these ten qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.212

AN 10.212
Heaven and Hell (2nd)
Dutiyanirayasaggasutta

“Someone with ten qualities is cast down to hell. What ten? It’s when a certain person kills living creatures. They’re violent, bloody-handed, a hardened killer, merciless to living beings.

They steal. … They commit sexual misconduct. … They lie. … They speak divisively. … They speak harshly. … They indulge in talking nonsense. … They’re covetous. … They have cruel intentions. … They have wrong view. … Someone with these ten qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with ten qualities is raised up to heaven. What ten? It’s when a certain person gives up killing living creatures. They renounce the rod and the sword. They’re scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They give up stealing. … They give up sexual misconduct. … They give up lying. … They give up divisive speech. … They give up harsh speech. … They give up talking nonsense. … They’re content. … They’re kind hearted. … They have right view. … Someone with these ten qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.213

AN 10.213
A Female
Mātugāmasutta

“A female with ten qualities is cast down to hell. What ten? She kills living creatures. … She steals. … She commits sexual misconduct. … She lies. … She speaks divisively. … She speaks harshly. … She indulges in talking nonsense. … She’s covetous. … She has cruel intentions. … She has wrong view. … A female with these ten qualities is cast down to hell.

A female with ten qualities is raised up to heaven. What ten? She doesn’t kill living creatures. … She doesn’t steal. … She doesn’t commit sexual misconduct. … She doesn’t lie. … She doesn’t speak divisively. … She doesn’t speak harshly. … She doesn’t indulge in talking nonsense. … She’s content. … She’s kind hearted. … She has right view. … A female with these ten qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.214

AN 10.214
A Laywoman
Upāsikāsutta

“A laywoman with ten qualities is cast down to hell. What ten? She kills living creatures. … She has wrong view. … A laywoman with these ten qualities is cast down to hell.

A laywoman with ten qualities is raised up to heaven. What ten? She doesn’t kill living creatures. … She has right view. … A laywoman with these ten qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.215

AN 10.215
Assured
Visāradasutta

“A laywoman living at home with these ten qualities is not self-assured. What ten? She kills living creatures. … She has wrong view. … A laywoman living at home with these ten qualities is not self-assured.

A laywoman living at home with these ten qualities is self-assured. What ten? She doesn’t kill living creatures. … She has right view. … A laywoman living at home with these ten qualities is self-assured.”

AN 10.216

AN 10.216
Creepy Creatures
Saṁsappanīyasutta

“Mendicants, I will teach you an exposition of the teaching on creepy creatures. Listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“What is the exposition of the teaching on creepy creatures? Sentient beings are the owners of their deeds and heir to their deeds. Deeds are their womb, their relative, and their refuge. They shall be the heir of whatever deeds they do, whether good or bad.

Take a certain person who kills living creatures. They’re violent, bloody-handed, a hardened killer, merciless to living beings. They’re creepy in body, speech, and mind. Doing crooked deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, their destiny and rebirth are crooked.

Someone whose destiny and rebirth is crooked is reborn in one of two places, I say: in an exclusively painful hell, or among the species of creepy animals. And what are the species of creepy animals? Snakes, scorpions, centipedes, mongooses, cats, mice, owls, or whatever other species of animal that creep away when they see humans. This is how a being is born from a being. For your deeds determine your rebirth, and when you’re reborn contacts strike you. This is why I say that sentient beings are heirs to their deeds.

Take someone else who steals … commits sexual misconduct … lies … speaks divisively … speaks harshly … indulges in talking nonsense … is covetous … has cruel intentions … has wrong view … They’re creepy in body, speech, and mind. Doing crooked deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, their destiny and rebirth are crooked.

Someone whose destiny and rebirth is crooked is reborn in one of two places, I say: in an exclusively painful hell, or among the species of creepy animals. And what are the species of creepy animals? Snakes, scorpions, centipedes, mongooses, cats, mice, owls, or whatever other species of animal that creep away when they see humans. This is how a being is born from a being. For your deeds determine your rebirth, and when you’re reborn contacts strike you. This is why I say that sentient beings are heirs to their deeds. Sentient beings are the owners of their deeds and heir to their deeds. Deeds are their womb, their relative, and their refuge. They shall be the heir of whatever deeds they do, whether good or bad.

Take a certain person who gives up killing living creatures. They renounce the rod and the sword. They’re scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They’re not creepy in body, speech, and mind. Doing virtuous deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, their destiny and rebirth is virtuous.

Someone whose destiny and rebirth is virtuous is reborn in one of two places, I say: in a heaven of perfect happiness, or in an eminent well-to-do family of aristocrats, brahmins, or householders—rich, affluent, and wealthy, with lots of gold and silver, lots of property and assets, and lots of money and grain. This is how a being is born from a being. For your deeds determine your rebirth, and when you’re reborn contacts strike you. This is why I say that sentient beings are heirs to their deeds.

Take someone else who gives up stealing … sexual misconduct … lying … divisive speech … harsh speech … talking nonsense … They’re content … kind hearted … they have right view … They’re not creepy in body, speech, and mind. Doing virtuous deeds by way of body, speech, and mind, their destiny and rebirth is virtuous.

Someone whose destiny and rebirth is virtuous is reborn in one of two places, I say: in a heaven of perfect happiness, or in an eminent well-to-do family of aristocrats, brahmins, or householders—rich, affluent, and wealthy, with lots of gold and silver, lots of property and assets, and lots of money and grain. This is how a being is born from a being. For your deeds determine your rebirth, and when you’re reborn contacts strike you. This is why I say that sentient beings are heirs to their deeds.

Sentient beings are the owners of their deeds and heir to their deeds. Deeds are their womb, their relative, and their refuge. They shall be the heir of whatever deeds they do, whether good or bad. This is the exposition of the teaching on creepy creatures.”

AN 10.217

AN 10.217
Intentional (1st)
Paṭhamasañcetanikasutta

“Mendicants, I don’t say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don’t say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.

Now, there are three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result. There are four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result. There are three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result.

And what are the three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action? It’s when a certain person kills living creatures. They’re violent, bloody-handed, a hardened killer, merciless to living beings.

They steal. With the intention to commit theft, they take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They commit sexual misconduct. They have sex with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They have sex with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

These are the three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action.

And what are the four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action? It’s when a certain person lies. They’re summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: ‘Please, mister, say what you know.’ Not knowing, they say ‘I know.’ Knowing, they say ‘I don’t know.’ Not seeing, they say ‘I see.’ And seeing, they say ‘I don’t see.’ So they deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They speak divisively. They repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. And so they divide those who are harmonious, supporting division, delighting in division, loving division, speaking words that promote division.

They speak harshly. They use the kinds of words that are cruel, nasty, hurtful, offensive, bordering on anger, not leading to immersion.

They indulge in talking nonsense. Their speech is untimely, and is neither factual nor beneficial. It has nothing to do with the teaching or the training. Their words have no value, and are untimely, unreasonable, rambling, and pointless.

These are the four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action.

And what are the three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action? It's when someone is covetous. They covet the wealth and belongings of others: 'Oh, if only their belongings were mine!'

They have ill will and malicious intentions: 'May these sentient beings be killed, slaughtered, slain, destroyed, or annihilated!'

They have wrong view. Their perspective is distorted: 'There's no meaning in giving, sacrifice, or offerings. There's no fruit or result of good and bad deeds. There's no afterlife. There's no such thing as mother and father, or beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there's no ascetic or brahmin who is rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describes the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.'

These are the three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action.

When their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell because of these three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action, these four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action, or these three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result.

It's like throwing unfailing dice: they always fall the right side up. In the same way, when their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell because of these three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action, these four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action, or these three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result.

I don't say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don't say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.

Now, there are three kinds of successful bodily action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. There are four kinds of successful verbal action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. There are three kinds of successful mental action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result.

And what are the three kinds of successful bodily action? It's when a certain person gives up killing living creatures. They renounce the rod and the sword. They're scrupulous and kind, living full of compassion for all living beings.

They don’t steal. They don’t, with the intention to commit theft, take the wealth or belongings of others from village or wilderness.

They give up sexual misconduct. They don’t have sex with women who have their mother, father, both mother and father, brother, sister, relatives, or clan as guardian. They don’t have sex with a woman who is protected on principle, or who has a husband, or whose violation is punishable by law, or even one who has been garlanded as a token of betrothal.

These are the three kinds of successful bodily action.

And what are the four kinds of successful verbal action? It’s when a certain person gives up lying. They’re summoned to a council, an assembly, a family meeting, a guild, or to the royal court, and asked to bear witness: ‘Please, mister, say what you know.’ Not knowing, they say ‘I don’t know.’ Knowing, they say ‘I know.’ Not seeing, they say ‘I don’t see.’ And seeing, they say ‘I see.’ They don’t deliberately lie for the sake of themselves or another, or for some trivial worldly reason.

They give up divisive speech. They don’t repeat in one place what they heard in another so as to divide people against each other. Instead, they reconcile those who are divided, supporting unity, delighting in harmony, loving harmony, speaking words that promote harmony.

They give up harsh speech. They speak in a way that’s mellow, pleasing to the ear, lovely, going to the heart, polite, likable and agreeable to the people.

They give up talking nonsense. Their words are timely, true, and meaningful, in line with the teaching and training. They say things at the right time which are valuable, reasonable, succinct, and beneficial.

These are the four kinds of successful verbal action.

And what are the three kinds of successful mental action? It’s when someone is content. They don’t covet the wealth and belongings of others: ‘Oh, if only their belongings were mine!’

They have a kind heart and loving intentions: ‘May these sentient beings live free of enmity and ill will, untroubled and happy!’

They have right view, an undistorted perspective: ‘There is meaning in giving, sacrifice, and offerings. There are fruits and results of good and bad deeds. There is an afterlife. There are such things as mother and father, and beings that are reborn spontaneously. And there are ascetics and brahmins who are rightly comported and rightly practiced, and who describe the afterlife after realizing it with their own insight.’

These are the three kinds of successful mental action.

When their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a good place, in heaven because of these three kinds of successful bodily action, these four kinds of successful verbal action, or these three kinds of successful mental action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result.

It’s like throwing unfaling dice: they always fall the right side up. In the same way, when their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a good place, in heaven because of these three kinds of successful bodily action, these four kinds of successful verbal action, or these three kinds of successful mental action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. I don’t say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don’t say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.”

AN 10.218

AN 10.218
Intentional (2nd)
Dutiyasañcetanikasutta

“Mendicants, I don’t say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don’t say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.

Now, there are three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result. There are four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result. There are three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result.

And what are the three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action? … These are the three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action.

And what are the four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action? … These are the four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action.

And what are the three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action? … These are the three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action.

When their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell because of these three kinds of corruption and failure of bodily action, these four kinds of corruption and failure of verbal action, or these three kinds of corruption and failure of mental action that have unskillful intention, with suffering as their outcome and result.

I don’t say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don’t say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.

Now, there are three kinds of successful bodily action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. There are four kinds of successful verbal action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. There are three kinds of successful mental action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result.

And what are the three kinds of successful bodily action? … These are the three kinds of successful bodily action.

And what are the four kinds of successful verbal action? … These are the four kinds of successful verbal action.

And what are the three kinds of successful mental action? … These are the three kinds of successful mental action.

When their body breaks up, after death, sentient beings are reborn in a good place, in heaven because of these three kinds of successful bodily action, these four kinds of successful verbal action, or these three kinds of successful mental action that have skillful intention, with happiness as their outcome and result. …”

AN 10.219

AN 10.219
The Body Born of Deeds
Karajakāyasutta

“Mendicants, I don’t say that intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated are eliminated without being experienced. And that may be in the present life, or in the next life, or in some subsequent period. And I don’t say that suffering is ended without experiencing intentional deeds that have been performed and accumulated.

That noble disciple is rid of desire, rid of ill will, unconfused, aware, and mindful. They meditate spreading a heart full of love to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of love to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will.

They understand: ‘Formerly my mind was limited and undeveloped. Now it’s limitless and well developed. Whatever limited deeds I’ve done don’t remain or persist there.’

What do you think, mendicants? Suppose a child had developed the heart’s release by love from their childhood on. Would they still do any bad deed?”

“No, sir.”

“Not doing any bad deed, would they still experience any suffering?”

“No, sir. For if they don’t do any bad deed, from where would suffering afflict them?”

“This heart’s release by love should be developed by women or men. For neither women nor men take this body with them when they go. The mind is what’s inside mortal beings. They understand: ‘Whatever bad deeds I have done in the past with this deed-born body I will experience here. It will not follow me to my next life.’ The heart’s release by love developed in this way leads to non-return for a wise mendicant here who has not penetrated to a higher freedom.

They meditate spreading a heart full of compassion … They meditate spreading a heart full of rejoicing … They meditate spreading a heart full of equanimity to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of equanimity to the whole world —abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will.

They understand: ‘Formerly my mind was limited and undeveloped. Now it’s limitless and well developed. Whatever limited deeds I’ve done don’t remain or persist there.’

What do you think, mendicants? Suppose a child had developed the heart's release by equanimity from their childhood on. Would they still do any bad deed?"

"No, sir."

"Not doing any bad deed, would they still experience any suffering?"

"No, sir. For if they don't do any bad deed, from where would suffering afflict them?"

"This heart's release by equanimity should be developed by women or men. For neither women nor men take this body with them when they go. The mind is what's inside mortal beings. They understand: 'Whatever bad deeds I have done in the past with this deed-born body I will experience here. It will not follow me to my next life.' The heart's release by equanimity developed in this way leads to non-return for a wise mendicant here who has not penetrated to a higher freedom."

AN 10.220

AN 10.220
Unprincipled Conduct
Adhammacariyāsutta

Then a certain brahmin went up to the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to the Buddha:

“What is the cause, Mister Gotama, what is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell?”

“Unprincipled and immoral conduct is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.”

“But what is the cause, Mister Gotama, what is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm?”

“Principled and moral conduct is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.”

“I don’t understand the detailed meaning of what Mister Gotama has said in brief. Please, Mister Gotama, teach me this matter so I can understand the detailed meaning.”

“Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” the brahmin replied. The Buddha said this:

“Brahmin, unprincipled and immoral conduct is threefold by way of body, fourfold by way of speech, and threefold by way of mind.

And how is unprincipled and immoral conduct threefold by way of body? … That’s how unprincipled and immoral conduct is threefold by way of body.

And how is unprincipled and immoral conduct fourfold by way of speech? … That’s how unprincipled and immoral conduct is fourfold by way of speech.

And how is unprincipled and immoral conduct threefold by way of mind? … That’s how unprincipled and immoral conduct is threefold by way of mind. That’s how unprincipled and immoral conduct is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

Principled and moral conduct is threefold by way of body, fourfold by way of speech, and threefold by way of mind.

And how is principled and moral conduct threefold by way of body? … That's how principled and moral conduct is threefold by way of body.

And how is principled and moral conduct fourfold by way of speech? … That's how principled and moral conduct is fourfold by way of speech.

And how is principled and moral conduct threefold by way of mind? … That's how principled and moral conduct is threefold by way of mind. That's how principled and moral conduct is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm."

"Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

AN 10.221

AN 10.221
Untitled Discourse on Ten Qualities

~

“Someone with ten qualities is cast down to hell. What ten? They kill living creatures, steal, and commit sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. And they’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. Someone with these ten qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with ten qualities is raised up to heaven. What ten? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. Someone with these ten qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.222

AN 10.222
Untitled Discourse on Twenty Qualities

~

“Someone with twenty qualities is cast down to hell. What twenty? They kill living creatures, steal, and commit sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. And they encourage others to do these things. Someone with these twenty qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with twenty qualities is raised up to heaven. What twenty? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. And they encourage others to do these things. Someone with these twenty qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.223

AN 10.223
Untitled Discourse on Thirty Qualities

~

“Someone with thirty qualities is cast down to hell. What thirty? They kill living creatures, steal, and commit sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. They encourage others to do these things. And they approve of these things. Someone with these thirty qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with thirty qualities is raised up to heaven. What thirty? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. They encourage others to do these things. And they approve of these things. Someone with these thirty qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.224

AN 10.224
Untitled Discourse on Forty Qualities

~

“Someone with forty qualities is cast down to hell. What forty? They kill living creatures, steal, and commit sexual misconduct. They use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re covetous, malicious, with wrong view. They encourage others to do these things. They approve of these things. And they praise these things. Someone with these forty qualities is cast down to hell.

Someone with forty qualities is raised up to heaven. What forty? They don’t kill living creatures, steal, or commit sexual misconduct. They don’t use speech that’s false, divisive, harsh, or nonsensical. They’re contented, kind-hearted, with right view. They encourage others to do these things. They approve of these things. And they praise these things. Someone with these forty qualities is raised up to heaven.”

AN 10.225-228

AN 10.225–228
Untitled Discourses on Ten to Forty Qualities (1st)

~

“Someone with ten qualities keeps themselves broken and damaged … keeps themselves healthy and whole … twenty … thirty … forty …”

AN 10.229-232

AN 10.229–232
Untitled Discourses on Ten to Forty Qualities (2nd)

~

“When they have ten qualities, some people, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. … some people, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm … twenty … thirty … forty …”

AN 10.233-236

AN 10.233–236
Untitled Discourses on Ten to Forty Qualities (3rd)

~

"A fool is known by ten qualities … astute person … twenty … thirty … forty …"

AN 10.237

AN 10.237
Untitled Discourse on Greed (1st)

~

“For insight into greed, ten things should be developed. What ten? The perceptions of ugliness, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, impermanence, suffering in impermanence, and not-self in suffering, giving up, fading away, and cessation. For insight into greed, these ten things should be developed.”

AN 10.238

AN 10.238
Untitled Discourse on Greed (2nd)

~

“For insight into greed, ten things should be developed. What ten? The perceptions of impermanence, not-self, death, repulsiveness of food, dissatisfaction with the whole world, a skeleton, a worm-infested corpse, a livid corpse, a split open corpse, and a bloated corpse. For insight into greed, these ten things should be developed.”

AN 10.239

AN 10.239
Untitled Discourse on Greed (3rd)

~

“For insight into greed, ten things should be developed. What ten? Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right immersion, right knowledge, and right freedom. For insight into greed, these ten things should be developed.”

AN 10.240-266

AN 10.240–266
Untitled Discourses on Greed

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go … these ten things should be developed.”

AN 10.267-746

AN 10.267–746
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for the complete understanding of negligence … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go of negligence … these ten things should be developed.”

The Book of the Tens is finished.

AN 11.1

AN 11.1
What's the Purpose?
Kimatthiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery.

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, what is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics?"

"Ānanda, having no regrets is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics."

"But what is the purpose and benefit of having no regrets?"

"Joy is the purpose and benefit of having no regrets."

"But what is the purpose and benefit of joy?"

"Rapture …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of rapture?"

"Tranquility …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of tranquility?"

"Bliss …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of bliss?"

"Immersion …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of immersion?"

"Truly knowing and seeing …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing?"

"Disillusionment …"

"But what is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment?"

"Dispassion …"

“But what is the purpose and benefit of dispassion?”

“Knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of dispassion.

So, Ānanda, the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics is not having regrets. Joy is the purpose and benefit of not having regrets. Rapture is the purpose and benefit of joy. Tranquility is the purpose and benefit of rapture. Bliss is the purpose and benefit of tranquility. Immersion is the purpose and benefit of bliss. Truly knowing and seeing is the purpose and benefit of immersion. Disillusionment is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing. Dispassion is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment. And knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of dispassion. So, Ānanda, skillful ethics progressively lead up to the highest.”

AN 11.2

AN 11.2
Making a Wish
Cetanākaraṇīyasutta

“Mendicants, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethical conduct, need not make a wish: ‘May I have no regrets!’ It’s only natural that an ethical person has no regrets.

When you have no regrets you need not make a wish: ‘May I feel joy!’ It’s only natural that joy springs up when you have no regrets.

When you feel joy you need not make a wish: ‘May I experience rapture!’ It’s only natural that rapture arises when you’re joyful.

When your mind is full of rapture you need not make a wish: ‘May my body become tranquil!’ It’s only natural that your body becomes tranquil when your mind is full of rapture.

When your body is tranquil you need not make a wish: ‘May I feel bliss!’ It’s only natural to feel bliss when your body is tranquil.

When you feel bliss you need not make a wish: ‘May my mind be immersed in samādhi!’ It’s only natural for the mind to become immersed in samādhi when you feel bliss.

When your mind is immersed in samādhi you need not make a wish: ‘May I truly know and see!’ It’s only natural to truly know and see when your mind is immersed in samādhi.

When you truly know and see you need not make a wish: ‘May I grow disillusioned!’ It’s only natural to grow disillusioned when you truly know and see.

When you’re disillusioned you need not make a wish: ‘May I become dispassionate!’ It’s only natural to grow dispassionate when you’re disillusioned.

When you’re dispassionate you need not make a wish: ‘May I realize the knowledge and vision of freedom!’ It’s only natural to realize the knowledge and vision of freedom when you’re dispassionate.

And so, mendicants, the knowledge and vision of freedom is the purpose and benefit of dispassion. Dispassion is the purpose and benefit of disillusionment. Disillusionment is the purpose and benefit of truly knowing and seeing. Truly knowing and seeing is the purpose and benefit of immersion. Immersion is the purpose and benefit of bliss. Bliss is the purpose and benefit of tranquility. Tranquility is the purpose and benefit of rapture. Rapture is the purpose and benefit of joy. Joy is the purpose and benefit of not having regrets. Not having regrets is the purpose and benefit of skillful ethics. And so, mendicants, good qualities flow on and fill up from one to the other, for going from the near shore to the far shore.”

AN 11.3

AN 11.3
Vital Conditions (1st)
Paṭhamaupanisāsutta

“Mendicants, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. When there is no joy, one who lacks joy has destroyed a vital condition for rapture. When there is no rapture, one who lacks rapture has destroyed a vital condition for tranquility. When there is no tranquility, one who lacks tranquility has destroyed a vital condition for bliss. When there is no bliss, one who lacks bliss has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is no disillusionment, one who lacks disillusionment has destroyed a vital condition for dispassion. When there is no dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … When there is no dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. When there is joy, one who has fulfilled joy has fulfilled a vital condition for rapture. When there is rapture, one who has fulfilled rapture has fulfilled a vital condition for tranquility. When there is tranquility, one who has fulfilled tranquility has fulfilled a vital condition for bliss. When there is bliss, one who has fulfilled bliss has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is disillusionment, one who has fulfilled disillusionment has fulfilled a vital condition for dispassion. When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 11.4

AN 11.4
Vital Conditions (2nd)
Dutiyaupanisāsutta

There Venerable Sāriputta addressed the mendicants: “Reverends, mendicants!”

“Reverend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“An unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. When there is no joy, one who lacks joy has destroyed a vital condition for rapture. When there is no rapture, one who lacks rapture has destroyed a vital condition for tranquility. When there is no tranquility, one who lacks tranquility has destroyed a vital condition for bliss. When there is no bliss, one who lacks bliss has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is no disillusionment, one who lacks disillusionment has destroyed a vital condition for dispassion. When there is no dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … When there is dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. When there is joy, one who has fulfilled joy has fulfilled a vital condition for rapture. When there is rapture, one who has fulfilled rapture has fulfilled a vital condition for tranquility. When there is tranquility, one who has fulfilled tranquility has fulfilled a vital condition for bliss. When there is bliss, one who has fulfilled bliss has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is disillusionment, one who has fulfilled disillusionment has fulfilled a vital condition for dispassion. When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 11.5

AN 11.5
Vital Conditions (3rd)
Tatiyaupanisāsutta

There Venerable Ānanda addressed the mendicants …

“An unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. When there is no joy, one who lacks joy has destroyed a vital condition for rapture. When there is no rapture, one who lacks rapture has destroyed a vital condition for tranquility. When there is no tranquility, one who lacks tranquility has destroyed a vital condition for bliss. When there is no bliss, one who lacks bliss has destroyed a vital condition for right immersion. When there is no right immersion, one who lacks right immersion has destroyed a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is no true knowledge and vision, one who lacks true knowledge and vision has destroyed a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is no disillusionment, one who lacks disillusionment has destroyed a vital condition for dispassion. When there is no dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that lacked branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would not grow to fullness.

In the same way, an unethical person, who lacks ethics, has destroyed a vital condition for having no regrets. When there are regrets, one who has regrets has destroyed a vital condition for joy. … When there is no dispassion, one who lacks dispassion has destroyed a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

An ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. When there is joy, one who has fulfilled joy has fulfilled a vital condition for rapture. When there is rapture, one who has fulfilled rapture has fulfilled a vital condition for tranquility. When there is tranquility, one who has fulfilled tranquility has fulfilled a vital condition for bliss. When there is bliss, one who has fulfilled bliss has fulfilled a vital condition for right immersion. When there is right immersion, one who has fulfilled right immersion has fulfilled a vital condition for true knowledge and vision. When there is true knowledge and vision, one who has fulfilled true knowledge and vision has fulfilled a vital condition for disillusionment. When there is disillusionment, one who has fulfilled disillusionment has fulfilled a vital condition for dispassion. When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom.

Suppose there was a tree that was complete with branches and foliage. Its shoots, bark, softwood, and heartwood would grow to fullness.

In the same way, an ethical person, who has fulfilled ethics, has fulfilled a vital condition for not having regrets. When there are no regrets, one who has no regrets has fulfilled a vital condition for joy. … When there is dispassion, one who has fulfilled dispassion has fulfilled a vital condition for knowledge and vision of freedom."

AN 11.6

AN 11.6
Disasters
Byasanasutta

“Mendicants, any mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, fall into one or other of these eleven disasters. What eleven?

They don’t achieve the unachieved. What they have achieved falls away. They don’t refine their good qualities. They overestimate their good qualities. Or they lead the spiritual life dissatisfied. Or they commit a corrupt offense. Or they resign the training and return to a lesser life. Or they contract a severe illness. Or they go mad and lose their mind. They feel lost when they die. And when their body breaks up, after death, they are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

Any mendicant who abuses and insults their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, fall into one or other of these eleven disasters.

Any mendicant who does not abuse and insult their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, not fall into one or other of these eleven disasters. What eleven?

They don’t achieve the unachieved. What they have achieved falls away. They don’t refine their good qualities. They overestimate their good qualities. Or they lead the spiritual life dissatisfied. Or they commit one of the corrupt offenses. Or they resign the training and return to a lesser life. Or they contract a severe illness. Or they go mad and lose their mind. They feel lost when they die. And when their body breaks up, after death, they are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

Any mendicant who does not abuse and insult their spiritual companions, speaking ill of the noble ones, will, without a doubt, not fall into one or other of these eleven disasters.”

AN 11.7

AN 11.7
Percipient
Saññāsutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Could it be, sir, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“It could be, Ānanda, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“But how could this be, sir?”

“Ānanda, it’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’

That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

And then Ānanda approved and agreed with what the Buddha said. He got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right. Then he went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side and said to Sāriputta:

"Could it be, reverend Sāriputta, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn't perceive earth in earth … And they wouldn't perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive."

"It could be, Reverend Ānanda."

"But how could this be?"

"Ānanda, it's when a mendicant perceives: 'This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.' That's how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn't perceive earth in earth … And they wouldn't perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive."

"It's incredible, it's amazing! How the meaning and the phrasing of the teacher and the disciple fit together and agree without conflict when it comes to the chief matter! Just now I went to the Buddha and asked him about this matter. And the Buddha explained it to me in this manner, with these words and phrases, just like Venerable Sāriputta. It's incredible, it's amazing! How the meaning and the phrasing of the teacher and the disciple fit together and agree without conflict when it comes to the chief matter!"

AN 11.8

AN 11.8
Focus
Manasikārasutta

Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Could it be, sir, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t focus on the eye or sights, ear or sounds, nose or smells, tongue or tastes, or body or touches. They wouldn’t focus on earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t focus on the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t focus on this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t focus on what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. Yet they would focus?”

“It could be, Ānanda.”

“But how could this be?”

“Ānanda, it’s when a mendicant focuses thus: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’

That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t focus on the eye or sights, ear or sounds, nose or smells, tongue or tastes, or body or touches. … And they wouldn’t focus on what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. Yet they would focus.”

AN 11.9

AN 11.9
With Sandha
Saddhasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying at Ñātika in the brick house.

Then Venerable Sandha went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Sandha, meditate like a thoroughbred, not like a wild colt.

And how does a wild colt meditate? A wild colt, tied up by the feeding trough, meditates: ‘Fodder, fodder!’ Why is that? Because it doesn’t occur to the wild colt tied up by the feeding trough: ‘What task will the horse trainer have me do today? How should I respond?’ Tied up by the feeding trough they just meditate: ‘Fodder, fodder!’

In the same way, take a certain wild person who has gone to the forest, the root of a tree, or an empty hut. Their heart is overcome and mired in sensual desire, and they don’t truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. Harboring sensual desire within they meditate and concentrate and contemplate and ruminate. Their heart is overcome by ill will … dullness and drowsiness … restlessness and remorse … doubt … Harboring doubt within they meditate and concentrate and contemplate and ruminate. They meditate dependent on earth, water, fire, and air. They meditate dependent on the dimension of infinite space, infinite consciousness, nothingness, or neither perception nor non-perception. They meditate dependent on this world or the other world. They meditate dependent on what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. That’s how a wild colt meditates.

And how does a thoroughbred meditate? A fine thoroughbred, tied up by the feeding trough, doesn’t meditate: ‘Fodder, fodder!’ Why is that? Because it occurs to the fine thoroughbred tied up by the feeding trough: ‘What task will the horse trainer have me do today? How should I respond?’ Tied up by the feeding trough they don’t meditate: ‘Fodder, fodder!’ For that fine thoroughbred regards the use of the goad as a debt, a bond, a loss, a misfortune.

In the same way, take a certain fine thoroughbred person who has gone to the forest, the root of a tree, or an empty hut. Their heart is not overcome and mired in sensual desire, and they truly understand the escape from sensual desire that has arisen. Their heart is not overcome by ill will … dullness and drowsiness … restlessness and remorse … doubt … They don’t meditate dependent on earth, water, fire, and air. They don’t meditate dependent on the dimension of infinite space, infinite consciousness, nothingness, or neither perception nor non-perception. They don’t meditate dependent on this world or the other world. They don’t meditate dependent on what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. Yet they do meditate.

When a fine thoroughbred meditates like this, the gods together with Indra, Brahmā, and the Progenitor worship them from afar:

‘Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! We don’t understand the basis of your absorption.’”

When he said this, Venerable Sandha asked the Buddha, “But sir, how does that fine thoroughbred meditate?”

“Sandha, for a fine thoroughbred person, the perception of earth has vanished in relation to earth. The perception of water … fire … air has vanished in relation to air. The perception of the dimension of infinite space has vanished in relation to the dimension of infinite space. The perception of the dimension of infinite consciousness … nothingness … neither perception nor non-perception has vanished in relation to the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. The perception of this world has vanished in relation to this world. The perception of the other world has vanished in relation to the other world. And the perception of what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind has vanished. That’s how that fine thoroughbred person doesn’t meditate dependent on earth, water, fire, and air. They don’t meditate dependent on the dimension of infinite space, infinite consciousness, nothingness, or neither perception nor non-perception. They don’t meditate dependent on this world or the other world. They don’t meditate dependent on what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. Yet they do meditate.

When a fine thoroughbred person meditates like this, the gods together with Indra, Brahmā, and the Progenitor worship them from afar:

‘Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! We don’t understand the basis of your absorption.’”

AN 11.10

AN 11.10
At the Peacocks' Feeding Ground
Moranivāpasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, at the monastery of the wanderers in the peacocks' feeding ground. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!"

"Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, a mendicant who has three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans. What three? The entire spectrum of an adept's ethics, immersion, and wisdom. A mendicant with these three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans.

A mendicant who has another three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans. What three? A demonstration of psychic power, a demonstration of revealing, and a demonstration of instruction. A mendicant with these three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans.

A mendicant who has another three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans. What three? Right view, right knowledge, and right freedom. A mendicant with these three qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans.

A mendicant who has two qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans. What two? Knowledge and conduct. A mendicant with these two qualities has reached the ultimate end, the ultimate sanctuary from the yoke, the ultimate spiritual life, the ultimate goal. They are best among gods and humans. Brahmā Sanaṅkumāra also spoke this verse:

'The aristocrat is best among people who take clan as the standard. But one accomplished in knowledge and conduct is first among gods and humans.'

Now, that verse spoken by Brahmā Sanaṅkumāra is well spoken, not poorly spoken. It's beneficial, not pointless, and I agree with it. I also say:

‘The aristocrat is best among people who take clan as the standard. But one accomplished in knowledge and conduct is first among gods and humans.’”

AN 11.11

AN 11.11
With Mahānāma (1st)
Paṭhamamahānāmasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery.

At that time several mendicants were making a robe for the Buddha, thinking that when his robe was finished and the three months of the rains residence had passed the Buddha would set out wandering.

Mahānāma the Sakyan heard about this. He went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, I have heard that several mendicants are making a robe for the Buddha, thinking that when his robe was finished and the three months of the rains residence had passed the Buddha would set out wandering. Now, we spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?"

"Good, good, Mahānāma! It's appropriate that gentlemen such as you come to me and ask: 'We spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?' The faithful succeed, not the faithless. The energetic succeed, not the lazy. The mindful succeed, not the unmindful. Those with immersion succeed, not those without immersion. The wise succeed, not the witless.

When you're grounded on these five things, go on to develop six further things.

Firstly, you should recollect the Realized One: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' When a noble disciple recollects the Realized One their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the Realized One. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When they're joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, they feel bliss. And when they're blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of the Buddha.

Furthermore, you should recollect the teaching: 'The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.' When a noble disciple recollects the teaching their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of the teaching.

Furthermore, you should recollect the Saṅgha: 'The Saṅgha of the Buddha's disciples is practicing the way that's good, direct, systematic, and proper. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha's disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world.' When a noble disciple recollects the Saṅgha their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of the Saṅgha.

Furthermore, a noble disciple recollects their own ethical conduct, which is unbroken, impeccable, spotless, and unmarred, liberating, praised by sensible people, not mistaken, and leading to immersion. When a noble disciple recollects their ethical conduct their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of their ethical conduct.

Furthermore, you should recollect your own generosity: 'I'm so fortunate, so very fortunate. Among people with hearts full of the stain of stinginess I live at home rid of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.' When a noble disciple recollects their own generosity their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. … This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of generosity.

Furthermore, you should recollect the deities: 'There are the Gods of the Four Great Kings, the Gods of the Thirty-Three, the Gods of Yama, the Joyful Gods, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others, the Gods of Brahmā's Host, and gods even higher than these. When those deities passed away from here, they were reborn there because of their faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. I, too, have the same kind of faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom.' When a noble disciple recollects the faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom of both themselves and the deities their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the deities. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When they're joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, they feel bliss. And when they're blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. This is called a noble disciple who lives in balance among people who are unbalanced, and lives untroubled among people who are troubled. They've entered the stream of the teaching and developed the recollection of the deities."

AN 11.12

AN 11.12
With Mahānāma (2nd)
Dutiyamahānāmasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery. Now at that time Mahānāma the Sakyan had recently recovered from an illness. At that time several mendicants were making a robe for the Buddha …

Mahānāma the Sakyan heard about this. He went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, I have heard that several mendicants are making a robe for the Buddha, thinking that when his robe was finished and the three months of the rains residence had passed the Buddha would set out wandering. Now, we spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?"

"Good, good, Mahānāma! It's appropriate that gentlemen such as you come to me and ask: 'We spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?' The faithful succeed, not the faithless. The energetic succeed, not the lazy. The mindful succeed, not the unmindful. Those with immersion succeed, not those without immersion. The wise succeed, not the witless. When you're grounded on these five things, go on to develop six further things.

Firstly, you should recollect the Realized One: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' When a noble disciple recollects the Realized One their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the Realized One. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When they're joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, they feel bliss. And when they're blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. You should develop this recollection of the Buddha while walking, standing, sitting, lying down, while working, and while at home with your children.

Furthermore, you should recollect the teaching … the Saṅgha … your own ethical conduct … your own generosity … the deities … When a noble disciple recollects the faith, ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom of both themselves and the deities their mind is not full of greed, hate, and delusion. At that time their mind is unswerving, based on the deities. A noble disciple whose mind is unswerving finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. When they're joyful, rapture springs up. When the mind is full of rapture, the body becomes tranquil. When the body is tranquil, they feel bliss. And when they're blissful, the mind becomes immersed in samādhi. You should develop this recollection of the deities while walking, standing, sitting, lying down, while working, and while at home with your children."

AN 11.13

AN 11.13
With Nandiya
Nandiyasutta

At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Sakyans, near Kapilavatthu in the Banyan Tree Monastery.

Now at that time the Buddha wanted to commence the rains residence at Sāvatthī.

Nandiya the Sakyan heard about this, and thought, "Why don't I also commence the rains residence at Sāvatthī. There I can apply myself to my work and from time to time get to see the Buddha."

So the Buddha commenced the rains residence in Sāvatthī, and so did Nandiya. There he applied himself to his work and from time to time got to see the Buddha.

At that time several mendicants were making a robe for the Buddha, thinking that when his robe was finished and the three months of the rains residence had passed the Buddha would set out wandering.

Nandiya the Sakyan heard about this. He went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, I have heard that several mendicants are making a robe for the Buddha, thinking that when his robe was finished and the three months of the rains residence had passed the Buddha would set out wandering. Now, we spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?"

"Good, good Nandiya! It's appropriate that gentlemen such as you come to me and ask: 'We spend our life in various ways. Which of these should we practice?' The faithful succeed, not the faithless. The ethical succeed, not the unethical. The energetic succeed, not the lazy. The mindful succeed, not the unmindful. Those with immersion succeed, not those without immersion. The wise succeed, not the witless. When you're grounded on these six things, go on to develop five further things.

Firstly, you should recollect the Realized One: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' In this way you should establish mindfulness internally based on the Realized One.

Furthermore, you should recollect the teaching: 'The teaching is well explained by the Buddha—apparent in the present life, immediately effective, inviting inspection, relevant, so that sensible people can know it for themselves.' In this way you should establish mindfulness internally based on the teaching.

Furthermore, you should recollect your good friends: 'I'm fortunate, so very fortunate, to have good friends who advise and instruct me out of kindness and compassion.' In this way you should establish mindfulness internally based on good friends.

Furthermore, you should recollect your own generosity: 'I'm so fortunate, so very fortunate. Among people with hearts full of the stain of stinginess I live at home rid of stinginess, freely generous, open-handed, loving to let go, committed to charity, loving to give and to share.' In this way you should establish mindfulness internally based on generosity.

Furthermore, you should recollect the deities: 'There are deities who, surpassing the company of deities that consume solid food, are reborn in a certain host of mind-made deities. They don't see in themselves anything more to do, or anything that needs improvement.' An irreversibly freed mendicant doesn't see in themselves anything more to do, or anything that needs improvement. In the same way, Nandiya, there are deities who, surpassing the company of deities that consume solid food, are reborn in a certain host of mind-made deities. They don't see in themselves anything more to do, or anything that needs improvement. In this way you should establish mindfulness internally based on the deities.

A noble disciple who has these eleven qualities gives up bad, unskillful qualities and doesn't cling to them. It's like when a pot full of water is tipped over, so the water drains out and doesn't go back in. Suppose there was an uncontrolled fire. It advances burning up dry woodlands and doesn't go back over what it has burned. In the same way, a noble disciple who has these eleven qualities gives up bad, unskillful qualities and doesn't cling to them."

AN 11.14

AN 11.14
With Subhūti
Subhūtisutta

And then Venerable Subhūti together with the mendicant Saddha went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him, “Subhūti, what is the name of this mendicant?”

“Sir, the name of this mendicant is Saddha. He is the son of the layman Sudatta, and has gone forth out of faith from the lay life to homelessness.”

“Well, I hope this mendicant Saddha exhibits the outcomes of faith.”

“Now is the time, Blessed One! Now is the time, Holy One! Let the Buddha to speak on the outcomes of faith. Now I will find out whether or not this mendicant Saddha exhibits the outcomes of faith.”

“Well then, Subhūti, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” Subhūti replied. The Buddha said this:

“Firstly, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. When a mendicant is ethical, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant is very learned, remembering and keeping what they’ve learned. These teachings are good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased, describing a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. They are very learned in such teachings, remembering them, reinforcing them by recitation, mentally scrutinizing them, and comprehending them theoretically. When a mendicant is learned, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. When a mendicant has good friends, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant is easy to admonish, having qualities that make them easy to admonish. They’re patient, and take instruction respectfully. When a mendicant is easy to admonish, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties for their spiritual companions, understanding how to go about things in order to complete and organize the work. When a mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant loves the teachings and is a delight to converse with, being full of joy in the teaching and training. When a mendicant loves the teachings, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. When a mendicant is energetic, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant gets the four absorptions—blissful meditations in the present life that belong to the higher mind—when they want, without trouble or difficulty. When a mendicant gets the four absorptions, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: 'There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.' And so they recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. When a mendicant recollects many kinds of past lives, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, a mendicant sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. 'These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they acted out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they acted out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.' And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. When a mendicant has clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, this is an outcome of faith.

Furthermore, a mendicant has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and lives having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. When a mendicant has ended the defilements, this is an outcome of faith."

When he said this, Venerable Subhūti said to the Buddha:

"Sir, the outcomes of faith for a faithful person that the Buddha speaks of are found in this mendicant; he does exhibit them.

This mendicant is ethical …

This mendicant is learned …

This mendicant has good friends …

This mendicant is easy to admonish …

This mendicant is deft and tireless in a diverse spectrum of duties …

This mendicant loves the teachings …

This mendicant is energetic …

This mendicant gets the four absorptions …

This mendicant recollects their many kinds of past lives …

This mendicant has clairvoyance that is purified and surpasses the human …

This mendicant has ended the defilements …

The outcomes of faith for a faithful person that the Buddha speaks of are found in this mendicant; he does exhibit them."

"Good, good, Subhūti! So, Subhūti, you should live together with this mendicant Saddha. And when you want to see the Realized One, you should come together with him."

AN 11.15

AN 11.15
The Benefits of Love
Mettāsutta

“Mendicants, you can expect eleven benefits when the heart’s release by love has been cultivated, developed, and practiced, made a vehicle and a basis, kept up, consolidated, and properly implemented.

What eleven? You sleep at ease. You wake happily. You don’t have bad dreams. Humans love you. Non-humans love you. Deities protect you. You can’t be harmed by fire, poison, or blade. Your mind quickly enters immersion. Your face is clear and bright. You don’t feel lost when you die. If you don’t penetrate any higher, you’ll be reborn in a Brahmā realm. You can expect eleven benefits when the heart’s release by love has been cultivated, developed, and practiced, made a vehicle and a basis, kept up, consolidated, and properly implemented.”

AN 11.16

AN 11.16
The Wealthy Citizen
Aṭṭhakanāgarasutta

At one time Venerable Ānanda was staying near Vesālī in the little village of Beluva.

Now at that time the householder Dasama, a wealthy citizen, had arrived at Pāṭaliputta on some business. He went to the Chicken Monastery, approached a certain mendicant, and said to him, “Sir, where is Venerable Ānanda now staying? For I want to see him.”

“Householder, Venerable Ānanda is staying near Vesālī in the little village of Beluva.”

Then the householder Dasama, having concluded his business there, went to the little village of Beluva in Vesālī to see Ānanda. He bowed, sat down to one side, and said to Ānanda:

“Honorable Ānanda, is there one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One—who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha—practicing which a diligent, keen, and resolute mendicant’s mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke?”

“There is, householder.”

“And what is that one thing?”

“Householder, it’s when a mendicant, quite secluded from sensual pleasures, secluded from unskillful qualities, enters and remains in the first absorption, which has the rapture and bliss born of seclusion, while placing the mind and keeping it connected. Then they reflect: ‘Even this first absorption is produced by choices and intentions.’ They understand: ‘But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One—who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha—practicing which a diligent, keen, and resolute mendicant’s mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Furthermore, as the placing of the mind and keeping it connected are stilled, they enter and remain in the second absorption … third absorption … fourth absorption. Then they reflect: ‘Even this fourth absorption is produced by choices and intentions.’ They understand: ‘But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.' Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don't attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they're reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This too is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One—who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha—practicing which a diligent, keen, and resolute mendicant's mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they arrive at the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Furthermore, a mendicant meditates spreading a heart full of love to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of love to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Then they reflect: 'Even this heart's release by love is produced by choices and intentions.' They understand: 'But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.' Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don't attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they're reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This too is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One …

Furthermore, a mendicant meditates spreading a heart full of compassion … They meditate spreading a heart full of rejoicing … They meditate spreading a heart full of equanimity to one direction, and to the second, and to the third, and to the fourth. In the same way above, below, across, everywhere, all around, they spread a heart full of equanimity to the whole world—abundant, expansive, limitless, free of enmity and ill will. Then they reflect: 'Even this heart's release by equanimity is produced by choices and intentions.' They understand: 'But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.' Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don't attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they're reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This too is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One …

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond perceptions of form, with the ending of perceptions of impingement, not focusing on perceptions of diversity, aware that 'space is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite space. Then they reflect: 'Even this attainment of the dimension of infinite space is produced by choices and intentions.' They understand: 'But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.' Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don't attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they're reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This too is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One …

Furthermore, a mendicant, going totally beyond the dimension of infinite space, aware that 'consciousness is infinite', enters and remains in the dimension of infinite consciousness. … Going totally beyond the dimension of infinite consciousness, aware that 'there is nothing at all', they enter and remain in the dimension of nothingness. … Then they reflect: ‘Even this attainment of the dimension of nothingness is produced by choices and intentions.’ They understand: ‘But whatever is produced by choices and intentions is impermanent and liable to cessation.’ Abiding in that they attain the ending of defilements. If they don’t attain the ending of defilements, with the ending of the five lower fetters they’re reborn spontaneously, because of their passion and love for that meditation. They are extinguished there, and are not liable to return from that world. This too is one thing that has been rightly explained by the Blessed One—who knows and sees, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha—practicing which a diligent, keen, and resolute mendicant’s mind is freed, their defilements are ended, and they reach the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

When he said this, the householder Dasama said to Venerable Ānanda:

“Honorable Ānanda, suppose a person was looking for an entrance to a hidden treasure. And all at once they’d come across eleven entrances! In the same way, I was searching for the door to freedom from death. And all at once I got to hear of eleven doors to freedom from death. Suppose a person had a house with eleven doors. If the house caught fire they’d be able to flee to safety through any one of those doors. In the same way, I’m able to flee to safety through any one of these eleven doors to freedom from death. Sir, those of other religions will seek a fee for the teacher. Why shouldn’t I make an offering to Venerable Ānanda?”

Then the householder Dasama, having assembled the Saṅgha from Vesālī and Pāṭaliputta, served and satisfied them with his own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods. He clothed each and every mendicant in a pair of garments, with a set of three robes for Ānanda. And he had a dwelling worth five hundred built for Ānanda.

AN 11.17

AN 11.17
The Cowherd
Gopālasutta

“Mendicants, a cowherd with eleven factors can’t maintain and expand a herd of cattle. What eleven? It’s when a cowherd doesn’t know form, is unskilled in characteristics, doesn’t pick out flies’ eggs, doesn’t dress wounds, doesn’t spread smoke, doesn’t know the ford, doesn’t know satisfaction, doesn’t know the trail, is not skilled in pastures, milks dry, and doesn’t show extra respect to the bulls who are fathers and leaders of the herd. A cowherd with these eleven factors can’t maintain and expand a herd of cattle.

In the same way, a mendicant with eleven qualities can’t achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training. What eleven? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t know form, is unskilled in characteristics, doesn’t pick out flies’ eggs, doesn’t dress wounds, doesn’t spread smoke, doesn’t know the ford, doesn’t know satisfaction, doesn’t know the trail, is not skilled in pastures, milks dry, and doesn’t show extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha.

And how does a mendicant not know form? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t truly understand that all form is the four primary elements, or form derived from the four primary elements. That’s how a mendicant doesn’t know form.

And how is a mendicant not skilled in characteristics? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t understand that a fool is characterized by their deeds, and an astute person is characterized by their deeds. That’s how a mendicant isn’t skilled in characteristics.

And how does a mendicant not pick out flies’ eggs? It’s when a mendicant tolerates a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought that has arisen. They don’t give it up, get rid of it, eliminate it, and obliterate it. They tolerate any bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen. They don’t give them up, get rid of them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. That’s how a mendicant doesn’t pick out flies’ eggs.

And how does a mendicant not dress wounds? When a mendicant sees a sight with their eyes, they get caught up in the features and details. Since the faculty of sight is left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure become overwhelming. They don’t practice restraint, they don’t protect the faculty of sight, and they don’t achieve its restraint. When they hear a sound with their ears … When they smell an odor with their nose … When they taste a flavor with their tongue … When they feel a touch with their body … When they know an idea with their mind, they get caught up in the features and details. Since the faculty of the mind is left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure become overwhelming. They don’t practice restraint, they don’t protect the faculty of the mind, and they don’t achieve its restraint. That’s how a mendicant doesn’t dress wounds.

And how does a mendicant not spread smoke? It's when a mendicant doesn't teach others the Dhamma in detail as they learned and memorized it. That's how a mendicant doesn't spread smoke.

And how does a mendicant not know the ford? It's when a mendicant doesn't from time to time go up to those mendicants who are very learned—inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines—and ask them questions: 'Why, sir, does it say this? What does that mean?' Those venerables don't clarify what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters. That's how a mendicant doesn't know the ford.

And how does a mendicant not know satisfaction? It's when a mendicant, when the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One are being taught, finds no inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds no joy connected with the teaching. That's how a mendicant doesn't know satisfaction.

And how does a mendicant not know the trail? It's when a mendicant doesn't truly understand the noble eightfold path. That's how a mendicant doesn't know the trail.

And how is a mendicant not skilled in pastures? It's when a mendicant doesn't truly understand the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. That's how a mendicant is not skilled in pastures.

And how does a mendicant milk dry? It's when a mendicant is invited by a householder to accept robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But they don't know moderation in accepting. That's how a mendicant milks dry.

And how does a mendicant not show extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha? It's when a mendicant doesn't consistently treat senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha with kindness by way of body, speech, and mind, both in public and in private. That's how a mendicant doesn't show extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha.

A mendicant with these eleven qualities can't achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.

A cowherd with eleven factors can maintain and expand a herd of cattle. What eleven? It's when a cowherd knows form, is skilled in characteristics, picks out flies' eggs, dresses wounds, spreads smoke, knows the ford, knows satisfaction, knows the trail, is skilled in pastures, doesn't milk dry, and shows extra respect to the bulls who are fathers and leaders of the herd. A cowherd with these eleven factors can maintain and expand a herd of cattle.

In the same way, a mendicant with eleven qualities can achieve growth, improvement, and maturity in this teaching and training. What eleven? It's when a mendicant knows form, is skilled in characteristics, picks out flies' eggs, dresses wounds, spreads smoke, knows the ford, knows satisfaction, knows the trail, is skilled in pastures, doesn't milk dry, and shows extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha.

And how does a mendicant know form? It's when a mendicant truly understands that all form is the four primary elements, or form derived from the four primary elements. That's how a mendicant knows form.

And how is a mendicant skilled in characteristics? It's when a mendicant understands that a fool is characterized by their deeds, and an astute person is characterized by their deeds. That's how a mendicant is skilled in characteristics.

And how does a mendicant pick out flies' eggs? It's when a mendicant doesn't tolerate a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought that has arisen, but gives it up, gets rid of it, eliminates it, and exterminates it. They don't tolerate any bad, unskillful qualities that have arisen, but give them up, get rid of them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. That's how a mendicant picks out flies' eggs.

And how does a mendicant dress wounds? When a mendicant sees a sight with their eyes, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of sight were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of sight, and achieving its restraint. When they hear a sound with their ears … When they smell an odor with their nose … When they taste a flavor with their tongue … When they feel a touch with their body … When they know an idea with their mind, they don't get caught up in the features and details. If the faculty of mind were left unrestrained, bad unskillful qualities of covetousness and displeasure would become overwhelming. For this reason, they practice restraint, protecting the faculty of mind, and achieving its restraint. That's how a mendicant dresses wounds.

And how does a mendicant spread smoke? It's when a mendicant teaches others the Dhamma in detail as they learned and memorized it. That's how a mendicant spreads smoke.

And how does a mendicant know the ford? It's when from time to time a mendicant goes up to those mendicants who are very learned—inheritors of the heritage, who have memorized the teachings, the monastic law, and the outlines—and asks them questions: 'Why, sir, does it say this? What does that mean?' Those venerables clarify what is unclear, reveal what is obscure, and dispel doubt regarding the many doubtful matters. That's how a mendicant knows the ford.

And how does a mendicant know satisfaction? It's when a mendicant, when the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One are being taught, finds inspiration in the meaning and the teaching, and finds joy connected with the teaching. That's how a mendicant knows satisfaction.

And how does a mendicant know the trail? It's when a mendicant truly understands the noble eightfold path. That's how a mendicant knows the trail.

And how is a mendicant skilled in pastures? It's when a mendicant truly understands the four kinds of mindfulness meditation. That's how a mendicant is skilled in pastures.

And how does a mendicant not milk dry? It's when a mendicant is invited by a householder to accept robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And that mendicant knows moderation in accepting. That's how a mendicant doesn't milk dry.

And how does a mendicant show extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha? It's when a mendicant consistently treats senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha with kindness by way of body, speech, and mind, both in public and in private. That's how a mendicant shows extra respect to senior mendicants of long standing, long gone forth, fathers and leaders of the Saṅgha.

A mendicant with these eleven qualities can achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training."

AN 11.18

AN 11.18
Immersion (1st)
Paṭhamasamādhisutta

And then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

“Could it be, sir, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“It could be, mendicants.”

“But how could this be?”

“It’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

AN 11.19

AN 11.19
Immersion (2nd)
Dutiyasamādhisutta

There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, “Mendicants!”

“Venerable sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“Could it be, mendicants, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“Our teachings are rooted in the Buddha. He is our guide and our refuge. Sir, may the Buddha himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Well then, mendicants, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, sir,” they replied. The Buddha said this:

“A mendicant could gain such a state of immersion.”

“But how could this be?”

“It’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

AN 11.20

AN 11.20
Immersion (3rd)
Tatiyasamādhisutta

And then several mendicants went up to Venerable Sāriputta, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side and said to him:

“Could it be, reverend, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“It could be, reverends.”

“But how could this be?”

“It’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

AN 11.21

AN 11.21
Immersion (4th)
Catutthasamādhisutta

There Sāriputta addressed the mendicants:

“Could it be, reverends, that a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this? They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

“Reverend, we would travel a long way to learn the meaning of this statement in the presence of Venerable Sāriputta. May Venerable Sāriputta himself please clarify the meaning of this. The mendicants will listen and remember it.”

“Then listen and apply your mind well, I will speak.”

“Yes, friend,” they replied. Sāriputta said this:

“A mendicant could gain such a state of immersion.”

“But how could this be?”

“It’s when a mendicant perceives: ‘This is peaceful; this is sublime—that is, the stilling of all activities, the letting go of all attachments, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment.’ That’s how a mendicant might gain a state of immersion like this. They wouldn’t perceive earth in earth, water in water, fire in fire, or air in air. And they wouldn’t perceive the dimension of infinite space in the dimension of infinite space, the dimension of infinite consciousness in the dimension of infinite consciousness, the dimension of nothingness in the dimension of nothingness, or the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception in the dimension of neither perception nor non-perception. They wouldn’t perceive this world in this world, or the other world in the other world. And they wouldn’t perceive what is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, or explored by the mind. And yet they would still perceive.”

AN 11.22

“Mendicants, a cowherd with eleven factors can’t maintain and expand a herd of cattle. What eleven? It’s when a cowherd doesn’t know form, is unskilled in characteristics, doesn’t pick out flies’ eggs, doesn’t dress wounds, doesn’t spread smoke, doesn’t know the ford, doesn’t know satisfaction, doesn’t know the trail, is not skilled in pastures, milks dry, and doesn’t show extra respect to the bulls who are fathers and leaders of the herd. A cowherd with these eleven factors can’t maintain and expand a herd of cattle.

In the same way, a mendicant with eleven qualities can’t meditate observing impermanence in the eye …

AN 11.23

suffering …

AN 11.24

not-self …

AN 11.25

ending …

AN 11.26

vanishing …

AN 11.27

fading away …

AN 11.28

cessation …

letting go …”

AN 11.30-69

AN 11.30–69
Untitled Discourses on the Ear, Etc.

~

… "… ear … nose … tongue … body … mind …"

AN 11.70-117

AN 11.70–117
Untitled Discourses on Sights, Etc.

~

… "… sights … sounds … smells … tastes … touches … ideas …"

AN 11.118-165

AN 11.118–165
Untitled Discourses on Eye Consciousness, Etc.

~

… "… eye consciousness … ear consciousness … nose consciousness … tongue consciousness … body consciousness … mind consciousness. …"

AN 11.166-213

AN 11.166–213
Untitled Discourses on Eye Contact, Etc.

~

… "… eye contact … ear contact … nose contact … tongue contact … body contact … mind contact. …"

AN 11.214-261

AN 11.214–261
Untitled Discourses on Feeling Born of Eye Contact, Etc.

~

… "… feeling born of eye contact … feeling born of ear contact … feeling born of nose contact … feeling born of tongue contact … feeling born of body contact … feeling born of mind contact …

AN 11.262-309

AN 11.262–309
Untitled Discourses on Perception of Sights, Etc.

~

… "… perception of sights … perception of sounds … perception of smells … perception of tastes … perception of touches … perception of ideas. …"

AN 11.310-357

AN 11.310–357
Untitled Discourses on Intention Regarding Sights, Etc.

~

… "… intention regarding sights … intention regarding sounds … intention regarding smells … intention regarding tastes … intention regarding touches … intention regarding ideas. …"

AN 11.358-405

AN 11.358–405
Untitled Discourses on Craving For Sights, Etc.

~

… "… Craving for sights … craving for sounds … craving for smells … craving for tastes … craving for touches … craving for ideas. …"

AN 11.406-453

AN 11.406–453
Untitled Discourses on Thoughts About Sights, Etc.

~

… "… thoughts about sights … thoughts about sounds … thoughts about smells … thoughts about tastes … thoughts about touches … thoughts about ideas. …"

AN 11.454-501

AN 11.454–501
Untitled Discourses on Considerations Regarding Sights, Etc.

~

… "… considerations regarding sights … considerations regarding sounds … considerations regarding smells … considerations regarding tastes … considerations regarding touches … meditate observing impermanence in considerations about ideas … meditate observing suffering … meditate observing not-self … meditate observing ending … meditate observing vanishing … meditate observing fading away … meditate observing cessation … meditate observing letting go. …"

AN 11.502-981

AN 11.502–981
Untitled Discourses on the Eye, Etc.

~

“Mendicants, a cowherd with eleven factors can maintain and expand a herd of cattle. What eleven? It’s when a cowherd knows form …

In the same way, a mendicant with eleven qualities can meditate observing impermanence in the eye … meditate observing letting go. …”

AN 11.70-117

AN 11.70–117
Untitled Discourses on Sights, Etc.

~

… "… sights … sounds … smells … tastes … touches … ideas …"

AN 11.982

AN 11.982
Untitled Discourse on Greed

~

“For insight into greed, eleven things should be developed. What eleven? The first, second, third, and fourth absorptions; the heart’s releases by love, compassion, rejoicing, and equanimity; the dimensions of infinite space, infinite consciousness, and nothingness. For insight into greed, these eleven things should be developed.”

AN 11.983-991

AN 11.983–991
Untitled Discourses on Greed

~

“For the complete understanding of greed … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … letting go … these eleven things should be developed.”

AN 11.992-1151

AN 11.992–1151
Untitled Discourses on Hate, Etc.

~

“Of hate … delusion … anger … hostility … disdain … contempt … jealousy … stinginess … deceitfulness … deviousness … obstinacy … aggression … conceit … arrogance … vanity … for insight into negligence … complete understanding … complete ending … giving up … ending … vanishing … fading away … cessation … giving away … For the letting go of negligence, these eleven things should be developed.”

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said.

The Book of the Elevens is finished.

The Numbered Discourses are completed.

Dhp - The Dhammapada

(each verse receives its own record - the reference in in the Key field)

Dhp 1

Intention shapes experiences; intention is first, they’re made by intention. If with corrupt intent you speak or act, suffering follows you, like a wheel, the ox’s foot.

Dhp 2

Intention shapes experiences; intention is first, they’re made by intention. If with pure intent you speak or act, happiness follows you like a shadow that never leaves.

Dhp 3

“They abused me, they hit me! They beat me, they robbed me!” For those who bear such a grudge, hatred never ends.

Dhp 4

“They abused me, they hit me! They beat me, they robbed me!” For those who bear no such grudge, hatred has an end.

Dhp 5

For never is hatred settled by hate, it’s only settled by love: this is an eternal truth.

Dhp 6

Others don’t understand that here we need to be restrained. But those who do understand this, being clever, settle their conflicts.

Dhp 7

Those who contemplate the beautiful, their faculties unrestrained, immoderate in eating, lazy, lacking energy: Māra strikes them down like the wind, a feeble tree.

Dhp 8

Those who contemplate the ugly, their faculties well-restrained, eating in moderation, faithful and energetic: Māra cannot strike them down, like the wind, a rocky mountain.

Dhp 9

One who, not free of stains themselves, would wear the robe stained in ocher, bereft of self-control and of truth: they are not worthy of the ocher robe.

Dhp 10

One who’s purged all their stains, steady in ethics, possessed of self-control and of truth, they are truly worthy of the ocher robe.

Dhp 11

Thinking the inessential is essential, seeing the essential as inessential; they don’t realize the essential, for wrong thoughts are their pasture.

Dhp 12

Having known the essential as essential, and the inessential as inessential; they realize the essential, for right thoughts are their pasture.

Dhp 13

Just as rain seeps into a poorly roofed house, lust seeps into an undeveloped mind.

Dhp 14

Just as rain doesn’t seep into a well roofed house, lust doesn’t seep into a well developed mind.

Dhp 15

Here they grieve, hereafter they grieve, an evildoer grieves in both places. They grieve and fret, seeing their own corrupt deeds.

Dhp 16

Here they rejoice, hereafter they rejoice, one who does good rejoices in both places. They rejoice and celebrate, seeing their own pure deeds.

Dhp 17

Here they’re tormented, hereafter they’re tormented, an evildoer is tormented in both places. They’re tormented thinking of bad things they’ve done; when gone to a bad place, they’re tormented all the more.

Dhp 18

Here they delight, hereafter they delight, one who does good delights in both places. They delight thinking of good things they've done; when gone to a good place, they delight all the more.

Dhp 19

Much though they may recite scripture, if a negligent person does not apply them, then, like a cowherd who counts the cattle of others, they miss out on the blessings of the ascetic life.

Dhp 20

Little though they may recite scripture, if they live in line with the teachings, having given up greed, hate, and delusion, with deep understanding and heart well-freed, not grasping to this world or the next, they share in the blessings of the ascetic life.

Dhp 21

Heedfulness is the state free of death; heedlessness is the state of death. The heedful do not die, while the heedless are like the dead.

Dhp 22

Understanding this distinction when it comes to heedfulness, the astute rejoice in heedfulness, happy in the noble ones’ domain.

Dhp 23

They who regularly meditate, always staunchly vigorous; those wise ones realize quenching, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Dhp 24

For the hard-working and mindful, pure of deed and attentive, restrained, living righteously, and diligent, their reputation only grows.

Dhp 25

By hard work and diligence, by restraint and by self-control, a smart person would build an island that the floods cannot overflow.

Dhp 26

Fools and half-wits devote themselves to negligence. But the wise protect diligence as their best treasure.

Dhp 27

Don’t devote yourself to negligence, or delight in sexual intimacy. For if you’re diligent and meditate, you’ll attain abundant happiness.

Dhp 28

When the astute dispel negligence by means of diligence, ascending the palace of wisdom, sorrowless, they behold this generation of sorrow, as a wise man on a mountain-top beholds the fools below.

Dhp 29

Heedful among the heedless, wide awake while others sleep—a true sage leaves them behind, like a swift horse passing a feeble.

Dhp 30

Maghavā became chief of the gods by means of diligence. People praise diligence, while negligence is always deplored.

Dhp 31

A mendicant who loves to be diligent, seeing fear in negligence—advances like fire, burning up fetters big and small.

Dhp 32

A mendicant who loves to be diligent, seeing fear in negligence—such a one can’t decline, and has drawn near to extinguishment.

Dhp 33

The mind quivers and shakes, hard to guard, hard to curb. The discerning straighten it out, like a fletcher straightens an arrow.

Dhp 34

Like a fish pulled from the sea and cast upon the shore, this mind flounders about, trying to throw off Māra’s sway.

Dhp 35

Hard to hold back, flighty, alighting where it will; it’s good to tame the mind; a tamed mind leads to bliss.

Dhp 36

So hard to see, so subtle, alighting where it will; the discerning protect the mind, a guarded mind leads to bliss.

Dhp 37

The mind travels far, wandering alone; incorporeal, it hides in a cave. Those who will restrain the mind are freed from Māra’s bonds.

Dhp 38

Those of unsteady mind, who don’t understand the true teaching, and whose confidence wavers, do not perfect their wisdom.

Dhp 39

One whose mind is uncorrupted, whose heart is undamaged, who’s given up right and wrong, alert, has nothing to fear.

Dhp 40

Knowing this body breaks like a pot, and fortifying the mind like a citadel, attack Māra with the sword of wisdom, guard your conquest, and never settle.

Dhp 41

All too soon this body will lie upon the earth, bereft of consciousness, tossed aside like a useless log.

Dhp 42

A wrongly directed mind would do you more harm than a hater to the hated, or an enemy to their foe.

Dhp 43

A rightly directed mind would do you more good than your mother or father or any other relative.

Dhp 44

Who shall explore this land, and the Yama realm with its gods? Who shall examine the well-taught word of truth, as an expert examines a flower?

Dhp 45

A trainee shall explore this land, and the Yama realm with its gods. A trainee shall examine the well-taught word of truth, as an expert examines a flower.

Dhp 46

Knowing this body's like foam, realizing it's all just a mirage, and cutting off Māra's blossoming, vanish from the King of Death.

Dhp 47

As a mighty flood sweeps off a sleeping village, death steals away a man even as he gathers flowers, his mind caught up in them.

Dhp 48

The terminator gains control of the man who has not had his fill of pleasures, even as he gathers flowers, his mind caught up in them.

Dhp 49

A bee takes the nectar and moves on, doing no damage to the flower’s beauty and fragrance; and that’s how a sage should walk in the village.

Dhp 50

Don’t find fault with others, with what they’ve done or left undone. You should only watch yourself, what you’ve done or left undone.

Dhp 51

Just like a glorious flower that’s colorful but lacks fragrance; eloquent speech is fruitless for one who does not act on it.

Dhp 52

Just like a glorious flower that’s both colorful and fragrant, eloquent speech is fruitful for one who acts on it.

Dhp 53

Just as one would create many garlands from a heap of flowers, when a person has come to be born, they should do many skillful things.

Dhp 54

The fragrance of flowers doesn’t spread upwind, nor sandalwood, pinwheel, or jasmine; but the fragrance of the good spreads upwind; a true person’s virtue spreads in every direction.

Dhp 55

Among all the fragrances—sandalwood or pinwheel or lotus or jasmine—the fragrance of virtue is supreme.

Dhp 56

Faint is the fragrance of sandal or pinwheel; but the fragrance of the virtuous floats to the highest gods.

Dhp 57

For those accomplished in ethics, meditating diligently, freed through the highest knowledge, Māra cannot find their path.

Dhp 58

From a forsaken heap discarded on the highway, a lotus might blossom, fragrant and delightful.

Dhp 59

So too, among the forsaken, a disciple of the perfect Buddha outshines with their wisdom the blind ordinary folk.

Dhp 60

Long is the night for the wakeful; long is the league for the weary; long transmigrate the fools who don’t understand the true teaching.

Dhp 61

If while wandering you find no partner equal or better than yourself, then firmly resolve to wander alone—there’s no fellowship with fools.

Dhp 62

“Sons are mine, wealth is mine”—thus the fool frets. For even your self is not your own, let alone your sons or wealth.

Dhp 63

The fool who thinks they’re a fool is wise at least to that extent. But the true fool is said to be one who imagines that they are wise.

Dhp 64

Though a fool attends to the wise even for the rest of their life, they still don’t experience the teaching, like a spoon the taste of the soup.

Dhp 65

If a clever person attends to the wise even just for an hour or so, they swiftly experience the teaching, like a tongue the taste of the soup.

Dhp 66

Witless fools behave like their own worst enemies, doing wicked deeds that ripen as bitter fruit.

Dhp 67

It’s not good to do a deed that plagues you later on, for which you weep and wail, as its effect stays with you.

Dhp 68

It is good to do a deed that doesn’t plague you later on, that gladdens and cheers, as its effect stays with you.

Dhp 69

The fool imagines that evil is sweet, so long as it has not yet ripened. But as soon as that evil ripens, they fall into suffering.

Dhp 70

Month after month a fool may eat food from a grass-blade’s tip; but they’ll never be worth a sixteenth part of one who has fathomed the teaching.

Dhp 71

For a wicked deed that has been done does not spoil quickly like milk. Smoldering, it follows the fool, like a fire smothered over with ash.

Dhp 72

Whatever fame a fool may get, it only gives rise to harm. Whatever good features they have it ruins, and blows their head into bits.

Dhp 73

They’d seek the esteem that they lack, and status among the mendicants; authority over monasteries, and honor among other families.

Dhp 74

“Let both layfolk and renunciants think the work was done by me alone. In anything at all that’s to be done, let them fall under my sway alone.” So thinks the fool, their greed and pride only growing.

Dhp 75

For the means to profit and the path to quenching are two quite different things. A mendicant disciple of the Buddha, understanding what this really means, would never delight in honors, but rather would foster seclusion.

Dhp 76

Regard one who sees your faults as a guide to a hidden treasure. Stay close to one so wise and astute who corrects you when you need it. Sticking close to such an impartial person, things get better, not worse.

Dhp 77

Advise and instruct; curb wickedness: for you shall be loved by the good, and disliked by the bad.

Dhp 78

Don’t mix with bad friends, nor with the worst of men. Mix with spiritual friends, and with the best of men.

Dhp 79

Through joy in the teaching you sleep at ease, with clear and confident heart. An astute person always delights in the teaching proclaimed by the Noble One.

Dhp 80

Irrigators guide water, fletchers straighten arrows, carpenters carve timber, the astute tame themselves.

Dhp 81

As the wind cannot stir a solid mass of rock, so too blame and praise do not affect the wise.

Dhp 82

Like a deep lake, clear and unclouded, so clear are the astute when they hear the teachings.

Dhp 83

True persons give up everything, they don’t cajole for the things they desire. Though touched by sadness or happiness, the astute appear neither depressed nor elated.

Dhp 84

Never wish for success by unjust means, for your own sake or that of another, desiring children, wealth, or nation; rather, be virtuous, wise, and just.

Dhp 85

Few are those among humans who cross to the far shore. The rest just run around on the near shore.

Dhp 86

When the teaching is well explained, those who practice accordingly will cross over Death’s domain so hard to pass.

Dhp 87

Rid of dark qualities, an astute person should develop the bright. Leaving home behind for the seclusion so hard to enjoy, find delight there, having left behind sensual pleasures. With no possessions, an astute person would cleanse themselves of mental corruptions.

Dhp 88

Dhp 89

Those whose minds are rightly developed in the awakening factors; who, letting go of attachments, delight in not grasping: with defilements ended, brilliant, they in this world are quenched.

Dhp 90

At journey’s end, rid of sorrow; everywhere free, all ties given up, no fever is found in them.

Dhp 91

The mindful apply themselves; they delight in no abode. Like a swan gone from the marsh, they leave home after home behind.

Dhp 92

Those with nothing stored up, who have understood their food, whose domain is the liberation of the signless and the empty: their path is hard to trace, like birds in the sky.

Dhp 93

One whose defilements have ended; who’s not attached to food; whose domain is the liberation of the signless and the empty: their track is hard to trace, like birds in the sky.

Dhp 94

Whose faculties have become serene, like horses tamed by a charioteer, who has abandoned conceit and defilements; the poised one is envied by even the gods.

Dhp 95

Undisturbed like the earth, true to their vows, steady as a post, like a lake clear of mud; such a one does not transmigrate.

Dhp 96

Their mind is peaceful, peaceful are their speech and deeds. Such a one is at peace, rightly freed through enlightenment.

Dhp 97

Lacking faith, a house-breaker, one who acknowledges nothing, purged of hope, they’ve wasted their chance: that is indeed the supreme person!

Dhp 98

Whether in village or wilderness, in a valley or the uplands, wherever the perfected ones live is a delightful place.

Dhp 99

Delightful are the wildernesses where no people delight. Those free of greed will delight there, not those who seek sensual pleasures.

Dhp 100

Better than a thousand meaningless sayings is a single meaningful saying, hearing which brings you peace.

Dhp 101

Better than a thousand meaningless verses is a single meaningful verse, hearing which brings you peace.

Dhp 102

Better than reciting a hundred meaningless verses is a single saying of Dhamma, hearing which brings you peace.

Dhp 103

The supreme conqueror is not he who conquers a million men in battle, but he who conquers a single man: himself.

Dhp 104

It is surely better to conquer oneself than all those other folk. When a person has tamed themselves, always living restrained, no god nor centaur, nor Māra nor Brahmā, can undo the victory of such a one.

Dhp 105

Dhp 106

Rather than a thousand-fold sacrifice, every month for a hundred years, it’s better to honor for a single moment one who has developed themselves. That offering is better than the hundred year sacrifice.

Dhp 107

Rather than serve the sacred flame in the forest for a hundred years, it’s better to honor for a single moment one who has developed themselves. That offering is better than the hundred year sacrifice.

Dhp 108

Whatever sacrifice or offering in the world a seeker of merit may make for a year, none of it is worth a quarter of bowing to the upright.

Dhp 109

For one in the habit of bowing, always honoring the elders, four blessings grow: lifespan, beauty, happiness, and strength.

Dhp 110

Better to live a single day ethical and absorbed in meditation than to live a hundred years unethical and lacking immersion.

Dhp 111

Better to live a single day wise and absorbed in meditation than to live a hundred years witless and lacking immersion.

Dhp 112

Better to live a single day energetic and strong, than to live a hundred years lazy and lacking energy.

Dhp 113

Better to live a single day seeing rise and fall than to live a hundred years blind to rise and fall.

Dhp 114

Better to live a single day seeing the state free of death than to live a hundred years blind to the state free of death.

Dhp 115

Better to live a single day seeing the supreme teaching than to live a hundred years blind to the supreme teaching.

Dhp 116

Rush to do good, shield your mind from evil; for when you’re slow to do good, your thoughts delight in wickedness.

Dhp 117

If you do something bad, don’t do it again and again, don’t set your heart on it, for piling up evil is suffering.

Dhp 118

If you do something good, do it again and again, set your heart on it, for piling up goodness is joyful.

Dhp 119

Even the wicked see good things, so long as their wickedness has not ripened. But as soon as that wickedness ripens, then the wicked see wicked things.

Dhp 120

Even the good see wicked things, so long as their goodness has not ripened. But as soon as that goodness ripens, then the good see good things.

Dhp 121

Think not lightly of evil, that it won’t come back to you. The pot is filled with water falling drop by drop; the fool is filled with wickedness piled up bit by bit.

Dhp 122

Think not lightly of goodness, that it won’t come back to you. The pot is filled with water falling drop by drop; the sage is filled with goodness piled up bit by bit.

Dhp 123

Avoid wickedness, as a merchant with rich cargo and small escort would avoid a dangerous road, or one who loves life would avoid drinking poison.

Dhp 124

You can carry poison in your hand if it has no wound, for poison does not infect without a wound; nothing bad happens unless you do bad.

Dhp 125

Whoever wrongs a man who has done no wrong, a pure man who has not a blemish, the evil backfires on the fool, like fine dust thrown upwind.

Dhp 126

Some are born in a womb; evil-doers go to hell; the virtuous go to heaven; the undefiled become fully extinguished.

Dhp 127

Not in the sky, nor mid-ocean, nor hiding in a mountain cleft; you'll find no place in the world to escape your wicked deeds.

Dhp 128

Not in the sky, nor mid-ocean, nor hiding in a mountain cleft; you'll find no place in the world where you won't be vanquished by death.

Dhp 129

All tremble at the rod, all fear death. Treating others like oneself, neither kill nor incite to kill.

Dhp 130

All tremble at the rod, all love life. Treating others like oneself, neither kill nor incite to kill.

Dhp 131

Creatures love happiness, so if you harm them with a stick in search of your own happiness, after death you won’t find happiness.

Dhp 132

Creatures love happiness, so if you don’t hurt them with a stick in search of your own happiness, after death you will find happiness.

Dhp 133

Don’t speak harshly, they may speak harshly back. For aggressive speech is painful, and the rod may spring back on you.

Dhp 134

If you still yourself like a broken gong, you’re quenched and conflict-free.

Dhp 135

As a cowherd drives the cows to pasture with the rod, so too old age and death drive life from living beings.

Dhp 136

The fool does not understand the evil that they do. But because of those deeds, that dullard is tormented as if burnt by fire.

Dhp 137

One who violently attacks the peaceful and the innocent swiftly falls to one of ten bad states:

Dhp 138

harsh pain; loss; the breakup of the body; serious illness; mental distress;

Dhp 139

hazards from rulers; vicious slander; loss of kin; destruction of wealth; or else their home is consumed by fire. When their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.

Dhp 140

Dhp 141

Not nakedness, nor matted hair, nor mud, nor fasting, nor lying on bare ground, nor wearing dust and dirt, or squatting on the heels, will cleanse a mortal not free of doubt.

Dhp 142

Dressed-up they may be, but if they live well—peaceful, tamed, committed to the spiritual path, having laid aside violence towards all creatures—they are a brahmin, an ascetic, a mendicant.

Dhp 143

Can a person constrained by conscience be found in the world? Who shies away from blame, like a fine horse from the whip?

Dhp 144

Like a fine horse under the whip, be keen and full of urgency. With faith, ethics, and energy, immersion, and investigation of principles, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, mindful, give up this vast suffering.

Dhp 145

While irrigators guide water, fletchers shape arrows, and carpenters carve timber—those true to their vows tame themselves.

Dhp 146

What is joy, what is laughter, when the flames are ever burning? Shrouded by darkness, would you not seek a light?

Dhp 147

See this fancy puppet, a body built of sores, diseased, obsessed over, in which nothing lasts at all.

Dhp 148

This body is decrepit and frail, a nest of disease. This foul carcass falls apart, for life ends only in death.

Dhp 149

These dove-grey bones are tossed away like dried gourds in the autumn—what joy is there in such a sight?

Dhp 150

In this city built of bones, plastered with flesh and blood, old age and death are stashed away, along with conceit and contempt.

Dhp 151

Fancy chariots of kings wear out, and even this body gets old. But the teaching of the good never gets old; so the true and the good proclaim.

Dhp 152

A person of little learning ages like an ox—their flesh grows, but not their wisdom.

Dhp 153

Transmigrating through countless rebirths, I’ve journeyed without reward, searching for the house-builder; painful is birth again and again.

Dhp 154

I’ve seen you, house-builder! You won’t build a house again! Your rafters are all broken, your roof-peak is demolished. My mind, set on demolition, has reached the end of craving.

Dhp 155

When young they spurned the spiritual path and failed to earn any wealth. Now they languish like old cranes in a pond bereft of fish.

Dhp 156

When young they spurned the spiritual path and failed to earn any wealth. Now they lie like spent arrows, bemoaning over things past.

Dhp 157

If you’d only love yourself, you’d look after yourself right well. In one of the night’s three watches, an astute person would remain alert.

Dhp 158

The astute would avoid being corrupted by grounding themselves first of all in what is suitable, and only then instructing others.

Dhp 159

If one so acts as one instructs, the well-tamed would tame others, for the self is hard to tame, they say.

Dhp 160

Self is indeed the lord of self, for who else would be one’s lord? When one’s self is well-tamed, one gains a lord that’s rare indeed.

Dhp 161

For the evil that one does, born and produced in oneself, grinds down a fool, as diamond grinds a lesser gem.

Dhp 162

One choked by immorality, as a sal tree by a creeper, does to themselves what a foe only wishes.

Dhp 163

It’s easy to do bad things harmful to oneself, but good things that are helpful are the hardest things to do.

Dhp 164

On account of wicked views—scorning the guidance of the perfected ones, the noble ones living righteously—the idiot begets their own demise, like the bamboo bearing fruit.

Dhp 165

For it is by oneself that evil’s done, one is corrupted by oneself. It’s by oneself that evil’s not done, one is purified by oneself. Purity and impurity are personal matters, no one can purify another.

Dhp 166

Never neglect your own good for the sake of another, however great. Knowing well what's good for you, be intent upon your true goal.

Dhp 167

Don’t resort to lowly things, don’t abide in negligence, don’t resort to wrong views, don’t perpetuate the world.

Dhp 168

Get up, don’t be heedless, live by principle, with good conduct. For one of good conduct sleeps at ease, in this world and the next.

Dhp 169

Live by principle, with good conduct, don’t conduct yourself badly. For one of good conduct sleeps at ease, in this world and the next.

Dhp 170

Look upon the world as a bubble or a mirage, then the King of Death won’t see you.

Dhp 171

Come, see this world decked out like a fancy royal chariot. Here fools flounder, but the discerning are not chained.

Dhp 172

He who once was heedless, but turned to heedfulness, lights up the world like the moon freed from clouds.

Dhp 173

Someone whose bad deed is supplanted by the good, lights up the world, like the moon freed from clouds.

Dhp 174

Blind is the world, few are those who clearly see. Only a handful go to heaven, like a bird freed from a net.

Dhp 175

Swans fly by the sun’s path, psychic sages fly through space. The wise leave the world, having vanquished Māra and his mount.

Dhp 176

When a person, spurning the hereafter, transgresses in just one thing—lying—there is no evil they would not do.

Dhp 177

The miserly don’t ascend to heaven, it takes a fool to not praise giving. The wise celebrate giving, and so find happiness in the hereafter.

Dhp 178

The fruit of stream-entry is better than being the one king of the earth, than going to heaven, than lordship over all the world.

Dhp 179

He whose victory may not be undone, a victory unrivaled in all the world; by what track would you trace that Buddha, who leaves no track in his infinite range?

Dhp 180

Of craving, the weaver, the clinger, he has none: so where can he be traced? By what track would you trace that Buddha, who leaves no track in his infinite range?

Dhp 181

The wise intent on absorption, who love the peace of renunciation, the Buddhas, ever mindful, are envied by even the gods.

Dhp 182

It’s hard to gain a human birth; the life of mortals is hard; it’s hard to hear the true teaching; the arising of Buddhas is hard.

Dhp 183

Not to do any evil; to embrace the good; to purify one’s mind: this is the instruction of the Buddhas.

Dhp 184

Patient acceptance is the ultimate fervor. Extinguishment is the ultimate, say the Buddhas. No true renunciate injures another, nor does an ascetic hurt another.

Dhp 185

Not speaking ill nor doing harm; restraint in the monastic code; moderation in eating; staying in remote lodgings; commitment to the higher mind—this is the instruction of the Buddhas.

Dhp 186

Even if it were raining money, you’d not be sated in sensual pleasures. An astute person understands that sensual pleasures offer little gratification and much suffering.

Dhp 187

Thus they find no delight even in celestial pleasures. A disciple of the fully awakened Buddha delights in the ending of craving.

Dhp 188

So many go for refuge to mountains and forest groves, to tree-shrines in tended parks; those people are driven by fear.

Dhp 189

But such refuge is no sanctuary, it is no supreme refuge. By going to that refuge, you’re not released from suffering.

Dhp 190

One gone for refuge to the Buddha, to his teaching and to the Saṅgha, sees the four noble truths with right understanding:

Dhp 191

suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

Dhp 192

Such refuge is a sanctuary, it is the supreme refuge. By going to that refuge, you're released from all suffering.

Dhp 193

It’s hard to find a thoroughbred man they’re not born just anywhere. A family where that sage is born prospers in happiness.

Dhp 194

Happy, the arising of Buddhas! Happy, the teaching of Dhamma! Happy is the harmony of the Saṅgha, and the striving of the harmonious is happy.

Dhp 195

When a person venerates the worthy—the Buddha or his disciple, who have transcended proliferation, and have left behind grief and lamentation, quenched, fearing nothing from any quarter—the merit of one venerating such as these, cannot be calculated by anyone, saying it is just this much.

Dhp 196

Dhp 197

Let us live so very happily, loving among the hostile. Among hostile people, let us live with love.

Dhp 198

Let us live so very happily, healthy among the ailing. Among ailing people let us live healthily.

Dhp 199

Let us live so very happily, content among the greedy. Among greedy people, let us live content.

Dhp 200

Let us live so very happily, we who have nothing. We shall feed on rapture, like the gods of streaming radiance.

Dhp 201

Victory breeds enmity; the defeated sleep badly. The peaceful sleep at ease, having left victory and defeat behind.

Dhp 202

There is no fire like greed, no crime like hate, no suffering like the aggregates, no bliss beyond peace.

Dhp 203

Hunger is the worst illness, conditions are the worst suffering, For one who truly knows this, extinguishment is the ultimate happiness.

Dhp 204

Freedom from disease is the ultimate blessing; contentment, the ultimate wealth; trust is the ultimate family; extinguishment, the ultimate happiness.

Dhp 205

Having drunk the nectar of seclusion and the nectar of peace—free of stress, free of evil, drink the joyous nectar of truth.

Dhp 206

It’s good to see the noble ones, staying with them is always good. Were you not to see fools, you’d always be happy.

Dhp 207

For one who consorts with fools grieves long. Painful is dwelling with fools, like being stuck with your enemy. Happy is dwelling with a sage, like meeting with your kin.

Therefore: A sage, wise and learned, a mammoth of virtue, true to their vows, noble: follow a true and intelligent person such as this, as the moon tracks the path of the stars.

Dhp 209

Applying yourself where you ought not, neglecting what you should be doing, forgetting your goal, you cling to what you hold dear, jealous of those devoted to their own goal.

Dhp 210

Don’t ever get too close to those you like or dislike. For not seeing the liked is suffering, and so is seeing the disliked.

Dhp 211

Therefore don’t hold anything dear, for it’s bad to lose those you love. No ties are found in they who hold nothing loved or loathed.

Dhp 212

Sorrow springs from what we hold dear, fear springs from what we hold dear; one free from holding anything dear has no sorrow, let alone fear.

Dhp 213

Sorrow springs from attachment, fear springs from attachment; one free from attachment has no sorrow, let alone fear.

Dhp 214

Sorrow springs from relishing, fear springs from relishing; one free from relishing has no sorrow, let alone fear.

Dhp 215

Sorrow springs from desire, fear springs from desire; one free from desire has no sorrow, let alone fear.

Dhp 216

Sorrow springs from craving, fear springs from craving; one free from craving has no sorrow, let alone fear.

Dhp 217

One accomplished in virtue and vision, firm in principle, and truthful, doing oneself what ought be done: that’s who the people love.

Dhp 218

One eager to realize the ineffable would be filled with awareness. Their mind not bound to pleasures of sense, they’re said to be heading upstream.

Dhp 219

When a man returns safely after a long time spent abroad, family, friends, and loved ones celebrate his return.

Dhp 220

Just so, when one who has done good goes from this world to the next, their good deeds receive them there, as family welcomes home one they love.

Dhp 221

Give up anger, get rid of conceit, and escape every fetter. Sufferings don’t befall one who has nothing, not clinging to name and form.

Dhp 222

When anger surges like a lurching chariot, keep it in check. That’s what I call a charioteer; others just hold the reins.

Dhp 223

Defeat anger with kindness, villainy with virtue, stinginess with giving, and lies with truth.

Dhp 224

Speak the truth, do not be angry, and give when asked, if only a little. By these three means, you may enter the presence of the gods.

Dhp 225

Those harmless sages, always restrained in body, go to the imperishable state, where there is no sorrow.

Dhp 226

Always wakeful, practicing night and day, focused only on quenching, their defilements come to an end.

Dhp 227

It’s always been like this, it’s not just today. They blame you when you’re silent, they blame you when you speak a lot, and even when you speak just right: no-one in the world escapes blame.

Dhp 228

There never was, nor will be, nor is there today, someone who is wholly praised or wholly blamed.

Dhp 229

If, after watching them day in day out, discerning people praise that sage of impeccable conduct, endowed with ethics and wisdom;

Dhp 230

like a pendant of river gold, who is worthy to criticize them? Even the gods praise them, and by Brahmā, too, they’re praised.

Dhp 231

Guard against ill-tempered deeds, be restrained in body. Giving up bad bodily conduct, conduct yourself well in body.

Dhp 232

Guard against ill-tempered words, be restrained in speech. Giving up bad verbal conduct, conduct yourself well in speech.

Dhp 233

Guard against ill-tempered thoughts, be restrained in mind. Giving up bad mental conduct, conduct yourself well in mind.

Dhp 234

A sage is restrained in body restrained also in speech, in thought, too, they are restrained: they are restrained in every way.

Dhp 235

Today you’re like a withered leaf, Yama’s men await you. You stand at the departure gates, yet you have no supplies for the road.

Dhp 236

Make an island of yourself! Swiftly strive, learn to be wise! Purged of stains, flawless, you’ll go to the divine realm of the noble ones.

Dhp 237

You’ve journeyed the stages of life, and now you set out to meet Yama. Along the way there’s nowhere to stay, yet you have no supplies for the road.

Dhp 238

Make an island of yourself! Swiftly strive, learn to be wise! Purged of stains, flawless, you’ll not come again to rebirth and old age.

Dhp 239

A smart person would purge their own stains gradually, bit by bit, moment by moment, like a smith smelting silver.

Dhp 240

It is the rust born on the iron that eats away the place it arose. And so it is their own deeds that lead the overly-ascetic to a bad place.

Dhp 241

Not reciting is the stain of hymns. The stain of houses is neglect. Laziness is the stain of beauty. A guard’s stain is negligence.

Dhp 242

Misconduct is a woman’s stain. A giver’s stain is stinginess. Bad qualities are a stain in this world and the next.

Dhp 243

But a worse stain than these is ignorance, the worst stain of all. Having given up that stain, be without stains, mendicants!

Dhp 244

Life is easy for the shameless. With all the rude courage of a crow, they live pushy, rude, and corrupt.

Dhp 245

Life is hard for the conscientious, always seeking purity, neither clinging nor rude, pure of livelihood and discerning.

Dhp 246

Take anyone in this world who kills living creatures, speaks falsely, steals, commits adultery, and indulges in drinking alcohol and liquor. Right here they dig up the root of their own self.

Dhp 247

Dhp 248

Know this, good sir: they are unrestrained and wicked. Don’t let greed and hate subject you to pain for long.

Dhp 249

The people give according to their faith, according to their confidence. If you get upset over that, over other’s food and drink, you’ll not, by day or by night, become immersed in samādhi.

Dhp 250

Those who have cut that out, dug it up at the root, eradicated it, they will, by day or by night, become immersed in samādhi.

Dhp 251

There is no fire like greed, no crime like hate, no net like delusion, no river like craving.

Dhp 252

It’s easy to see the faults of others, hard to see one’s own. For the faults of others are tossed high like chaff, while one’s own are hidden, as a cheat hides a bad hand.

Dhp 253

When you look for the flaws of others, always finding fault, your defilements only grow, you’re far from ending defilements.

Dhp 254

In the sky there is no track, there’s no true ascetic outside here. People enjoy proliferation, the Realized Ones are free of proliferation.

Dhp 255

In the sky there is no track, there’s no true ascetic outside here. No conditions last forever, the Awakened Ones are not shaken.

Dhp 256

You don’t become just by passing hasty judgment. An astute person evaluates both what is pertinent and what is irrelevant.

Dhp 257

A wise one judges others without haste, justly and impartially; that guardian of the law is said to be just.

Dhp 258

You’re not an astute scholar just because you speak a lot. One who is secure, free of enmity and fear, is said to be astute.

Dhp 259

You’re not one who has memorized the teaching just because you recite a lot. Someone who directly sees the teaching after hearing only a little is truly one who has memorized the teaching, for they can never forget it.

Dhp 260

You don’t become a senior by getting some grey hairs; for one ripe only in age, is said to have aged in vain.

Dhp 261

One who has truth and principle, harmlessness, restraint, and self-control, that wise one, purged of stains, is said to be a senior.

Dhp 262

Not by mere eloquence, or a beautiful complexion does a person become holy, if they’re jealous, stingy, and devious.

Dhp 263

But if they’ve cut that out, dug it up at the root, eradicated it, that wise one, purged of vice, is said to be holy.

Dhp 264

A liar and breaker of vows is no ascetic just because they shave their head. How on earth can one be an ascetic who’s full of desire and greed?

Dhp 265

One who stops all wicked deeds, great and small, because of stopping wicked deeds is said to be an ascetic.

Dhp 266

You don’t become a mendicant just by begging from others. One who has undertaken domestic duties has not yet become a mendicant.

Dhp 267

But one living a spiritual life, who has banished both merit and evil, who wanders having appraised the world, is said to be a mendicant.

Dhp 268

You don’t become a sage by silence, while still confused and ignorant. The astute one holds up the scales, taking only the best, and rejecting the bad; a sage becomes a sage by measuring. One who measures good and bad in the world, is thereby said to be a sage.

Dhp 269

Dhp 270

You don’t become a noble one by harming living beings. One harmless towards all living beings is said to be a noble one.

Dhp 271

Not by precepts and observances, nor by much learning, nor by meditative immersion, nor by living in seclusion, do I experience the bliss of renunciation not frequented by ordinary people. A mendicant cannot rest confident without attaining the end of defilements.

Dhp 272

Dhp 273

Of paths, the eightfold is the best; of truths, the four statements; dispassion is the best of things, and the Clear-eyed One is the best of humans.

Dhp 274

This is the path, there is no other for the purification of vision. You all must practice this, it is the way to baffle Māra.

Dhp 275

When you all are practicing this, you will make an end of suffering. I have explained the path to you for extracting the thorn with wisdom.

Dhp 276

You yourselves must do the work, the Realized Ones just show the way. Meditators practicing absorption are released from Māra’s bonds.

Dhp 277

All conditions are impermanent—when this is seen with wisdom, one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.

Dhp 278

All conditions are suffering—when this is seen with wisdom, one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.

Dhp 279

All things are not-self—when this is seen with wisdom, one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.

Dhp 280

They don’t get going when it’s time to start; they’re young and strong, but given to sloth.
Their mind depressed in sunken thought, lazy and slothful, they can’t discern the path.

Dhp 281

Guarded in speech, restrained in mind, doing no unskillful bodily deed. Purify these three ways of performing deeds, and win the path known to seers.

Dhp 282

From meditation springs wisdom, without meditation, wisdom ends. Knowing these two paths—of progress and decline— you should conduct yourself so that wisdom grows.

Dhp 283

Cut down the jungle, not just a tree; from the jungle springs fear. Having cut down jungle and vine, be free of jungles, mendicants!

Dhp 284

So long as the vine, no matter how small, that ties a man to women is not cut, his mind remains trapped, like a calf suckling its mother.

Dhp 285

Cut out fondness for oneself, like plucking an autumn lotus. Foster only the path to peace, the quenching the Holy One taught.

Dhp 286

“Here I will stay for the rains; here for winter, here the summer”; thus the fool thinks, not realizing the danger.

Dhp 287

As a mighty flood sweeps away a sleeping village, death steals away a man who dotes on children and cattle, his mind caught up in them.

Dhp 288

Children provide you no shelter, nor does father, nor relatives. When you’re seized by the terminator, there’s no shelter in family.

Dhp 289

Knowing the reason for this, astute, and ethically restrained, one would quickly clear the path that leads to extinguishment.

Dhp 290

If by giving up material happiness one sees abundant happiness, a wise one would give up material happiness, seeing the abundant happiness.

Dhp 291

Some seek their own happiness by imposing suffering on others. Living intimate with enmity, they’re not freed from enmity.

Dhp 292

They disregard what should be done, and do what should not be done. For the insolent and the negligent, their defilements only grow.

Dhp 293

Those that have properly undertaken constant mindfulness of the body, don’t cultivate what should not be done, but always do what should be done. Mindful and aware, their defilements come to an end.

Dhp 294

Having slain mother and father, and two aristocratic kings, and having wiped out the kingdom with its tax collector, the brahmin walks on without worry.

Dhp 295

Having slain mother and father, and two prosperous kings, and a tiger as the fifth, the brahmin walks on without worry.

Dhp 296

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, who day and night constantly recollect the Buddha.

Dhp 297

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, who day and night constantly recollect the teaching.

Dhp 298

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, who day and night constantly recollect the Saṅgha.

Dhp 299

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, who day and night are constantly mindful of the body.

Dhp 300

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, whose minds day and night delight in harmlessness.

Dhp 301

The disciples of Gotama always wake up refreshed, whose minds day and night delight in meditation.

Dhp 302

Going forth is hard, it’s hard to be happy; life at home is hard too, and painful, it’s painful to stay when you’ve nothing in common. A traveler is a prey to pain, so don’t be a traveler, don’t be prey to pain.

Dhp 303

One who is faithful, accomplished in ethics, blessed with fame and wealth, is honored in whatever place they frequent.

Dhp 304

The good shine from afar, like the Himalayan peaks, but the wicked are not seen, like arrows scattered in the night.

Dhp 305

Sitting alone, sleeping alone, tirelessly wandering alone; one who tames themselves alone would delight within a forest.

Dhp 306

A liar goes to hell, as does one who denies what they did. Both are equal in the hereafter, those men of base deeds.

Dhp 307

Many who wrap their necks in ocher robes are unrestrained and wicked. Being wicked, they are reborn in hell due to their bad deeds.

Dhp 308

It’d be better for the immoral and unrestrained to eat an iron ball, scorching, like a burning flame, than to eat the nation’s alms.

Dhp 309

Four things befall a heedless man who sleeps with another’s wife: wickedness, poor sleep, ill-repute, and rebirth in hell.

Dhp 310

He accrues wickedness and is reborn in a bad place, all so a frightened couple may snatch a moment’s pleasure, for which rulers impose a heavy punishment. That’s why a man should not sleep with another’s wife.

Dhp 311

When kusa grass is wrongly grasped it only cuts the hand. So too, the ascetic life, when wrongly taken, drags you to hell.

Dhp 312

Any lax act, any corrupt observance, or suspicious spiritual life, is not very fruitful.

Dhp 313

If one is to do what should be done, one should staunchly strive. For the life gone forth when laxly led just stirs up dust all the more.

Dhp 314

A bad deed is better left undone, for it will plague you later on. A good deed is better done, one that does not plague you.

Dhp 315

As a frontier city is guarded inside and out, so you should ward yourselves—don’t let the moment pass you by. For if you miss your moment you’ll grieve when sent to hell.

Dhp 316

Unashamed of what is shameful, ashamed of what is not shameful; beings who uphold wrong view go to a bad place.

Dhp 317

Seeing danger where there is none, and blind to the actual danger, beings who uphold wrong view go to a bad place.

Dhp 318

Seeing fault where there is none, and blind to the actual fault, beings who uphold wrong view go to a bad place.

Dhp 319

Knowing a fault as a fault and the faultless as faultless, beings who uphold right view go to a good place.

Dhp 320

Like an elephant struck with arrows in battle, I shall put up with abuse, for so many folk are badly behaved.

Dhp 321

The well-tamed beast is the one led to the crowd; the tamed elephant’s the one the king mounts; the tamed person who endures abuse is the best of human beings.

Dhp 322

Those who have tamed themselves are better than fine tamed mules, thoroughbreds from Sindh, or giant tuskers.

Dhp 323

For not on those mounts would you go to the untrodden place, whereas, with the help of one whose self is well tamed, you go there, tamed by the tamed.

Dhp 324

The tusker named Dhanapāla is musky in rut, hard to control. Bound, he eats not a bite, for he misses the elephant forest.

Dhp 325

One who gets drowsy from overeating, fond of sleep, rolling round the bed like a great hog stuffed with grain: that idiot is reborn again and again.

Dhp 326

In the past my mind wandered how it wished, where it liked, as it pleased. Now I’ll carefully guide it, as a trainer with a hook guides a rutting elephant.

Dhp 327

Delight in diligence! Take good care of your mind! Pull yourself out of this pit, like an elephant sunk in a bog.

Dhp 328

If you find an alert companion, a wise and virtuous friend, then, overcoming all adversities, wander with them, joyful and mindful.

Dhp 329

If you find no alert companion, no wise and virtuous friend, then, like a king who flees his conquered realm, wander alone like a tusker in the wilds.

Dhp 330

It’s better to wander alone, there’s no fellowship with fools. Wander alone and do no wrong, at ease like a tusker in the wilds.

Dhp 331

A friend in need is a blessing; it’s a blessing to be content with whatever; good deeds are a blessing at the end of life, and giving up all suffering is a blessing.

Dhp 332

In this world it’s a blessing to serve one’s mother and one’s father. And it’s a blessing also to serve ascetics and brahmins.

Dhp 333

It’s a blessing to keep precepts until you grow old; a blessing to be grounded in faith; the getting of wisdom’s a blessing; and it’s a blessing to avoid doing wrong.

Dhp 334

When a person lives heedlessly, craving grows in them like a camel’s foot creeper. They jump from life to life, like a monkey greedy for fruit in a forest grove.

Dhp 335

Whoever is beaten by this wretched craving, this attachment to the world, their sorrow grows, like grass in the rain.

Dhp 336

But whoever prevails over this wretched craving, so hard to get over in the world, their sorrows fall from them, like a drop from a lotus-leaf.

Dhp 337

I say this to you, good people, all those who have gathered here: dig up the root of craving, as you'd dig up grass in search of roots. Don't let Māra break you again and again, like a stream breaking a reed.

Dhp 338

A tree grows back even when cut down, so long as its roots are healthy; suffering springs up again and again, so long as the tendency to craving is not pulled out.

Dhp 339

A person of low views in whom the thirty-six streams that flow to pleasure are mighty, is swept away by lustful thoughts.

Dhp 340

The streams flow everywhere; a weed springs up and remains. Seeing this weed that has been born, cut the root with wisdom.

Dhp 341

A persons’s joys flow from senses and cravings. Seekers of happiness, bent on pleasure, continue to be reborn and grow old.

Dhp 342

People governed by thirst, crawl about like a trapped rabbit. Bound and fettered, for a long time they return to pain time and again.

Dhp 343

People governed by thirst, crawl about like a trapped rabbit. That’s why one who longs for dispassion should dispel thirst.

Dhp 344

Rejecting the household jungle, they set out for the real jungle, then they run right back to the jungle they left behind. Just look at this person! Freed, they run to bondage.

Dhp 345

The wise say that shackle is not strong that’s made of iron, wood, or knots. But obsession with jeweled earrings, concern for your partners and children:

Dhp 346

this, say the wise, is a strong shackle dragging the indulgent down, hard to escape. Having cut this one too they go forth, unconcerned, having given up sensual pleasures.

Dhp 347

Besotted by lust they fall into the stream, like a spider caught in the web she wove. The wise proceed, having cut this one too, unconcerned, having given up all suffering.

Dhp 348

Let go of the past, let go of the future, let go of the present, having gone beyond rebirth.
With your heart freed in every respect, you'll not come again to rebirth and old age.

Dhp 349

For a person churned by thoughts, very lustful, focusing on beauty, their craving grows and grows, tying them with a stout bond.

Dhp 350

But one who loves to calm their thoughts, developing perception of ugliness, ever mindful, will surely eliminate that craving, cutting off the bonds of Māra.

Dhp 351

One who is confident, unafraid, rid of craving, free of blemish, having struck down the arrows flying to future lives, this bag of bones is their last.

Dhp 352

Rid of craving, free of grasping, expert in the interpretation of terms, knowing the correct structure and sequence of syllables, they are said to be one who bears their final body, one of great wisdom, a great person.

Dhp 353

I am the champion, the knower of all, unsullied in the midst of all things. I’ve given up all, freed in the ending of craving. Since I know for myself, whose follower should I be?

Dhp 354

The gift of the teaching surmounts all other gifts; the taste of the teaching surmounts all other tastes; the joy of the teaching surmounts all other joys; the ending of craving surmounts all suffering.

Dhp 355

Riches ruin an idiot, but not a seeker of the far shore. From craving for wealth, an idiot ruins themselves and others.

Dhp 356

Weeds are the bane of crops, but greed is these folk’s bane. That’s why a gift to one rid of greed is so very fruitful.

Dhp 357

Weeds are the bane of crops, but hate is these folk’s bane. That’s why a gift to one rid of hate is so very fruitful.

Dhp 358

Weeds are the bane of crops, but delusion is these folk’s bane. That’s why a gift to one rid of delusion is so very fruitful.

Dhp 359

Weeds are the bane of crops, but desire is these folk’s bane. That’s why a gift to one rid of desire is so very fruitful.

Dhp 360

Restraint of the eye is good; good is restraint of the ear; restraint of the nose is good; good is restraint of the tongue.

Dhp 361

Restraint of the body is good; good is restraint of speech; restraint of mind is good; everywhere, restraint is good. The mendicant restrained everywhere is released from suffering.

Dhp 362

One restrained in hand and foot, and in speech, the supreme restraint; happy inside, serene, solitary, content, I call a mendicant.

Dhp 363

When a mendicant of restrained mouth, thoughtful in counsel, not restless, explains the text and its meaning, their words are sweet.

Dhp 364

Delighting in the teaching, enjoying the teaching, contemplating the teaching, a mendicant who recollects the teaching doesn’t decline in the true teaching.

Dhp 365

A well-off mendicant ought not look down on others, nor should they be envious. A mendicant who envies others does not achieve immersion.

Dhp 366

If a mendicant is poor in offerings, the well-to-do ought not look down on them. For the gods indeed praise them, who are tireless and pure of livelihood.

Dhp 367

One who has no sense of ownership in the whole realm of name and form, who does not grieve for that which is not, is said to be a mendicant.

Dhp 368

A mendicant who meditates on love, devoted to the Buddha’s teaching, would realize the peaceful state, the blissful stilling of conditions.

Dhp 369

Bail out this boat, mendicant! When bailed out it will float lightly. Having cut off desire and hate, you shall reach quenching.

Dhp 370

Five to cut, five to drop, and five more to develop. When a mendicant slips five chains they’re said to have crossed the flood.

Dhp 371

Practice absorption, don’t be negligent! Don’t let the mind delight in the senses! Don’t heedlessly swallow a hot iron ball! And when it burns, don’t cry, “Oh, the pain!”

Dhp 372

No absorption for one without wisdom, no wisdom for one without absorption. But one with absorption and wisdom—they have truly drawn near to extinguishment.

Dhp 373

A mendicant who enters an empty hut with mind at peace finds a superhuman delight as they rightly discern the Dhamma.

Dhp 374

Whenever they are mindful of the rise and fall of the aggregates, they feel rapture and joy: that is freedom from death for one who knows.

Dhp 375

This is the very start of the path for a wise mendicant: guarding the senses, contentment, and restraint in the monastic code.

Dhp 376

Mix with spiritual friends, who are tireless and pure of livelihood. Share what you have with others, being skillful in your conduct. And when you’re full of joy, you’ll make an end to suffering.

Dhp 377

As a jasmine sheds its withered flowers, O mendicants, cast off greed and hate.

Dhp 378

Calm in body, calm in speech, peaceful and serene; a mendicant who’s spat out the world’s bait is said to be one at peace.

Dhp 379

Urge yourself on, reflect on yourself. A mendicant self-controlled and mindful will always dwell in happiness.

Dhp 380

Self is indeed the lord of self, for who else would be one’s lord? Self is indeed the home of self, so restrain yourself, as a merchant his thoroughbred steed.

Dhp 381

A monk full of joy trusting in the Buddha’s teaching, would realize the peaceful state, the blissful stilling of conditions.

Dhp 382

A young mendicant devoted to the Buddha’s teaching, lights up the world, like the moon freed from a cloud.

Dhp 383

Strive and cut the stream! Dispel sensual pleasures, brahmin. Knowing the ending of conditions, know the uncreated, brahmin.

Dhp 384

When a brahmin has gone beyond two things, then they consciously make an end of all fetters.

Dhp 385

One for whom there is no crossing over or crossing back, or crossing over and back; stress-free, detached, that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 386

Absorbed, rid of hopes, their task completed, without defilements, arrived at the highest goal: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 387

The sun blazes by day, the moon glows at night, the aristocrat shines in armor, and the brahmin shines in absorption. But all day and all night, the Buddha shines with glory.

Dhp 388

A brahmin’s so-called since they’ve banished evil, an ascetic’s so-called since they live a serene life. One who has renounced all stains is said to be a “renunciant”.

Dhp 389

One should never strike a brahmin, nor should a brahmin retaliate. Woe to the one who hurts a brahmin, and woe for the one who retaliates.

Dhp 390

Nothing is better for a brahmin than to hold their mind back from attachment. As cruelty in the mind gradually subsides, suffering also subsides.

Dhp 391

Who does nothing wrong by body, speech or mind, restrained in these three respects, that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 392

You should graciously honor the one from whom you learn the Dhamma taught by the awakened Buddha, as a brahmin honors the sacred flame.

Dhp 393

Not by matted hair or family, or birth is one a brahmin. Those who have truth and principle: they are pure, they are brahmins.

Dhp 394

Why the matted hair, you fool, and why the skin of deer? The tangle is inside you, yet you polish up your outsides.

Dhp 395

A person who wears robes of rags, lean, their limbs showing veins, meditating alone in the forest, that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 396

I don’t call someone a brahmin after the mother’s womb they’re born from. If they still have attachments, they’re just someone who says “mister”. Having nothing, taking nothing: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 397

Having cut off all fetters they have no anxiety. They’ve slipped their chains and are detached: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 398

They’ve cut the strap and harness, the reins and bridle too, with cross-bar lifted, they’re awakened: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 399

Abuse, killing, caging: they endure these without anger. Patience is their powerful army: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 400

Not irritable or stuck up, dutiful in precepts and observances, tamed, bearing their final body: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 401

Like water from a lotus leaf, like a mustard seed off a pin-point, sensual pleasures slip off them: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 402

They understand for themselves the end of suffering in this life; with burden put down, detached: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 403

Deep in wisdom, intelligent, expert in what is the path and what is not the path; arrived at the highest goal: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 404

mixing with neither householders nor the homeless. A migrant with no shelter, few in wishes: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 405

They’ve laid aside violence against creatures firm and frail; not killing or making others kill: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 406

Not fighting among those who fight, extinguished among those who are armed, not taking among those who take: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 407

They’ve discarded greed and hate, along with conceit and contempt, like a mustard seed off the point of a pin: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 408

The words they utter are sweet, informative, and true, and don’t offend anyone: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 409

They don’t steal anything in the world, long or short, fine or coarse, beautiful or ugly: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 410

They have no hope in this world or the next. with no need for hope, detached: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 411

They have no clinging, knowledge has freed them of indecision, they’ve plunged into freedom from death: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 412

They’ve escaped clinging to both good and bad deeds; sorrowless, stainless, pure: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 413

Pure as the spotless moon, clear and undisturbed, they’ve ended delight and future lives: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 414

They’ve got past this grueling swamp of delusion, transmigration. Meditating in stillness, free of indecision, they have crossed over to the far shore. They’re extinguished by not grasping: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 415

They’ve given up sensual stimulations, and have gone forth from lay life; they’ve ended rebirth in the sensual realm: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 416

They’ve given up craving, and have gone forth from lay life; they’ve ended craving to be reborn: that’s who I call a brahmin.

They’ve given up craving, and have gone forth from lay life; they’ve ended craving to be reborn: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 417

They’ve thrown off the human yoke, and slipped out of the heavenly yoke; unyoked from all yokes: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 418

Giving up discontent and desire, they’re cooled and free of attachments; a hero, master of the whole world: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 419

They know the passing away and rebirth of all beings; unattached, holy, awakened: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 420

Gods, centaurs, and humans don’t know their destiny; the perfected ones with defilements ended: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 421

They have nothing before or after, or even in between. Having nothing, taking nothing: that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 422

Leader of the herd, excellent hero, great seer and victor; unstirred, washed, awakened:
that’s who I call a brahmin.

Dhp 423

They know their past lives, seeing heaven and places of loss, and have attained the end of rebirth; that sage who has perfect insight, at the summit of spiritual perfection: that’s who I call a brahmin.

The Sayings of the Dhamma are completed.

Ud - Udāna

Ud 1.1

Ud 1.1
Upon Awakening (1st)
Paṭhamabodhisutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the root of the tree of awakening on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom. When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion. In the first part of the night, he carefully applied the mind to dependent origination in forward order:

“When this exists, that is; due to the arising of this, that arises. That is: Ignorance is a condition for choices. Choices are a condition for consciousness. Consciousness is a condition for name and form. Name and form are conditions for the six sense fields. The six sense fields are conditions for contact. Contact is a condition for feeling. Feeling is a condition for craving. Craving is a condition for grasping. Grasping is a condition for continued existence. Continued existence is a condition for rebirth. Rebirth is a condition for old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress to come to be. That is how this entire mass of suffering originates.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“When things become clear to the keen, meditating brahmin, his doubts are dispelled, since he understands each thing and its cause.”

Ud 1.2

Ud 1.2
Upon Awakening (2nd)
Dutiyabodhisutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the root of the tree of awakening on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom. When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion. In the second part of the night, he carefully applied the mind to dependent origination in reverse order:

“When this doesn’t exist, that is not; due to the cessation of this, that ceases. That is: When ignorance ceases, choices cease. When choices cease, consciousness ceases. When consciousness ceases, name and form cease. When name and form cease, the six sense fields cease. When the six sense fields cease, contact ceases. When contact ceases, feeling ceases. When feeling ceases, craving ceases. When craving ceases, grasping ceases. When grasping ceases, continued existence ceases. When continued existence ceases, rebirth ceases. When rebirth ceases, old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress cease. That is how this entire mass of suffering ceases.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“When things become clear to the keen, meditating brahmin, his doubts are dispelled, since he’s known the end of conditions.”

Ud 1.3

Ud 1.3
Upon Awakening (3rd)
Tatiyabodhisutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the root of the tree of awakening on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom. When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion. In the last part of the night, he carefully applied the mind to dependent origination in forward and reverse order:

“When this exists, that is; due to the arising of this, that arises. When this doesn’t exist, that is not; due to the cessation of this, that ceases. That is: Ignorance is a condition for choices. Choices are a condition for consciousness. Consciousness is a condition for name and form. Name and form are conditions for the six sense fields. The six sense fields are conditions for contact. Contact is a condition for feeling. Feeling is a condition for craving. Craving is a condition for grasping. Grasping is a condition for continued existence. Continued existence is a condition for rebirth. Rebirth is a condition for old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress to come to be. That is how this entire mass of suffering originates.

When ignorance fades away and ceases with nothing left over, choices cease. When choices cease, consciousness ceases. When consciousness ceases, name and form cease. When name and form cease, the six sense fields cease. When the six sense fields cease, contact ceases. When contact ceases, feeling ceases. When feeling ceases, craving ceases. When craving ceases, grasping ceases. When grasping ceases, continued existence ceases. When continued existence ceases, rebirth ceases. When rebirth ceases, old age and death, sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress cease. That is how this entire mass of suffering ceases.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“When things become clear to the keen, meditating brahmin, he remains, scattering Māra’s army, as the sun lights up the sky.”

Ud 1.4

Ud 1.4
Whiny
Huṁhuṅkasutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the goatherd's banyan tree on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom. When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion.

Then a certain brahmin of the whiny sort went up to the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he stood to one side, and said, "Mister Gotama, how do you define a brahmin? And what are the things that make one a brahmin?"

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"A brahmin who has banished bad qualities—not whiny, not stained, but self-controlled, a complete knowledge master who has completed the spiritual journey—may rightly proclaim the brahmin doctrine, not proud of anything in the world."

Ud 1.5

Ud 1.5
The Brahmin
Brāhmaṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a number of senior monks approached the Buddha—Venerables Sāriputta, Mahāmoggallāna, Mahākassapa, Mahākaccāna, Mahākoṭṭhita, Mahākappina, Mahācunda, Anuruddha, Revata, and Nanda.

The Buddha saw them coming off in the distance, and addressed the mendicants: "These, mendicants, are brahmins coming! These are brahmins coming!" When he said this, a certain mendicant who was brahmin by birth asked the Buddha, "Sir, how do you define a brahmin? And what are the things that make one a brahmin?"

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Having banished bad qualities, those who live always mindful, with fetters ended, awakened, they are the world's true brahmins."

Ud 1.6

Ud 1.6
With Mahākassapa
Mahākassapasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time Venerable Mahākassapa was staying in the Pipphali cave, and he was sick, suffering, gravely ill. Then after some time he recovered from that illness. It occurred to him, "Why not enter Rājagaha for almsfood?"

Now at that time five hundred deities were ready and eager for the chance to offer alms to Mahākassapa. But Mahākasspa refused those deities. In the morning, he robed up, took his bowl and robe, and entered Rājagaha for alms. He went to the streets of the poor, the destitute, and the weavers. The Buddha saw him wandering for alms in the streets of the poor, the destitute, and the weavers.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The stranger, providing for no other, tamed, consolidated in the core, with defilements ended and flaws purged: that's who I call a brahmin."

Ud 1.7

Ud 1.7
At Ajakalāpaka
Ajakalāpakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in Pāvā at the Ajakalāpaka Tree-shrine, the haunt of the native spirit Ajakalāpaka. Now at that time the Buddha was meditating in the open during the dark of night, while a gentle rain drizzled down. Then Ajakalāpaka, wanting to make the Buddha feel fear, terror, and goosebumps, approached him, and while not far away yelled three times, “Grr! Arrgh!” Then he added, “Now that’s a goblin for you, ascetic!”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“When a brahmin gets over their own issues, they transcend this goblin and his grunts.”

Ud 1.8

Ud 1.8
With Saṅgāmaji
Saṅgāmajisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time around Venerable Saṅgāmaji had arrived at Sāvatthī to see the Buddha. His former wife heard that he had arrived, and went to the Jetavana, taking their boy.

Now at that time Venerable Saṅgāmaji was sitting at the root of a tree for the day's meditation. Then his former wife went up to him and said, "Ascetic, please raise this little boy." When she said this, Saṅgāmaji kept silent.

For a second time she said, "Ascetic, please raise this little boy." For a second time, Saṅgāmaji kept silent.

For a third time she said, "Ascetic, please raise this little boy." For a third time, Saṅgāmaji kept silent.

Then she put down the boy in front of Saṅgāmaji, saying, "This is your child, ascetic. Please raise him."

But Saṅgāmaji neither looked at the boy nor spoke to him. Then his former wife went a little distance away. Looking back, she saw Saṅgāmaji ignoring the boy, and thought, "This ascetic doesn't even want his child." She returned to pick up the boy, then left. With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Buddha saw how Saṅgāmaji's former wife went back for the child.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"When she came he was not glad, when she left he did not grieve. Victorious in battle, freed from chains, that's who I call a brahmin."

Ud 1.9

Ud 1.9
Dreadlocked Ascetics
Jaṭilasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Gayā on Gayā Head. Now at that time—during the cold spell when the snow falls in the January winter—many dreadlocked ascetics plunged in and out of the Gayā river. Plunging and showering, they served the sacred flame, thinking: “Through this there is purity.”

The Buddha saw them plunging in and out.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Purity doesn’t come from water, no matter how many people bathe there. One who has truth and principle, they are pure, they are brahmins.”

Ud 1.10

Ud 1.10
With Bāhiya
Bāhiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Bāhiya of the Bark Cloth was residing by Suppāraka on the ocean shore, where he was honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And he received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Then as he was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "I am one of those in the world who are perfected or on the path to perfection."

Then a deity who was a former relative of Bāhiya, having compassion and wanting what's best for him, approached him and said: "Bāhiya, you're not a perfected one, nor on the path to perfection. You don't have the practice by which you might become a perfected one or one on the path to perfection."

"Then who exactly are those in the world who are perfected or on the path to perfection?" "In the northern lands there is a city called Sāvatthī. There that Blessed One is now staying, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. He is a perfected one and teaches the Dhamma for the sake of perfection."

Impelled by that deity, Bāhiya left Suppāraka right away. Sojourning no more than a single night in any place, he made his way to Anāthapiṇḍika's Monastery in the Jeta Grove at Sāvatthī. At that time several mendicants were walking mindfully in the open air. Bāhiya approached them and said, "Sirs, where is the Blessed One at present, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha? For I want to see him." "He has entered an inhabited area for almsfood, Bāhiya."

Then Bāhiya rushed out of the Jeta Grove and entered Sāvatthī, where he saw the Buddha walking for alms. He was impressive and inspiring, with peaceful faculties and mind, attained to the highest self-control and serenity, like an elephant with tamed, guarded, and controlled faculties. Bāhiya went up to the Buddha, bowed down with his head at the Buddha's feet, and said, "Sir, let the Blessed One teach me the Dhamma! Let the Holy One teach me the Dhamma! That would be for my lasting welfare and happiness." The Buddha said this: "It's not the time, Bāhiya, so long as I have entered an inhabited area for almsfood."

For a second time, Bāhiya said, "But you never know, sir, when life is at risk, either the Buddha's or my own. Let the Blessed One teach me the Dhamma! Let the Holy One teach me the Dhamma! That would be for my lasting welfare and happiness." For a second time, the Buddha said, "It's not the time, Bāhiya, so long as I have entered an inhabited area for almsfood."

For a third time, Bāhiya said, “But you never know, sir, when life is at risk, either the Buddha’s or my own. Let the Blessed One teach me the Dhamma! Let the Holy One teach me the Dhamma! That would be for my lasting welfare and happiness.”

“In that case, Bāhiya, you should train like this: ‘In the seen will be merely the seen; in the heard will be merely the heard; in the thought will be merely the thought; in the known will be merely the known.’ That’s how you should train. When you have trained in this way, you won’t be ‘by that’. When you’re not ‘by that’, you won’t be ‘in that’. When you’re not ‘in that’, you won’t be in this world or the world beyond or between the two. Just this is the end of suffering.”

Then, due to this brief Dhamma teaching of the Buddha, Bāhiya’s mind was right away freed from defilements by not grasping.

And when the Buddha had given Bāhiya this brief advice he left. But soon after the Buddha had left, a cow with a baby calf charged at Bāhiya and took his life.

Then the Buddha wandered for alms in Sāvatthī. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he departed the city together with several mendicants and saw that Bāhiya had passed away. He said to the monks, “Mendicants, pick up Bāhiya’s corpse. Having lifted it onto a cot and carried it, cremate it and build a monument. Mendicants, one of your spiritual companions has passed away.”

“Yes, sir,” replied those mendicants. They did as the Buddha asked, then returned to the Buddha and said, “Sir, Bāhiya’s corpse has been cremated and a monument built for him. Where has he been reborn in his next life?” “Mendicants, Bāhiya was astute. He practiced in line with the teachings, and did not trouble me about the teachings. Bāhiya of the Bark Cloth has become fully extinguished.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Where water and earth, fire and air find no footing: there no star does shine, nor does the sun shed its light; there the moon glows not, yet no darkness is found.

And when a sage, a brahmin, finds understanding through their own sagacity, then from forms and formless, from pleasure and pain they are released.”

This too is a heartfelt saying that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Ud 2.1

Ud 2.1
With Mucalinda
Mucalindasutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the root of the Mucalinda tree on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom.

Just then a great storm blew up out of season, bringing seven days of rain, cold winds, and clouds. Mucalinda, the dragon king, came out from his abode, encircled the Buddha's body with seven coils and spread his large hood over his head, thinking, "May the Buddha not be hot or cold, nor be bothered by flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, or reptiles."

When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion. When he knew the sky was clear, Mucalinda unwrapped his coils from the Buddha's body. Hiding his own form, he manifested in the form of a brahmin youth. He stood in front of the Buddha, venerating him with joined palms.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Seclusion is happiness for the contented who see the teaching they have learned.
Kindness for the world is happiness for one who'd not harm a living creature.

Dispassion for the world is happiness for one who has gone beyond sensual pleasures. But dispelling the conceit 'I am' is truly the ultimate happiness."

Ud 2.2

Ud 2.2
Kings
Rājasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the assembly hall and this discussion came up among them: "Which of these two kings has greater wealth, riches, treasury, dominion, vehicles, forces, might, and power: King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha or King Pasenadi of Kosala?" At that point the conversation among those mendicants was left unfinished.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat, went to the assembly hall, sat down on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?"

So the mendicants told him what they had been talking about when the Buddha arrived. The Buddha said,

"Mendicants, it is not appropriate for you gentlemen who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness to talk about such things. When you're sitting together you should do one of two things: discuss the teachings or keep noble silence."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Neither the pleasures of the senses, nor even divine happiness, is worth even a sixteenth part of the happiness of craving's end."

Ud 2.3

Ud 2.3
A Stick
Daṇḍasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, between Sāvatthī and the Jeta Grove, several boys were hitting a snake with a stick. Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. He saw the boys hitting the snake.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Creatures love happiness, so if you harm them with a stick in search of your own happiness, after death you'll find no happiness.

Creatures love happiness, so if you don't harm them with a stick in search of your own happiness, after death you will find happiness."

Ud 2.4

Ud 2.4
Esteem
Sakkārasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And he received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And the mendicant Saṅgha was also honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But the wanderers who followed other religions were not honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they didn't receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Then those wanderers who followed other religions, unable to bear the esteem of the mendicant Sangha, abused, attacked, harassed, and troubled the mendicants in the village and the wilderness.

Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"When struck by pleasure and pain in the village or wilderness, regard it not as self or other. Contacts strike because of attachment; how would contacts strike one free of attachment?"

Ud 2.5

Ud 2.5
A Lay Follower
Upāsakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain lay follower from Icchānaṅgalaka arrived at Sāvatthī on some business. Having concluded his business in Sāvatthī he went to see the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said this to him: "It's been a long time, lay follower, since you took the opportunity to come here."

"For a long time I've wanted to come and see the Buddha, but I wasn't able, being prevented by my many duties and responsibilities."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"One who has nothing is happy indeed, a learned person who has appraised the teaching.
See how troubled are those with attachments, a person bound tight to people."

Ud 2.6

Ud 2.6
The Pregnant Woman
Gabbhinīsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain wanderer had a young brahmin wife who was pregnant and about to give birth. She said to him, "Go, brahmin, bring oil for my delivery."

The wanderer said, "But where, my dear, can I get oil?" For a second time, she said, "Go, brahmin, bring oil for my delivery." For a second time, the wanderer said, "But where, my dear, can I get oil?" For a third time, she said, "Go, brahmin, bring oil for my delivery."

Now at that time ghee and oil were being given away to any ascetic or brahmin at the storehouse of King Pasenadi of Kosala. But it was only to drink there, not to take away.

Knowing this, the wanderer thought, "Why don't I go to the king's storehouse, drink as much oil as I can, then come home and throw it up so it can be used for the delivery?"

Then he did just that. But when he got home he was unable to either bring it up or pass it out. He rolled to and fro, suffering painful, sharp, severe, acute feelings.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. He saw the wanderer in agony.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Oh! How happy are those with nothing! Hence knowledge masters are people with nothing. See how troubled are those with attachments, a person bound tight to people."

Ud 2.7

Ud 2.7
An Only Son
Ekaputtakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain lay follower's dear and beloved only child passed away.

Then in the middle of the day several lay followers with wet clothes and hair went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to them: "Why, lay followers, have you come here in the middle of the day with wet clothes and hair?"

The lay follower replied, "Sir, my dear and beloved only child has passed away. That's why we came here in the middle of the day with wet clothes and hair."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Hosts of gods and most human beings are bound to what seems dear and pleasant. Miserable and exhausted, they fall under the sway of the King of Death.

The diligent, who day and night leave behind what seems pleasant, dig out the root of misery—Death's bait so hard to escape."

Ud 2.8

Ud 2.8
Suppavāsā
Suppavāsāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kuṇḍiyā in the Kuṇḍadhāna Grove. Now at that time Suppavāsā the Koliyan had been pregnant for seven years, and in obstructed labor for seven days. While suffering painful, sharp, severe, acute feelings, three thoughts helped her endure: “Oh! The Blessed One is indeed a fully awakened Buddha, who teaches the Dhamma for giving up suffering such as this. Oh! The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is indeed practicing well, who practice for giving up suffering such as this. Oh! Extinguishment is so very blissful, where such suffering as this is not found.”

Then Suppavāsā addressed her husband, “Please, master, go to the Buddha, and in my name bow with your head to his feet. Ask him if he is healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably. And then say: ‘Suppavāsā the Koliyan has been pregnant for seven years, and in difficult labor for seven days. While suffering painful, sharp, severe, acute feelings, three thoughts help her endure: “Oh! The Blessed One is indeed a fully awakened Buddha, who teaches the Dhamma for giving up suffering such as this. Oh! The Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples is indeed practicing well, who practice for giving up suffering such as this. Oh! Extinguishment is so very blissful, where such suffering as this is not found.”””

“Excellent idea,” he replied. He went to the Buddha and told him of his wife’s struggles. The Buddha said:

“May Suppavāsā the Koliyan be happy and healthy! May she give birth to a healthy child!” As soon as he spoke, Suppavāsā, happy and healthy, gave birth to a healthy child.

Saying “Yes, sir,” the Koliyan gentleman approved and agreed with what the Buddha said. He got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right. Then he returned to his own house. He saw that his wife, happy and healthy, had given birth to a healthy child, and thought, “Oh, how incredible, how amazing! The Realized One has such psychic power and might! For as soon as he spoke, Suppavāsā, happy and healthy, gave birth to a healthy child.” He became uplifted and overjoyed, full of rapture and happiness.

Then Suppavāsā addressed her husband, “Please, master, go to the Buddha, and in my name bow with your head to his feet. And then say, ‘Suppavāsā the Koliyan, who was pregnant for seven years, and in difficult labor for seven days, is now happy and healthy and has given birth to a healthy child. She invites the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha to a meal for seven days. Sir, might the Buddha please accept seven meals from Suppavāsā.’”

“Excellent idea,” he replied. He went to the Buddha, told him the good news, and conveyed his wife’s invitation.

Now at that time a certain lay follower had already invited the Sangha of monks headed by the Buddha for the meal on the following day. That lay follower was Venerable Mahāmoggallāna’s supporter. Then the Buddha addressed Venerable Mahāmoggallāna, “Please, Moggallāna, go to the that lay follower and say to him, ‘Suppavāsā the Koliyan, who was pregnant for seven years, and in difficult labor for seven days, is now happy and healthy and has given birth to a healthy child. She invites the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha to a meal for seven days. Let Suppavāsā make seven meals, afterwards you can make yours.’ He is your supporter.”

“Yes, sir,” replied Mahāmoggallāna. He went to that lay follower and conveyed the Buddha’s request.

“If, sir, Venerable Mahāmoggallāna can guarantee me three things—wealth, life, and faith—then let Suppavāsā make seven meals, afterwards I shall make mine.” “I can guarantee you two things—wealth and life. But as for faith, you alone are the guarantor.”

“If, sir Venerable Mahāmoggallāna can guarantee me two things—wealth and life—then let Suppavāsā make seven meals, afterwards I shall make mine.”

Having persuaded that lay follower, Mahāmoggallāna went to the Buddha and said, “I’ve persuaded the lay follower. Let Suppavāsā make seven meals, afterwards he shall make his.”

For seven days Suppavāsā served and satisfied the Buddha with her own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods. And she made her little boy bow to the Buddha and the mendicant Sangha.

Then Sāriputta said to the boy, “I hope you’re keeping well, little boy; I hope you’re getting by. I hope that you are not in pain.” “How could I be keeping well? How could I be getting by? For seven years I lived in a pot of blood.”

Then Suppavāsā, thinking, “My child is conversing with the General of the Dhamma!” was uplifted and overjoyed, full of rapture and happiness. Knowing this, the Buddha said to her, “Would you like to have another child like this?” “Sir, I would like to have seven more children like this!”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Pain in the guise of pleasure, the disliked in the guise of the liked, suffering in the guise of happiness, overpower the negligent.”

Ud 2.9

Ud 2.9
With Visākhā
Visākhāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Now at that time Visākhā was caught up in some business with King Pasenadi. But the king's settlement did not meet her expectations.

Then, in the middle of the day, she went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down. The Buddha said to her: "So, Visākhā, where are you coming from in the middle of the day?" "Sir, I am caught up in some business with King Pasenadi. But the king's settlement did not meet my expectations."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"All under another's control is suffering, all under one's own authority is pleasing; what's shared is stressful for both parties, for yokes are hard to escape."

Ud 2.10

Ud 2.10
With Bhaddiya
Bhaddiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Anupiya in a mango grove. Now at that time, Venerable Bhaddiya son of Kāḷīgodhā, even in the wilderness, at the foot of a tree, or in an empty dwelling, frequently expressed this heartfelt sentiment: “Oh, what bliss! Oh, what bliss!”

Several mendicants heard him and thought, “Without a doubt, Venerable Bhaddiya leads the spiritual life dissatisfied. It’s when recalling the pleasures of royalty he formerly enjoyed as a lay person that, even in the wilderness, at the foot of a tree, or in an empty dwelling, he frequently expresses this heartfelt sentiment: ‘Oh, what bliss! Oh, what bliss!’”

Then those mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

So the Buddha addressed one of the monks, “Please, monk, in my name tell the mendicant Bhaddiya that the teacher summons him.”

“Yes, sir,” that monk replied. He went to Bhaddiya and said to him, “Reverend Bhaddiya, the teacher summons you.” “Yes, reverend,” Bhaddiya replied. He went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

“Is it really true, Bhaddiya, that even in the wilderness, at the foot of a tree, or in an empty dwelling, you frequently express this heartfelt sentiment: ‘Oh, what bliss! Oh, what bliss!’?” “Yes, sir.”

“But why do you say this?” “Formerly, as a lay person ruling the land, my guard was well organized within and without the royal compound, within and without the city, and within and without the country. But although I was guarded and defended in this way, I remained fearful, scared, suspicious, and nervous. But these days, even when alone in the wilderness, at the foot of a tree, or in an empty dwelling, I’m not fearful, scared, suspicious, or nervous. I live relaxed, unruffled, surviving on charity, my heart free as a wild deer. It is for this reason that, even in the wilderness, at the foot of a tree, or in an empty dwelling, I frequently expressed this heartfelt sentiment: ‘Oh, what bliss! Oh, what bliss!’”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“They who hide no anger within, gone beyond any kind of existence; happy, free from fear and sorrow—even the gods can’t see them.”

Ud 3.1

Ud 3.1
Born of the Fruits of deeds
Kammavipākajasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now, at that time a certain mendicant was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight. As a result of past deeds, he suffered painful, sharp, severe, and acute feelings, which he endured unbothered, with mindfulness and awareness.

The Buddha saw him meditating and enduring that pain.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"A mendicant who has left all deeds behind, shaking off the dust of past deeds, unselfish, steady, poised, has no need to complain."

Ud 3.2

Ud 3.2
With Nanda
Nandasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Nanda, the Buddha's brother and maternal cousin, informed several mendicants: "I lead the spiritual life dissatisfied. I am unable to keep up the spiritual life. I shall resign the training and return to a lesser life."

Then a mendicant went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

So the Buddha addressed one of the monks, "Please, monk, in my name tell the mendicant Nanda that the teacher summons him." "Yes, sir," that monk replied. He went to Nanda and said to him, "Reverend Nanda, the teacher summons you."

"Yes, reverend," Nanda replied. He went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him:

"Is it really true, Nanda, that you informed several mendicants that you are unable to keep up the spiritual life; that you shall resign the training and return to a lesser life?" "Yes, sir," he replied.

"But why are you so dissatisfied with the spiritual life?" "As I left my house, sir, the finest lady of the Sakyan land, her hair half-combed, glanced at me and said, 'Hurry back, master.' Recalling that, I am dissatisfied and shall resign the training."

Then the Buddha took Nanda by the arm and, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from Jeta's Grove and reappeared among the gods of the Thirty-Three.

Now at that time five hundred dove-footed nymphs had come to attend to Sakka, the lord of gods. Then the Buddha said to Nanda, "Nanda, do you see these five hundred dove-footed nymphs?" "Yes, sir," he replied.

"What do you think, Nanda? Who is more attractive, good-looking, and lovely—the finest lady of the Sakyan land, or these five hundred dove-footed nymphs?" "Compared to these five hundred dove-footed nymphs, the finest lady of the Sakyan land is like a deformed monkey with its ears and nose cut off. She doesn't count, there's no comparison, she's not worth a fraction. These five hundred dove-footed nymphs are far more attractive, good-looking, and lovely."

"Rejoice, Nanda, rejoice! I guarantee you five hundred dove-footed nymphs." "If, sir, you guarantee me five hundred dove-footed nymphs, I shall happily lead the spiritual life under the Buddha.”

Then the Buddha took Nanda by the arm and, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, vanished from the gods of the Thirty-Three and reappeared at Jeta’s Grove.

The mendicants heard, “It seems Venerable Nanda—who is both the Buddha’s half-brother and maternal cousin—leads the spiritual life for the sake of nymphs. And it seems that the Buddha guaranteed him five hundred dove-footed nymphs.”

Monks who were his friends accused him of being a hireling and a lackey, “It seems Nanda is a hireling, it seems he is a lackey: he leads the spiritual life for the sake of nymphs. And it seems that the Buddha guaranteed him five hundred dove-footed nymphs.”

Then Nanda—embarrassed, ashamed, and disgusted at being called a hireling and a lackey—living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme end of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness. He understood: “Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence.” Venerable Nanda became one of the perfected.

Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta’s Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him: “Sir, Venerable Nanda—who is both the Buddha’s half-brother and maternal cousin—has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. He lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements.” And the knowledge also came to the Buddha: “Nanda has realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. He lives having realized it with his own insight due to the ending of defilements.”

Then, when the night had passed, Nanda went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, you guaranteed me five hundred dove-footed nymphs. I release you from that promise.” “Nanda, I comprehended your mind and knew that you had realized the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom. And deities also told me about this. As soon as your mind was freed from defilements by not grasping, I was released from that promise.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“The mendicant who has crossed over the bog, who has crushed the thorn of sensuality, who has reached the end of delusion, trembles not at pleasure and pain.”

Ud 3.3

Ud 3.3
With Yasoja
Yasojasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time five hundred mendicants headed by Yasoja arrived at Sāvatthī to see the Buddha. At that, those visiting mendicants, while exchanging pleasantries with the resident mendicants, preparing their lodgings, and putting away their bowls and robes, made a dreadful racket.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, "Ānanda, who's making that dreadful racket? You'd think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!" "Sir, those five hundred mendicants headed by Yasoja have arrived at Sāvatthī to see the Buddha. It's those visiting mendicants who, while exchanging pleasantries with the resident mendicants, preparing their lodgings, and putting away their bowls and robes, made a dreadful racket." "Well then, Ānanda, in my name tell those mendicants that the teacher summons them."

"Yes, sir," Ānanda replied. He went to those mendicants and said, "Venerables, the teacher summons you." "Yes, reverend," replied those mendicants. Then they rose from their seats and went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to them,

"Mendicants, what's with that dreadful racket? You'd think it was fishermen hauling in a catch!" When he said this, Venerable Yasoja said to the Buddha, "Sir, these five hundred mendicants have arrived at Sāvatthī to see the Buddha. It's these visiting mendicants who, while exchanging pleasantries with the resident mendicants, preparing their lodgings, and putting away their bowls and robes, made a dreadful racket." "Go away, mendicants, I dismiss you. You are not to stay in my presence."

"Yes, sir," replied those mendicants. They got up from their seats, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on their right. They set their lodgings in order and left, taking their bowls and robes. Traveling stage by stage in the land of the Vajjis, they arrived at the Vaggumudā River. They built leaf huts near the riverbank and there they entered the rainy season.

Then Venerable Yasoja, having entered the rainy season, addressed the mendicants: "Out of compassion, reverends, the Buddha dismissed us, wanting what's best for us. Come, let us live in such a way that the Buddha would be pleased with us." "Yes, reverend," they replied. Then those mendicants, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, all realized the three knowledges in that same rainy season.

When the Buddha had stayed in Sāvatthī as long as he pleased, he set out for Vesālī. Traveling stage by stage, he arrived at Vesālī, where he stayed in the hall with the peaked roof.

Then, having applied his mind to comprehending the minds of the mendicants staying on the bank of the river Vaggumudā, the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, “A light, it appears to me, has arisen in this quarter, Ānanda; a brightness has arisen. I’m not put off at the thought of going to where the mendicants are staying on the bank of the river Vaggumudā. Send a message to those mendicants: ‘Venerables, the teacher summons you. He wants to see you.’”

“Yes, sir,” Ānanda replied. He went to one of the mendicants and said, “Please, Reverend, go to the mendicants staying on the bank of the river Vaggumudā and say to them, ‘Venerables, the teacher summons you. He wants to see you.’”

“Yes, reverend,” replied that mendicant. Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, he vanished from the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof, and reappeared in front of those mendicants on the bank of the river Vaggumudā. Then he said to those mendicants, “Venerables, the teacher summons you. He wants to see you.”

“Yes, reverend,” replied those mendicants. They set their lodgings in order and took their bowls and robes. Then, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, they vanished from the bank of the river Vaggumudā, and reappeared in the presence of the Buddha in the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. But at that time the Buddha was sitting immersed in imperturbable meditation. Then those mendicants thought, “What kind of meditation is the Buddha practicing right now?” They thought, “He is practicing the imperturbable meditation.” They all sat in imperturbable meditation.

And then, as the night was getting late, in the first watch of the night, Venerable Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, “Sir, the night is getting late. It is the first watch of the night, and the visiting mendicants have been sitting long. Sir, please greet the visiting mendicants.” But the Buddha kept silent.

For a second time, as the night was getting late, in the middle watch of the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, “Sir, the night is getting late. It is the second watch of the night, and the visiting mendicants have been sitting long. Sir, please greet the visiting mendicants.” But for a second time the Buddha kept silent.

For a third time, as the night was getting late, in the last watch of the night, as dawn stirred, bringing joy to the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, “Sir, the night is getting late. It is the last watch of the night; dawn stirs, bringing joy to the night, and the visiting mendicants have been sitting long. Sir, please greet the visiting mendicants.”

Then the Buddha emerged from that immersion and addressed Ānanda, “If you’d known, Ānanda, you wouldn’t have said so much. Both I and these five hundred mendicants have been sitting in imperturbable meditation.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“A mendicant who has beaten the thorn of sensuality—and abuse, killing, and caging—steady as a mountain, imperturbable, trembles not at pleasure and pain.”

Ud 3.4

Ud 3.4
With Sāriputta
Sāriputtasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, his body set straight, and mindfulness established in his presence. The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"As a rocky mountain is unwavering and well grounded, so when delusion ends, a monk, like a mountain, doesn't tremble."

Ud 3.5

Ud 3.5
With Mahāmoggallāna
Mahāmoggallānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Mahāmoggallāna was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight and mindfulness of the body well-established in himself. The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"With mindfulness of the body established, restrained in the six fields of contact, a mendicant always immersed in samādhi would know quenching in themselves."

Ud 3.6

Ud 3.6
With Pilindavaccha
Pilindavacchasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time Venerable Pilindavaccha addressed the mendicants as "lowlifes". Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, Venerable Pilindavaccha addresses the mendicants as 'lowlifes'."

So the Buddha addressed one of the monks, "Please, monk, in my name tell the mendicant Pilindavaccha that the Teacher summons him." "Yes, sir," that monk replied. He went to Pilindavaccha and said to him, "Reverend Pilindavaccha, the teacher summons you."

"Yes, reverend," Pilindavaccha replied. He went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha said to him: "Is it really true, Vaccha, that you addressed the mendicants as 'lowlifes'?" "Yes, sir," he replied.

Then, having applied his mind to Pilindavaccha's past lives, the Buddha said to the mendicants, "Mendicants, don't complain about the mendicant Vaccha. He doesn't addresses the mendicants as 'lowlifes' out of hate. For five hundred lives without interruption he was reborn in a brahmin family. For a long time, he has addressed people as 'lowlife'. That's why he addresses the mendicants as 'lowlifes'."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"In whom dwells no deceit or conceit, rid of greed, unselfish, with no need for hope, with anger eliminated, quenched: they are a brahmin, an ascetic, a mendicant."

Ud 3.7

Ud 3.7
Sakka's Heartfelt Saying
Sakkudānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time Venerable Mahākassapa was staying in the Pipphali cave. Having entered a certain state of immersion, he sat cross-legged for seven days without moving. When seven days had passed, Mahākassapa emerged from that state of immersion. It occurred to him, "Why not enter Rājagaha for almsfood?"

Now at that time five hundred deities were ready and eager for the chance to offer alms to Mahākassapa. But Mahākasspa refused those deities. In the morning, he robed up, took his bowl and robe, and entered Rājagaha for alms.

Now at that time Sakka, lord of Gods, wished to give alms to Mahākassapa. Having manifested in the appearance of a weaver, he worked the loom while the titan maiden Sujā fed the shuttle. Then, as Mahākassapa wandered indiscriminately for almsfood in Rājagaha, he approached Sakka's house. Seeing Mahākassapa coming off in the distance, Sakka came out of his house, greeted him, and took the bowl from his hand. He re-entered the house and filled the bowl with rice from the pot. That almsfood had many tasty soups and sauces. Then it occurred to Mahākassapa, "Now, what being is this who has such psychic power?" It occurred to him, "This is Sakka, lord of Gods." Knowing this, he said to Sakka, "This is your doing, Kosiya; don't do such a thing again." "But Honorable Kassapa, we too need merit! We too ought make merit."

Then Sakka bowed and respectfully circled Mahākassapa, keeping him on his right. Then he rose into the air and, sitting cross-legged in the sky, expressed this heartfelt sentiment three times: "Oh the gift, the best gift is well established in Kassapa! Oh the gift, the best gift is well established in Kassapa! Oh the gift, the best gift is well established in Kassapa!" With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, the Buddha heard Sakka express this heartfelt sentiment while sitting in the sky.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"A mendicant who relies on alms, self-supported, providing for no other; the poised one is envied by even the gods, calm and ever mindful."

Ud 3.8

Ud 3.8
One Who Eats Only Almsfood
Piṇḍapātikasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the pavilion by the kareri tree and this discussion came up among them:

"Reverends, when a mendicant who eats only almsfood is wandering for alms, from time to time they get to see pleasing sights, hear pleasing sounds, smell pleasing smells, taste pleasing tastes, and encounter pleasing touches. They wander for alms being honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. Come, we too should eat only almsfood. From time to time we too will get to see pleasing sights, hear pleasing sounds, smell pleasing smells, taste pleasing tastes, and encounter pleasing touches. We too shall wander for alms being honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed." At that point the conversation among those mendicants was left unfinished.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the pavilion by the kareri tree, where he sat on the seat spread out and addressed the mendicants:
"Mendicants, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?"

So the mendicants told him what they had been talking about. The Buddha said,

"Mendicants, it is not appropriate for you gentlemen who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness to talk about such things. When you're sitting together you should do one of two things: discuss the teachings or keep noble silence."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"A mendicant who relies on alms, self-supported, providing for no other; the poised one is envied by even the gods, but not if they're after popularity and reputation."

Ud 3.9

Ud 3.9
Professions
Sippasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, after the meal, on return from almsround, several mendicants sat together in the pavilion and this discussion came up among them: "Who knows a craft? Who is studying which craft? Which is the best craft?"

In answer, some said that elephant-craft is the best of crafts. Others said that the best craft is horse-craft, or chariot-craft, or archery, or swordsmanship, or arithmetic, or accounting, or calculating, or writing, or poetry, or cosmology, or geomancy. At that point the conversation among those mendicants was left unfinished.

Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and went to the assembly hall. He sat down on the seat spread out, and addressed the mendicants: "Mendicants, what were you sitting talking about just now? What conversation was left unfinished?"

So the mendicants told him what they had been talking about when the Buddha arrived. The Buddha said,

"Mendicants, it is not appropriate for you gentlemen who have gone forth in faith from the lay life to homelessness to talk about such things. When you're sitting together you should do one of two things: discuss the teachings or keep noble silence."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Living without a craft, light, desiring the good, with senses controlled, everywhere free; a migrant with no shelter, unselfish, with no need for hope, having given up conceit, wandering alone: that is a mendicant."

Ud 3.10

Ud 3.10
The World
Lokasutta

So I have heard. At one time, when he was first awakened, the Buddha was staying in Uruvelā at the root of the tree of awakening on the bank of the Nerañjarā River. There the Buddha sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, experiencing the bliss of freedom.

When seven days had passed, the Buddha emerged from that state of immersion and surveyed the world with the eye of a Buddha. He saw sentient beings tormented with many torments, and burning with many fevers born of greed, hate, and delusion.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“This world, born in torment, overcome by contact, speaks of disease as the self. For whatever it thinks it is, it turns out to be something else.

The world is attached to continued existence, overcome by continued existence, taking pleasure only in continued existence, yet it becomes something else. What it enjoys, that is the fear; what it fears, that is the suffering. But this spiritual life is led in order to give up continued existence.

Of the ascetics and brahmins who say that through continued existence one is freed from continued existence, none are themselves freed from continued existence, I say. Of the ascetics and brahmins who say that through annihilation of existence one escapes from continued existence, none have themselves escaped from continued existence, I say.

For this suffering originates dependent on all attachment. With the ending of all grasping there is no origination of suffering. Just look at this world! Mired in all sorts of ignorance, beings in love with being are not released from continued existence. Whatever states of continued existence there are—everywhere, all over—all are impermanent, suffering, and perishable.

One who sees truly like this, with right wisdom, gives up craving for continued existence, while not looking forward to ending existence. Extinguishment comes from the ending of all cravings; fading away and cessation with nothing left over.

There is no further existence for that mendicant extinguished without grasping. Victorious in battle, such a one has defeated Māra; they've gone beyond all states of existence."

Ud 4.1

Ud 4.1
With Meghiya
Meghiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Cālikā, on the Cālikā mountain. Now, at that time Venerable Meghiya was the Buddha's attendant. Then Venerable Meghiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, "Sir, I'd like to enter Jantu village for alms." "Please, Meghiya, go at your convenience."

Then Meghiya robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Jantu village for alms. After the meal, on his return from almsround in Jantu village, he went to the shore of Kimikālā river. As he was going for a walk along the shore of the river he saw a lovely and delightful mango grove. When he saw this he thought, "Oh, this mango grove is lovely and delightful! This is good enough for striving for a gentleman wanting to strive. If the Buddha allows me, I'll come back to this mango grove to meditate."

Then Venerable Meghiya went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened, adding,

"If the Buddha allows me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate."

When he had spoken, the Buddha said to him, "We're alone, Meghiya. Wait until another mendicant comes."

For a second time Meghiya said to the Buddha, "Sir, the Buddha has nothing more to do, and nothing that needs improvement. But I have. If you allow me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate." For a second time the Buddha said, "We're alone, Meghiya. Wait until another mendicant comes."

For a third time Meghiya said to the Buddha, "Sir, the Buddha has nothing more to do, and nothing that needs improvement. But I have. If you allow me, I'll go back to that mango grove to meditate." "Meghiya, since you speak of meditation, what can I say? Please, Meghiya, go at your convenience."

Then Meghiya got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right. Then he went to that mango grove, and, having plunged deep into it, sat at the root of a certain tree for the day's meditation. But while Meghiya was meditating in that mango grove he was beset mostly by three kinds of bad, unskillful thoughts, namely, sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts.

Then he thought, "Oh, how incredible, how amazing! I've gone forth from the lay life to homelessness out of faith, but I'm still harassed by these three kinds of bad, unskillful thoughts: sensual, malicious, and cruel thoughts."

Then in the late afternoon, Venerable Meghiya came out of retreat and went to the Buddha. He bowed, sat down to one side, and told the Buddha what had happened.

“Meghiya, when the heart’s release is not ripe, five things help it ripen. What five?

Firstly, a mendicant has good friends, companions, and associates. This is the first thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. This is the second thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant gets to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart and leads solely to disillusionment, dispassion, cessation, peace, insight, awakening, and extinguishment when they want, without trouble or difficulty. That is, talk about fewness of wishes, contentment, seclusion, aloofness, arousing energy, ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom.’ This is the third thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant lives with energy roused up for giving up unskillful qualities and embracing skillful qualities. They are strong, staunchly vigorous, not slacking off when it comes to developing skillful qualities. This is the fourth thing …

Furthermore, a mendicant is wise. They have the wisdom of arising and passing away which is noble, penetrative, and leads to the complete ending of suffering. This is the fifth thing that, when the heart’s release is not ripe, helps it ripen. These are the five things that, when the heart’s release is not ripe, help it ripen.

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be ethical …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to take part in talk about self-effacement that helps open the heart …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be energetic …

A mendicant with good friends, companions, and associates can expect to be wise …

But then, a mendicant grounded on these five things should develop four further things. They should develop the perception of ugliness to give up greed, love to give up hate, mindfulness of breathing to cut off thinking, and perception of impermanence to uproot the conceit ‘I am’. When you perceive impermanence, the perception of not-self becomes stabilized. Perceiving not-self, you uproot the conceit ‘I am’ and attain extinguishment in this very life.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Lesser thoughts and subtle thoughts arise, springing up in the mind. Not understanding these thoughts, one with mind astray runs all over the place.

Having understood these thoughts that arise, springing up in the mind, an awakened one—keen, restrained, and mindful—has given them up without remainder.”

Ud 4.2

Ud 4.2
Restless
Uddhatasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in the sal forest of the Mallas at Upavattana near Kusinārā. Now at that time several mendicants were staying not far from the Buddha in a wilderness hut. They were restless, insolent, fickle, scurrilous, loose-tongued, unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying minds and undisciplined faculties.

The Buddha saw those mendicants staying nearby.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Unguarded in body, ruined by wrong view, overcome with dullness and drowsiness, you fall under Māra’s sway.

That’s why you should guard the mind, with right thoughts your pasture, and right view at the fore. Having understood rise and fall, a mendicant who has overcome dullness and drowsiness would cast off all bad destinies.”

Ud 4.3

Ud 4.3
The Cowherd
Gopālakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants. And then the Buddha left the road, went to the root of a certain tree, and sat down on the seat spread out.

Then a certain cowherd went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired him with a Dhamma talk.

Then the cowherd said to the Buddha, “Sir, may the Buddha together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow’s meal from me.” The Buddha consented with silence. The cowherd got up from his seat, circumambulated the Buddha with his right side toward him, and left.

And when the night had passed the cowherd had plenty of thick milk-rice prepared in his own home, with fresh ghee. Then he had the Buddha informed of the time, saying, “Sir, it’s time. The meal is ready.”

The Buddha robed up, took his bowl and robe and, together with the Sangha of monks, went to the house of that cowherd, where he sat down on the prepared seat in the dining hall. Then the cowherd served and satisfied the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha with his own hands with a thick milk-rice and fresh ghee. When the Buddha had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, the cowherd took a low seat and sat to one side. The Buddha then instructed, inspired, and gladdened him with a teaching, after which he got up and left. But soon after the Buddha had left, the cowherd was killed by a certain man in the gap between village borders.

Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“A wrongly directed mind would do you more harm than a hater to the hated, or an enemy to their foe.”

Ud 4.4

Ud 4.4
The Spirit's Blow
Yakkhapahārasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. At that time Venerables Sāriputta and Moggallāna were staying near the pigeons' alcove. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was sitting outdoors in the moonlight, his head freshly shaven, having entered a certain state of immersion.

Now at that time two native spirits who were friends were on their way from the north to the south on some business. They saw Sāriputta meditating there. One of the spirits said to the other, "I feel inspired, friend, to give this ascetic a blow on the head!" The other spirit replied, "Enough, friend, don't hit the ascetic! That is an eminent ascetic, powerful and mighty!"

For a second time the first spirit said to the other, "I feel inspired, friend, to give this ascetic a blow on the head!" For a second time, the other spirit replied, "Enough, friend, don't hit the ascetic! That is an eminent ascetic, powerful and mighty!" For a third time the first spirit said to the other, "I feel inspired, friend, to give this ascetic a blow on the head!" For a third time, the other spirit replied, "Enough, friend, don't hit the ascetic! That is an eminent ascetic, powerful and mighty!"

Ignoring his friend, the first spirit struck Sāriputta. The blow was so strong it would have felled a bull elephant seven or seven and a half cubits tall, or split apart a great mountain peak. But then the spirit, crying out, "I burn, I burn!" fell into the Great Hell right there.

With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, Venerable Moggallāna saw that spirit striking Venerable Sāriputta. He approached him and said, "I hope you're keeping well, reverend; I hope you're getting by. I hope that you are not in pain." "I am keeping well, Reverend Moggallāna; but my head does hurt a little."

"It's incredible, Reverend Sāriputta, it's amazing! How mighty and powerful is Venerable Sāriputta! Just now, a native spirit struck you on the head. The blow was so strong it would have felled a bull elephant seven or seven and a half cubits tall, or split apart a great mountain peak. Yet you say, 'I am keeping well, Reverend Moggallāna; but my head does hurt a little.'"

"It's incredible, Reverend Moggallāna, it's amazing! How mighty and powerful is Venerable Moggallāna, in that he can even see a native spirit! Whereas I can't even see a mud-goblin right now."

With clairaudience that is purified and superhuman, the Buddha heard that discussion between those two spiritual giants.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“One whose mind is like a rock, steady, never trembling, free of desire for desirable things, not getting annoyed when things are annoying: from where will suffering strike one whose mind is developed like this?”

Ud 4.5

Ud 4.5
A Bull Elephant
Nāgasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambi, in Ghosita's Monastery. Now at that time Buddha lived crowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and monastics of other religions and their disciples. Crowded, he lived in suffering and discomfort. Then he thought, "These days I live crowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and monastics of other religions and their disciples. Crowded, I live in suffering and discomfort. Why don't I live alone, withdrawn from the group?"

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Kosambī for alms. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he set his lodgings in order himself. Taking his bowl and robe, without informing his attendants or taking leave of the mendicant Saṅgha, he set out to go wandering alone towards Pārileyya, with no companion. When he eventually arrived, he stayed in a protected forest grove, at the foot of a sacred sal tree.

A certain bull elephant was also living crowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. He ate the grass they'd trampled, and they ate the broken branches he dragged down. He drank muddy water, and after his bath the female elephants bumped into him. Crowded, he lived in suffering and discomfort. Then he thought, "These days I live crowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. I eat the grass they've trampled, and they eat the broken branches I've dragged down. I drink muddy water, and after my bath the female elephants bump into me. Crowded, I live in suffering and discomfort. Why don't I live alone, withdrawn from the herd?"

So he left the herd and went to Pārileyya, where he approached the Buddha in the protected forest grove at the foot of a sacred sal tree. There he attended on the Buddha, clearing the vegetation from the place where the Buddha stayed, and using his trunk to set out water for drinking and washing.

Then as the Buddha was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "Formerly I lived crowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and monastics of other religions and their disciples. Crowded, I live in suffering and discomfort. But now I live uncrowded by monks, nuns, laymen, and laywomen; by rulers and their ministers, and monastics of other religions and their disciples. Being uncrowded, I live in happiness and comfort."

And to the bull elephant also this thought came to mind, "Formerly I lived crowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. I ate the grass they'd trampled, and they ate the broken branches I'd dragged down. I drank muddy water, and after my bath the female elephants bumped into me. Crowded, I lived in suffering and discomfort. But now I live uncrowded by other males, females, younglings, and cubs. I eat untrampled grass, and other elephants don't eat the broken branches I have dragged down. I don't drink muddy water, and the female elephants don't bump into me after my bath. Being uncrowded, I live in happiness and comfort."

Then, understanding his own seclusion and knowing that elephant's train of thought, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The giant elephant, with tusks like chariot-poles, agrees heart to heart with the spiritual giant, since each finds joy in the woods alone."

Ud 4.6

Ud 4.6
The Alms-Gatherer
Piṇḍolasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Bhāradvāja the Alms-Gatherer was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight. He was one who lived in the wilderness, ate only almsfood, wore rag robes, and owned just three robes. He was of few wishes, content, secluded, aloof, and energetic, an advocate of austerities, dedicated to the higher mind.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Not speaking ill nor doing harm; restraint in the monastic code; moderation in eating; staying in remote lodgings; commitment to the higher mind—this is the instruction of the Buddhas."

Ud 4.7

Ud 4.7
With Sāriputta
Sāriputtasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight. He was of few wishes, content, secluded, aloof, energetic, dedicated to the higher mind.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"A sage of higher consciousness, diligent, training in the ways of sagacity: there are no sorrows for one thus poised, calm and ever mindful."

Ud 4.8

Ud 4.8
With Sundarī
Sundarīsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And he received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And the mendicant Saṅgha was also honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they received robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But the wanderers who followed other religions were not honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they didn't receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick.

Then those wanderers who followed other religions, unable to bear the esteem of the mendicant Sangha, approached the female wanderer Sundarī and said, "Sister, are you able to do something for the welfare of your kin?" "What can I do, venerables? How can I help? I'd even give my life for the welfare of my kin."

"Well then, sister, frequently visit Jeta's Grove." "Yes, venerables," she replied, and did as they asked.

When those wanderers knew that Sundarī had been clearly seen by many people frequently visiting Jeta's Grove, they killed her and dumped her in the ditch around Jeta's Grove. Then they went to see King Pasenadi of Kosala and said to him, "Great king, we cannot find the female wanderer Sundarī." "But where do you suspect she is?" "At Jeta's Grove, great king." "Well then, search Jeta's Grove."

So the wanderers searched Jeta's Grove. They pulled her body up from the ditch where they had dumped it, and lifted it on a bier. Having entered Sāvatthī, they went from street to street and from square to square, complaining to people:

"See the deed of the Sakyan ascetics! Shameless are these Sakyan ascetics, immoral and wicked. They are liars and fake celibates. Sure, they claim to be of principled and moral conduct, to be celibate, truthful, ethical, and of good character. But they have no asceticism, no spirituality. Asceticism and spirituality are lost to them! Where is their asceticism, where their spirituality? They have abandoned asceticism and spirituality! How on earth can a man, having done a man's business, kill a woman!"

Then at that time when the people of Sāvatthī saw the mendicants they abused and insulted them with rude, harsh words:

"Shameless are these Sakyan ascetics, immoral, wicked, liars, and fake celibates. Sure, they claim to be of principled and moral conduct, to be celibate, truthful, ethical, and of good character. But they have no asceticism, no spirituality. Asceticism and spirituality are lost to them! Where is their asceticism, where their spirituality? They have abandoned asceticism and spirituality! How on earth can a man, having done a man's business, kill a woman!"

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

"That rumor, mendicants, won't last long. It will only be seven days, then it will vanish. So you may respond to those critics with this verse:

A liar goes to hell, as does one who denies what they did. Both are equal in the hereafter, those men of base deeds."

The mendicants memorized that verse in the Buddha's presence, then used it to respond to those critics.

People thought, "These Sakyan ascetics didn't do it, it was not done by them, they swear it." That rumor didn't last long. It was seven days, then it vanished.

Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him,

"It's incredible, sir, it's amazing! How well said this was by the Buddha: 'That rumor, mendicants, won't last long. It will only be seven days, then it will vanish.' That rumor has vanished, sir."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"People out of control stab with words, like they stab a tusker in battle with darts. When they hear a harsh word spoken, a mendicant should endure with no anger in heart."

Ud 4.9

Ud 4.9
With Upasena
Upasenasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Then as Venerable Upasena son of Vaṅgantā was in private retreat this thought came to his mind: "I'm so fortunate, so very fortunate! My Teacher is the Blessed One, perfected, a fully awakened Buddha. Well explained is the teaching and training in which I have gone forth from the lay life to homelessness. My spiritual companions are ethical and of good character. I have fulfilled the precepts. My mind is unified and serene. I am a perfected one who has ended the defilements. I am of great might and power. My life has been good, and my death will be good."

Then, knowing that Venerable Upasena's train of thought, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"One who has no guilt in life, nor grief at facing death: that wise one who has seen the truth, grieves not among the grieving.

For the mendicant with peaceful mind, who has cut off craving for continued existence, Transmigration through births is finished, there are no future lives for them."

Ud 4.10

Ud 4.10
The Peacefulness of Sāriputta
Sāriputtaupasamasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight, reviewing his own peacefulness.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"With mind at peace, so full of peace, for a mendicant who has cut the cord, transmigration through births is finished: they're freed from Māra's bonds."

Ud 5.1

Ud 5.1
Who Is More Dear?
Piyatarasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time King Pasenadi of Kosala was upstairs in the royal longhouse together with Queen Mallikā. Then King Pasenadi addressed Queen Mallikā, "Mallikā, is there anyone more dear to you than yourself?"

"No, great king, there isn't. But is there anyone more dear to you than yourself?" "For me also, Mallikā, there's no-one."

Then King Pasenadi of Kosala came downstairs from the stilt longhouse, went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had happened.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Having explored every quarter with the mind, Likewise for others, each holds themselves dear; so one who cares for their own welfare would harm no other."

Ud 5.2

Ud 5.2
Short-lived
Appāyukasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then in the late afternoon, Venerable Ānanda came out of retreat and went to the Buddha. He bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him: "It's incredible, sir, it's amazing! How short-lived was the Blessed One's mother! For seven days after the Blessed One was born, his mother passed away and was reborn in the host of Joyful Gods."

"That's so true, Ānanda! For the mothers of beings intent of awakening are short-lived. Seven days after the beings intent on awakening are born, their mothers pass away and are reborn in the host of Joyful Gods."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Whether born or to be born, all depart, leaving the body behind. The skillful, understanding that all is lost, would keenly practice the spiritual life."

Ud 5.3

Ud 5.3
With Suppabuddha the Leper
Suppabuddhakuṭṭhisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. At that time in Rājagaha there was a leper called Suppabuddha. He was poor, destitute, and pitiful. Now, at that time the Buddha was teaching Dhamma, surrounded by a large assembly.

Suppabuddha saw the crowd seated off in the distance and thought, "Surely some fresh and cooked foods will be distributed there. Why don't I approach the crowd? Hopefully I'll get something to eat."

So he approached the crowd where he saw the Buddha teaching Dhamma, surrounded by a large assembly. When he saw this he thought, "There's no food being distributed here. The ascetic Gotama is teaching Dhamma in an assembly. Why don't I also listen to the teaching?" Right there he sat down to one side, thinking, "I also will listen to the teaching."

Then the Buddha focused on comprehending the minds of everyone in the assembly, thinking, "Who here is capable of understanding the teaching?" He saw Suppabuddha sitting in the assembly, and thought, "He is capable of understanding the teaching." He gave a step by step talk especially for Suppabuddha on giving, ethical conduct, and heaven. He explained the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, so sordid and corrupt, and the benefit of renunciation. When the Buddha knew that Suppabuddha's mind was ready, supple, without hindrances, elated, and confident, he revealed the teaching unique to the Buddhas: suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. Just as a clean cloth rid of stains would properly absorb dye, in that very seat the stainless, immaculate vision of the Dhamma in Suppabuddha: "Everything that has a beginning has an end."

Then Suppabuddha saw, attained, understood, and fathomed the Dhamma. He went beyond doubt, got rid of indecision, and became self-assured and independent of others regarding the Teacher's instructions. He rose from his seat and went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said:

"Excellent, sir! Excellent! As if he were righting the overturned, or revealing the hidden, or pointing out the path to the lost, or lighting a lamp in the dark so people with clear eyes can see what's there, the Buddha has made the teaching clear in many ways. I go for refuge to the Buddha, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. From this day forth, may the Buddha remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

After Suppabuddha had been educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired with a Dhamma talk by the Buddha, he got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha before leaving. But soon after Suppabuddha had left, a cow with a baby calf charged at him and took his life.

Then several mendicants went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said, “The leper called Suppabuddha, after being educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired with a Dhamma talk by the Buddha, has passed away. Where has he been reborn in his next life?”

“Mendicants, Suppabuddha was astute. He practiced in line with the teachings, and did not trouble me about the teachings. With the ending of three fetters, Suppabuddha is a stream-enterer, not liable to be reborn in the underworld, bound for awakening.”

When he said this, one of the mendicants said to the Buddha, “What is the cause, sir, what is the reason why Suppabuddha became a leper, poor, destitute, and pitiful?”

“Once upon a time, mendicants, Suppabuddha used to be a financier’s son right here in Rājagaha. On his way to visit a park, he saw Tagarasikhī, an independent Buddha, entering the city for alms. When he saw this he thought, “Who is this leper wandering about with his leper’s robe?” Before leaving, he spat on the ground and turned his left side to Tagarasikhī. As a result of that deed he burned in hell for many years, for many hundreds, many thousands, many hundreds of thousands of years. And as a residual result of that same deed, he became a leper right here in Rājagaha, poor, destitute and pitiful. But owing to faith in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One, he undertook ethics, learning, generosity, and wisdom. After undertaking these things, when his body broke up, after death, he was reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm, in the company of the gods of the Thirty-Three. There he outshines the other gods in beauty and glory.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“As a clear-eyed man would avoid rough paths, so long as strength is found; an astute person in the living world, would shun bad deeds.”

Ud 5.4

Ud 5.4
The Boys
Kumārakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time, between Sāvatthī and the Jeta Grove, several boys were tormenting some fish.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. He saw the boys tormenting the fish. He went to them and said, "Boys, do you fear pain? Do you dislike pain?" "Yes, sir," they replied. "We dislike pain."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"If you fear pain, if you dislike pain, don't do bad deeds either openly or in secret.

If you should do a bad deed, now or in the future, you won't be freed from suffering, though you fly away and flee."

Ud 5.5

Ud 5.5
Sabbath
Uposathasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Now, at that time it was the sabbath, and the Buddha was sitting surrounded by the Saṅgha of monks.

And then, as the night was getting late, in the first watch of the night, Venerable Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the first watch of the night, and the Saṅgha of monks has been sitting long. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks." But when he said this, the Buddha kept silent.

For a second time, as the night was getting late, in the middle watch of the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the first watch of the night, and the Saṅgha of monks has been sitting long. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks." But for a second time the Buddha kept silent.

For a third time, as the night was getting late, in the last watch of the night, as dawn stirred, bringing joy to the night, Ānanda got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha and said, "Sir, the night is getting late. It is the last watch of the night and dawn stirs, bringing joy to the night. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks." "Ānanda, the assembly is not pure."

Then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna thought, "Who is the Buddha talking about?" Then he focused on comprehending the minds of everyone in the Saṅgha. He saw that unethical person, of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner—though claiming to be one—rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved, sitting in the middle of the Saṅgha. When he saw him he got up from his seat, went up to him and said, "Get up, reverend. The Buddha has seen you. You can't live in communion with the monks." But when he said this, that person kept silent.

For a second time and a third time, he asked that monk to leave. But for a third time that person kept silent.

Then Venerable Mahāmoggallāna took that person by the arm, ejected him out the gate, and bolted the door. Then he went up to the Buddha, and said to him, "I have ejected that person. The assembly is pure. Please, sir, may the Buddha recite the monastic code to the monks." "It's incredible, Moggallāna, it's amazing, how that silly man waited to be taken by the arm!"

Then the Buddha said to the monks, “From this day forth, monks, I will not perform the sabbath or recite the monastic code. Now you should perform the sabbath and recite the monastic code. It’s impossible, monks, it can’t happen that a Realized One could recite the monastic code in an impure assembly.

Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean. What eight?

The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. This is the first thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean is consistent and doesn’t overflow its boundaries. This is the second thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean doesn’t accommodate a carcass, but quickly carries it to the shore and strands it on the beach. This is the third thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, when they reach the ocean, all the great rivers—that is, the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—lose their names and clans and are simply considered ‘the ocean’. This is the fourth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, for all the world’s streams that reach it, and the rain that falls from the sky, the ocean never empties or fills up. This is the fifth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean has just one taste, the taste of salt. This is the sixth thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, the ocean is full of many kinds of treasures, such as pearls, gems, beryl, conch, quartz, coral, silver, gold, rubies, and emeralds. This is the seventh thing the titans love about the ocean.

Furthermore, many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. This is the eighth thing the titans love about the ocean. Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things the titans love the ocean.

In the same way, seeing eight incredible and amazing things, mendicants, the mendicants love this teaching and training. What eight?

The ocean gradually slants, slopes, and inclines, with no abrupt precipice. In the same way in this teaching and training the penetration to enlightenment comes from gradual training, progress, and practice, not abruptly. This is the first thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean is consistent and doesn’t overflow its boundaries. In the same way, when a training rule is laid down for my disciples they wouldn’t break it even for the sake of their own life. This is the second thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean doesn't accommodate a carcass, but quickly carries it to the shore and strands it on the beach. In the same way, the Saṅgha doesn't accommodate a person who is unethical, of bad qualities, filthy, with suspicious behavior, underhand, no true ascetic or spiritual practitioner—though claiming to be one—rotten inside, corrupt, and depraved. But they quickly gather and expel them. Even if such a person is sitting in the middle of the Saṅgha, they're far from the Saṅgha, and the Saṅgha is far from them. This is the third thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

Furthermore, when they reach the ocean, all the great rivers—that is, the Ganges, Yamunā, Aciravatī, Sarabhū, and Mahī—lose their names and clans and are simply considered 'the ocean'. In the same way, when they go forth from the lay life to homelessness, all four classes—aristocrats, brahmins, peasants, and menials—lose their former names and clans and are simply considered 'Sakyan ascetics'. This is the fourth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

For all the world's streams that reach it, and the rain that falls from the sky, the ocean never empties or fills up. In the same way, though several mendicants become fully extinguished in the element of extinguishment with nothing left over, the element of extinguishment never empties or fills up. This is the fifth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean has just one taste, the taste of salt. In the same way, this teaching and training has one taste, the taste of freedom. This is the sixth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

The ocean is full of many kinds of treasures, such as pearls, gems, beryl, conch, quartz, coral, silver, gold, rubies, and emeralds. In the same way, this teaching and training is full of many kinds of treasures, such as the four kinds of mindfulness meditation, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the five powers, the seven awakening factors, and the noble eightfold path. This is the seventh thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training.

Many great beings live in the ocean, such as leviathans, leviathan-gulpers, leviathan-gulper-gulpers, titans, dragons, and centaurs. In the ocean there are life-forms a hundred leagues long, or even two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred leagues long. In the same way, great beings live in this teaching and training, and these are those beings. The stream-enterer and the one practicing to realize the fruit of stream-entry. The once-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of once-return. The non-returner and the one practicing to realize the fruit of non-return. The perfected one, and the one practicing for perfection. This is the eighth thing the mendicants love about this teaching and training. Seeing these eight incredible and amazing things, the mendicants love this teaching and training."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The rain saturates things that are covered up; it doesn't saturate things that are open. Therefore you should open up a covered thing, so the rain will not saturate it."

Ud 5.6

Ud 5.6
With Soṇa
Soṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Mahākaccāna was staying in the land of the Avantis near Kuraraghara on Steep Mountain. And the layman Soṇa of the Sharp Ears was Mahākaccāna's attendant.

Then as Soṇa was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "As I understand Venerable Mahākaccāna's teachings, it's not easy for someone living at home to lead the spiritual life utterly full and pure, like a polished shell. Why don't I shave off my hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from lay life to homelessness?"

Then Soṇa went up to Mahākaccāna, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what he was thinking. Then he said,

"May Venerable Mahākaccāna please give me the going forth!"

When this was said, Mahākaccāna said to him, "It's hard to lead the spiritual life as long as you live, eating in one part of the day and sleeping alone. Come now, Soṇa, while remaining a layperson just as you are, devote yourself to the instructions of the Buddhas, leading the spiritual life at suitable times, eating in one part of the day and sleeping alone." Then Soṇa's aspiration to go forth died down.

For a second time, while in private retreat the thought came to Soṇa that he should go forth, but the outcome was the same.

For a third time, as Soṇa was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "As I understand Venerable Mahākaccāna's teachings, it's not easy for someone living at home to lead the spiritual life utterly full and pure, like a polished shell. Why don't I shave off my hair and beard, dress in ocher robes, and go forth from lay life to homelessness?" For a third time, Soṇa went up to Mahākaccāna, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what he was thinking. Then he said,

"May Venerable Mahākaccāna please give me the going forth!"

Then Mahākaccāna gave Soṇa the going forth. Now at that time the southern region, including Avanti, was short of monks. It took three years and much struggle and difficulty before Venerable Mahākaccāyana was able to assemble from here and there a Sangha consisting of ten monks and give Venerable Soṇa the full ordination.

Then as Venerable Soṇa was in private retreat this thought came to his mind, "I have not personally seen the Buddha. I have only heard reports that that Blessed One is like this or like that. If my mentor allows, I should go to see that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha."

Then in the late afternoon, Soṇa came out of retreat, went up to Mahākaccāna, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what he was thinking. Then Mahākaccāna said,

"Good, good, Soṇa! Go to see the Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha. You will see that Blessed One who is impressive and inspiring, with peaceful faculties and mind, attained to the highest self-control and serenity, like an elephant with tamed, guarded, and controlled faculties. On seeing him, in my name bow with your head to his feet. Ask him if he is healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably, saying, 'Sir, my mentor Venerable Mahākaccāna bows with his head to your feet. He asks if you are healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably.'"

Saying, "Yes, sir," Soṇa welcomed and agreed with Mahākaccāna's words. He got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled Mahākaccāna, keeping him on his right. Then he set his lodgings in order and, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Sāvatthī. Eventually he came to Sāvatthī and Jeta's Grove. He went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Soṇa said to the Buddha, "Sir, my mentor Venerable Mahākaccāna bows with his head to your feet. He asks if you are healthy and well, nimble, strong, and living comfortably."

"I hope you're keeping well, mendicant; I hope you're all right. And I hope you have arrived from your journey unwearied, having had no trouble getting almsfood." "I'm keeping well, sir; I'm all right. And I have arrived from my journey unwearied, having had no trouble getting almsfood."

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, "Prepare lodgings for this visiting mendicant." Then Venerable Ānanda thought, "When the Buddha orders me to prepare lodgings for a specific mendicant, he wishes to stay in the same dwelling with that mendicant. The Buddha wishes to stay together with Venerable Soṇa." He prepared lodgings for Soṇa in the same dwelling where the Buddha was staying.

The Buddha spent much of the night sitting meditation in the open. Then he got up from his seat, washed his feet and entered the dwelling. Venerable Soṇa did the same. Then the Buddha rose at the crack of dawn and addressed Soṇa, "Speak some Dhamma, mendicant, as you feel inspired."

"Yes, sir," replied Soṇa. He intoned all sixteen discourses in the Chapter of the Eights. When Soṇa finished his intoning, the Buddha applauded, saying, "Good, good, mendicant! You have learned the sixteen discourses of the Chapter of the Eights well, you have applied the mind and remembered it well. You are a good speaker, with a polished, clear, and articulate voice that expresses the meaning. How many rains have you been ordained, mendicant?" "I have one rains, Blessed One." "But why did it take you so long to make it?" "Sir, I have long seen the drawbacks of sensual pleasures, yet living in a house is cramped, with many duties and much to do."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Seeing the danger of the world, I understood the truth without attachments. The Noble One does not delight in evil, the Pure One does not delight in evil.”

Ud 5.7

Ud 5.7
With Revata the Doubter
Kaṅkhārevatasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Revata the Doubter was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight, reviewing his own purification through overcoming doubt.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Any doubts about this world or the world beyond, about one's own experiences or those of another: those who meditate give them all up, keenly practicing the spiritual life."

Ud 5.8

Ud 5.8
Schism in the Saṅgha
Saṁghabhedasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time Venerable Ānanda robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for alms.

Devadatta saw him wandering for alms, so he went up to him and said, "From this day forth, Reverend Ānanda, I shall perform the sabbath and legal proceedings of the Saṅgha apart from the Buddha and the Saṅgha of mendicants."

Then Ānanda wandered for alms in Rājagaha. After the meal, on his return from almsround, he went to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what had just happened, adding:

"Today, sir, Devadatta will split the Saṅgha. He will perform the sabbath and legal proceedings of the Saṅgha."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"It's easy for the good to do good, and hard for the good to do bad. It's easy for the bad to do bad, but for the noble ones, bad is hard to do."

Ud 5.9

Ud 5.9
Teasing
Sadhāyamānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Kosalans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants. Now at that time several students were passing by not far from the Buddha in a teasing manner. The Buddha saw them.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Dolts pretending to be astute, they talk, their words right out of bounds. They blab at will, their mouths agape, and no-one knows what leads them on.”

Ud 5.10

Ud 5.10
With Cūḷapanthaka
Cūḷapanthakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Cūḷapanthaka was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, his body set straight, and mindfulness established in his presence.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Steady in body, steady in mind, standing, sitting or lying down: a mendicant focusing on this mindfulness gains an ever higher distinction. And when they have done so, they vanish from the King of Death."

Ud 6.1

Ud 6.1
Surrendering the Life Force
Āyusaṅkhārossajjanasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Vesālī, at the Great Wood, in the hall with the peaked roof. Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for alms. Then, after the meal, on his return from almsround, he addressed Venerable Ānanda: "Ānanda, get your sitting cloth. Let's go to the Cāpāla shrine for the day's meditation."

"Yes, sir," replied Ānanda. Taking his sitting cloth he followed behind the Buddha. Then the Buddha went up to the Cāpāla shrine, where he sat on the seat spread out. When he was seated he said to Venerable Ānanda:

"Ānanda, Vesālī is lovely. And the Udena, Gotamaka, Seven Maidens, Many Sons, Sārandada, and Cāpāla Tree-shrines are all lovely. Whoever has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power—made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them—may, if they wish, live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it. The Realized One has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power, made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them. If he wished, the Realized One could live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it."

But Ānanda didn't get it, even though the Buddha dropped such an obvious hint, such a clear sign. He didn't beg the Buddha, "Sir, may the Blessed One please remain for the eon! May the Holy One please remain for the eon! That would be for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans." For his mind was as if possessed by Māra. For a second time … and for a third time, the Buddha said to Ānanda:

"Ānanda, Vesālī is lovely. And the Udena, Gotamaka, Seven Maidens, Many Sons, Sārandada, and Cāpāla Tree-shrines are all lovely. Whoever has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power—made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them—may, if they wish, live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it. The Realized One has developed and cultivated the four bases of psychic power, made them a vehicle and a basis, kept them up, consolidated them, and properly implemented them. If he wished, the Realized One could live for the proper lifespan or what's left of it."

But Ānanda didn't get it, even though the Buddha dropped such an obvious hint, such a clear sign. He didn't beg the Buddha, "Sir, may the Blessed One please remain for the eon! May the Holy One please remain for the eon! That would be for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans." For his mind was as if possessed by Māra.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, "Go now, Ānanda, at your convenience." "Yes, sir," replied Ānanda. He rose from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before sitting at the root of a tree close by.

And then, not long after Ānanda had left, Māra the Wicked went up to the Buddha, stood to one side, and said to him:

"May the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished. Sir, you once made this statement: 'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have monk disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned, have memorized the teachings, and practice in line with the teachings. Not until they practice properly, living in line with the teaching. Not until they've learned their own tradition, and explain, teach, assert, establish, disclose, analyze, and make it clear. Not until they can legitimately and completely refute the doctrines of others that come up, and teach with a demonstrable basis.' Today you do have such monk disciples. May the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished.

Sir, you once made this statement: 'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have nun disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' … Today you do have such nun disciples.

'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have layman disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' Today you do have such layman disciples.

'Wicked One, I shall not become fully extinguished until I have laywoman disciples who are competent, educated, assured, learned …' Today you do have such laywoman disciples. May the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished.

Sir, you once made this statement: 'I shall not become fully extinguished until my spiritual path is successful and prosperous, extensive, popular, widespread, and well proclaimed wherever there are gods and humans.' Today your spiritual path is successful and prosperous, extensive, popular, widespread, and well proclaimed wherever there are gods and humans. May the Blessed One now become fully extinguished! May the Holy One now become fully extinguished! Now is the time for the Buddha to become fully extinguished.

When this was said, the Buddha said to Māra, "Relax, Wicked One. The final extinguishment of the Realized One will be soon. Three months from now the Realized One will finally be extinguished."

So at the Cāpāla Tree-shrine the Buddha, mindful and aware, surrendered the life force. When he did so there was a great earthquake, awe-inspiring and hair-raising, and thunder cracked the sky.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Comparing the incomparable with the creation of prolonged life, the sage surrendered the life force. Happy inside, serene, he shattered self-creation like a suit of armor.”

Ud 6.2

Ud 6.2
Seven Matted-Hair Ascetics
Sattajaṭilasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Then in the late afternoon, the Buddha came out of retreat and sat outside the gate. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala went up to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side.

Now at that time seven matted-hair ascetics, seven Jain ascetics, seven naked ascetics, seven one-cloth ascetics, and seven wanderers passed by not far from the Buddha. Their armpits and bodies were hairy, and their nails were long; and they carried their stuff with shoulder-poles.

King Pasenadi saw them passing by. He got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, knelt with his right knee on the ground, raised his joined palms toward those various ascetics, and pronounced his name three times: "Sirs, I am Pasenadi, king of Kosala! I am Pasenadi, king of Kosala! I am Pasenadi, king of Kosala!"

Then, soon after those ascetics had left, King Pasenadi went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, are they among those in the world who are perfected ones or who are on the path to perfection?"

"Great king, as a layman enjoying sensual pleasures, living at home with your children, using sandalwood imported from Kāsi, wearing garlands, perfumes, and makeup, and accepting gold and money, it's hard for you to know who is perfected or on the path to perfection.

You can get to know a person's ethics by living with them. But only after a long time, not casually; only when attentive, not when inattentive; and only by the wise, not the witless. You can get to know a person's purity by dealing with them. … You can get to know a person's resilience in times of trouble. … You can get to know a person's wisdom by discussion. But only after a long time, not casually; only when attentive, not when inattentive; and only by the wise, not the witless."

"It's incredible, sir, it's amazing, how well said this was by the Buddha. …

Sir, these are my spies, my undercover agents returning after spying on the country. First they go undercover, then I have them report to me. And now—when they have washed off the dust and dirt, and are nicely bathed and anointed, with hair and beard dressed, and dressed in white—they will amuse themselves, supplied and provided with the five kinds of sensual stimulation."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Don’t strive in every situation, don’t become another’s man. Don’t live depending on another, and don’t use the teaching to make money.”

Ud 6.3

Ud 6.3
The Buddha's Reviewing Paccavekkhaṇasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was sitting reviewing his own giving up of many bad, unskillful qualities, and the many skillful qualities he had fully developed.

Then, knowing the many bad, unskillful qualities that he had given up and the many skillful qualities he had fully developed, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"What was before then was not; what before was not then was. It never was, nor will it be, nor is it found today."

Ud 6.4

Ud 6.4
Followers of Various Other Religions (1st)
Paṭhamanānātitthiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several ascetics, brahmins, and wanderers who followed various other religions were residing in Sāvatthī, holding different views, beliefs, and opinions, relying on different views.

There were some ascetics and brahmins who had this doctrine and view: "The cosmos is eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly."

Others held views such as the following, each regarding their own view as true and others as silly. "The cosmos is not eternal."

"The cosmos is finite."

"The cosmos is infinite."

"The soul and the body are the same thing."

"The soul and the body are different things."

"A realized one still exists after death."

"A realized one no longer exists after death."

"A realized one both still exists and no longer exists after death."

"A realized one neither still exists nor no longer exists after death."

They were arguing, quarreling, and disputing, continually wounding each other with barbed words: "Such is Truth, such is not Truth! Such is not Truth, such is Truth!"

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening. The Buddha said:

"The wanderers of other religions are blind and sightless. They don't understand what is beneficial or what is not beneficial, nor what is the truth and what is not the truth. That's why they are arguing, quarreling, and disputing, continually wounding each other with barbed words.

Once upon a time, mendicants, right here in Sāvatthī there was a certain king. Then the king addressed a man, ‘Please, mister, gather all those blind from birth throughout Sāvatthī and bring them together in one place.’ ‘Yes, Your Majesty,’ that man replied. He did as the king asked, then said to him, ‘Your Majesty, the blind people throughout Sāvatthī have been gathered.’ ‘Well then, my man, show them an elephant.’ ‘Yes, Your Majesty,’ that man replied. He did as the king asked.

To some of the blind people he showed the elephant’s head, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s ear, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s tusk, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s trunk, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s flank, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s leg, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s thigh, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the elephant’s tail, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’ To some of them he showed the tip of the elephant’s tail, saying, ‘Here is the elephant.’

Then he approached the king and said, ‘Your Majesty, the blind people have been shown the elephant. Please go at your convenience.’

Then the king went up to the blind people and said, ‘Have you seen the elephant?’ ‘Yes, Your Majesty, we have been shown the elephant.’ ‘Then tell us, what kind of thing is an elephant?’

The blind people who had been shown the elephant’s head said, ‘Your Majesty, an elephant is like a pot.’

Those who had been shown the ear said, ‘An elephant is like a winnowing fan.’

Those who had been shown the tusk said, ‘An elephant is like a ploughshare.’

Those who had been shown the trunk said, ‘An elephant is like a plough-pole.’

Those who had been shown the flank said, ‘An elephant is like a storehouse.’

Those who had been shown the leg said, ‘An elephant is like a pillar.’

Those who had been shown the thigh said, ‘An elephant is like a mortar.’

Those who had been shown the tail said, ‘An elephant is like a pestle.’

Those who had been shown the tip of the tail said, ‘An elephant is like a broom.’

Saying, ‘Such is an elephant, not such! Such is not an elephant, such is!’ they punched each other with their fists. At that, the king was pleased.

In the same way, mendicants, the wanderers of other religions are blind and sightless. They don't understand what is beneficial or what is not beneficial, nor what is the truth and what is not the truth. That’s why they are arguing, quarreling, and disputing, continually wounding each other with barbed words. ‘Such is Truth, such is not! Such is not Truth, such is!’”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Some ascetics and brahmins, it seems, cling to these things. Arguing, they quarrel, the folk who see just one part.”

Ud 6.5

Ud 6.5
Followers of Various Other Religions (2nd)
Dutiyanānātitthiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several ascetics, brahmins, and wanderers who followed various other religions were residing in Sāvatthī, holding different views, beliefs, and opinions, relying on different views.

There were some ascetics and brahmins who had this doctrine and view: "The self and the cosmos are eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly."

Others held views such as the following, each regarding their own view as true and others as silly. "The self and the cosmos are not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are both eternal and not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are neither eternal nor not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are made by oneself."

"The self and the cosmos are made by another."

"The self and the cosmos are made by both oneself and another."

"The self and the cosmos have arisen by chance, not made by oneself or another."

"Pleasure and pain are eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are both eternal and not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are neither eternal nor not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by oneself, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by another, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by both oneself and another, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain have arisen by chance, not made by oneself or another, and the self and the cosmos."

They were arguing, quarreling, and disputing, continually wounding each other with barbed words: “Such is Truth, such is not Truth! Such is not Truth, such is Truth!”

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Some ascetics and brahmins, it seems, cling to these things. They flounder in mid-stream, without reaching a firm footing.”

Ud 6.6

Ud 6.6
Followers of Various Other Religions (3rd)
Tatiyanānātitthiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several ascetics, brahmins, and wanderers who followed various other religions were residing in Sāvatthī, holding different views, beliefs, and opinions, relying on different views.

There were some ascetics and brahmins who had this doctrine and view: "The self and the cosmos are eternal. This is the only truth, other ideas are silly."

Others held views such as the following, each regarding their own view as true and others as silly. "The self and the cosmos are not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are both eternal and not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are neither eternal nor not eternal."

"The self and the cosmos are made by oneself."

"The self and the cosmos are made by another."

"The self and the cosmos are made by both oneself and another."

"The self and the cosmos have arisen by chance, not made by oneself or another."

"Pleasure and pain are eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are both eternal and not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are neither eternal nor not eternal, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by oneself, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by another, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain are made by both oneself and another, and the self and the cosmos."

"Pleasure and pain have arisen by chance, not made by oneself or another, and the self and the cosmos."

They were arguing, quarreling, and disputing, continually wounding each other with barbed words: ‘Such is Truth, such is not! Such is not Truth, such is Truth!”

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Folk are fixated on the I-maker, which is tied up with the other-maker. There are some who do not realize this, they do not see the dart.

But when they see this dart, they do not think, ‘I make it’, nor ‘another makes it’.

These folk are caught up in conceit, tied by conceit, shackled by conceit. Vehemently defending their views, they don’t escape transmigration.”

Ud 6.7

Ud 6.7
With Subhūti
Subhūtisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Subhūti was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight, having attained the immersion free of placing the mind.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"In whom mental vibrations are cleared away, internally clipped off entirely, perceiving the formless, beyond attachments, having overcome the four yokes, they never return."

Ud 6.8

Ud 6.8
The Courtesan
Gaṇikāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time two gangs were both hopelessly in love with a certain courtesan. Quarreling, arguing, and disputing, they attacked each other with fists, stones, rods, and swords, resulting in death and deadly pain.

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Rājagaha for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"What has been attained and what is to be attained are both strewn over with dust for that one training while still sick. Those for whom the training is the essence, or precepts and observances, celibacy, and service as the essence: this is one extreme. Those who say, 'There's nothing wrong with sensual pleasures': this is the second extreme. Thus these two extremes swell the charnel grounds, while the charnel grounds swell wrong view. Not realizing these two extremes, some get stuck and some overreach. Those who realize these things, who were not found there, who did not conceive by that, there is no cycle of rebirths to be found."

Ud 6.9

Ud 6.9
Hastening By
Upātidhāvantisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was meditating in the open during the dark of night, while oil lamps were burning.

And many moths were falling down and crashing down into the lamps, coming to grief and ruin. The Buddha saw the moths coming to grief.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Hastening by, they miss the essence, sprouting ever more new bonds. Like moths falling in the flame, some have become fixed in what is seen or heard."

Ud 6.10

Ud 6.10
Arising
Uppajjantisutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Venerable Ānanda went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him:

"Sir, so long as the Realized Ones, the perfected ones, the fully awakened Buddhas do not arise in the world, the wanderers of other religions are honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But when the Realized Ones do arise in the world, the wanderers of other religions are no longer honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they do not receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. Now only the Buddha is honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And he receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick."

"That's so true, Ānanda. So long as the Realized Ones do not arise in the world, the wanderers of other religions are honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And they receive robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. But when the Realized Ones do arise in the world, the wanderers of other religions are no longer honored in this way. Now only the Realized One is honored, respected, revered, venerated, and esteemed. And he receives robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And so does the mendicant Saṅgha."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The glow-worm shines so long as the beacon of the sun does not rise. But when the sun has come up, that light is erased and shines no more.

So too the reasoners shine bright so long as the Buddhas don't arise in the world. The reasoners are not purified, nor are their disciples. Having bad views, they are not freed from suffering."

Ud 7.1

Ud 7.1
Bhaddiya the Dwarf (1st)
Paṭhamalakuṇḍakabhaddiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring Venerable Bhaddiya the Dwarf in many ways with a Dhamma talk.

Then after being taught like this Bhaddiya's mind was freed from defilements by not grasping.

The Buddha saw what had happened.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Above, below, everywhere free, not contemplating 'I am this'. Freed like this, he has crossed the flood not crossed before, so as to not be reborn."

Ud 7.2

Ud 7.2
Bhaddiya the Dwarf (2nd)
Dutiyalakuṇḍakabhaddiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Sāriputta was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring Venerable Bhaddiya the Dwarf in even more ways with a Dhamma talk, thinking that he was still a trainee.

The Buddha saw what was happening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"They've cut the cycle, gone to the wishless; the streams are dried, they flow no more. Cut, the cycle no longer turns. Just this is the end of suffering."

Ud 7.3

Ud 7.3
Clinging (1st)
Paṭhamasattasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time most of the people in Sāvatthī overly clung to sensual pleasures. Lustful, greedy, tied, infatuated, they lived completely addicted to sensual pleasures.

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him what was happening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Clinging to sensual pleasures, to the chains of the senses, blind to the faults of the fetters, clinging to the chain of the fetters, they'll never cross the flood so vast."

Ud 7.4

Ud 7.4
Clinging (2nd)
Dutiyasattasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time most of the people in Sāvatthī clung to sensual pleasures. Lustful, greedy, tied, infatuated, attached, and blinded, they lived completely addicted to sensual pleasures.

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. He saw how attached the people were.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Blinded by sensual pleasures, wrapped in a net, they are smothered over by craving; bound by the kinsman of the negligent, like a fish caught in a funnel-net trap. They chase old age and death, like a suckling calf its mother."

Ud 7.5

Ud 7.5
Another Discourse with Bhaddiya the Dwarf
Aparalakuṇḍakabhaddiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Venerable Bhaddiya the Dwarf, closely following several mendicants, approached the Buddha.

The Buddha saw Venerable Bhaddiya coming off in the distance—ugly, unsightly, deformed, and despised by most of the mendicants. The Buddha addressed the mendicants:

"Mendicants, do you see this monk coming—ugly, unsightly, deformed, and despised by most of the mendicants?" "Yes, sir."

"That mendicant is very mighty and powerful. It's not easy to find an attainment that he has not already attained. And he has realized the supreme end of the spiritual path in this very life. He lives having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"With flawless wheel and white canopy, the one-spoke chariot rolls on. See it come, untroubled, with stream cut, unbound."

Ud 7.6

Ud 7.6
The Ending of Craving
Taṇhāsaṅkhayasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Koṇḍañña Who Understood was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight, reviewing the freedom through the ending of craving.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"There is no root or ground or leaves for them, so where would creepers sprout from? That wise one is released from bonds: who is worthy to criticize them? Even the gods praise them, and by Brahmā, too, they're praised."

Ud 7.7

Ud 7.7
The Ending of Proliferation
Papañcakhayasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was sitting reviewing his own giving up of the judgments that emerge from the proliferation of perceptions.

Then, understanding his own giving up of the judgments that emerge from the proliferation of perceptions, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"There is no proliferation remaining in those who have gone beyond the reins and cross-bar. The sage who lives without craving is never scorned by the world with its gods."

Ud 7.8

Ud 7.8
Kaccāna
Kaccānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Venerable Mahākaccāna was sitting not far from the Buddha, cross-legged, with his body straight and mindfulness of the body well-established internally in his presence.

The Buddha saw him meditating there.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"Their mindfulness would always be established in the body, constant: 'It might not be, and it might not be mine, It will not be, and it will not be mine.' Meditating stage by stage on that, in time they'd cross over clinging."

Ud 7.9

Ud 7.9
The Well
Udapānasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Mallas together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at a brahmin town of the Mallas named Thūṇa. The brahmins and householders of Thūṇa heard: “It seems the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—while wandering in the land of the Mallas has arrived at Thūṇa, together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants.” They filled the well with grass and chaff right to the top, thinking, “Don’t let these shavelings, these fake ascetics drink the water.”

And then the Buddha left the road, went to the root of a tree, and sat down on the seat spread out. When he was seated he said to Venerable Ānanda: “Please, Ānanda, fetch me some water from that well.”

When he said this, Venerable Ānanda said to the Buddha, “Just now, sir, the brahimns and householders of Thūṇa filled the well with grass and chaff right to the top, thinking, ‘Don’t let these shavelings, these fake ascetics drink the water.’”

For a second time, and for a third time, the Buddha said to Ānanda: “Please, Ānanda, fetch me some water from that well.” “Yes, sir,” replied Ānanda. Taking his bowl he went to the well. As he approached the well, all the grass and chaff erupted out of the well-mouth. The water stood transparent, unclouded, and clear right up to the top, seeming to overflow.

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “Oh, how incredible, how amazing! The Realized One has such psychic power and might! For when I approached this well, all the grass and chaff erupted out of the well-mouth. The water stood transparent, unclouded, and clear right up to the top, seeming to overflow.” Gathering a bowl of drinking water he went back to the Buddha, and said to him, “It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! The Realized One has such psychic power and might! For when I approached that well, all the grass and chaff erupted out of the well-mouth. The water stood transparent, unclouded, and clear right up to the top, seeming to overflow. Drink the water, Blessed One! Drink the water, Holy One!”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“What difference would a well make if water is there all the time? Having cut off craving at the root, who would go out on a quest?”

Ud 7.10

Ud 7.10
King Udena
Utenasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita's Monastery. Now at that time, while King Udena was visiting a park, his royal compound burned down. Five hundred women died, with Queen Sāmāvatī at their head.

Then several mendicants robed up in the morning and, taking their bowls and robes, entered Kosambī for alms. Then, after the meal, when they returned from almsround, they went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and told him had happened. They asked the Buddha, "Sir, where have those laywomen been reborn in the next life?"

"Among those laywomen there were stream-enterers, once-returners, and non-returners. None of those laywomen died without some fruit of the practice."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The world is caught up in delusion, but is looked on as making sense. The fool caught up in attachment is surrounded by darkness. It seems as if eternal, but for one who sees, there is nothing."

Ud 8.1

Ud 8.1
About Extinguishment (1st)
Paṭhamanibbānapaṭisaṁyuttasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk about extinguishment. And those mendicants were paying attention, applying the mind, concentrating wholeheartedly, and actively listening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"There is, mendicants, that dimension where there is no earth, no water, no fire, no wind; no dimension of infinite space, no dimension of infinite consciousness, no dimension of nothingness, no dimension of neither perception nor non-perception; no this world, no other world, no moon or sun. There, mendicants, I say there is no coming or going or remaining or passing away or reappearing. It is not established, does not proceed, and has no support. Just this is the end of suffering."

Ud 8.2

Ud 8.2
About Extinguishment (2nd)
Dutiyanibbānapaṭisaṁyuttasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk about extinguishment. And those mendicants were paying attention, applying the mind, concentrating wholeheartedly, and actively listening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"It's hard to see what they call the 'uninclined', for the truth is not easy to see. For one who has penetrated craving, who knows and sees, there is nothing."

Ud 8.3

Ud 8.3
About Extinguishment (3rd)
Tatiyanibbānapaṭisaṁyuttasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk about extinguishment. And those mendicants were paying attention, applying the mind, concentrating wholeheartedly, and actively listening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"There is, mendicants, that which is free of rebirth, free of what has been produced, made, and conditioned. If there were nothing free of rebirth, free of what has been produced, made, and conditioned, then you would find no escape here from rebirth, from what has been produced, made, and conditioned. But since there is that which is free of rebirth, free of what has been produced, made, and conditioned, an escape is found from rebirth, from what has been produced, made, and conditioned."

Ud 8.4

Ud 8.4
About Extinguishment (4th)
Catutthanibbānapaṭisaṁyuttasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Buddha was educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the mendicants with a Dhamma talk about extinguishment. And those mendicants were paying attention, applying the mind, concentrating wholeheartedly, and actively listening.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"For the dependent there is agitation. For the independent there's no agitation. When there's no agitation there is tranquility. When there is tranquility there's no inclination. When there's no inclination, there's no coming and going. When there's no coming and going, there's no passing away and reappearing. When there's no passing away and reappearing there's no this world or world beyond or between the two. Just this is the end of suffering."

Ud 8.5

Ud 8.5
With Cunda
Cundasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Mallas together with a large Saṅgha when he arrived at Pāvā. There he stayed in Cunda the smith's mango grove.

Cunda heard that the Buddha had arrived and was staying in his mango grove. Then he went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. The Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired him with a Dhamma talk. Then Cunda said to the Buddha, "Sir, may the Buddha together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow's meal from me." The Buddha consented with silence.

Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, Cunda got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving. And when the night had passed Cunda had delicious fresh and cooked foods prepared in his own home, and plenty of pork on the turn. Then he had the Buddha informed of the time, saying, "Sir, it's time. The meal is ready."

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the home of Cunda together with the mendicant Saṅgha, where he sat on the seat spread out and addressed Cunda, "Cunda, please serve me with the pork on the turn that you've prepared. And serve the mendicant Saṅgha with the other foods." "Yes, sir," replied Cunda, and did as he was asked.

Then the Buddha addressed Cunda, "Cunda, any pork on the turn that's left over, you should bury it in a pit. I don't see anyone in this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—who could properly digest it except for the Realized One." "Yes, sir," replied Cunda. He did as he was asked, then came back to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down to one side. Then the Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired him with a Dhamma talk, after which he got up from his seat and left.

After the Buddha had eaten Cunda's meal, he fell severely ill with bloody dysentery, struck by dreadful pains, close to death. But he endured unbothered, with mindfulness and situational awareness.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, "Come, Ānanda, let's go to Kusinārā." "Yes, sir," Ānanda replied.

I've heard that after eating the meal of Cunda the smith, the wise one fell severely ill, with pains, close to death.

A severe sickness struck the Teacher who had eaten the pork on the turn. While still purging the Buddha said: “I’ll go to the citadel of Kusinārā.”

Then the Buddha left the road and went to the root of a certain tree, where he addressed Ānanda, “Please, Ānanda, fold my outer robe in four and spread it out for me. I am tired and will sit down.” “Yes, sir,” replied Ānanda, and did as he was asked. The Buddha sat on the seat spread out, and said to Venerable Ānanda, “Please, Ānanda, fetch me some water. I am thirsty and will drink.”

When he said this, Venerable Ānanda said to the Buddha, “Sir, just now around five hundred carts have passed by. The shallow water has been churned up by their wheels, and it flows cloudy and murky. The Kakutthā river is not far away, with clear, sweet, cool water, clean, with smooth banks, delightful. There the Buddha can drink and cool his limbs.”

For a second time, and a third time, the Buddha said to Ānanda, “Please, Ānanda, fetch me some water. I am thirsty and will drink.” “Yes, sir,” replied Ānanda. Taking his bowl he went to the river. Now, though the shallow water in that river had been churned up by wheels, and flowed cloudy and murky, when Ānanda approached it flowed transparent, clear, and unclouded.

Then Venerable Ānanda thought, “Oh, how incredible, how amazing! The Realized One has such psychic power and might! For though the shallow water in that river had been churned up by wheels, and flowed cloudy and murky, when I approached it flowed transparent, clear, and unclouded.” Gathering a bowl of drinking water he went back to the Buddha, and said to him, “It’s incredible, sir, it’s amazing! The Realized One has such psychic power and might! For though the shallow water in that river had been churned up by wheels, and flowed cloudy and murky, when I approached it flowed transparent, clear, and unclouded. Drink the water, Blessed One! Drink the water, Holy One!”

So the Buddha drank the water. Then the Buddha together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants went to the Kakutthā River. He plunged into the river and bathed and drank. And when he had emerged, he went to the mango grove, where he addressed Venerable Cundaka, “Please, Cundaka, fold my outer robe in four and spread it out for me. I am tired and will lie down.”

“Yes, sir,” replied Cundaka, and did as he was asked. And then the Buddha laid down in the lion’s posture—on the right side, placing one foot on top of the other—mindful and aware, and focused on the time of getting up. But Cundaka sat down right there in front of the Buddha.

Having gone to Kakutthā Creek, whose water was transparent, sweet, and clear, the Teacher, being tired, plunged in, the Realized One, without compare in the world.

And after bathing and drinking the Teacher emerged. Before the group of mendicants, in the middle, the Buddha, the Teacher who rolled forth the present dispensation, the great seer went to the mango grove. He addressed the mendicant named Cundaka: “Spread out my folded robe so I can lie down.”

The evolved one urged Cunda, who quickly spread the folded robe. The Teacher lay down so tired, while Cunda sat there before him.

Then the Buddha said to Venerable Ānanda, “Now it may happen, Ānanda, that others may give rise to some regret for Cunda the smith: ‘It’s your loss, friend Cunda, it’s your misfortune, in that the Realized One became fully extinguished after eating his last almsmeal from you.’ You should get rid of remorse in Cunda the smith like this:

‘You’re fortunate, friend Cunda, you’re so very fortunate, in that the Realized One became fully extinguished after eating his last almsmeal from you. I have heard and learned this in the presence of the Buddha. There are two almsmeal offerings that have identical fruit and result, and are more fruitful and beneficial than other almsmeal offerings. What two? The almsmeal after eating which a Realized One understands the supreme perfect awakening; and the almsmeal after eating which he becomes fully extinguished in the element of extinguishment with nothing left over. These two almsmeal offerings have identical fruit and result, and are more fruitful and beneficial than other almsmeal offerings.

You’ve accumulated a deed that leads to long life, beauty, happiness, fame, heaven, and sovereignty.’ You should dispel remorse in Cunda the smith like this.”

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“A giver’s merit grows; enmity doesn’t build up when you have self-control. A skillful person gives up bad things—with the end of greed, hate, and delusion, they’re extinguished.”

Ud 8.6

Ud 8.6
The Layfolk of Pāṭali Village
Pāṭaligāmiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering in the land of the Magadhans together with a large Saṅgha of mendicants when he arrived at the village of Pāṭali. The lay followers of Pāṭali Village heard that he had arrived. So they went to see him, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, “Sir, please consent to come to our guest house.” The Buddha consented with silence.

Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, the lay followers of Pāṭali Village got up from their seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on their right. Then they went to the guest house, where they spread carpets all over, prepared seats, set up a water jar, and placed an oil lamp. Then they went back to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and told him of their preparations, saying: “Please, sir, come at your convenience.”

In the morning, the Buddha robed up and, taking his bowl and robe, went to the guest house together with the Saṅgha of mendicants. Having washed his feet he entered the guest house and sat against the central column facing east. The Saṅgha of mendicants also washed their feet, entered the guest house, and sat against the west wall facing east, with the Buddha right in front of them. The lay followers of Pāṭali Village also washed their feet, entered the guest house, and sat against the east wall facing west, with the Buddha right in front of them. Then the Buddha addressed them:

“Householders, there are these five drawbacks for an unethical person because of their failure in ethics. What five? Firstly, an unethical person loses substantial wealth on account of negligence. This is the first drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person gets a bad reputation. This is the second drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person enters any kind of assembly timid and embarrassed, whether it’s an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. This is the third drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person feels lost when they die. This is the fourth drawback.

Furthermore, an unethical person, when their body breaks up, after death, is reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. This is the fifth drawback. These are the five drawbacks for an unethical person because of their failure in ethics.

There are these five benefits for an ethical person because of their accomplishment in ethics. What five? Firstly, an ethical person gains substantial wealth on account of diligence. This is the first benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person gets a good reputation. This is the second benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person enters any kind of assembly bold and self-assured, whether it's an assembly of aristocrats, brahmins, householders, or ascetics. This is the third benefit.

Furthermore, an ethical person dies not feeling lost. This is the fourth benefit.

Furthermore, when an ethical person's body breaks up, after death, they're reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm. This is the fifth benefit. These are the five benefits for an ethical person because of their accomplishment in ethics."

The Buddha spent much of the night educating, encouraging, firing up, and inspiring the lay followers of Pāṭali Village with a Dhamma talk. Then he dismissed them, "The night is getting late, householders. Please go at your convenience." And then the lay followers of Pāṭali Village approved and agreed with what the Buddha said. They got up from their seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on their right, before leaving. Soon after they left the Buddha entered a private cubicle.

Now at that time the Magadhan ministers Sunidha and Vassakāra were building a citadel at Pāṭali Village to keep the Vajjis out. At that time thousands of deities were taking possession of building sites in Pāṭali Village. Illustrious rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by illustrious deities. Middling rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by middling deities. Lesser rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by lesser deities.

With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, the Buddha saw those deities taking possession of building sites in Pāṭali Village, and the people building houses in accord with the station of the deities. The Buddha rose at the crack of dawn and addressed Ānanda,

"Ānanda, who is building a citadel at Pāṭali Village?" "Sir, the Magadhan ministers Sunidha and Vassakāra are building a citadel to keep the Vajjis out." "It's as if they were building the citadel in consultation with the gods of the Thirty-Three. With clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, I saw those deities taking possession of building sites. Illustrious rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by illustrious deities. Middling rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by middling deities. Lesser rulers or royal ministers inclined to build houses at sites possessed by lesser deities. As far as the civilized region extends, as far as the trading zone extends, this will be the chief city: the Pāṭaliputta trade center. But Pāṭaliputta will face three threats: from fire, flood, and dissension."

Then the Magadhan ministers Sunidha and Vassakāra approached the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they stood to one side and said, "Would Mister Gotama together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept today's meal from me?"

Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, they went to their own guest house, where they had delicious fresh and cooked foods prepared. Then they had the Buddha informed of the time, saying, “It’s time, Mister Gotama, the meal is ready.”

Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to their guest house together with the mendicant Saṅgha, where he sat on the seat spread out. Then Sunidha and Vassakāra served and satisfied the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha with their own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods.

When the Buddha had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, Sunidha and Vassakāra took a low seat and sat to one side. The Buddha expressed his appreciation with these verses:

“In the place he makes his dwelling, having fed the astute and the virtuous here, the restrained spiritual practitioners, he should dedicate an offering to the deities there. Venerated, they venerate him; honored, they honor him.

After that they have compassion for him, like a mother for the child at her breast. A man beloved of the deities always sees nice things.”

When the Buddha had expressed his appreciation to Sunidha and Vassakāra with these verses, he got up from his seat and left.

Sunidha and Vassakāra followed behind the Buddha, thinking, “The gate through which the ascetic Gotama departs today shall be named the Gotama Gate. The ford at which he crosses the Ganges River shall be named the Gotama Ford.”

Then the gate through which the Buddha departed was named the Gotama Gate. Then the Buddha came to the Ganges River. Now at that time the Ganges was full to the brim so a crow could drink from it. Wanting to cross from the near to the far shore, some people were seeking a boat, some a dinghy, while some were tying up a raft. But, as easily as a strong person would extend or contract their arm, the Buddha, together with the mendicant Saṅgha, vanished from the near shore and landed on the far shore.

He saw all those people wanting to cross over.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Those who cross a deluge or stream have built a bridge and left the marshes behind. While some people are still tying a raft, intelligent people have crossed over.”

Ud 8.7

Ud 8.7
A Fork in the Road
Dvidhāpathasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was traveling along a road in the Kosalan lands with Venerable Nāgasamāla as his second monk. Nāgasamāla saw a fork in the road and said to the Buddha, “Sir, this is the road, let us go this way.” But when he said this the Buddha responded, “Nāgasamāla, this is the road, let us go this way.”

For a second time, and a third time Nāgasamāla said to the Buddha, “Sir, this is the road, let us go this way.” And for a third time the Buddha responded, “Nāgasamāla, this is the road, let us go this way.” Then Nāgasamāla put the Buddha’s bowl and robes down on the ground right there and left, saying, “Sir, here are your bowl and robes.”

Then as Nāgasamāla was going down that road, he was set upon by bandits who struck him with fists and feet, broke his bowl, and tore up his outer robe. Then Nāgasamāla—with his bowl broken and his outer robe torn—went to the Buddha and told him what had happened.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

“Walking together, dwelling as one, the knowledge master mixes with foolish folk.
Knowing this, they give up wickedness, like a milk-drinking heron the water.”

Ud 8.8

Ud 8.8
With Visākhā
Visākhāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Now at that time the dear and beloved granddaughter of Visākhā Migāra's Mother had just passed away. Then, in the middle of the day, Visākhā with wet clothes and hair went to the Buddha, bowed, and sat down. The Buddha said to her,

"So, Visākhā, where are you coming from in the middle of the day with wet clothes and hair?" "Sir, my beloved granddaughter has just passed away. That's why I came here in the middle of the day with wet clothes and hair." "Visākhā, would you like as many children and grandchildren as there are people in the whole of Sāvatthī?" "I would, sir."

"But Visākhā, how many people pass away each day in Sāvatthī?" "Every day, sir, there are ten people passing away in Sāvatthī. Or else there are nine, eight, seven, six, five, four, three, two, or at least one person who passes away every day in Sāvatthī. Sāvatthī is never without someone passing away."

"What do you think, Visākhā? Would there ever be a time when your clothes and hair were not wet?" "No, sir. Enough, sir, with so many children and grandchildren."

"Those who have a hundred loved ones, Visākhā, have a hundred sufferings. Those who have ninety loved ones, or eighty, seventy, sixty, fifty, forty, thirty, twenty, ten, nine, eight, seven, six, five, four, three, two, or one loved one have one suffering. Those who have no loved ones have no suffering. They are free of sorrow, stains, and anguish I say."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"All the sorrows and lamentations and the countless forms of suffering in the world occur because of those that we love; without loved ones they do not occur.

That's why those who have no loved ones at all in the world are happy and free of grief. So aspiring to the sorrowless and stainless, have no loved ones in the world at all."

Ud 8.9

Ud 8.9
With Dabba (1st)
Paṭhamadabbasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Then Venerable Dabba the Mallian went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him: "Holy One, it is the time for my full extinguishment." "Please, Dabba, do as you see fit."

Then Dabba rose from his seat, bowed and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right. Then he rose into the air and, sitting cross-legged in the sky, entered and withdrew from the fire element before becoming fully extinguished.

Then when he became fully extinguished while sitting in the sky, his body burning and combusting left neither ashes nor soot to be found. It's like when ghee or oil blaze and burn, and neither ashes nor soot are found.

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"The body is broken up, perception has ceased, all feelings have become cool; choices are stilled, and consciousness come to an end."

Ud 8.10

Ud 8.10
Dabba (2nd)
Dutiyadabbasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!" "Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, when Dabba the Mallian rose into the air and, sitting cross-legged in the sky, entered and withdrew from the fire element before becoming fully extinguished, his body burning and combusting left neither ashes nor soot to be found. It's like when ghee or oil blaze and burn, and neither ashes nor soot are found. In the same way, when Dabba the Mallian rose into the air and, sitting cross-legged in the sky, entered and withdrew from the fire element before becoming fully extinguished, his body burning and combusting left neither ashes nor soot to be found."

Then, understanding this matter, on that occasion the Buddha expressed this heartfelt sentiment:

"When an iron bar is struck by heat and flame the heat gradually dissipates, and where it has gone no-one knows.

In the same way for the rightly released, who have crossed the flood of sensual bonds, and attained unshakable happiness, where they have gone cannot be found."

The Heartfelt Sayings are finished.

Iti - Itivuttaka

Iti 1

Iti 1
Greed
Lobhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Greed is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by greed beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that greed, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 2

Iti 2
Hate
Dosasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Hate is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by hate beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that hate, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 3

Iti 3
Delusion
Mohasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Delusion is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by delusion beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that delusion, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 4

Iti 4
Anger
Kodhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Anger is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by anger beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that anger, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 5

Iti 5
Disdain
Makkhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing. and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Disdain is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.” The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by disdain beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that disdain, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 6

Iti 6
Conceit
Mānasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, give up one thing and I guarantee you non-return. What one thing? Conceit is the one thing. Give it up, and I guarantee you non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Drunk on conceit, beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that conceit, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 7

Iti 7
Complete Understanding of All
Sabbapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding the all, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding the all, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

That is what the Buddha said. On this it is said:

“Those who know the all as all, are not attracted to anything. They completely understand all, and have risen above all suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 8

Iti 8
Complete Understanding of Conceit
Mānapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding conceit, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding conceit, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“These folk are caught up in conceit, tied by conceit, delighting in existence. Not completely understanding conceit, they return in future lives.

Those who have given up conceit, freed in the ending of conceit, vanquishers of the tie of conceit, have risen above all suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 9

Iti 9
Complete Understanding of Greed
Lobhapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding greed, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding greed, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by greed beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that greed, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 10

Iti 10
Complete Understanding of Hate
Dosapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding hate, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding hate, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by hate beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that hate, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 11

Iti 11
Complete Understanding of Delusion
Mohapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding delusion, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding delusion, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by delusion beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that delusion, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 12

Iti 12
Complete Understanding of Anger
Kodhapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding anger, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding anger, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by anger beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that anger, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 13

Iti 13
Complete Understanding of Disdain
Makkhapariññāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without directly knowing and completely understanding disdain, without dispassion for it and giving it up, you can’t end suffering. By directly knowing and completely understanding disdain, having dispassion for it and giving it up, you can end suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When overcome by disdain beings go to a bad place. Having rightly understood that disdain, the discerning give it up. Once they’ve given it up, they never return to this world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 14

Iti 14
The Shroud of Ignorance
Avijjānīvaraṇasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I do not see a single shroud, shrouded by which people wander and transmigrate for a long time like the shroud of ignorance. Shrouded by ignorance, people wander and transmigrate for a long time.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“There is no other thing that shrouds people like ignorance. Veiled by delusion, they transmigrate day and night.

Those who have given up delusion, shattering the mass of darkness, wander no more, the root is not found in them.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 15

Iti 15
The Fetter of Craving
Taṇhāsaṁyojanasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I do not see a single fetter, fettered by which people wander and transmigrate for a long time like the fetter of craving. Fettered by craving, people wander and transmigrate for a long time.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Craving is a person’s partner as they transmigrate on this long journey. They go from this state to another, but don’t escape transmigration.

Knowing this danger, that craving is the cause of suffering—rid of craving, free of grasping, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 16

Iti 16
A Trainee (1st)
Paṭhamasekhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Taking into account interior factors, mendicants, I do not see a single one that is so very helpful as rational application of mind for a trainee mendicant who hasn’t achieved their heart’s desire, but lives aspiring to the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. A mendicant rationally applying the mind gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“There is nothing so helpful for a trainee mendicant aspiring for the ultimate goal as rational application of mind. Striving rationally, a mendicant attains the end of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 17

Iti 17
A Trainee (2nd)
Dutiyasekhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Taking into account exterior factors, mendicants, I do not see a single one that is so very helpful as good friendship for a trainee mendicant who hasn’t achieved their heart’s desire, but lives aspiring to the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. A mendicant who has good friends gives up the unskillful and develops the skillful.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A mendicant with good friends is reverential and respectful when their friends are speaking, aware and mindful. Gradually they would attain the ending of all fetters.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 18

Iti 18
Schism in the Saṅgha
Saṁghabhedasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“One thing, mendicants, arises in the world for the hurt and unhappiness of the people, for the harm, hurt, and suffering of gods and humans. What one thing? Schism in the Saṅgha. When the Saṅgha is split, they argue, insult, block, and reject each other. This doesn’t inspire confidence in those without it, and it causes some with confidence to change their minds.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A schismatic remains for the eon in a place of loss, in hell. Taking a stand against the teaching, favoring factions, they ruin their sanctuary. After causing schism in a harmonious Saṅgha, they burn in hell for an eon.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 19

Iti 19
Harmony in the Saṅgha
Saṁghasāmaggīsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“One thing, mendicants, arises in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans. What one thing? Harmony in the Saṅgha. When the Saṅgha is in harmony, they don’t argue, insult, block, or reject each other. This inspires confidence in those without it, and increases confidence in those who have it.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A Saṅgha in harmony is happy, as is support for those in harmony. Taking a stand on the teaching, favoring harmony, they ruin no sanctuary. After creating harmony in the Saṅgha, they rejoice in heaven for an eon.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 20

Iti 20
A Corrupted Mind
Paduṭṭhacittasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person whose mind is corrupted, I understand: ‘If this person were to die right now, they would be cast down to hell.’ Why is that? Because their mind is corrupted. Corruption of mind is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Knowing a person’s corrupted mind, the Buddha explained this matter in the mendicants’ presence.

If that person were to die at this time, they’d be reborn in hell, for their mind is corrupted.

Such a person is cast down as surely as if they’d been carried off and put there. For corruption of mind is the reason sentient beings go to a bad place.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 21

Iti 21
A Pure Mind
Pasannacittasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when I’ve comprehended the mind of a person whose mind is pure, I understand: ‘If this person were to die right now, they would be raised up to heaven.’ Why is that? Because their mind is pure. Purity of mind is the reason why some sentient beings, when their body breaks up, after death, are reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Knowing a person’s pure mind, the Buddha explained this matter in the mendicants’ presence.

If that person were to die at this time, they’d be reborn in heaven, for their mind is pure.

Such a person is raised up as surely as if they’d been carried and put there. For purity of mind is the reason sentient beings go to a good place.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 22

Iti 22
The Benefits of Love
Mettasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, don’t fear good deeds. For ‘good deeds’ is a term for happiness, for what is likable, desirable, and agreeable. I recall undergoing for a long time the likable, desirable, and agreeable results of good deeds performed over a long time. As a result, for seven eons of the cosmos contracting and expanding I didn’t return to this world again. As the eon contracted I went to the realm of streaming radiance. As it expanded I was reborn in an empty mansion of Brahmā.

There I was Brahmā, the Great Brahmā, the vanquisher, the unvanquished, the universal seer, the wielder of power. I was Sakka, lord of gods, thirty-six times. Many hundreds of times I was a king, a wheel-turning monarch, a just and principled king. My dominion extended to all four sides, I achieved stability in the country, and I possessed the seven treasures. Not to mention regional kingship!

Then I thought, ‘Of what deed of mine is this the fruit and result, that I am now so mighty and powerful?’ Then I thought, ‘It is the fruit and result of three kinds of deeds: giving, self-control, and restraint.’”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“One should practice only good deeds, whose happy outcome stretches ahead. Giving and moral conduct, developing a mind of love:

having developed these three things yielding happiness, that astute one is reborn in a happy, pleasing world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 23

Iti 23
Both Kinds of Benefit
Ubhayatthasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“This one thing, mendicants, when developed and cultivated, secures equal benefits for both the present life and lives to come. What one thing? Diligence in skillful qualities. This is the one thing that, when developed and cultivated, secures equal benefits for both the present life and lives to come.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The astute praise diligence in making merit. Being diligent, an astute person secures both benefits:

the benefit in this life, and in lives to come. A wise one, comprehending the meaning, is said to be astute.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 24

Iti 24
A Heap of Bones
Aṭṭhipuñjasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, one person roaming and transmigrating for an eon would amass a heap of bones the size of this Mount Vepulla, if they were gathered together and not lost.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“If the bones of a single person for a single eon were gathered up, they’d make a pile the size of a mountain: so said the great seer.

And this is declared to be as huge as Mount Vepulla, higher than the Vulture’s Peak near the Mountainfold of the Magadhans.

But then, with right understanding, a person sees the noble truths—suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

After roaming on seven times at most, that person makes an end of suffering, with the ending of all fetters.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 25

Iti 25
Lying Musāvādasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, for an individual who transgresses in one thing, there is no bad deed they would not do, I say. What one thing? It is this: telling a deliberate lie.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When a person, spurning the hereafter, transgresses in just one thing—lying—there is no evil they would not do.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 26

Iti 26
Giving
Dānasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, if sentient beings only knew, as I do, the fruit of giving and sharing, they would not eat without first giving, and the stain of stinginess would not occupy their minds. They would not eat without sharing even their last mouthful, their last morsel, so long as there was someone to receive it. It is because sentient beings do not know, as I do, the fruit of giving and sharing, that they eat without first giving, and the stain of stinginess occupies their minds.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“If sentient beings only knew how great is the fruit of giving and sharing as taught by the great seer!

Rid of the stain of stinginess, with clear and confident heart, they would duly give to the noble ones, where a gift is very fruitful.

Having given food in abundance to those worthy of a religious donation, after passing from the human realm, the givers go to heaven.

And when they have arrived there in heaven, they enjoy all the pleasures they desire. The generous enjoy the fruit of giving and sharing.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 27

Iti 27
The Meditation on Love
Mettābhāvanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, of all the grounds for making worldly merit, none are worth a sixteenth part of the heart’s release by love. Surpassing them, the heart’s release by love shines and glows and radiates.

It’s like how the radiance of all the stars is not worth a sixteenth part of the moon’s radiance. Surpassing them, the moon’s radiance shines and glows and radiates. In the same way, of all the grounds for making worldly merit, none are worth a sixteenth part of the heart’s release by love. Surpassing them, the heart’s release by love shines and glows and radiates.

It’s like the time after the rainy season when the sky is clear and cloudless. And when the sun rises, it dispels all the darkness from the sky as it shines and glows and radiates. In the same way, of all the grounds for making worldly merit, none are worth a sixteenth part of the heart’s release by love. Surpassing them, the heart’s release by love shines and glows and radiates.

It’s like how after the rainy season the sky is clear and cloudless. At the crack of dawn, the Morning Star shines and glows and radiates. In the same way, of all the grounds for making worldly merit, none are worth a sixteenth part of the heart’s release by love. Surpassing them, the heart’s release by love shines and glows and radiates.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A mindful one who develops limitless love weakens the fetters, seeing the ending of attachments.

Loving just one creature with a hateless heart makes you a good person. Compassionate for all creatures, a noble one creates abundant merit.

The royal potentates conquered this land and traveled around sponsoring sacrifices—horse sacrifice, human sacrifice, the sacrifices of the ‘casting of the yoke-pin’, the ‘royal soma drinking’, and the ‘unbarred’.

These are not worth a sixteenth part of the mind developed with love, as starlight cannot rival the moon.

Don’t kill or cause others to kill, don’t conquer or encourage others to conquer, with love for all living creatures—you’ll have no enmity for anyone.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 28

Iti 28
Living in Suffering
Dukkhavihārasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has two qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth. What two? Not guarding the sense doors and eating too much. When a mendicant has these two qualities they live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and likewise mind: a mendicant who leaves these sense doors unguarded—immoderate in eating, sense faculties unrestrained—reaps suffering both physical and mental.

Burning in body, burning in mind, by day or by night such a person lives in suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 29

Iti 29
Living in Happiness
Sukhavihārasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has two qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth. What two? Guarding the sense doors and moderation in eating. When a mendicant has these two qualities they live happily in the present life—without distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and likewise mind: a mendicant who makes these sense doors well guarded—eating in moderation, restrained in the sense faculties—reaps happiness both physical and mental.

Not burning in body, not burning in mind, by day or by night such a person lives in happiness.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 30

Iti 30
Mortifying
Tapanīyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“These two things, mendicants, are mortifying. What two? It’s when someone hasn’t done good and skillful things that keep them safe, but has done bad, violent, and depraved things. Thinking, ‘I haven’t done good things’, they’re mortified. Thinking, ‘I have done bad things’, they’re mortified. These are the two things that are mortifying.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Having done bad things by way of body, speech, and mind, and whatever else is corrupt;

not having done good deeds, and having done many bad, when their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 31

Iti 31
Not Mortifying
Atapanīyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“These two things, mendicants, are not mortifying. What two? It’s when someone has done good and skillful things that keep them safe, but has not done bad, violent, and depraved things. Thinking, ‘I have done good things’, they’re not mortified. Thinking, ‘I haven’t done bad things’, they’re not mortified. These are the two things that are not mortifying.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Having given up bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and whatever else is corrupt;

not having done bad deeds, and having done many good, when their body breaks up, that wise person is reborn in heaven.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 32

Iti 32
Ethics (1st)
Paṭhamasīlasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, a person with two qualities is cast down to hell. What two? Bad conduct and bad view. A person who has these two qualities is cast down to hell.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“If a person possesses these two qualities—bad conduct and bad views—when their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 33

Iti 33
Ethics (2nd)
Dutiyasīlasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, a person with two qualities is raised up to heaven. What two? Excellent conduct and excellent view. A person who has these two qualities is is raised up to heaven.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“If a person possesses these two qualities—excellent conduct and excellent views—when their body breaks up, that wise person is reborn in heaven.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 34

Iti 34
Keen
Ātāpīsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, without being keen and prudent a mendicant can’t achieve awakening, extinguishment, and the supreme sanctuary from the yoke. But if a mendicant is keen and prudent they can achieve awakening, extinguishment, and the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Neither keen nor prudent, lazy, lacking energy, full of dullness and drowsiness, unconscientious, lacking regard for others, such a mendicant is incapable of experiencing the highest awakening.

One who is mindful, alert, meditative, keen, prudent, and diligent, having cut the fetter of birth and old age, would experience supreme awakening in this very life.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 35

Iti 35
Deceit and Flattery
Paṭhamajananakuhanasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, this spiritual life is not lived for the sake of deceiving people or flattering them, nor for the benefit of possessions, honor, or popularity, nor thinking, ‘So let people know about me!’ This spiritual life is lived for the sake of restraint and giving up.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The Buddha taught the spiritual life not because of tradition, but for the sake of restraint and giving up, and because it culminates in extinguishment.

This is the path followed by the great souls, the great seers. Those who practice it as it was taught by the Buddha doing the teacher’s bidding, make an end of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 36

Iti 36
Deceit and Flattery
Dutiyajananakuhanasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, this spiritual life is not lived for the sake of deceiving people or flattering them, nor for the benefit of possessions, honor, or popularity, nor thinking, ‘So let people know about me!’ This spiritual life is lived for the sake of direct knowledge and complete understanding.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The Buddha taught the spiritual life not because of tradition, but for the sake of insight and understanding, and because it culminates in extinguishment.

This is the path followed by the great souls, the great seers. Those who practice it as it was taught by the Buddha doing the teacher’s bidding, make an end of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 37

Iti 37
Happiness
Somanassasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when a mendicant has two qualities they’re full of joy and happiness in the present life, and they have laid the groundwork for ending the defilements. What two? Being inspired at inspiring places, and making a suitable effort when inspired. When a mendicant has these two qualities they’re full of joy and happiness in the present life, and they have laid the groundwork for ending the defilements.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“At inspiring places an astute person should be inspired; a keen and alert mendicant should examine with wisdom.

A mendicant living like this, with keen energy, peaceful not restless, devoted to serenity of heart, attains the ending of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 38

Iti 38
Thoughts
Vitakkasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Two thoughts, mendicants, often occur to the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha: the thought of sanctuary, and that of seclusion. The Realized One loves kindness and delights in it, so this thought often occurs to him: ‘Through this behavior, I shall not hurt any creature firm or frail.’

The Realized One loves seclusion and delights in it, so this thought often occurs to him: ‘What is unskillful has been given up.’

So, mendicants, you too should love kindness and delight in it, then this thought will often occur to you: ‘Through this behavior, I shall not hurt any creature firm or frail.’

You too should love seclusion and delight in it, then this thought will often occur to you: ‘What is unskillful? What is not given up? What should I give up?’”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Two thoughts occur to him, the Realized One, the bearer of the unbearable: first mentioned was thought of sanctuary, then the second made clear was seclusion.

Dispeller of darkness, the great seer has crossed over: the attained, the master, the undefiled. In the midst of it all, he is freed in the ending of craving; that sage bears his final body. He has disposed of Māra, I declare, and gone beyond old age.

Standing high on a rocky mountain, you can see the people all around. In just the same way, the all-seer, so intelligent, having ascended the Temple of Truth, rid of sorrow, looks upon the people swamped with sorrow, oppressed by rebirth and old age.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 39

Iti 39
Teaching
Desanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha has two approaches to teaching Dhamma. What two? ‘See evil as evil’—this is the first approach to teaching Dhamma. ‘Having seen evil as evil, be disillusioned, dispassionate, and freed from it’—this is the second approach to teaching Dhamma. The Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha has these two approaches to teaching Dhamma.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“See the two approaches for explaining the Dhamma used by the Realized One, the Buddha, compassionate for all beings:

see that that is evil, and be dispassionate towards it. Then, with a mind free of desire, you will make an end of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 40

Iti 40
Knowledge
Vijjāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, ignorance precedes the attainment of unskillful qualities, with lack of conscience and prudence following along. Knowledge precedes the attainment of skillful qualities, with conscience and prudence following along.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Bad destinies of whatever kind, in this world or the next, are all rooted in ignorance, compounded of greed and desire.

Since one of corrupt wishes is unconscientious, lacking regard for others, they create much wickedness, which sends them to a place of loss.

Therefore, dispelling desire and greed and ignorance, a mendicant arousing knowledge would cast off all bad destinies.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 41

Iti 41
Bereft of Wisdom
Paññāparihīnasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Those sentient beings are truly bereft, mendicants, who are bereft of noble wisdom. They live unhappily in the present life—with distress, anguish, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a bad rebirth. Those sentient beings are not bereft who are not bereft of noble wisdom. In the present life they’re happy—free of anguish, distress, and fever—and when the body breaks up, after death, they can expect a good rebirth.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“See the world with its gods, bereft of wisdom, habituated to name and form, imagining this is truth.

Wisdom is best in the world, as it leads to penetration, through which one rightly understands the ending of rebirth and continued existence.

Gods and humans envy them, the Buddhas, ever mindful, of laughing wisdom, bearing their final body.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 42

Iti 42
Bright Things
Sukkadhammasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“These two bright things, mendicants, protect the world. What two? Conscience and prudence. If these two bright things did not protect the world, there would be no recognition of the status of mother, aunts, or wives and partners of teachers and respected people. The world would become dissolute, like goats and sheep, chickens and pigs, and dogs and jackals. But because the two bright things protect the world, there is recognition of the status of mother, aunts, and wives and partners of teachers and respected people.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Those in whom conscience and shame are never found at all, have lost their bright roots, and fare on in birth and death.

Those in whom conscience and shame are always rightly established, thrive in the spiritual life; being at peace, they will not be reborn again.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 43

Iti 43
Free of Rebirth
Ajātasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“There is, mendicants, freedom from rebirth, freedom from what has been produced, made, and conditioned. If there were no freedom from rebirth, freedom from what has been produced, made, and conditioned, then you would find no escape here from rebirth, from what has been produced, made, and conditioned. But since there is freedom from rebirth, freedom from what has been produced, made, and conditioned, an escape is found from rebirth, from what has been produced, made, and conditioned.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“What’s reborn, produced, and arisen, made, conditioned, not lasting, wrapped in old age and death, frail, a nest of disease, generated by food and the conduit to rebirth: that’s not fit to delight in. The escape from that is peaceful, beyond the scope of logic, everlasting, where nothing is reborn or arisen, the sorrowless, stainless state, the cessation of all painful things, the stilling of conditions, bliss.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 44

Iti 44
Elements of Extinguishment
Nibbānadhātusutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“There are, mendicants, these two elements of extinguishment. What two? The element of extinguishment with something left over, and the element of extinguishment with nothing left over.

And what is the element of extinguishment with something left over? It’s when a mendicant is a perfected one, with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment. Their five sense faculties still remain. So long as their senses have not gone they continue to experience the agreeable and disagreeable, to feel pleasure and pain. The ending of greed, hate, and delusion in them is called the element of extinguishment with something left over.

And what is the element of extinguishment with nothing left over? It’s when a mendicant is a perfected one, with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment. For them, everything that’s felt, being no longer relished, will become cool right here. This is called the element of extinguishment with nothing left over. These are the two elements of extinguishment.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“These two elements of extinguishment have been explained by the Clear-eyed One, the unattached, the poised. One element pertains to the present life—what is left over when the conduit to rebirth has ended. What has nothing left over pertains to what follows this life, where all states of existence cease.

Those who have fully understood the unconditioned state—their minds freed, the conduit to rebirth ended—attained to the heart of the Dhamma, they delight in ending, the poised ones have given up all states of existence.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 45

Iti 45
Retreat
Paṭisallānasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Enjoy retreat, mendicants, love retreat. Be committed to inner serenity of the heart, don’t neglect absorption, be endowed with discernment, and frequent empty huts. A mendicant who enjoys retreat can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“With minds at peace, alert, mindful and meditative, they rightly discern the Dhamma, unconcerned for sensual pleasures.

Delighting in diligence, peaceful, seeing fear in negligence, such a one can’t decline, and has drawn near to quenching.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 46

Iti 46
The Benefits of Training
Sikkhānisaṁsasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, live with training as benefit, with wisdom as overseer, with freedom as core, and with mindfulness as ruler. A mendicant who lives in this way can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The training fulfilled, not liable to decline, overseen by wisdom, seer of rebirth’s end; that sage bears their final body; they have disposed of Māra, I declare, and gone beyond old age.

Therefore be always enjoying absorption, immersed in samādhi, energetic, seers of rebirth’s end. Having overcome Māra and his armies, mendicants, go beyond birth and death.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 47

Iti 47
Wake Up
Jāgariyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“A mendicant should meditate wakeful, mendicants, mindful and aware, joyful and clear, and at times discern the skillful qualities in that state. A mendicant who meditates in this way can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Listen up, wakeful ones! And those asleep, wake up! Wakefulness is better than sleep, the wakeful have nothing to fear.

Those who are wakeful, mindful and aware, immersed in samādhi, joyful and clear, rightly investigating the Dhamma in good time, at one, would banish the darkness.

That’s why you should apply yourself to wakefulness. A keen and alert mendicant, possessing absorption, having cut the fetter of birth and old age, would experience supreme awakening in this very life.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 48

Iti 48
Bound for Loss
Āpāyikasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, two kinds of people are bound for a place of loss, bound for hell, if they don’t give up this fault. What two? Someone who is unchaste, but claims to be celibate; and someone who makes a groundless accusation of unchastity against a person whose celibacy is pure. These are the two kinds of people bound for a place of loss, bound for hell, if they don’t give up this fault.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A liar goes to hell, as does one who denies what they did. Both are equal in the hereafter, those men of base deeds.

Many who wrap their necks in ocher robes are unrestrained and wicked. Being wicked, they are reborn in hell due to their bad deeds.

It’d be better for the immoral and unrestrained to eat an iron ball, scorching, like a burning flame, than to eat the nation’s alms.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 49

Iti 49
Misconceptions
Diṭṭhigatasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Overcome by two misconceptions, mendicants, some gods and humans get stuck, some overreach, while those with vision see.

And how do some get stuck? Because of love, delight, and enjoyment of existence, when the Dhamma is being taught for the cessation of existence, the minds of some gods and humans are not secure, confident, settled, and decided. That is how some get stuck.

And how do some overreach? Some, becoming horrified, repelled, and disgusted with existence, delight in ending existence: ‘When this self is annihilated and destroyed when the body breaks up, and doesn’t exist after death: that is peaceful, that is sublime, that is how it is.’ That is how some overreach.

And how do those with vision see? It’s when a mendicant sees what has come to be as having come to be. Seeing this, they are practicing for disillusionment, dispassion, and cessation regarding what has come to be. That is how those with vision see.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Those who see what has come to be as having come to be, transcending what has come to be, are freed in accord with the truth, with the ending of craving for continued existence.

They completely understand what has come to be, rid of craving for rebirth in this or that state, with the disappearance of what has come to be, a mendicant does not come back to future lives.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 50

Iti 50
Roots
Mūlasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three unskillful roots. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion. These are the three unskillful roots.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When greed, hate, and delusion, have arisen inside oneself, they harm a person of wicked heart, as a reed is destroyed by its own fruit.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 51

Iti 51
Elements
Dhātusutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three elements. What three? The elements of form, formlessness, and cessation. These are the three elements.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Comprehending the element of form, not stuck in the formless, those who are released in cessation, they are conquerors of death.

Having directly experienced the element free of death, free of attachments; having realised relinquishment of attachments, the undefiled fully awakened Buddha teaches the sorrowless, stainless state.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 52

Iti 52
Feelings (1st)
Paṭhamavedanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three feelings. What three? Pleasant, painful, and neutral feeling. These are the three feelings.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Stilled, aware, a mindful disciple of the Buddha understands feelings, the cause of feelings, where they cease, and the path that leads to their ending. With the ending of feelings, a mendicant is hungerless, extinguished.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 53

Iti 53
Feelings (2nd)
Dutiyavedanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three feelings. What three? Pleasant, painful, and neutral feeling. Pleasant feeling should be seen as suffering. Painful feeling should be seen as a dart. Neutral feeling should be seen as impermanent. When a mendicant has seen these three feelings in this way, they’re called a noble mendicant who sees rightly, has cut off craving, untied the fetters, and by rightly comprehending conceit has made an end of suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A mendicant who sees pleasure as pain, and suffering as a dart, and that peaceful, neutral feeling as impermanent sees rightly. And when freed in regards to that, that peaceful sage, with perfect insight, has truly slipped their yokes.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 54

Iti 54
Searches (1st)
Paṭhamaesanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three searches. What three? The search for sensual pleasures, the search for continued existence, and the search for a spiritual path. These are the three searches.

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Stilled, aware, a mindful disciple of the Buddha understands searches, the cause of searches, where they cease, and the path that leads to their ending. With the ending of searches, a mendicant is hungerless, extinguished.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 55

Iti 55
Searches (2nd)
Dutiyaesanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three searches. What three? The search for sensual pleasures, the search for continued existence, and the search for a spiritual path. These are the three searches.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The search for sensual pleasures, for a good rebirth, and the search for a spiritual path; the holding tight to the notion ‘this is the truth’, and the mass of grounds for views—for one detached from all lusts, freed by the ending of craving, that searching has been relinquished, and those viewpoints eradicated. With the ending of searches, a mendicant is free of hope and indecision.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 56

Iti 56
Defilements (1st)
Paṭhamaāsavasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three defilements. What three? The defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. These are the three defilements.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Stilled, aware, a mindful disciple of the Buddha understands defilements, the cause of defilements, where they cease, and the path that leads to their ending. With the ending of defilements, a mendicant is hungerless, extinguished.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 57

Iti 57
Defilements (2nd)
Dutiyaāsavasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three defilements. What three? The defilements of sensuality, desire to be reborn, and ignorance. These are the three defilements.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“One who has ended the defilement of sensuality, whose ignorance has faded away, and whose desire to be reborn is finished—liberated, free of attachments, they bear their final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 58

Iti 58
Craving
Taṇhāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three cravings. What three? Craving for sensual pleasures, craving to continue existence, and craving to end existence. These are the three cravings.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Bound by craving, minds full of desire for rebirth in this or that state, yoked by Māra’s yoke, these people find no sanctuary from the yoke. Sentient beings continue to transmigrate, with ongoing birth and death.

Those who have given up craving, rid of craving for rebirth in this or that state, they in this world have truly crossed over, having reached the ending of defilements.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 59

Iti 59
Māra's Sway
Māradheyyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

"Mendicants, a mendicant with these three qualities has slipped free of Māra's sway and shines like the sun. What three? It's when they have the entire spectrum of the master's ethics, immersion, and wisdom. A mendicant with these three qualities has slipped free of Māra's sway and shines like the sun."

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

"Whoever has well developed ethics, immersion, and wisdom has slipped free of Māra's sway and shines like the sun."

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 60

Iti 60
Grounds for Making Merit
Puññakiriyavatthusutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three grounds for making merit. What three? Giving, ethical conduct, and meditation are all grounds for making merit. These are the three grounds for making merit.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“One should practice only good deeds, whose happy outcome stretches ahead. Giving and moral conduct, developing a mind of love:

having developed these three things yielding happiness, that astute one is reborn in a happy, pleasing world.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 61

Iti 61
The Eye
Cakkhusutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three eyes. What three? The eye of the flesh, the eye of clairvoyance, and the eye of wisdom. These are the three eyes.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The eye of flesh, the clairvoyant eye, the supreme eye of wisdom: these three eyes were taught by the supreme person.

The arising of the eye of flesh is the path to the clairvoyant eye. When knowledge arises—the supreme eye of wisdom—one who gains that eye is released from all suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 62

Iti 62
Faculties
Indriyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three faculties. What three? The faculty of understanding that one’s enlightenment is imminent. The faculty of enlightenment. The faculty of one who is enlightened. These are the three faculties.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“As a trainee trains, following the straight road, first they know about ending;
enlightenment follows in the same lifetime.

Then the knowledge comes to such a one, freed through enlightenment, with the end of the fetters of rebirth: ‘My freedom is unshakable.’

Accomplished in the faculties, peaceful, in love with the state of peace, they bear their final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 63

Iti 63
Periods
Addhāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three periods. What three? Past, future, and present. These are the three periods.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Sentient beings who perceive the communicable, become established in the communicable. Not understanding the communicable, they fall under the yoke of Death.

But having fully understood the communicable, they don’t conceive a communicator, as they’ve touched liberation with their mind, the supreme state of peace.

Accomplished in the communicable, peaceful, in love with the state of peace; making use after reflection, firm in principle, a knowledge master cannot be reckoned.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 64

Iti 64
Bad Conduct
Duccaritasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three kinds of bad conduct. What three? Bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. These are the three kinds of bad conduct.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Having done bad things by way of body, speech, and mind, and whatever else is corrupt;

not having done good deeds, and having done many bad, when their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 65

Iti 65
Good Conduct
Sucaritasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these kinds of good conduct. What three? Good conduct by way of body, speech, and mind. These are the three kinds of good conduct.” The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Having given up bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and whatever else is corrupt;

not having done bad deeds, and having done many good, when their body breaks up, that wise person is reborn in heaven.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 66

Iti 66
Purity
Soceyyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three kinds of purity. What three? Purity of body, speech, and mind. These are the three kinds of purity.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Purity of body, purity of speech, and undefiled purity of heart. A pure person, blessed with purity, has given up everything, they say.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 67

Iti 67
Sagacity
Moneyyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three kinds of sagacity. What three? Sagacity of body, speech, and mind. These are the three kinds of sagacity.” The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“A sage in body, a sage in speech, a sage undefiled in mind; a sage, blessed with sagacity, has washed off all bad things, they say.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 68

Iti 68
Greed (1st)
Paṭhamarāgasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Whoever has not given up greed, hate, and delusion is said to be trapped. They’re caught in Māra’s snare, and the Wicked One can do with them what he wants. Whoever has given up greed, hate, and delusion is said to be free. They’re released from Māra’s snare, and the Wicked One cannot do with them what he wants.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Those in whom greed, hate, and ignorance have faded away, belong with those who are evolved; A manifestation of divinity, realized, awakened, beyond enmity and fear, they’ve given up everything, they say.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 69

Iti 69
Greed (2nd)
Dutiyarāgasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Whoever has not given up greed, hate, and delusion is said to have not crossed over the ocean with its waves and whirlpools, its saltwater crocodiles and monsters. Whoever has given up greed, hate, and delusion is said to have crossed over the ocean with its waves and whirlpools, its saltwater crocodiles and monsters. Crossed over and gone beyond, that brahmin stands on the shore.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Those in whom greed, hate, and ignorance have faded away, have crossed the ocean so hard to cross, with its saltwater crocodiles and monsters, its waves and dangers.

They’ve slipped their chains, given up death, and have no attachments. They’ve given up suffering, so there are no more future lives. They’ve come to an end and cannot be defined; they’ve confounded the King of Death, I say.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 70

Iti 70
Having Wrong View
Micchādiṭṭhikasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I’ve seen beings who engaged in misconduct by body, speech, and mind, who abused the noble ones, who had wrong views and acted accordingly. At the breaking up of the body, after death, they were reborn in a lower realm, a bad destination, a world of misery, hell.

Now, I don’t say this because I’ve heard it from some other ascetic or brahmin. I only say it because I’ve known, seen, and realized it for myself.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When the mind has been misdirected, and words wrongly spoken, and wrong bodily deeds have been done, a person here unlearned, doer of bad deeds, though their life may be short, when their body breaks up, that witless person is reborn in hell.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 71

Iti 71
Having Right View
Sammādiṭṭhikasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I’ve seen beings who engaged in good conduct of body, speech, and mind, who did not abuse the noble ones, who held right view and acted accordingly. At the breaking up of the body, after death, they were reborn in a good destination, a heavenly realm.

Now, I don’t say this because I’ve heard it from some other ascetic or brahmin. I only say it because I’ve known, seen, and realized it for myself.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When the mind has been directed right, and words rightly spoken, and right bodily deeds have been done, a person here learned, doer of good deeds, though their life may be short, when their body breaks up, that wise person is reborn in heaven.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 72

Iti 72
Elements of Escape
Nissaraṇiyasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three elements of escape. What three? Renunciation is the escape from sensual pleasures. Formlessness is the escape from form. Cessation is the escape from whatever is created, conditioned, and dependently originated. These are the three elements of escape.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Knowing the escape from sensuality, and form’s transcendence, one always keen touches the stilling of all activities.

That mendicant sees rightly, and when freed in regards to that, that peaceful sage, with perfect insight, has truly slipped their yoke.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 73

Iti 73
More Peaceful
Santatarasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, formless states are more peaceful than states of form; cessation is more peaceful than formless states.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“There are beings in the realm of luminous form, and others stuck in the formless. Not understanding cessation, they return in future lives.

But the people who completely understand form, not stuck in the formless, released in cessation—they are conquerors of death.

Having directly experienced the element free of death, free of attachments; having realised relinquishment of attachments, the undefiled fully awakened Buddha teaches the sorrowless, stainless state.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 74

Iti 74
A Child
Puttasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“These three kinds of children are found in the world. What three? One who betters their birth, one who equals their birth, one who fails their birth.

And how does a child better their birth? It’s when a child’s parents have not gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re immoral, of bad character. But their child has gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re ethical, of good character. That’s how a child betters their birth.

And how does a child equal their birth? It’s when a child’s parents have gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re ethical, of good character. And their child has gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re ethical, of good character. That’s how a child equals their birth.

And how does a child fail their birth? It’s when a child’s parents have gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They don’t kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, or take alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re ethical, of good character. But their child has not gone for refuge to the Buddha, the teaching, and the Saṅgha. They kill living creatures, steal, commit sexual misconduct, lie, and use alcoholic drinks that cause negligence. They’re immoral, of bad character. That’s how a child fails their birth. These are the three kinds of children found in the world.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The astute wish for a child who betters or equals their birth; not one who fails their birth, disgracing their family.

These are the children in the world who become lay devotees; faithful, accomplished in ethics, bountiful, rid of stinginess. Like the moon freed from a cloud, they shine in the assemblies.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 75

Iti 75
A Rainless Cloud
Avuṭṭhikasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, these three people are found in the world. What three? One like a rainless cloud, one who rains locally, one who rains all over.

And how is a person like a rainless cloud? It’s when some person doesn’t give to anyone at all—whether ascetics and brahmins, paupers, vagrants, nomads, or beggars—such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, perfumes, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. That’s how a person is like a rainless cloud.

And how does a person rain locally? It’s when some person gives to some but not to others—whether ascetics and brahmins, paupers, vagrants, nomads, or beggars—such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, perfumes, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. That’s how a person rains locally.

And how does a person rain all over? It’s when some person gives to everyone—whether ascetics and brahmins, paupers, vagrants, nomads, or beggars—such things as food, drink, clothing, vehicles; garlands, perfumes, and makeup; and bed, house, and lighting. That’s how a person rains all over. These are the three people found in the world.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“They don’t share the food and drink they have acquired with ascetics or brahmins, with paupers, vagrants, or travelers. They’re like a rainless cloud, they say, the meanest of men.

They don’t give to some, to some they provide. They rain locally, so say the wise.

Compassionate for all beings, that person distributes abundant food upon request, saying, “Give! Give!”

The rain cloud rains forth, having thundered and roared, drenching the earth with water, soaking the uplands and valleys.

Even so, such a person, having accumulated wealth by legitimate means, through their own hard work, rightly satisfies with food and drink those fallen to destitution.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 76

Iti 76
Wishing for Happiness
Sukhapatthanāsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, an astute person who wishes for three kinds of happiness should take care of their ethics. What three? ‘May I be be praised!’ ‘May I become rich!’ ‘When my body breaks up, after death, may I be reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm!’ An astute person who wishes for these three kinds of happiness should protect their precepts.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Wishing for three kinds of happiness—praise, prosperity, and to delight in heaven after passing away—the wise would take care of their ethics.

Though you do no wrong, if you associate with one who does, you’re suspected of wrong, and your disrepute grows.

Whatever kind of friend you make, with whom you associate, that’s how you become, for so it is when you share your life.

The one who associates and the one associated with, the one contacted and the one who contacts another, are like an arrow smeared with poison that contaminates the quiver. A wise one, fearing contamination, would never have wicked friends.

A man who wraps putrid fish in blades of grass makes the grass stink—so it is when associating with fools.

But one who wraps sandalwood incense in leaves makes the leaves fragrant—so it is when associating with the wise.

So, knowing they’ll end up like the wrapping, the astute would shun the wicked, and befriend the good. The wicked lead you to hell, the good help you to a good place.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 77

Iti 77
Fragile
Bhidurasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“This body is fragile, mendicants, consciousness is liable to fade away, and all attachments are impermanent, suffering, and perishable.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Knowing that the body is fragile, that consciousness is faded, and seeing the danger in attachments, they go beyond birth and death. Having attained ultimate peace, evolved, they bide their time.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 78

Iti 78
Converging Elements
Dhātusosaṁsandanasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, sentient beings come together and converge because of an element: Those who have bad convictions come together and converge with those who have bad convictions. Those who have good convictions come together and converge with those who have good convictions.

In the past …

In the future …

At present, too, sentient beings come together and converge because of an element. Those who have bad convictions come together and converge with those who have bad convictions. Those who have good convictions come together and converge with those who have good convictions.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Socializing promotes entanglements; they’re cut off by being aloof. If you’re lost in the middle of a great sea, and you clamber up on a little log, you’ll sink.

So too, a person who lives well sinks by relying on a lazy person. Hence you should avoid such a lazy person who lacks energy.

Dwell with the noble ones who are secluded and determined constantly energetic, the astute who practice absorption.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 79

Iti 79
Decline
Parihānasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“These three things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What three? It’s when a mendicant relishes work, talk, and sleep. These three things lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.

These three things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee. What three? It’s when a mendicant doesn’t relish work, talk, and sleep. These three things don’t lead to the decline of a mendicant trainee.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Restless, they relish work, talk, and sleep. Such a mendicant is incapable of experiencing the highest awakening.

That’s why one ought have few duties, being wakeful not restless. Such a mendicant is capable of experiencing the highest awakening.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 80

Iti 80
Thoughts
Vitakkasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three unskillful thoughts. What three? The thought of being looked up to; of getting material possessions, honor, and popularity; and of fondness for others. These are the three unskillful thoughts.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“One concerned with being looked up to, with possessions, honor, and respect, with sharing joys with friends, is far from the ending of fetters.

But one who gives up children and herds, marriage and acquisitions—such a mendicant is capable of experiencing the highest awakening.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 81

Iti 81
Esteem
Sakkārasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“I’ve seen, mendicants, sentient beings whose minds are overcome and overwhelmed by honor. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

I’ve seen sentient beings whose minds are overcome and overwhelmed by not being honored. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

I’ve seen sentient beings whose minds are overcome and overwhelmed by both honor and by not being honored. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell.

Now, I don’t say this because I’ve heard it from some other ascetic or brahmin. I only say it because I’ve known, seen, and realized it for myself.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Whether they’re honored or not honored, or both, their immersion doesn’t waver as they live diligently.

They persistently practice absorption with subtle view and discernment. Rejoicing in the ending of grasping, they’re said to be a true person.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 82

Iti 82
The Cry of the Gods
Devasaddasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, these three cries are uttered among the gods on occasion. What three? When a noble disciple shaves off their hair and beard, dresses in ocher robes, and goes forth from the lay life to homelessness, the gods cry out: ‘This noble disciple intends to join battle with Māra!’ This is the first occasion a cry is uttered among the gods.

Furthermore, when a noble disciple meditates pursuing the development of the seven qualities that lead to awakening, the gods cry out: ‘This noble disciple is joining battle with Māra!’ This is the second occasion a cry is uttered among the gods.

Furthermore, when a noble disciple realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements, the gods cry out: ‘This noble disciple has won victory in battle, establishing himself as foremost in battle!’ This is the third occasion a cry is uttered among the gods. These are the three cries that are uttered among the gods on occasion.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Seeing the winner of the battle—a disciple of the Buddha, great of heart, rid of naivety—even the deities revere them:

‘Homage to you, O thoroughbred! You won a battle hard to win! Having defeated the army of death, your liberation is unobstructed.’

And so the deities revere the one, who has achieved their heart’s desire. For they see nothing in them by means of which they might fall under the sway of Death.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 83

Iti 83
Five Warning Signs
Pañcapubbanimittasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, when a god is due to pass away from the realm of the gods, five warning signs appear. Their flower-garlands wither; their clothes become soiled; they sweat from the armpits; their physical appearance deteriorates; and they no longer delight in their heavenly throne. When the other gods know that that god is due to pass away, they wish them well in three ways: ‘Sir, may you go from here to a good place!

When you have gone to a good place, may you be blessed with good fortune!

When you have been blessed with good fortune, may you become well grounded!’”

When he said this, one of the mendicants said to the Buddha, “Sir, what do the gods reckon to be going to a good place?

What do they reckon to be blessed with good fortune?

What do they reckon to become well grounded?”

“It is human existence, mendicant, that the gods reckon to be going to a good place.

When a human being gains faith in the teaching and training proclaimed by the Realized One, that is what the gods reckon to be blessed with good fortune.

When that faith in the Realized One is settled, rooted, and planted deep; when it’s strong and can’t be shifted by any ascetic or brahmin or god or Māra or Brahmā or by anyone in the world, that is what the gods reckon to become well grounded.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When, with the fading of life, a god passes from the realm of the gods, the gods utter three cries of well-wishing:

‘Sir, go from here to a good place, in the company of humans. As a human being, gain supreme faith in the true teaching.

May that faith of yours be settled, with roots planted deep, unfaltering all life long in the true teaching so well proclaimed.

Having given up bad conduct by way of body, speech, and mind, and whatever else is corrupt; and having done much good, by way of body, speech, and mind, limitless, free of attachments;

then, having made much worldly merit by giving gifts, establish other colleagues in the true teaching, the spiritual life.'

It is due to such compassion that when the gods know a god is due to pass away, they wish them well: 'Come back, god, again and again!'"

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 84

Iti 84
For the Welfare of the People
Bahujanahitasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Three people, mendicants, arise in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans. What three? It’s when a Realized One arises in the world, perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed. He teaches Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. This is the first person who arises in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

Furthermore, it’s when a mendicant is a perfected one, with defilements ended, who has completed the spiritual journey, done what had to be done, laid down the burden, achieved their own true goal, utterly ended the fetters of rebirth, and is rightly freed through enlightenment. They teach Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And they reveal a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. This is the second person who arises in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.

Furthermore, it’s when a disciple of that Teacher is a trainee, a learned practitioner with precepts and observances intact. They teach Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And they reveal a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. This is the third person who arises in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans. These are the three people who arise in the world for the welfare and happiness of the people, out of compassion for the world, for the benefit, welfare, and happiness of gods and humans.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The Teacher is the first, the great seer, following whom is the evolved disciple, and then a trainee, a practitioner, learned, with precepts and observances intact.

These three are first among gods and humans, beacons proclaiming the teaching! They fling open the door to freedom from death, freeing many from yokes.

Following the path so well taught by the unsurpassed caravan leader, those who are diligent in the Holy One’s teaching make an end of suffering in this very life.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 85

Iti 85
Observing Ugliness
Asubhānupassīsutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, meditate observing the ugliness of the body. Let mindfulness of breathing be well-established internally in your presence. Meditate observing the impermanence of all conditions. As you meditate observing the ugliness of the body, you will give up desire for the body. When mindfulness of breathing is well-established internally in your presence, there will be no distressing external thoughts or wishes. When you meditate observing the impermanence of all conditions, ignorance is given up and knowledge arises.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Observing the ugliness of the body, mindful of the breath, one always keen sees the stilling of all activities.

That mendicant sees rightly, and when freed in regards to that, that peaceful sage, with perfect insight, has truly slipped their yoke.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 86

Iti 86
Practicing In Line With the Teaching
Dhammānudhammapaṭipannasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Regarding a mendicant practicing in line with the teaching, it is in line with the teaching to declare that this is what it means to practice in line with the teaching. When speaking, they speak in line with the teaching, not against it. When thinking, they think in line with the teaching, not against it. And rejecting both, they meditate staying equanimous, mindful and aware.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Delighting in the teaching, enjoying the teaching, contemplating the teaching, a mendicant who recollects the teaching doesn’t decline in the true teaching.

Whether walking or standing, sitting or lying down, with mind collected inside, they attain only peace.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 87

Iti 87
Destroyers of Sight
Andhakaraṇasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, these three unskillful thoughts are destroyers of sight, vision, and knowledge. They block wisdom, they’re on the side of anguish, and they don’t lead to extinguishment. What three? Thoughts of sensuality, malice, and cruelty. These are the three unskillful thoughts that are destroyers of sight, vision, and knowledge. They block wisdom, they’re on the side of anguish, and they don’t lead to extinguishment.

These three skillful thoughts are creators of sight, vision, and knowledge. They grow wisdom, they’re on the side of solace, and they lead to extinguishment. What three? Thoughts of renunciation, good will, and harmlessness. These are the three skillful thoughts that are creators of sight, vision, and knowledge. They grow wisdom, they’re on the side of solace, and they lead to extinguishment.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Think the three skillful thoughts, and get rid of the unskillful. Quelling such thoughts and considerations, like rain on the dust, with a heart calmed of thought, you’ll touch the state of peace right here.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 88

Iti 88
Inner Stains
Antarāmalasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three inner stains, inner foes, inner enemies, inner killers, and inner adversaries. What three? Greed, hate, and delusion. These three are inner stains, inner foes, inner enemies, inner killers, and inner adversaries.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Greed creates harm; greed upsets the mind. That person doesn’t recognize the danger that arises within.

A greedy person doesn’t know the good. A greedy person doesn’t see the truth. When a person is beset by greed, only blind darkness is left.

Those who have given up greed, don’t get greedy even when provoked. Greed falls off them like a drop from a lotus-leaf.

Hate creates harm; hate upsets the mind. That person doesn’t recognize the danger that arises within.

A hateful person doesn’t know the good. A hateful person doesn’t see the truth. When a person is beset by hate, only blind darkness is left.

Those who have given up hate, don’t get angry even when provoked. Hate falls off them like a palm-leaf from its stem.

Delusion creates harm; delusion upsets the mind. That person doesn’t recognize the danger that arises within.

A deluded person doesn’t know the good. A deluded person doesn’t see the truth. When a person is beset by delusion, only blind darkness is left.

Those who have given up delusion, don’t get deluded even when provoked. They banish all delusion, as the rising sun the dark.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 89

Iti 89
About Devadatta
Devadattasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, overcome and overwhelmed by three things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable. What three? Corrupt wishes … Bad friendship … When there is still more to be done, stopping half-way after achieving some insignificant distinction. Overcome and overwhelmed by these three things that oppose the true teaching, Devadatta is going to a place of loss, to hell, there to remain for an eon, irredeemable.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Let none of wicked desire ever be reborn into this world. And by this too you should know the place where those of corrupt wishes go.

He once was considered astute, deemed to be evolved, his glory stood forth like a flame, the renowned Devadatta.

Seduced by heedlessness, he attacked the Realized One. He has fallen to Avīci hell, four-doored and terrifying.

When someone betrays the innocent, who have done no wrong, their bad deeds impact the one with corrupt heart, lacking regard for others.

One might think to pollute the ocean with a pot of poison, but it wouldn’t work, for the sea is terribly large.

So too when someone attacks with words the Realized One—rightly comported, of peaceful mind—the words don’t take.

The astute would befriend one like this, and follow them around. A mendicant who walks the path attains the ending of suffering.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 90

Iti 90
The Best Kinds of Confidence
Aggappasādasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, these three kinds of confidence are the best. What three? Mendicants, the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha, is said to be the best of all sentient beings—be they footless, with two feet, four feet, or many feet; with form or formless; with perception or without perception or with neither perception nor non-perception. Those who have confidence in the Buddha have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

Fading away is said to be the best of all things whether conditioned or unconditioned. That is, the quelling of vanity, the removing of thirst, the abolishing of clinging, the breaking of the round, the ending of craving, fading away, cessation, extinguishment. Those who have confidence in the teaching of fading away have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best.

The Saṅgha of the Realized One’s disciples is said to be the best of all communities and groups. It consists of the four pairs, the eight individuals. This is the Saṅgha of the Buddha’s disciples that is worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods, worthy of hospitality, worthy of a religious donation, worthy of greeting with joined palms, and is the supreme field of merit for the world. Those who have confidence in the Saṅgha have confidence in the best. Having confidence in the best, the result is the best. These are the three best kinds of confidence.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“For those who, knowing the best teaching, base their confidence on the best—confident in the best Awakened One, supremely worthy of a religious donation;

confident in the best teaching, the bliss of fading and stilling; confident in the best Saṅgha, the supreme field of merit—giving gifts to the best, the best of merit grows: the best lifespan, beauty, fame, reputation, happiness, and strength.

An intelligent person gives to the best, settled on the best teaching. When they become a god or human, they rejoice at reaching the best.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 91

Iti 91
Lifestyle
Jīvikasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, this relying on alms is an extreme lifestyle. The world curses you: ‘You beggar, walking bowl in hand!’ Yet earnest gentlemen take it up for a good reason. Not to escape a summons by a king or a summons for a bandit, or because you were in debt or in fear, or in order to make a living. Rather, because they think: ‘I’m swamped by rebirth, old age, and death; by sorrow, lamentation, pain, sadness, and distress. I’m swamped by suffering, mired in suffering. Hopefully I can find an end to this entire mass of suffering.’ That’s how this gentleman has gone forth. Yet they covet sensual pleasures; they’re infatuated, full of ill will and malicious intent. They are unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying mind and undisciplined faculties. Suppose there was a firebrand for lighting a funeral pyre, burning at both ends, and smeared with dung in the middle. It couldn’t be used as timber either in the village or the wilderness. I say that person is just like this. They’ve missed out on the pleasures of the lay life, and haven’t fulfilled the goal of the ascetic life.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“They’ve left behind the pleasures of the lay life, and miss out on the goal of the ascetic life. Ruining it, they throw it away, and perish like a funeral firebrand.

Many who wrap their necks in ocher robes are unrestrained and wicked. Being wicked, they are reborn in hell due to their bad deeds.

It’d be better for the immoral and unrestrained to eat an iron ball, scorching, like a burning flame, than to eat the nation’s alms.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 92

Iti 92
The Corner of the Cloak
Saṅghāṭikaṇṇasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, suppose a mendicant were to hold the corner of my cloak and follow behind me step by step. Yet they covet sensual pleasures; they’re infatuated, full of ill will and malicious intent. They are unmindful, lacking situational awareness and immersion, with straying mind and undisciplined faculties. Then they are far from me, and I from them. Why is that? Because that mendicant does not see the teaching. Not seeing the teaching, they do not see me.

Suppose a mendicant were to live a hundred leagues away. Yet they do not covet sensual pleasures; they’re not infatuated, or full of ill will and malicious intent. They have established mindfulness, situational awareness and immersion, with unified mind and restrained faculties. Then they are close to me, and I to them. Why is that? Because that mendicant sees the teaching. Seeing the teaching, they see me.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“One full of desire and distress may follow close behind, yet see how distant they are—the stirred from the still, the burning from the quenched, the greedy from the greedless.

An astute person who has understood and directly known the teaching, grows calm, like a lake unstirred by the wind.

See how close they are—the still to the still, the quenched to the quenched, the greedless to the greedless.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 93

Iti 93
Fire
Aggisutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three fires. What three? The fires of greed, hate, and delusion. These are the three fires.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The fire of greed burns a mortal, lustful, infatuated by sensual pleasures; while, fallen in the fire of hate, a person kills living creatures; and, bewildered by the fire of delusion, they miss the teaching of the noble ones. Not recognizing these three fires, people are caught up in substantial reality.

They fill the ranks of hell, of birth as an animal, or of titans and ghosts, not freed from Māra’s bonds.

But as to those committed day and night to the teaching of the Buddha: they quench the fire of greed, always perceiving ugliness; while those supreme persons quench the fire of hate with love; and the fire of delusion with the wisdom that leads to penetration.

Having quenched these fires, alert, tireless all day and night, they become completely quenched, completely transcending suffering.

Seers of the noble truths, knowledge masters, the astute, understanding rightly, directly know the ending of rebirth, they come not back to future lives.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 94

Iti 94
Examination
Upaparikkhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, a mendicant should examine in any such a way that their consciousness is neither scattered and diffused externally nor stuck internally, and they are not anxious because of grasping. When this is the case and they are no longer anxious, there is for them no coming to be of the origin of suffering—of rebirth, old age, and death in the future.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“For one who has given up seven chains, a mendicant who has cut the cord, transmigration through births is finished, now there’ll be no more future lives.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 95

Iti 95
Provided With Pleasure
Kāmūpapattisutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are these three ways of being provided with sensual pleasures. What three? Some sensual pleasures are simply present; some are for those who love to imagine; and some are for those who control what is imagined by others. These are the three ways of being provided with sensual pleasures.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Sensual pleasures that are simply present, Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others, Gods Who Love to Imagine, and others who indulge in sensual pleasures—They go from this state to another, but don’t escape transmigration.

Knowing this danger in sensual indulgence, an astute person would reject all sensual pleasures, both human and divine.

Having cut the stream so hard to pass, that’s tied to pleasant seeming things, they become completely quenched, completely transcending suffering.

Seers of the noble truths, knowledge masters, the astute, understanding rightly, directly know the ending of rebirth, they come not back to future lives.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 96

Iti 96
Yoked to Sensual Pleasures
Kāmayogasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, one yoked to both sensual pleasures and rebirth is a returner, who comes back to this state of existence. One unyoked from sensual pleasures but still yoked to rebirth is a non-returner, who comes not back to this state of existence. One unyoked from both sensual pleasures and rebirth is a perfected one, who has ended defilements.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Yoked to both sensual pleasures and the desire to be reborn in a future life; sentient beings continue to transmigrate, with ongoing birth and death.

Those who’ve given up sensual pleasures without attaining the end of defilements, and are still yoked to being reborn, are said to be non-returners.

Those who have cut off doubt, and ended conceit and future lives, they’re the ones in this world who’ve truly crossed over, having reached the ending of defilements.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 97

Iti 97
Good Morals
Kalyāṇasīlasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, in this teaching and training a mendicant of good morals, good practice, and good wisdom is called consummate, accomplished, a supreme person.

And how does a mendicant have good morals? It’s when a mendicant is ethical, restrained in the monastic code, conducting themselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, they keep the rules they’ve undertaken. That’s how a mendicant has good morals. Such is one of good morality.

And how does one have good practice? It’s when a mendicant meditates pursuing the development of the seven qualities that lead to awakening. That’s how a mendicant has good practice. Such is one of good morality and good practice.

And how does one have good wisdom? It’s when a mendicant realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life. And they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. That’s how a mendicant has good wisdom;

Such is one of good morals, good practice, and good wisdom, who in this teaching and training is called consummate, accomplished, a supreme person.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Who does nothing wrong by body, speech or mind, is said to be one good morals, a conscientious mendicant.

Who has well developed the seven factors that lead to awakening is said to be one good practice, a humble mendicant.

Who understands for themselves the end of suffering in this life is said to be one good wisdom, an undefiled mendicant.

One accomplished in these three things, untroubled, with doubts cut off, unattached to anything in the world, has given up everything, they say.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 98

Iti 98
Giving
Dānasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“There are, mendicants, these two gifts. A gift of things of the flesh and a gift of the teaching. The better of these two gifts is the gift of the teaching.

There are these two kinds of sharing. Sharing things of the flesh and sharing the teaching. The better of these two kinds of sharing is sharing the teaching.

There are these two kinds of support. Support in things of the flesh and support in the teaching. The better of these two kinds of support is support in the teaching.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“It is said to be the supreme, ultimate gift, and the sharing praised by the Buddha; what wise and sensible person, confident in the best of fields, would not sow a such timely gift?

For those who are diligent in the dispensation of the Holy One, both those who speak and those who listen, confident in the dispensation of the Holy One, such a gift purifies the highest goal.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 99

Iti 99
The Three Knowledges
Tevijjasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I describe a brahmin who is master of the three Vedic knowledges in terms of the teaching, not by mere oral recitation.

How so? It’s when a mendicant recollects many kinds of past lives. That is: one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand rebirths; many eons of the world contracting, many eons of the world expanding, many eons of the world contracting and expanding. They remember: ‘There, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn somewhere else. There, too, I was named this, my clan was that, I looked like this, and that was my food. This was how I felt pleasure and pain, and that was how my life ended. When I passed away from that place I was reborn here.’ And so they recollect their many kinds of past lives, with features and details. This is the first knowledge they achieved. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute.

Furthermore, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, a mendicant sees sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds: ‘These dear beings did bad things by way of body, speech, and mind. They spoke ill of the noble ones; they had wrong view; and they chose to act out of that wrong view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a place of loss, a bad place, the underworld, hell. These dear beings, however, did good things by way of body, speech, and mind. They never spoke ill of the noble ones; they had right view; and they chose to act out of that right view. When their body breaks up, after death, they’re reborn in a good place, a heavenly realm.’ And so, with clairvoyance that is purified and superhuman, they see sentient beings passing away and being reborn—inferior and superior, beautiful and ugly, in a good place or a bad place. They understand how sentient beings are reborn according to their deeds. This is the second knowledge they achieved. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute.

Furthermore, a mendicant realizes the undefiled freedom of heart and freedom by wisdom in this very life, and they live having realized it with their own insight due to the ending of defilements. This is the third knowledge which they achieved. Ignorance was destroyed and knowledge arose; darkness was destroyed and light arose, as happens for a meditator who is diligent, keen, and resolute. That's how I describe a brahmin who is master of the three Vedic knowledges in terms of the teaching, not by mere oral recitation."

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

"They know their past lives, seeing heaven and places of loss, and have attained the end of rebirth; that sage has perfect insight.

Because of these three knowledges a brahmin is a master of the three knowledges. That's who I call a three-knowledge master, and not some mere reciter."

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 100

Iti 100
The Holy Offering of the Teaching
Brāhmaṇadhammayāgasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“I, Mendicants, am a brahmin, committed to charity, always open-handed, bearing my final body, a healer, a surgeon. You are my true-born sons, born from my mouth, born of the teaching, created by the teaching, heirs in the teaching, not in things of the flesh.

There are these two gifts. A gift of things of the flesh and a gift of the teaching. The better of these two gifts is the gift of the teaching.

There are these two kinds of sharing. Sharing things of the flesh and sharing the teaching. The better of these two kinds of sharing is sharing the teaching.

There are these two kinds of support. Support in things of the flesh and support in the teaching. The better of these two kinds of support is support in the teaching.

There are these two offerings. An offering of things of the flesh and an offering of the teaching. The better of these two offerings is an offering of the teaching.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The Realized One, compassionate for all living creatures, unstintingly offers teaching. Sentient beings revere him, first among gods and humans, who has gone beyond rebirth.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 101

Iti 101
Easy to Find Sulabhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, these four trifles are easy to find and are blameless. What four? Rag-robes … A lump of almsfood … Lodgings at the root of a tree … Rancid urine as medicine … These four trifles are easy to find and are blameless. When a mendicant is content with trifles that are easy to find, they have one of the factors of the ascetic life, I say.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“When one is content with what’s blameless, trifling, and easy to find, they don’t get upset about lodgings, robes, food, and drink, and they’re not obstructed anywhere.

These qualities are said to be integral to the ascetic life. They’re mastered by a mendicant, content and diligent.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 102

Iti 102
The Ending of Defilements
Āsavakkhayasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, I say that the ending of defilements is for one who knows and sees, not for one who does not know or see. For one who knows and sees what? The ending of defilements is for one who knows and sees suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. The ending of the defilements is for one who knows and sees this.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“As a trainee trains, following the straight road, first they know about ending;
enlightenment follows in the same lifetime.

Then to one freed through enlightenment the knowledge of ending arises, the supreme knowledge of freedom, with the ending of the fetters.

This is not for the lazy, the fools don’t understand, extinguishment is realized with release from all ties.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 103

Iti 103
Ascetics and Brahmins
Samaṇabrāhmaṇasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are ascetics and brahmins who don’t truly understand about suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. I don’t deem them as true ascetics and brahmins. Those venerables don’t realize the goal of life as an ascetic or brahmin, and don’t live having realized it with their own insight.

There are ascetics and brahmins who truly understand about suffering, its origin, its cessation, and the path. I regard them as true ascetics and brahmins. Those venerables realize the goal of life as an ascetic or brahmin, and live having realized it with their own insight.” The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“There are those who don’t understand suffering and suffering’s cause, and where all suffering cease with nothing left over. And they do not know the path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

They lack the heart’s release, as well as the release by wisdom. Unable to make an end, they continue to be reborn and grow old.

But there are those who understand suffering and suffering’s cause, and where all suffering cease with nothing left over. And they understand the path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

They’re endowed with the heart’s release, as well as the release by wisdom. Able to make an end, they don’t continue to be reborn and grow old.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 104

Iti 104
Accomplished in Ethics
Sīlasampannasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, take a mendicant who is accomplished in ethics, immersion, wisdom, freedom, and the knowledge and vision of freedom. They advise and instruct. They educate, encourage, fire up, and inspire, and can rightly explain the true teaching. Even the sight of those mendicants is very helpful, I say. Even to hear them, approach them, pay homage to them, recollect them, or go forth after them is very helpful, I say. Why is that? For one who frequents and associates with such mendicants, their incomplete spectrum of ethics is completed. Their incomplete spectrum of immersion … wisdom … freedom … knowledge and vision of freedom is completed. Such mendicants are called ‘teachers’, ‘leaders of the caravan’, ‘vice-discarders’, ‘dispellers of darkness’, ‘bringers of light’, ‘luminaries’, ‘lamps’, ‘candlebearers’, ‘beacons’, ‘noble ones’, and ‘clear-eyed ones’.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“This is a reason for joy for those who understand: that is, those who are evolved, the noble ones living righteously.

They illuminate the true teaching, beacons beaming light, the wise ones bringing light, clear-eyed ones with vices discarded.

Having heard their instruction, the astute, understanding rightly, directly know the ending of rebirth, they come not back to future lives.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 105

Iti 105
The Arising of Craving
Taṇhuppādasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, there are four things that give rise to craving in a mendicant. What four? For the sake of robes, almsfood, lodgings, or rebirth in this or that state. These are the four things that give rise to craving in a mendicant.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Craving is a person’s partner as they transmigrate on this long journey. They go from this state to another, but don’t escape transmigration.

Knowing this danger, that craving is the cause of suffering—rid of craving, free of grasping, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 106

Iti 106
With Brahmā
Sabrahmakasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, a family where the children honor their parents in their home is said to live with Brahmā. A family where the children honor their parents in their home is said to live with the old deities. A family where the children honor their parents in their home is said to live with the first teachers. A family where the children honor their parents in their home is said to live with those worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods.

‘Brahmā’ is a term for your parents. ‘Old deities’ is a term for your parents. ‘First teachers’ is a term for your parents. ‘Worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods’ is a term for your parents. Why is that? Parents are very helpful to their children, they raise them, nurture them, and show them the world.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Parents are said to be ‘Brahmā’ and ‘first teachers’. They’re worthy of offerings dedicated to the gods from their children, for they love their offspring.

Therefore an astute person would revere them and honor them with food and drink, clothes and bedding, anointing and bathing, and by washing their feet.

Because they look after their parents like this, they’re praised in this life by the astute, and they depart to rejoice in heaven.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 107

Iti 107
Very Helpful
Bahukārasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, brahmins and householders are very helpful to you, as they provide you with robes, almsfood, lodgings, and medicines and supplies for the sick. And you are very helpful to brahmins and householders, as you teach them the Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And you reveal a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. That is how this spiritual path is lived supporting each other in order to cross over the flood and make a complete end of suffering.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“The home-dweller and the homeless, supporting each other, find success in the true teaching, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

The homeless receive requisites from the home-dwellers: robes and lodgings to shelter from harsh conditions.

Relying on the Holy One, home-loving layfolk place faith in the perfected ones, meditators of noble wisdom.

Having practiced the teaching here, the path that goes to a good place, they delight in the heavenly realm, enjoying all the pleasures they desire.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 108

Iti 108
Deceivers
Kuhasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, those mendicants who are deceivers and flatterers, pompous and fake, insolent and scattered: those mendicants are no followers of mine. They’ve left this teaching and training, and they don’t achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training. But those mendicants who are genuine, not flatterers, wise, amenable, and serene: those mendicants are followers of mine. They haven’t left this teaching and training, and they do achieve growth, improvement, or maturity in this teaching and training.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Those who are deceivers and flatterers, pompous and fake, insolent and scattered: these don’t grow in the teaching that was taught by the perfected Buddha.

But those who are genuine, not flatterers, wise, amenable, and serene: these do grow in the teaching that was taught by the perfected Buddha.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 109

Iti 109
A River
Nadīsotasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Suppose a person was being carried along by a river current that seemed nice and pleasant. If a person with clear eyes saw them, they’d say: ‘Mister, even though the river current carrying you along seems nice and pleasant, downstream there is a lake with waves and whirlpools, saltwater crocodiles and monsters. When you reach there it will result in death or deadly pain.’ Then, when they heard what was said, they’d paddle against the stream using their hands and feet.

I’ve made up this simile to make a point. And this is the point. ‘Stream’ is a term for craving.

‘Seeming nice and pleasant’ is a term for the six interior sense fields.

‘A downstream lake’ is a term for the five lower fetters.

‘Danger of waves’ is a term for anger and distress.

‘Whirlpool’ is a term for the five kinds of sensual stimulation.

‘Saltwater crocodiles and monsters’ is a term for females.

‘Against the stream’ is a term for renunciation.

‘Paddling with hands and feet’ is a term for rousing energy.

‘A person with clear eyes’ is a term for the Realized One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“In pain they’d give up sensual pleasures, aspiring to the future sanctuary from the yoke. With deep understanding and heart well-freed, they’d experience universal liberation. That knowledge master who has completed the spiritual journey, and gone to the end of the world, is called ‘one who has gone beyond’.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 110

Iti 110
Walking
Carasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, suppose a mendicant has a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought while walking. They tolerate it and don’t give it up, get rid of it, eliminate it, and obliterate it. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘not keen or prudent, always lazy, and lacking energy’ when walking.

Suppose a mendicant has a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought while standing … sitting … or when lying down while awake. They tolerate it and don’t give it up, get rid of it, eliminate it, and obliterate it. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘not keen or prudent, always lazy, and lacking energy’ when lying down while awake.

Suppose a mendicant has a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought while walking. They don’t tolerate them, but give them up, get rid of them, eliminate them, and obliterate them. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘keen and prudent, always energetic and determined’ when walking.

Suppose a mendicant has a sensual, malicious, or cruel thought while standing … sitting … or when lying down while awake. They don’t tolerate it, but give it up, get rid of it, eliminate it, and obliterate it. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘keen and prudent, always energetic and determined’ when lying down while awake.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Whether walking or standing, sitting or lying down, one who thinks a bad thought to do with the lay life is practicing the wrong way, lost among things that delude; such a mendicant is incapable of experiencing the highest awakening.

But one who, whether standing or walking, sitting or lying down, has calmed their thoughts, loving peace of mind; such a mendicant is capable of experiencing the highest awakening.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 111

Iti 111
Accomplishment in Ethics
Sampannasīlasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, live by the ethical precepts and the monastic code. Live restrained in the monastic code, conducting yourselves well and seeking alms in suitable places. Seeing danger in the slightest fault, keep the rules you’ve undertaken.

When you’ve done this, what more is there to do?

Suppose a mendicant has got rid of desire and ill will while walking, and has given up dullness and drowsiness, restlessness and remorse, and doubt. Their energy is roused up and unflagging, their mindfulness is established and lucid, their body is tranquil and undisturbed, and their mind is immersed in samādhi. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘keen and prudent, always energetic and determined’ when walking.

Suppose a mendicant has got rid of desire and ill will while standing …

sitting …

or when lying down while awake. Such a mendicant is said to be ‘keen and prudent, always energetic and determined’ when lying down while awake.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Carefully walking, carefully standing, carefully sitting, carefully lying; a mendicant carefully bends their limbs, and carefully extends them.

Above, below, all round, as far as the earth extends; they scrutinize the rise and fall of phenomena such as the aggregates.

Meditating diligently like this, peaceful, not restless, training in what leads to serenity of heart, always staying mindful; they call such a mendicant ‘always determined’.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

Iti 112

Iti 112
The World
Lokasutta

This was said by the Buddha, the Perfected One: that is what I heard.

“Mendicants, the world has been understood by the Realized One; and he is detached from the world. The origin of the world has been understood by the Realized One; and he has given up the origin of the world. The cessation of the world has been understood by the Realized One; and he has realized the cessation of the world. The practice that leads to the cessation of the world has been understood by the Realized One; and he has developed the practice that leads to the cessation of the world.

In this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—whatever is seen, heard, thought, known, attained, sought, and explored by the mind, all that has been understood by the Realized One. That’s why he’s called the ‘Realized One’.

From the night when the Realized One understands the supreme perfect awakening until the night he becomes fully extinguished—in the element of extinguishment with nothing left over—everything he speaks, says, and expresses is real, not otherwise. That’s why he’s called the ‘Realized One’.

The Realized One does as he says, and says as he does. Since this is so, that’s why he’s called the ‘Realized One’.

In this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—the Realized One is the vanquisher, the unvanquished, the universal seer, the wielder of power. That’s why he’s called the ‘Realized One’.”

The Buddha spoke this matter. On this it is said:

“Directly knowing the whole world as it is, and everything in it, he is detached from the whole world, disengaged from the whole world.

That wise one is the champion who is released from all ties. He has reached ultimate peace: extinguishment, fearing nothing from any quarter.

He is the Buddha, with defilements ended, untroubled, with doubts cut off. He has attained the end of all deeds, freed with the ending of attachments.

That Blessed One is the Buddha, he is the supreme lion, in all the world with its gods, he turns the divine wheel.

And so those gods and humans, who have gone to the Buddha for refuge, come together and revere him, even the deities revere him:

‘Tamed, he is the best of tamers, peaceful, he is the seer among the peaceful, liberated, he is the foremost of liberators, crossed over, he is the most excellent of guides across.’

And so they revere him, great of heart and rid of naivety. In the world with its gods, he has no rival.”

This too is a matter that was spoken by the Blessed One: that is what I heard.

The So it Was Said is finished.

Snp - Suttanipāta

Snp 1.1

Snp 1.1
The Serpent
Uragasutta

When anger surges, they drive it out, as with medicine a snake's spreading venom. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They've cut off greed entirely, like a lotus plucked flower and stalk. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They've cut off craving entirely, drying up that swift-flowing stream. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They've swept away conceit entirely, as a fragile bridge of reeds by a great flood. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

In future lives they find no substance, as an inspector of fig trees finds no flower. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They hide no anger within, gone beyond any kind of existence. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

Their mental vibrations are cleared away, internally clipped off entirely. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, but have gone beyond all this proliferation. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, for they know that nothing in the world is what it seems. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, knowing nothing is what it seems, free of greed. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, knowing nothing is what it seems, free of lust. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, knowing nothing is what it seems, free of hate. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have not run too far nor run back, knowing nothing is what it seems, free of delusion. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have no underlying tendencies at all, and are rid of unskillful roots, Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have nothing born of distress at all to make them to return to the near shore. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They have nothing born of entanglement at all, that would shackle them to a new life. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

They've given up the five hindrances, untroubled, rid of doubt, free of thorns. Such a mendicant sheds the near shore and the far, as a serpent its old worn-out skin.

Snp 1.2

Snp 1.2
The Wealthy Rancher
Dhaniyasutta

“I’ve boiled my rice and drawn my milk,” said Dhaniya the rancher, “I stay with my family along the bank of the Mahī. My hut is roofed, my sacred fire kindled: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I boil not with anger and have drawn out hard-heartedness,” said the Buddha, “I stay for one night along the bank of the Mahī. My hut is wide open, my fire is quenched: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“No gadflies or mosquitoes are found,” said Dhaniya, “cows graze on the lush meadow grass. They get by even when the rain comes: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I bound a raft and made it well,” said the Buddha, “and with it I crossed over, went to the far shore, and dispelled the flood. Now I have no need for a raft: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“My wife is obedient, not wanton,” said Dhaniya, “long have we lived together happily. I hear nothing bad about her: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“My mind is obedient and freed,” said the Buddha, “long nurtured and well-tamed. Nothing bad is found in me: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I am self-employed,” said Dhaniya, “and my healthy children likewise. I hear nothing bad about them: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I am no-one’s lackey,” said the Buddha, “with what I have earned I wander the world. I have no need for wages: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I have heifers and sucklings,” said Dhaniya, “cows in calf and breeding cows. I’ve also got a bull, leader of the herd here: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“I have no heifers or sucklings,” said the Buddha, “no cows in calf or breeding cows. I haven’t got a bull, leader of the herd here: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“The stakes are driven in, unshakable,” said Dhaniya, “The grass halters are new and well-woven, not even the sucklings can break them: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

“Like a bull I broke the bonds,” said the Buddha, “like an elephant I snapped the vine. I will never lie in a womb again: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.”

Right then a thundercloud rained down, soaking the uplands and valleys. Hearing the sky-god rain down, Dhaniya said this:

“It is no small gain for us that we have seen the Buddha. We come to you for refuge, Clear-eyed One. O great sage, please be our Teacher.

My wife and I, obedient, shall lead the spiritual life under the Holy One. Gone beyond birth and death, we shall make an end of suffering.”

“Your children bring you delight!” said Māra the Wicked, “Your cattle also bring you delight! For attachments are a man’s delight; without attachments there’s no delight.”

“Your children bring you sorrow,” said the Buddha, “Your cattle also bring you sorrow. For attachments are a man’s sorrow; without attachments there are no sorrows.”

Snp 1.3

Snp 1.3
The Horned Rhino
Khaggavisāṇasutta

When you've laid down arms toward all creatures, not harming even a single one, don't wish for a child, let alone a companion: live alone like a horned rhino.

Those with close relationships have affection, following which this pain arises. Seeing this danger born of affection, live alone like a horned rhino.

When feelings for friends and loved ones are tied up in selfish love, you miss out on the goal. Seeing this peril in intimacy, live alone like a horned rhino.

As a spreading bamboo gets entangled, so does concern for partners and children. Like a bamboo shoot unimpeded, live alone like a horned rhino.

As a wild deer loose in the forest grazes wherever it wants, a smart person looking for freedom would live alone like a horned rhino.

When among friends, whether staying in place or going on a journey, you're always on call. Looking for the uncoveted freedom, live alone like a horned rhino.

Among friends you have fun and games, and for children you are full of love. Though loathe to depart from those you hold dear, live alone like a horned rhino.

At ease in any quarter, unresisting, content with whatever comes your way; prevailing over adversities, dauntless, live alone like a horned rhino.

Even some renunciates are hard to please, as are some layfolk dwelling at home. Don't worry about others' children, live alone like a horned rhino.

Having shed the marks of the home life, like the fallen leaves of the Shady Orchid Tree; having cut the bonds of the home life, a hero would live alone like a horned rhino.

If you find an alert companion, a wise and virtuous friend, then, overcoming all adversities, wander with them, joyful and mindful.

If you find no alert companion, no wise and virtuous friend, then, like a king who flees his conquered realm, wander alone like a tusker in the wilds.

Clearly we praise the blessing of a friend, it's good to be with friends your equal or better. but failing to find them, eating blamelessly, live alone like a horned rhino.

Though made of shining gold, well-finished by a smith, when two bracelets share the same arm they clash up against each other. Seeing this, live alone like a horned rhino.

Thinking, “So too, if I had a partner, there’d be flattery or curses.” Seeing this peril in the future, live alone like a horned rhino.

Sensual pleasures are diverse, sweet, delightful, appearing in disguise they disturb the mind. Seeing danger in sensual stimulations, live alone like a horned rhino.

This is a calamity, a boil, a disaster, an illness, a dart, and a danger for me. Seeing this peril in sensuality, live alone like a horned rhino.

Heat and cold, hunger and thirst, wind and sun, flies and snakes: having put up with all these things, live alone like a horned rhino.

As a full-grown elephant, lotus-eating, magnificent, forsaking the herd, stays as it pleases in the forest, live alone like a horned rhino.

It’s impossible for one who delights in company to experience even temporary freedom. Heeding the speech of the kinsman of the Sun, live alone like a horned rhino.

Thinking, “I have left twisted views behind, reached the sure way, and gained the path; I’ve given rise to knowledge, and need no-one to guide me”, live alone like a horned rhino.

No greed, no guile, no thirst, no slur, dross and delusion is smelted off; free of hoping for anything in the world, live alone like a horned rhino.

Avoid a wicked companion, blind to the good, habitually immoral. Don’t befriend the heedless and the hankering, but live alone like a horned rhino.

Spend time with the learned who have memorized the teachings, an eloquent and uplifting friend. When you understand the meanings and have dispelled doubt, live alone like a horned rhino.

When you realize that worldly fun and games and pleasure are unsatisfying, disregarding them, as one unadorned, a speaker of truth, live alone like a horned rhino.

Children, partner, father, mother, wealth and grain and relatives: having given up sensual pleasures to this extent, live alone like a horned rhino.

“This is a snare. Here there’s hardly any happiness, little gratification, and it’s full of drawbacks. It’s a hook.” Knowing this, a thoughtful person would live alone like a horned rhino.

Having burst apart the fetters, like a fish that tears the net and swims free, or a fire not returning to ground it has burned, live alone like a horned rhino.

Eyes downcast, not footloose, senses guarded, mind protected, uncorrupted, not burning with desire, live alone like a horned rhino.

Having shed the marks of the home life, like the fallen leaves of the Shady Orchid Tree, and gone forth in the ocher robe, live alone like a horned rhino.

Not wanton, nor rousing greed for tastes, providing for no other, wandering indiscriminately for alms, not attached to this family or that, live alone like a horned rhino.

When you've given up five mental obstacles, and expelled all corruptions, and cut off affection and hate, being independent, live alone like a horned rhino.

When you've put pleasure and pain behind you, and former happiness and sadness, and gained equanimity serene and pure, live alone like a horned rhino.

With energy roused to reach the ultimate goal, not sluggish in mind or lazy, vigorous, strong and powerful, live alone like a horned rhino.

Not neglecting retreat and absorption, always living in line with the teachings, comprehending the danger in rebirths, live alone like a horned rhino.

One whose aim is the ending of craving—diligent, clever, learned, mindful, resolute—who has appraised the teaching and is bound for awakening, should live alone like a horned rhino.

Like a lion not startled by sounds, like wind not caught in a net, like water not sticking to a lotus, live alone like a horned rhino.

Like the fierce-fanged lion, king of beasts, who wanders as conqueror and victor, you should frequent remote lodgings, and live alone like a horned rhino.

In time, cultivate freedom through love, compassion, rejoicing, and equanimity. Not upset by anything in the world, live alone like a horned rhino.

Having given up greed, hate, and delusion, having burst apart the fetters, unafraid at the end of life, live alone like a horned rhino.

They befriend you and serve you for their own sake; these days it's hard to find friends lacking ulterior motive. Impure folk cleverly profit themselves—live alone like a horned rhino.

Snp 1.4

Snp 1.4
With Bhāradvāja the Farmer
Kasibhāradvājasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in the land of the Magadhans in the Southern Hills near the brahmin village of Ekanāḷa. Now at that time the brahmin Bhāradvāja the Farmer had harnessed around five hundred plows, it being the season for sowing. Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to where Bhāradvāja the Farmer was working. Now at that time Bhāradvāja the Farmer was distributing food. Then the Buddha went to where the distribution was taking place and stood to one side.

Bhāradvāja the Farmer saw him standing for alms and said to him, “I plough and sow, ascetic, and then I eat. You too should plough and sow, then you may eat.”

“I too plough and sow, brahmin, and then I eat.” “I don’t see Mister Gotama with a yoke or plow or plowshare or goad or oxen, yet he says: ‘I too plough and sow, brahmin, and then I eat.’”

Then Bhāradvāja the Farmer addressed the Buddha in verse:

“You claim to be a farmer, but I don’t see you farming. Tell me your farming when asked, so I can recognize your farming.”

“Faith is my seed, fervor my rain, and wisdom is my yoke and plough. Conscience is my pole, mind my strap, mindfulness my plowshare and goad.

Guarded in body and speech, I restrict my intake of food. I use truth as my scythe, and gentleness is my release.

Energy is my beast of burden, transporting me to sanctuary from the yoke. It goes without turning back where there is no sorrow.

That’s how to do the farming that has freedom from death as its fruit. When you finish this farming you’re released from all suffering.”

Then Bhāradvāja the Farmer filled a large bronze dish with milk-rice and presented it to the Buddha: “Eat the milk-rice, Mister Gotama, you are truly a farmer. For Mister Gotama does the farming that has freedom from death as its fruit.”

“Food enchanted by a spell isn’t fit for me to eat. That’s not the principle of those who see, brahmin. The Buddhas reject things enchanted with spells. Since there is such a principle, brahmin, that's how they live.

Serve with other food and drink the consummate one, the great seer, with defilements ended and remorse stilled. For he is the field for the seeker of merit."

"Then, Mister Gotama, to whom should I give the milk-rice?" "Brahmin, I don't see anyone in this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—who can properly digest this milk-rice, except for the Realized One or one of his disciples. Well then, brahmin, throw out the milk-rice where there is little that grows, or drop it into water that has no living creatures."

So Bhāradvāja the Farmer dropped the milk-rice in water that had no living creatures. And when the milk-rice was placed in the water, it sizzled and hissed, steaming and fuming. Suppose there was an iron cauldron that had been heated all day. If you placed it in the water, it would sizzle and hiss, steaming and fuming. In the same way, when the milk-rice was placed in the water, it sizzled and hissed, steaming and fuming.

Then Bhāradvāja the Farmer, shocked and awestruck, went up to the Buddha, bowed down with his head at the Buddha's feet, and said, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! As if he were righting the overturned, or revealing the hidden, or pointing out the path to the lost, or lighting a lamp in the dark so people with clear eyes can see what's there, Mister Gotama has made the teaching clear in many ways. I go for refuge to Mister Gotama, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. May I receive the going forth, the ordination in the ascetic Gotama's presence?"

And Bhāradvāja the Farmer received the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha's presence. Not long after his ordination, Venerable Bhāradvāja, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme end of the spiritual path in this very life. He lived having achieved with his own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness. He understood: "Rebirth is ended; the spiritual journey has been completed; what had to be done has been done; there is no return to any state of existence." And Venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the perfected.

Snp 1.5

Snp 1.5
With Cunda
Cundasutta

“I ask the sage abounding in wisdom,” said Cunda the smith, “the Buddha, master of the teaching, free of craving, best of men, excellent charioteer, please tell me this: how many ascetics are there in the world?”

“There are four ascetics, not a fifth.” said the Buddha to Cunda, “Being asked to bear witness, I will explain them to you: the path-victor, the path-teacher, the path-liver, and the path-wrecker.”

“Who is a path-victor according to the Buddhas?” said Cunda the smith, “and how is one an unequaled explainer of the path? Tell me when asked about one who lives the path, then declare the path-wrecker.”

“Rid of doubt, free of thorns, delighting in quenching, not fawning, a guide for the world with its gods. The Buddhas say one such is victor of the path.

Knowing the ultimate as ultimate, they explain and analyze the teaching right here. That sage unstirred, with doubt cut off, is the second mendicant, I say, the teacher of the path.

Living restrained and mindful on the path of the well-taught passages of teaching, cultivating blameless states, is the third mendicant, I say, the path-liver.

Dressed like one true to their vows, pushy, rude, a corrupter of families, devious, unrestrained, chaff, the path-wrecker’s life is a sham.

A layperson who gets this, a learned, wise noble disciple, knows that ‘They are not all like that one’. So when they see them they don’t lose their faith. For how could one equate them—the corrupt with the uncorrupt, the pure with the impure?”

Snp 1.6

Snp 1.6
Downfalls
Parābhavasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and stood to one side. Standing to one side, that deity addressed the Buddha in verse:

"We ask Gotama about a man's downfall. We have come to ask you sir: what leads to downfall?"

"It's easy to know success, and downfall is just as easy. One who loves the teaching succeeds, but a hater of the teaching meets their downfall."

"We get what you're saying, this is the first downfall. Tell us the second, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?"

"The bad are dear to him, he has no love for the good. He believes the teaching of the bad; and that leads to his downfall."

"We get what you're saying, this is the second downfall. Tell us the third, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?"

"Fond of sleep, fond of company, a man who does no work; he's lazy, marked by anger, and that leads to his downfall."

"We get what you're saying, this is the third downfall. Tell us the fourth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?"

"Though able, he does not look after his mother and father when elderly, past their prime, and that leads to his downfall."

"We get what you're saying, this is the fourth downfall. Tell us the fifth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?"

"He deceives with lies ascetics and brahmins and other renunciates, and that leads to his downfall."

"We get what you're saying, this is the fifth downfall. Tell us the sixth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?"

“A man with plenty of wealth—gold and food—eats delicacies alone, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the sixth downfall. Tell us the seventh, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“Vain of birth, wealth, and clan, a man looks down on his own family, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the seventh downfall. Tell us the eighth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“In womanizing, drinking, and gambling, a man wastes all that he has earned, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the eighth downfall. Tell us the ninth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“Not content with his own partners, he debauches himself with prostitutes, and with others’ partners, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the ninth downfall. Tell us the tenth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“A man well past his prime marries a girl with budding breasts; he cannot sleep for jealousy, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the tenth downfall. Tell us the eleventh, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“He places in authority a woman or a man who’s a drunkard and a wastrel, and that leads to his downfall.”

“We get what you’re saying, this is the eleventh downfall. Tell us the twelfth, Blessed One: what leads to downfall?”

“A man of little wealth and strong craving, born into an aristocratic family, sets his sights on kingship, and that leads to his downfall.

Seeing these downfalls in the world, an astute and noble person, accomplished in vision, will enjoy a world of grace.”

Snp 1.7

Snp 1.7
The Lowlife
Vasalasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms. Now at that time in the brahmin Bhāradvāja the Fire-Worshiper's home the sacred flame had been kindled and the oblation prepared. Wandering indiscriminately for almsfood in Sāvatthī, the Buddha approached Bhāradvāja the Fire-Worshiper's house.

Bhāradvāja the Fire-Worshiper saw the Buddha coming off in the distance and said to him, "Stop right there, shaveling! Right there, fake ascetic! Right there, lowlife!"

When he said this, the Buddha said to him, "But brahmin, do you know what is a lowlife or what are the qualities that make you a lowlife?" "No I do not, Mister Gotama. Please, Mister Gotama, teach me this matter so I can understand what is a lowlife or what are the qualities that make you a lowlife." "Well then, brahmin, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak." "Yes sir," Bhāradvāja the Fire-Worshiper replied. The Buddha said this:

"Irritable and hostile, wicked and offensive, a man deficient in view, deceitful: know him as a lowlife.

He harms living creatures born of womb or of egg, and has no kindness for creatures: know him as a lowlife.

He destroys and devastates villages and towns, a notorious oppressor: know him as a lowlife.

Whether in village or wilderness, he steals what belongs to others, taking what has not been given: know him as a lowlife.

Having fallen into debt, when pressed to pay up he flees, saying 'I don't owe you anything!': know him as a lowlife.

Wanting some item or other, he attacks a person in the street and takes it: know him as a lowlife.

For his own sake or the sake of another, or for the sake of wealth, a man tells a lie when asked to bear witness: know him as a lowlife.

He is spied among the partners of relatives and friends, by force or seduction: know him as a lowlife.

Though able, he does not look after his mother and father when elderly, past their prime: know him as a lowlife.

He hits or verbally abuses his mother or father, brother, sister, or mother-in-law: know him as a lowlife.

When asked about the good, he teaches what is bad, giving secretive advice: know him as a lowlife.

Having done a bad deed, he wishes, ‘May no-one find me out!’ His deeds are underhand: know him as a lowlife.

When visiting another family he eats their delicious food, but does not return the honor: know him as a lowlife.

He deceives with lies ascetics and brahmins and other nomads: know him as a lowlife.

When time comes to offer a meal to brahmins or ascetics, he abuses them and does not give: know him as a lowlife.

He talks about what never happened, being wrapped up in delusion, chasing after some item or other: know him as a lowlife.

He extols himself and disparages others, brought down by his pride: know him as a lowlife.

He’s a bully and a miser, of corrupt wishes, stingy, and devious, shameless, imprudent: know him as a lowlife.

He insults the Buddha or his disciple, whether lay or renunciate: know him as a lowlife.

He claims to be a perfected one, when he really is no such thing. In the world with its Brahmās, that crook is truly the lowest lowlife. These who are called lowlifes I have explained to you.

You’re not a lowlife by birth, nor by birth are you a brahmin. You’re a lowlife by your deeds, by deeds you’re a brahmin.

And also you should know according to this example. Sopaka the corpse-worker’s son became renowned as Mātaṅga.

Mātaṅga achieved the highest fame so very hard to find. Lots of aristocrats and brahmins came to serve him.

He ascended the stainless highway that leads to the heavens; having discarded sensual desire, he was reborn in a Brahmā realm. His birth did not prevent him from rebirth in the Brahmā realm.

Those born in a brahmin family who recite as kinsmen of the hymns, are often discovered in the midst of wicked deeds.

Blameworthy in the present life, and in the next, a bad destination. Their birth does not prevent them from blame or bad destiny.

You're not a lowlife by birth, nor by birth are you a brahmin. You're a lowlife by your deeds, by deeds you're a brahmin."

When he had spoken, the brahmin Bhāradvāja the Fire-Worshiper said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

Snp 1.8

Snp 1.8
The Discourse on Love
Mettasutta

Those who are skilled in the meaning of scripture should practice as follows to realize the state of peace. Let them be able and upright, very upright, easy to speak to, gentle and humble; content and unburdensome, unbusied, living lightly, alert, with senses calmed, courteous, not fawning on families.

Let them not do the slightest thing that others might blame with reason. May they be happy and safe! May all beings be happy!

Whatever living creatures there are with not a one left out—frail or firm, long or large, medium, small, tiny or round, seen or unseen, living far or near, those who have been born and those about to be born—may all beings be happy!

Let none turn from another, nor look down on anyone anywhere. Though provoked or aggrieved, let them not wish pain on each other.

Even as a mother would protect with her life her child, her only child, so too for all creatures unfold a boundless heart.

With love for the whole world, unfold a boundless heart: above, below, all round, unconstricted, without enemy or foe.

When standing, walking, sitting, or lying down while yet unweary, keep this ever in mind; for this, they say, is a divine meditation in this life.

Avoiding harmful views, virtuous, accomplished in insight, with sensual desire dispelled, they never return to a womb again.

Snp 1.9

Snp 1.9
With Hemavata
Hemavatasutta

“Today is the fifteenth day sabbath,” said Sātāgira, the native spirit of mount Sātā, “a holy night is at hand. Come now, let us see Gotama, the Teacher of peerless name.”

“Isn’t his mind well-disposed,” said Hemavata, the native spirit of the Himalayas, “impartial towards all creatures? And aren’t his thoughts under control when it comes to likes and dislikes?”

“His mind is well-disposed,” said Sātāgira, “impartial towards all creatures. His thoughts are under control when it comes to his likes and dislikes.”

“Doesn’t he not steal?” said Hemavata, “And doesn’t he harm not a creature? Isn’t he far from negligence? And doesn’t he not neglect absorption?”

“He does not take what is not given,” said Sātāgira, “and he harms not a creature. He is far from negligence—the Buddha does not neglect absorption.”

“Doesn’t he avoid lying?” said Hemavata, “And doesn’t he not speak sharply? Doesn’t he avoid divisive speech, as well as speaking nonsense?”

“He does not lie,” said Sātāgira, “nor does he speak sharply. He avoids divisive speech, and thoughtfully speaks wise counsel.”

“Doesn’t he find sensual pleasures unattractive?” said Hemavata, “And isn’t his mind unclouded? Hasn’t he escaped delusion? Does his eye see clearly in all things?”

“He does not find sensual pleasures attractive,” said Sātāgira, “and his mind is unclouded. He has escaped all delusion—the Buddha, whose eye sees clearly in all things.”

“Isn’t he accomplished in knowledge?” said Hemavata, “And doesn’t he live a pure life? Aren’t his defilements all ended? Doesn’t he have no future lives?”

“He is accomplished in knowledge,” said Sātāgira, “and he does live a pure life. His defilements are all ended, there are no future lives for him.”

“Accomplished is the sage’s mind in action and in speech, and he’s accomplished in knowledge and conduct as per the teaching you praise.”

“Accomplished is the sage’s mind in action and in speech, and he’s accomplished in knowledge and conduct as per the teaching you rejoice in.

Accomplished is the sage's mind in action and in speech, and he's accomplished in knowledge and conduct: come now, let us see Gotama."

"The hero so lean, with antelope calves, not greedy, eating little, the sage meditating alone in the forest, come now, let us see Gotama.

An elephant, wandering alone like a lion, unconcerned for sensual pleasures, let's approach him and ask about release from the snare of death."

"The communicator, the instructor, who has gone beyond all things, Awakened, beyond enmity and fear, let us ask Gotama."

"What has the world arisen in?" said Hemavata, What does it get close to? By grasping what is the world troubled in what?"

"The world's arisen in six," said the Buddha to Hemavata. "It gets close to six. By grasping at these six, the world's troubled in six."

"What is that grasping by which the world is troubled? Tell us the exit when asked: how is one released from all suffering?"

"The world has five kinds of sensual stimulation, and the mind is said to be the sixth. When you've discarded desire for these, you're released from all suffering.

This is the exit from the world, explained in accord with the truth. The way I've explained it is how you're released from all suffering."

"Who here crosses the flood, Who crosses the deluge? Who, not standing and unsupported, does not sink in the deep?"

"Someone who is always endowed with ethics, wise and serene, inwardly reflective, mindful, crosses the flood so hard to cross.

Someone who desists from sensual perception, who has escaped all fetters, and is finished with relishing of rebirth, does not sink in the deep."

"Behold him of wisdom deep who sees the subtle meaning, who has nothing, unattached to sensual life, everywhere free, the great seer treading the holy road.

Behold him of peerless name who sees the subtle meaning, giver of wisdom, unattached to the realm of sensuality: see him, the all-knower, so very intelligent, the great seer treading the noble road."

"It was a fine sight for us today, a good dawn, a good rising, to see the Awakened One, the undefiled one who has crossed the flood.

These thousand native spirits powerful and glorious, all go to you for refuge, you are our supreme Teacher.

We shall journey village to village, peak to peak, paying homage to the Buddha, and the natural excellence of the teaching!”

Snp 1.10

Snp 1.10
With Āḷavaka
Āḷavakasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Āḷavī in the haunt of the native spirit Āḷavaka. Then the native spirit Āḷavaka went up to the Buddha, and said to him: “Get out, ascetic!” Saying, “All right, sir,” the Buddha went out. “Get in, ascetic!” Saying, “All right, sir,” the Buddha went in.

For a second time … And for a third time the native spirit Āḷavaka said to the Buddha, “Get out, ascetic!” Saying, “All right, sir,” the Buddha went out. “Get in, ascetic!” Saying, “All right, sir,” the Buddha went in.

And for a fourth time the native spirit Āḷavaka said to the Buddha, “Get out, ascetic!” “No, sir, I won’t get out. Do what you must.”

“I will ask you a question, ascetic. If you don’t answer me, I’ll drive you insane, or explode your heart, or grab you by the feet and throw you to the far shore of the Ganges!”

“I don’t see anyone in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans who could do that to me. But anyway, ask what you wish.” Then the native spirit Āḷavaka addressed the Buddha in verse:

“What’s a person’s best wealth? What brings happiness when practiced well? What’s the sweetest taste of all? The one they say has the best life: how do they live?”

“Faith here is a person’s best wealth. the teaching brings happiness when practiced well. Truth is the sweetest taste of all. The one they say has the best life lives by wisdom.”

“How do you cross the flood? How do you cross the deluge? How do you get over suffering? How do you get purified?”

“By faith you cross the flood, and by diligence the deluge. By energy you get past suffering, and you’re purified by wisdom.”

“How do you get wisdom? How do you earn wealth? How do you get a good reputation? How do you hold on to friends? How do the departed not grieve when passing from this world to the next?”

“One who is diligent and discerning gains wisdom by wanting to learn, having faith in the perfected ones, and the teaching for becoming extinguished.

Being responsible, acting appropriately, and working hard you earn wealth. Truthfulness wins you a good reputation. You hold on to friends by giving.

A faithful householder who has these four qualities does not grieve after passing away: truth, principle, steadfastness, and generosity.

Go ahead, ask others as well, there are many ascetics and brahmins. See whether anything better is found than truth, self-control, generosity, and patience."

"Why now would I question the many ascetics and brahmins? Today I understand what's good for the next life.

It was truly for my benefit that the Buddha came to stay at Āḷavī. Today I understand where a gift is very fruitful.

I myself will journey village to village, town to town, paying homage to the Buddha, and the natural excellence of the teaching!"

Snp 1.11

Snp 1.11
Victory Over Desire for the Body
Vijayasutta

Walking and standing, sitting and lying down, extending and contracting the limbs: these are the movements of the body.

Linked together by bones and sinews, plastered over with flesh and hide, and covered by the skin, the body is not seen as it is.

It's full of guts and belly, liver and bladder, heart and lungs, kidney and spleen, spit and snot, sweat and fat, blood and synovial fluid, bile and grease.

Then in nine streams the filth is always flowing. There is muck from the eyes, wax from the ears, and snot from the nostrils. The mouth sometimes vomits bile and sometimes phlegm. And from the body, sweat and waste.

Then there is the hollow head all filled with brains. Governed by ignorance, the fool thinks it's lovely.

And when it lies dead, bloated and livid, discarded in a charnel ground, the relatives forget it.

It's devoured by dogs, by jackals, wolves, and worms. It's devoured by crows and vultures, and any other creatures there.

A wise mendicant here, having heard the Buddha's words, fully understands it, for they see it as it is.

"As this is, so is that, as that is, so is this." They'd reject desire for the body inside and out.

That wise mendicant here rid of desire and lust, has found the peace free of death, extinguishment, the imperishable state.

This two-legged body is dirty and stinking, full of different carcasses, and oozing all over the place—but still it is cherished!

And if, on account of such a body, someone prides themselves or looks down on others—what is that but a failure to see?

Snp 1.12

Snp 1.12
The Sage
Munisutta

Peril stems from intimacy, dust comes from a home. Freedom from home and intimacy: that is the sage's vision.

Having cut down what's grown, they wouldn't replant, nor would they nurture what's growing. That's who they call a sage wandering alone, the great seer has seen the state of peace.

Having appraised the fields and measured the seeds, they wouldn't nurture them with moisture. Truly that sage who sees the ending of rebirth has left speculation behind and is beyond reckoning.

Understanding all the planes of rebirth, not wanting a single one of them, Truly that sage freed of greed need not strive, for they have reached the far shore.

The champion, all-knower, so very intelligent, unsullied in the midst of all things, has given up all, freed in the ending of craving: that's who the wise know as a sage.

Strong in wisdom, with precepts and observances intact, serene, loving absorption, mindful, released from chains, kind, undefiled: that's who the wise know as a sage.

The diligent sage wandering alone, is unaffected by blame and praise—like a lion not startled by sounds, like wind not caught in a net, like water not sticking to a lotus. Leader of others, not by others led: that's who the wise know as a sage.

Steady as a post in a bathing-place when others speak endlessly against them, freed of greed, with senses stilled: that's who the wise know as a sage.

Steadfast, straight as a shuttle, horrified by wicked deeds, discerning the just and the unjust: that's who the wise know as a sage.

Restrained, they do no evil, young or middle-aged, the sage is self-controlled. Irreproachable, he does not insult anyone: that's who the wise know as a sage.

When one who lives on charity receives alms, from the top, the middle, or the leftovers, they think it unworthy to praise or put down: that's who the wise know as a sage.

The sage lives refraining from sex, even when young is not tied down, refraining from indulgence and negligence, freed: that's who the wise know as a sage.

Understanding the world, the seer of the ultimate goal, the poised one who has crossed the flood and the ocean, has cut the ties, unattached and undefiled: that's who the wise know as a sage.

The two are not the same, far apart in lifestyle and conduct—the householder providing for a wife, and the selfless one true to their vows. The unrestrained householder kills other creatures, while the restrained sage always protects living creatures.

As the crested blue-necked peacock flying through the sky never approaches the speed of the swan, so the householder cannot compete with the mendicant, the sage meditating secluded in the woods.

Snp 2.1

Snp 2.1
Gems
Ratanasutta

Whatever beings have gathered here, on the ground or in the sky: may beings all be of happy heart, and listen carefully to what is said.

So pay heed, all you beings, have love for humankind, who day and night bring offerings; please protect them diligently.

There's no wealth here or beyond, no sublime gem in the heavens, that equals the Realized One. This sublime gem is in the Buddha: by this truth, may you be well!

Ending, dispassion, the undying, the sublime, attained by the Sakyan Sage immersed in samādhi; there is nothing equal to that Dhamma. This sublime gem is in the Dhamma: by this truth, may you be well!

The purity praised by the highest Buddha is said to be the "immersion with immediate fruit"; no equal to that immersion is found. This sublime gem is in the Dhamma: by this truth, may you be well!

The eight individuals praised by the good, are the four pairs of the Holy One's disciples; they are worthy of religious donations, what's given to them is very fruitful. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

Dedicated to Gotama's dispensation, strong-minded, free of sense desire, they've attained the goal, plunged into freedom from death, and enjoy the quenching they've freely gained. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

As a well planted boundary-pillar is not shaken by the four winds, I say a true person is like this, who sees the noble truths in experience. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

Those who fathom the noble truths taught by the one of deep wisdom, do not take an eighth life, even if they are hugely negligent. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

When they attain to vision they give up three things: substantialist view, doubt, and any attachment to precepts and observances.

They're freed from the four places of loss, and cannot do six things. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

Even if they do a bad deed by body, speech, or mind, they are unable to conceal it; this inability applies to one who has seen the truth, they say. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

Like a tall forest tree crowned with flowers in the first month of summer; that's how he taught the superb Dhamma, leading to quenching, the ultimate benefit. This sublime gem is in the Buddha: by this truth, may you be well!

The superb, knower of the superb, giver of the superb, bringer of the superb; taught the superb Dhamma supreme. This sublime gem is in the Buddha: by this truth, may you be well!

The old is ended, nothing new is produced. their minds have no desire for future rebirth. Withered are the seeds, there's no desire for growth, those wise ones are extinguished just like this lamp. This sublime gem is in the Saṅgha: by this truth, may you be well!

Whatever beings have gathered here, on the ground or in the sky: the Realized One is honored by gods and humans! We bow to the Buddha! May you be safe!

Whatever beings have gathered here, on the ground or in the sky: the Realized One is honored by gods and humans! We bow to the Dhamma! May you be safe!

Whatever beings have gathered here, on the ground or in the sky: the Realized One is honored by gods and humans! We bow to the Saṅgha! May you be safe!

Snp 2.2

Snp 2.2
Putrefaction
Āmagandhasutta

“The good eat properly obtained millet, wild grains, broomcorn, greens, tubers, and squashes. They don’t lie to get what they want.

But when you eat delicious food, nicely cooked and prepared, and offered by others, enjoying a dish of fine rice, Kassapa, you eat putrefaction.

‘Putrefaction is not appropriate for me’—so you said, kinsman of Brahmā. Yet here you are enjoying a dish of fine rice, nicely cooked with the flesh of fowl. I’m asking you this, Kassapa: what do you take to be putrefaction?”

“Killing creatures, mutilation, murder, abduction; stealing, lying, cheating and fraud, learning crooked spells, adultery: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

People here with unbridled sensuality, greedy for tastes, mixed up in impurity, nihilists, immoral, intractable: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

Brutal and rough backbiters, pitiless and arrogant betrayers of friends, misers who never give anything: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

Anger, vanity, obstinacy, contrariness, deceit, jealousy, boastfulness, haughtiness, wicked associates: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

The ill-behaved, debt-evaders, slanderers, business cheats and con-artists, vile men committing depravity: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

People here who can’t stop harming living creatures, taking from others, intent on hurting, immoral, cruel, harsh, lacking regard for others: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

Greedy, hostile, aggressive to others, and addicted to evil—those beings pass into darkness, falling headlong into hell: this is putrefaction, not eating meat.

Not fish or flesh or fasting, being naked or shaven, or dreadlocks or dirt, not rough hides or serving the sacred flame, or the many fervent practices in the world aimed at immortality, not hymns or oblations, sacrifices or seasonal observances, will cleanse a mortal not free of doubt.

Guarding the streams of sense impressions, wander with faculties conquered, standing on the teaching, delighting in sincerity and gentleness. The wise have slipped their chains and given up all pain; they don’t cling to the seen and the heard.”

The Buddha explained this matter to him again and again, until the master of hymns understood it. It was illustrated with colorful verses by the sage free of putrefaction, unattached, hard to trace.

Having heard the fine words of the Buddha, that are free of putrefaction, getting rid of all suffering; humbled, he bowed to the Realized One, and right away begged to go forth.

Snp 2.3

Snp 2.3
Conscientious Companionship
Hirisutta

Flouting conscience, loathing it, saying “I’m on your side”, but not following up in deeds —know they’re not on your side.

Some say nice things to their friends without following it up. The wise will recognize one who talks without doing.

No true friend relentlessly suspects betrayal, looking for fault. One on whom you rest, like a child on the breast, is a true friend, not split from you by others.

One whose reward is the fruit of bearing the burden of service develops a happy state, producing joy and attracting praise.

One who has drunk the nectar of seclusion and the nectar of peace, free of stress, free of evil, drinks the joyous nectar of Dhamma.

Snp 2.4

Snp 2.4
Blessings
Maṅgalasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then, late at night, a glorious deity, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, and stood to one side. Standing to one side, that deity addressed the Buddha in verse:

"Many gods and humans have thought about blessings desiring well-being: declare the highest blessing."

"Not to fraternize with fools, but to fraternize with the wise, and honoring those worthy of honor: this is the highest blessing.

Living in a suitable region, having made merit in the past, being rightly resolved in oneself, this is the highest blessing.

Education and a craft, discipline and training, and well-spoken speech: this is the highest blessing.

Caring for mother and father, kindness to children and partners, and unstressful work: this is the highest blessing.

Giving and righteous conduct, kindness to relatives, blameless deeds: this is the highest blessing.

Desisting and abstaining from evil, avoiding alcoholic drinks, diligence in good qualities: this is the highest blessing.

Respect and humility, contentment and gratitude, and timely listening to the teaching: this is the highest blessing.

Patience, being easy to admonish, the sight of ascetics, and timely discussion of the teaching: this is the highest blessing.

Fervor and celibacy seeing the noble truths, and realization of extinguishment: this is the highest blessing.

Though touched by worldly things, their mind does not tremble; sorrowless, stainless, secure, this is the highest blessing.

Having completed these things, undefeated everywhere; everywhere they go in safety: this is their highest blessing.”

Snp 2.5

Snp 2.5
With Spiky
Sūcilomasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Gayā on the cut-stone ledge in the haunt of Spiky the native spirit. Now at that time the native spirits Shaggy and Spiky were passing by not far from the Buddha. So Shaggy said to Spiky, “That’s an ascetic.” “That’s no ascetic, he’s a faker! I’ll soon find out whether he’s an ascetic or a faker.”

Then Spiky went up to the Buddha and leaned up against his body, but the Buddha pulled away. Then Spiky said to the Buddha, “Are you afraid, ascetic?” “No, sir, I’m not afraid. But your touch is nasty.”

“I will ask you a question, ascetic. If you don’t answer me, I’ll drive you insane, or explode your heart, or grab you by the feet and throw you to the far shore of the Ganges!”

“I don’t see anyone in this world with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans who could do that to me. But anyway, ask what you wish.” Then Spiky addressed the Buddha in verse:

“Where do greed and hate come from? From where spring discontent, desire, and terror? Where do the mind’s thoughts originate, like a crow let loose by boys.”

“Greed and hate come from here; from here spring discontent, desire, and terror; here’s where the mind’s thoughts originate, like a crow let loose by boys.

Born of affection, originating in oneself, like the shoots from a banyan’s trunk; the many kinds of attachment to sensual pleasures are like camel’s foot creeper creeping through the woods.

Those who understand where they come from get rid of them—listen up, spirit! They cross this flood so hard to cross, not crossed before, so as to not be reborn.”

Snp 2.6

Snp 2.6
A Righteous Life
Kapilasutta (dhammacariyasutta)

A righteous life, a spiritual life, they call this the supreme treasure. But if someone goes forth from the lay life to homelessness who is of scurrilous character, a beast and a bully, their life gets worse, as poison grows inside them.

A mendicant who loves to argue, wrapped in delusion, doesn't even know what's been explained in the Dhamma taught by the Buddha.

Harassing those who are evolved, governed by ignorance, they don't know that corruption is the path that leads to hell.

Entering the underworld, passing from womb to womb, from darkness to darkness, such a mendicant falls into suffering after death.

One such as that is like a sewer brimful with years of filth for it's hard to clean one full of grime.

Mendicants, knowing that someone is like this, attached to the lay life, of corrupt wishes and wicked intent, of bad behavior and alms-resort, then having gathered in harmony, you should expel them. Throw out the trash! Get rid of the rubbish!

And sweep away the scraps—they're not ascetics, they just think they are. When you've thrown out those of corrupt wishes, of bad behavior and alms-resort, dwell in communion, ever mindful, the pure with the pure. Then in harmony, alert, you'll make an end of suffering.

Snp 2.7

Snp 2.7
Brahmanical Traditions
Brāhmaṇadhammikasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then several old and well-to-do brahmins of Kosala—elderly and senior, who were advanced in years and had reached the final stage of life—went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side and said to the Buddha: "Mister Gotama, are the ancient traditions of the brahmins exhibited these days among brahmins?" "No, brahmins, they are not." "If you wouldn't mind, Mister Gotama, please teach us the ancient traditions of the brahmins." "Well then, brahmins, listen and apply your mind well, I will speak." "Yes, sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"The ancient seers used to be restrained and austere. Having given up the five sensual titillations, they lived for their own true good.

Brahmins used to own no cattle, nor gold or grain. Chanting was their wealth and grain, which they guarded as a gift from god.

Food was prepared for them and left beside their doors. People believed that food prepared in faith should be given to them.

With colorful clothes, clothes and bedding, prosperous nations and countries honored those brahmins.

Brahmins used to be inviolable and invincible, protected by principle. No-one ever turned them away from the doors of families.

For forty-eight years they led the spiritual life. The brahmins of old pursued their quest for knowledge and conduct.

Brahmins never transgressed with another, nor did they purchase a wife. They lived together in love, joining together by mutual consent.

Brahmins never approached their wives for sex during the time outside the fertile phase of the menstrual cycle after menstruation.

They praised celibacy and morality, integrity, gentleness, and fervor, gentleness and harmlessness, and also patience.

He who was supreme among them, godlike, staunchly vigorous, did not engage in sex even in a dream.

Training in line with their duties, many smart people here praised celibacy and morality, and also patience.

They begged for rice, bedding, clothes, ghee, and oil. Having collected them legitimately, they arranged a sacrifice.

But they slew no cows while serving at the sacrifice. Like a mother, father, or brother, or some other relative, cows are our best friends, the fonts of medicine.

They give food and health, and beauty and happiness. Knowing these benefits, they slew no cows.

The brahmins were delicate and tall, beautiful and glorious. They were keen on all the duties required by their own traditions. So long as they continued in the world, people flourished happily.

But perversion crept into them little by little when they saw the splendor of the king and the ladies in all their finery.

Their chariots were harnessed with thoroughbreds, well-made with bright canopies, and their homes and houses were neatly laid out in measured rows.

They were lavished with herds of cattle, and furnished with bevies of lovely ladies. This extravagant human wealth was coveted by the brahmins.

They compiled hymns to that end, approached King Okkāka and said, ‘You have plenty of wealth and grain. Sacrifice! For you have much treasure. Sacrifice! For you have much wealth.’

Persuaded by the brahmins, the king, chief of charioteers, performed horse sacrifice, human sacrifice, the sacrifices of the ‘casting of the yoke-pin’, the ‘royal soma drinking’, and the ‘unbarred’. When he had carried out these sacrifices, he gave riches to the brahmins.

There were cattle, bedding, and clothes, and ladies in all their finery; chariots harnessed with thoroughbreds, well-made with bright canopies; and lovely homes, all neatly laid out in measured rows. Having furnished them with different grains, he gave riches to the brahmins.

When they got hold of that wealth, they arranged to store it up. Falling under the sway of desire, their craving grew and grew. They compiled hymns to that end, approached King Okkāka once more and said,

‘Like water and earth, gold, riches, and grain, are cows for humankind, as they are essential for creatures. Sacrifice! For you have much treasure. Sacrifice! For you have much wealth.’

Persuaded by the brahmins, the king, chief of charioteers, had many hundred thousand cows slain at the sacrifice.

Neither with feet nor with horns do cows harm anyone at all. Cows meek as lambs, supply buckets of milk. But taking them by the horns, the king slew them with a sword.

At that the gods and the ancestors, with Indra, the titans and monsters, roared out: ‘This is a crime against nature!’ as the sword fell on the cows.

There used to be three kinds of illness: greed, starvation, and old age. But due to the slaughter of cows, this grew to be ninety-eight.

This unnatural violence has been passed down as an ancient custom. Killing innocent creatures, the sacrificers forsake righteousness.

And that is how this mean old practice was criticized by sensible people. Wherever they see such a thing, folk criticize the sacrificer.

With righteousness gone, peasants and menials were split, as were many aristocrats, and wives looked down on their husbands.

Aristocrats and Brahmā’s kinsmen and others protected by their clan, neglecting their genealogy, fell under the sway of sensual pleasures.”

When he had spoken, those well-to-do brahmins said to the Buddha, “Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember us as lay followers who have gone for refuge for life.”

Snp 2.8

Snp 2.8
The Boat
Dhamma (nāvā) sutta

If you would learn the teaching from someone, honor them as the gods honor Indra. Then they will have confidence in you, and being learned, they reveal the teaching.

Heeding well, a wise pupil practicing in line with that teaching grows intelligent, discerning, and subtle through diligently sticking close to such a person.

But associating with a petty fool who falls short of the goal, jealous, then unable to discern the teaching in this life, one proceeds to death still plagued by doubts.

It's like a man who has plunged into a river, a rushing torrent in spate. As they are swept away downstream, how could they help others across?

Just so, one unable to discern the teaching, who hasn't studied the meaning under the learned, not knowing it oneself, still plagued by doubts, how could they help others to contemplate?

But one who has embarked on a strong boat equipped with rudder and oar, would bring many others across there with skill, care, and intelligence.

So too one who understands—a knowledge master, evolved, learned, and unflappable—can help others to contemplate, so long as they are prepared to listen carefully.

That's why you should spend time with a true person, intelligent and learned. Having understood the meaning, putting it into practice, one who understands the teaching would find happiness.

Snp 2.9

Snp 2.9
What Morality?
Kiṁsīlasutta

“With what morality, what conduct, fostering what deeds, would a person lay the foundations right, and reach the highest goal?”

“Honoring elders without jealousy, they’d know the time to visit their teachers. Treasuring the chance for a Dhamma talk, they’d listen carefully to the well-spoken words.

At the right time, they’d humbly enter the teachers’ presence, leaving obstinacy behind. They’d call to mind and put into practice the meaning, the teaching, self-control, and the spiritual life.

Delighting in the teaching, enjoying the teaching, standing on the teaching, evaluating the teaching, they’d never say anything that degraded the teaching, but would be guided by genuine words well-spoken.

Giving up mirth, prayer, weeping, ill will, deception, fraud, greed, conceit, aggression, crudeness, stains, and indulgence, they’d wander free of vanity, steadfast.

Understanding is the essence of well-spoken words, stillness is the essence of learning and understanding. Wisdom and learning do not flourish in a hasty and negligent person.

Those happy with the teaching proclaimed by the Noble One are supreme in speech, mind, and deed. Settled in peace, gentleness, and stillness, they’ve realized the essence of learning and wisdom.”

Snp 2.10

Snp 2.10
Get Up!
Uṭṭhānasutta

Get up and meditate! What’s the point in your sleeping? How can the afflicted slumber when injured by an arrow strike?

Get up and meditate! Train hard for peace! The King of Death has caught you heedless—don’t let him fool you under his sway.

Needy gods and humans are held back by clinging: get over it. Don’t let the moment pass you by. For if you miss your moment you’ll grieve when sent to hell.

Negligence is always dust; dust follows right behind negligence. Through diligence and knowledge, pluck out the dart from yourself.

Snp 2.11

Snp 2.11
With Rāhula
Rāhulasutta

“Does familiarity breed contempt, even for the man of wisdom? Do you honor he who holds aloft the torch for all humanity?”

“Familiarity breeds no contempt for the man of wisdom. I always honor he who holds aloft the torch for all humanity.”

“One who’s given up the five sensual stimulations, so pleasing and delightful, and who’s left the home life out of faith—let them make an end to suffering!

Mix with spiritual friends, stay in remote lodgings, secluded and quiet, and eat in moderation.

Robes, almsfood, requisites and lodgings: don’t crave such things; don’t come back to this world again.

Be restrained in the monastic code, and the five sense faculties, With mindfulness immersed in the body, be full of disillusionment.

Turn away from the sign that’s attractive, provoking lust. With mind unified and serene, meditate on the ugly aspects of the body.

Meditate on the signless, give up the tendency to conceit; and when you comprehend conceit, you will live at peace.”

That is how the Buddha regularly advised Venerable Rāhula with these verses.

Snp 2.12

Snp 2.12
Vaṅgīsa and His Mentor Nigrodhakappa
Nigrodhakappa (vaṅgīsa) sutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Āḷavī, at the Aggāḷava Tree-shrine. Now at that time it was not long after Venerable Vaṅgīsa's mentor, the senior monk named Nigrodhakappa, had become extinguished. Then as Vaṅgīsa was in private retreat this thought came to his mind: "Has my mentor become extinguished or not?" Then in the late afternoon, Venerable Vaṅgīsa came out of retreat and went to the Buddha. He bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him: "Just now, sir, as I was in private retreat this thought came to mind. 'Has my mentor become extinguished or not?'" Then Venerable Vaṅgīsa got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and addressed him in verse:

"I ask the teacher unrivaled in wisdom, who has cut off all doubts in this very life: a monk has died at Aggāḷava, who was well-known, famous, and quenched.

Nigrodhakappa was his name; it was given to that brahmin by you, Blessed One. He wandered in your honor, yearning for freedom, energetic, a resolute Seer of Truth.

O Sakyan, All-seer, we all wish to know about that disciple. Our ears are eager to hear, for you are the most excellent teacher.

Cut off our doubt, declare this to us; your wisdom is vast, tell us of his quenching! All-seer, speak among us, like the thousand-eyed Sakka in the midst of the gods!

Whatever ties there are, or paths to delusion, or things on the side of unknowing, or that are bases of doubt vanish on reaching a Realized One, for his eye is the best of all people's.

If no man were ever to disperse corruptions, like the wind dispersing the clouds, darkness would shroud the whole world; not even brilliant men would shine.

The wise are bringers of light; my hero, that is what I think of you. We've come for your discernment and knowledge: here in this assembly, declare to us about Kappāyana.

Swiftly send forth your sweet, sweet voice, like a goose stretching its neck, gently honking, lucid-flowing, with lovely tone: alert, we all listen to you.

You have entirely abandoned birth and death; restrained and pure, I urge you to speak the Dhamma! For while ordinary people have no wish-granter, Realized Ones have a comprehensibility-granter.

Your answer is definitive, and we will adopt it, for you have perfect understanding. We raise our joined palms one last time, one of unrivaled wisdom, don't deliberately confuse us.

Knowing the noble teaching from top to bottom, unrivaled hero, don't deliberately confuse us. As a man baking in the summer sun would long for water, I long for your voice, so let the sound rain down.

Surely Kappāyana did not lead the spiritual life in vain? Did he realize quenching, or did he still have a remnant of defilement? Let us hear what kind of liberation he had!"

"He cut off craving for name and form right here," said the Buddha, "the river of darkness that had long lain within him. He has entirely crossed over birth and death." So declared the Blessed One, the leader of the five.

"Now that I have heard your words, seventh of sages, I am confident. My question, it seems, was not in vain, the brahmin did not deceive me.

As he said, so he did—he was a disciple of the Buddha. He cut the net of death the deceiver, so extended and strong.

Blessed One, Kappāyana saw the starting point of grasping. He has indeed gone far beyond Death's domain so hard to pass."

Snp 2.13

Snp 2.13
The Right Way to Wander
Sammāparibbājanīyasutta

“I ask the sage abounding in wisdom—crossed-over, gone beyond, quenched, steadfast: when a mendicant has left home, expelling sensuality, what’s the right way to wander the world?”

“When they’ve eradicated superstitions,” said the Buddha, “about celestial portents, dreams, or bodily marks; with the stain of superstitions left behind, they’d rightly wander the world.

A mendicant ought dispel desire for pleasures human or divine; with rebirth transcended and truth comprehended, they’d rightly wander the world.

Putting divisiveness behind them, a mendicant gives up anger and stinginess; with favoring and opposing left behind, they’d rightly wander the world.

When the loved and the unloved are both left behind, not grasping or dependent on anything; freed from all things that fetter, they’d rightly wander the world.

Finding no substance in attachments, rid of desire for things they’ve acquired, independent, needing no-one to guide them, they’d rightly wander the world.

Not hostile in speech, mind, or deed, they’ve rightly understood the teaching. Aspiring to the state of quenching, they’d rightly wander the world.

Not pridefully thinking, ‘they bow to me’; though reviled, they’d still stay in touch; not besotted when getting food from others, they’d rightly wander the world.

When greed and craving to live again are cast off, a mendicant refrains from violence and abduction; rid of doubt, free of thorns, they’d rightly wander the world.

Knowing what is suitable for themselves, a mendicant would hurt no-one in the world; understanding the teaching in line with the truth, they’d rightly wander the world.

They have no underlying tendencies at all, and are rid of unskillful roots; free of hope, with no need for hope, they’d rightly wander the world.

Defilements ended, conceit given up, beyond all manner of desire; tamed, quenched, and steadfast, they’d rightly wander the world.

Faithful, learned, seer of the sure path, the wise one takes no side among factions; rid of greed, hate, and repulsion, they'd rightly wander the world.

A purified victor with veil drawn back, among worldly things master, transcendent, stilled; expert in knowledge of conditions' cessation, they'd rightly wander the world.

They're over speculating on the future or past, and understand what it means to be pure; freed from all the sense fields, they'd rightly wander the world.

The state of peace is understood, the truth is comprehended, they've openly seen defilements cast off; and with the ending of all attachments, they'd rightly wander the world."

"Clearly, Blessed One, it is just as you say. One who lives like this is a tamed mendicant, beyond all fetters and yokes: they'd rightly wander the world."

Snp 2.14

Snp 2.14
With Dhammika
Dhammikasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the lay follower Dhammika, together with five hundred lay followers, went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and addressed him in verse:

"I ask you, Gotama, whose wisdom is vast: what does one do to become a good disciple, both one who has left the home, and the lay followers staying at home?

For you understand the course and destiny of the world with all its gods. There is no equal to you who sees the subtle meaning, for you are the Buddha most excellent, they say.

Having experienced all knowledge, you explain the teaching out of compassion for beings. All-seer, you have drawn back the veil, and immaculate, you shine on the whole world.

The dragon king Erāvaṇa, hearing you called 'Victor', came into your presence. He consulted with you then, having heard your words, left consoled, saying 'Excellent!'

And King Kuvera Vessavaṇa also approached to ask about the teaching. You also answered him, O wise one, and hearing you he too was consoled.

Those monastics of other religions given to debate, whether Ājīvakas or Jains, all fail to overtake you in wisdom, like a standing man next to a sprinter.

Those brahmins given to debate, some of whom are quite senior, all end up beholden to you for the meaning, and others too who think themselves debaters.

So subtle and pleasant is the teaching that is well proclaimed by you, Blessed One. It's all we long to hear. So when asked, O Best of Buddhas, tell us!

All these mendicants have gathered, and the layfolk too are here to listen. Let them hear the teaching the immaculate one discovered, like gods listening to the fine words of Vāsava."

"Listen to me, mendicants, I will educate you in the cleansing teaching; all bear it in mind. An intelligent person, seeing the meaning, would adopt the deportment proper to a renunciate.

No way would a mendicant go out at the wrong time; at the right time, they'd walk the village for alms. For chains bind one who wanders at the wrong time, which is why the Buddhas avoid it.

Sights, sounds, tastes, smells, and touches, which drive beings mad—dispel desire for such things, and enter for the morning meal at the right time.

After receiving alms for the day, on returning a mendicant would sit in private alone. Inwardly reflective, they'd curb their mind from outside things, keeping themselves collected.

Should they converse with a disciple, with anyone else, or with a mendicant, they'd bring up only the sublime teaching, not dividing or blaming.

For some contend in debate, but we praise not those of little wisdom. In place after place they are bound in chains, for they send their mind over there far away.

Alms, a dwelling, a bed and seat, and water for rinsing the dust from the cloak—after hearing the teaching of the Holy One, a disciple of splendid wisdom would use these after appraisal.

That's why, when it comes to alms and lodgings, and water for rinsing the dust from the cloak, a mendicant is unsullied in the midst of these things, like a droplet on a lotus-leaf.

Now I shall tell you the householder's duty, doing which one becomes a good disciple. For one burdened with possessions does not get to realize the whole of the mendicant's practice.

They'd not kill any creature, nor have them killed, nor grant permission for others to kill. They've laid aside violence towards all creatures frail or firm that there are in the world.

Next, a disciple would avoid knowingly taking anything not given at all, they'd not get others to do it, nor grant them permission to steal; they'd avoid all theft.

A sensible person would avoid the unchaste life, like a burning pit of coals. But if unable to remain chaste, they'd not transgress with another's partner.

In a council or assembly, or one on one, they would not lie. They'd not get others to lie, nor grant them permission to lie; they'd avoid all untruths.

A householder espousing this teaching would not consume liquor or drink. They'd not get others to drink, nor grant them permission to drink; knowing that ends in intoxication.

For drunken fools do bad things, and encourage other heedless folk. Reject this field of demerit, the maddening, deluding frolic of fools.

You shouldn't kill living creatures, or steal, or lie, or drink alcohol. Be celibate, refraining from sex, and don't eat at night, the wrong time.

Not wearing garlands or applying perfumes, you should sleep on a low bed, or a mat on the ground. This is the eight-factored sabbath, they say, explained by the Buddha, who has gone to suffering's end.

Then having rightly undertaken the sabbath complete in all its eight factors on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth of the fortnight, as well as on the fortnightly special displays, on the morning after the sabbath a clever person, rejoicing with confident heart, would distribute food and drink to the mendicant Saṅgha as is fitting.

One should rightfully support one's parents, and undertake a legitimate business. A diligent layperson observing these duties ascends to the gods called Self-luminous."

Snp 3.1

Snp 3.1
Going Forth
Pabbajjāsutta

“I shall extol going forth with the example of the Clear-eyed One, the course of inquiry that led to his choice to go forth.

‘This life at home is cramped, a realm of dirt.’ ‘The life of one gone forth is like an open space.’ Seeing this, he went forth.

Having gone forth, he shunned bad deeds of body. And leaving verbal misconduct behind, he purified his livelihood.

The Buddha went to Rājagaha, the Mountainfold of the Magadhans. He betook himself for alms, replete with excellent marks.

Bimbisāra saw him while standing atop his longhouse. Noticing that he was endowed with marks, he said the following:

‘Pay heed, sirs, to this one, handsome, majestic, radiant; accomplished in deportment, he looks just a plough’s length in front.

Eyes downcast, mindful, unlike one from a low family. Let the king’s messengers run out, and find where the mendicant will go.’

The messengers sent out followed right behind, thinking ‘Where will the mendicant go? Where shall he find a place to stay?’

Wandering indiscriminately for alms, sense doors guarded and well restrained, his bowl was quickly filled, aware and mindful.

Having wandered for alms, the sage left the city. He betook himself to Mount Paṇḍava, thinking, ‘Here is the place I shall stay.’

Seeing that he had arrived at a place to stay, the messengers withdrew nearby, but one of them returned to inform the king.

‘Great king, the mendicant is on the east flank of Mount Paṇḍava. There he sits, like a tiger or a bull, like a lion in a mountain cave.’

Hearing the messenger’s report, the aristocrat set out hurriedly in his fine chariot towards Mount Paṇḍava.

He went as far as vehicles could go, then dismounted from his chariot, approached on foot, and reaching him, drew near.

Seated, the king greeted him and made polite conversation. When the courtesies were over, he said the following:

‘You are young, just a youth, a lad in the prime of life. You are endowed with beauty and stature, like an aristocrat of good birth in glory at the army’s head, surrounded by a troop of elephants. I offer you pleasures—enjoy them! But please tell me of your birth.’

‘Up north, O King, on the slopes of the Himalayas, lies the land of a native among the Kosalans, full of wealth and strength.

Their clan is named for the Sun, they are Sakyans by birth. I have gone forth from that family—I do not yearn for sensual pleasure.

Seeing the danger in sensual pleasures, seeing renunciation as sanctuary, I shall go on to strive; that is where my mind delights.’”

Snp 3.2

Snp 3.2
Striving Padhānasutta

“During my time of resolute striving back on the bank of the Nerañjara River, I was meditating very hard for the sake of finding sanctuary from the yoke.

Namucī approached, speaking words of kindness: ‘You’re thin, discolored, on the verge of death.

Death has a thousand parts of you, one fraction is left to life. Live sir! Life is better! Living, you can make merits.

While leading the spiritual life and serving the sacred flame, you can pile up abundant merit—so what will striving do for you?

Hard to walk is the path of striving, hard to do, a hard challenge to win.’” These are the verses Māra spoke as he stood beside the Buddha.

When Māra had spoken in this way, the Buddha said this: “O Wicked One, kinsman of the negligent, you’re here for your own purpose.

I have no need for the slightest bit of merit. Those with need for merit are fit for Māra to address.

I have faith and energy too, and wisdom is found in me. When I am so resolute, why do you beg me to live?

The rivers and streams might be dried by the wind, so why, when I am resolute, should it not dry up my blood?

And while the blood is drying up, the bile and phlegm dry too. And as my muscles waste away, my mind grows more serene. And all the stronger grow mindfulness and wisdom and immersion.

As I meditate like this, having attained the supreme feeling, my mind has no interest in sensual pleasures: behold a being’s purity!

Sensual pleasures are your first army, the second is called discontent, hunger and thirst are the third, and the fourth is said to be craving.

Your fifth is dullness and drowsiness, the sixth is said to be cowardice, your seventh is doubt, contempt and obstinacy are your eighth.

Profit, praise, and honor, and misbegotten fame; the extolling of oneself while scorning others.

This is your army, Namucī, the strike force of the Dark One. Only a hero can defeat it, but in victory there lies bliss.

Let me gird myself— so what if I die! I'd rather die in battle than live on in defeat.

Here some ascetics and brahmins are swallowed up, not to be seen again. And they do not know the path traveled by those true to their vows.

Seeing Māra ready on his mount, surrounded by his bannered forces, I shall meet them in battle—they'll never make me retreat!

That army of yours has never been beaten by the world with all its gods. Yet I shall smash it with wisdom, like an unfired pot with a stone.

Having brought my thoughts under control, and established mindfulness well, I shall wander from country to country, guiding many disciples.

Diligent and resolute, following my instructions, they will proceed despite your will, to where there is no sorrow."

"For seven years I followed step by step behind the Blessed One. I found no vulnerability in the mindful Awakened One.

A crow once circled a stone that looked like a lump of fat. 'Perhaps I'll find something tender,' it thought, 'perhaps there's something tasty.'

But finding nothing tasty, the crow left that place. Like the crow that pecked the stone, I leave Gotama disappointed."

So stricken with sorrow that his harp dropped from his armpit, that spirit, downcast, vanished right there.

Snp 3.3

Snp 3.3
Well-Spoken Words
Subhāsitasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. There the Buddha addressed the mendicants, "Mendicants!" "Venerable sir," they replied. The Buddha said this:

"Mendicants, speech that has four factors is well spoken, not poorly spoken. It's blameless and is not criticized by sensible people. What four? It's when a mendicant speaks well, not poorly; they speak on the teaching, not against the teaching; they speak pleasantly, not unpleasantly; and they speak truthfully, not falsely. Speech with these four factors is well spoken, not poorly spoken. It's blameless and is not criticized by sensible people." That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

"Good people say well-spoken words are foremost; second, speak on the teaching, not against it; third, speak pleasantly, not unpleasantly; and fourth, speak truthfully, not falsely."

Then Venerable Vaṅgīsa got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and said, "I feel inspired to speak, Blessed One! I feel inspired to speak, Holy One!" "Then speak as you feel inspired," said the Buddha. Then Vaṅgīsa extolled the Buddha in his presence with fitting verses:

"Speak only such words that do not hurt yourself nor harm others; such speech is truly well spoken.

Speak only pleasing words, words gladly welcomed. Pleasing words are those that bring nothing bad to others.

Truth itself is the undying word: this is an eternal truth. Good people say that the teaching and its meaning are grounded in the truth.

The words spoken by the Buddha for finding the sanctuary, extinguishment, for the attainment of vision, this really is the best kind of speech."

Snp 3.4

Snp 3.4
With Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā on the Sacrificial Cake
Pūraḷāsa (sundarikabhāradvāja) sutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in the Kosalan lands on the bank of the Sundarikā river. Now at that time the brahmin Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā was serving the sacred flame and performing the fire sacrifice on the bank of the Sundarikā. Then he looked all around the four quarters, wondering, “Now who might eat the leftovers of this offering?” He saw the Buddha meditating at the root of a certain tree with his robe pulled over his head. Taking the leftovers of the offering in his left hand and a pitcher in the right he approached the Buddha.

When he heard Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā’s footsteps the Buddha uncovered his head. Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā thought, “This man is shaven, he is shaven!” And he wanted to turn back. But he thought, “Even some brahmins are shaven. Why don’t I go to him and ask about his birth?” Then the brahmin Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā went up to the Buddha, and said to him, “Sir, what are you by birth?”

Then the Buddha addressed Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā in verse:

“I am no brahmin, nor am I a ruler, nor peasant nor anything else. Fully understanding the clan of ordinary people, I wander in the world owning nothing, reflective.

Clad in my cloak, I wander without home, my hair shorn, quenched. Since I’m unburdened by youngsters, it’s inappropriate to ask me about clan.”

“Actually sir, when brahmins meet they politely ask each other whether they are brahmins.”

“Well, if you say that you’re a brahmin, and that I am not, I shall question you on the Sāvitrī Mantra, with its three lines and twenty-four syllables.”

“On what grounds have seers and men, aristocrats and brahmins here in the world performed so many different sacrifices to the gods?”

“During a sacrifice, should a past-master, a knowledge master, receive an oblation, it profits the donor, I say.”

“Then clearly my oblation will be profitable,” said the brahmin, “since I have met such a knowledge master. It’s because I’d never met anyone like you that others ate the sacrificial cake.”

“So then, brahmin, since you have approached me as a seeker of the good, ask. Perhaps you may find here someone intelligent, peaceful, unclouded, untroubled, with no need for hope.”

“Mister Gotama, I like to sacrifice and wish to perform a sacrifice. Please advise me, for I do not understand where an oblation is profitable; tell me this.”

“Well then, brahmin, listen up, I will teach you the Dhamma.

Don’t ask about birth, ask about conduct; for any kindling can kindle a flame. A steadfast sage, even though from a low class family, is a thoroughbred checked by conscience.

Tamed by truth, fulfilled by taming, a complete knowledge master who has completed the spiritual journey—that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those who have left sensuality behind, wandering homeless, self-controlled, straight as a shuttle—that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those freed of greed, with senses stilled, like the moon released from the eclipse—that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

They wander the world unimpeded, always mindful, calling nothing their own—that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Having left sensuality behind, wandering triumphant, knowing the end of rebirth and death, extinguished and cool as a lake: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

Good among the good, far from the bad, the Realized One has infinite wisdom. Unsullied in this world and the next: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

In whom dwells no deceit or conceit, rid of greed, unselfish, with no need for hope, with anger eliminated, quenched, a brahmin rid of sorrow’s stain: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

He has given up the mind’s home, and has no possessions at all. Not grasping to this world or the next: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

Serene, he has crossed the flood, and has understood the teaching with ultimate view. With defilements ended, bearing his final body: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

In whom desire to be reborn, and caustic speech are cleared and ended, they are no more; that knowledge master, everywhere free: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

He has slipped his chains, he's chained no more, among those caught in conceit he is free of conceit; he has fully understood suffering with its field and ground: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

Not relying on hope, seeing seclusion, well past the views proclaimed by others. In him there are no supporting conditions at all: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

He has comprehended all things, high and low, cleared them and ended them, so they are no more. Peaceful, freed in the ending of grasping: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

He sees the ending of rebirth's fetter, and has swept away all manner of desire. Pure, stainless, immaculate, flawless: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

Not seeing himself in terms of a self, he is stilled, upright, and steadfast. Imperturbable, kind, wishless: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake.

He harbors no delusions within at all, he has insight into all things. He bears his final body, attained to the state of grace, the supreme awakening. That's how the purity of a spirit is defined: the Realized One is worthy of the sacrificial cake."

"Let my oblation be a true offering, since I have found such a knowledge master! I see Brahmā in person! Accept my offering, Blessed One: please eat my sacrificial cake."

"Food enchanted by a spell isn't fit for me to eat. That's not the principle of those who see, brahmin. The Buddhas reject things enchanted with spells. Since there is such a principle, brahmin, that's how they live.

Serve with other food and drink the consummate one, the great seer, with defilements ended and remorse stilled. For he is the field for the seeker of merit."

"Please, Blessed One, help me understand: now that I have encountered your teaching, when I look for someone during a sacrifice, who should eat the religious donation of one like me?"

"One who is rid of aggression, whose mind is unclouded, who is liberated from sensual pleasures, and who has dispelled dullness.

One who has erased boundaries and limits, expert in birth and death, a sage, blessed with sagacity. When such a person comes to the sacrifice, get rid of your scowl! Honor them with joined palms, and venerate them with food and drink, and in this way your religious donation will succeed."

"The Buddha is worthy of the sacrificial cake, he is the supreme field of merit, Recipient of gifts from the whole world, what's given to the worthy one is very fruitful."

Then the brahmin Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! As if he were righting the overturned, or revealing the hidden, or pointing out the path to the lost, or lighting a lamp in the dark so people with clear eyes can see what's there, Mister Gotama has made the teaching clear in many ways. I go for refuge to Mister Gotama, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. May I receive the going forth, the ordination in the ascetic Gotama's presence?" And the brahmin Bhāradvāja of Sundarikā received the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha's presence. And soon after, he became one of the perfected.

Snp 3.5

Snp 3.5
With Māgha
Māghasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, on the Vulture's Peak Mountain. Then the brahmin student Māgha approached the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side, and said to the Buddha:

"I'm a giver, Mister Gotama, a donor; I am bountiful and committed to charity. I seek wealth in a principled manner, and with that legitimate wealth I give to one person, to two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, a hundred people or even more. Giving and sacrificing like this, Mister Gotama, do I accrue much merit?"

"Indeed you do, student. A giver or donor who is bountiful and committed to charity, who seeks wealth in a principled manner, and with that legitimate wealth gives to one person, or up to a hundred people or even more, accrues much merit." Then Māgha addressed the Buddha in verse:

"I ask the bountiful Gotama," said Māgha, "wearing an ochre robe, wandering homeless. Suppose a lay donor who is committed to charity makes a sacrifice seeking merit, looking for merit. Giving food and drink to others here, how is their offering purifed?"

"Suppose a lay donor who is committed to charity," replied the Buddha, "makes a sacrifice seeking merit, looking for merit, giving food and drink to others here: such a one would succeed due to those who are worthy of donations."

"Suppose a lay donor who is committed to charity," said Māgha, "makes a sacrifice seeking merit, looking for merit, giving food and drink to others here: explain to me who is worthy of donations."

"Those who wander the world unattached, consummate, restrained, owning nothing: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those who have cut off all fetters and bonds, tamed, liberated, untroubled, with no need for hope: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those who are released from all fetters, tamed, liberated, untroubled, with no need for hope: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Having given up greed, hate, and delusion, with defilements ended, the spiritual journey completed: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those in whom dwells no deceit or conceit, with defilements ended, the spiritual journey completed: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those rid of greed, unselfish, with no need for hope, with defilements ended, the spiritual journey completed: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those not fallen prey to cravings, who, having crossed the flood, live unselfishly: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those with no craving at all in the world to any form of existence in this life or the next: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those who have left sensuality behind, wandering homeless, self-controlled, straight as a shuttle: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those freed of greed, with senses stilled, like the moon released from the eclipse: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those calm ones free of greed and anger, for whom there are no destinies, being rid of them in this life: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

They've given up rebirth and death completely, and have gone beyond all doubt: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those who live as their own island, everywhere free, owning nothing: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

Those here who know this to be true: 'This is my last life, there are no future lives': that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice.

A knowledge master, loving absorption, mindful, who has reached awakening and is a refuge for many: that is where a brahmin seeking merit should bestow a timely offering as sacrifice."

"Clearly my questions were not in vain!" said Māgha, "The Buddha has explained to me who is worthy of donations. You are the one here who knows this to be true, for truly you understand this matter.

Suppose a lay donor who is committed to charity makes a sacrifice seeking merit, looking for merit, giving food and drink to others here: explain to me how to accomplish the sacrifice."

"Sacrifice, and while doing so," replied the Buddha, "be clear and confident in every way. Sacrifice is the ground standing upon which the sacrificer sheds their flaws.

One free of greed, rid of anger, developing a heart of limitless love, spreads that limitlessness in every direction, ever diligent day and night."

"Who is purified, freed, awake? How can one go to the Brahmā realm oneself? I do not know, so please tell me when asked, for the Buddha is the Brahmā I see in person today! To us you are truly the equal of Brahmā. Splendid One, how is one reborn in the Brahmā realm?"

"One who accomplishes the sacrifice with three modes," replied the Buddha, "such a one would succeed due to those who are worthy of donations. Sacrificing like this, one rightly committed to charity is reborn in the Brahmā realm, I say."

When he had spoken, the student Māgha said to the Buddha, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember me as a lay follower who has gone for refuge for life."

Snp 3.6

Snp 3.6
With Sabhiya
Sabhiyasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. Now at that time the wanderer Sabhiya had been presented with several questions by a deity who was a former blood relation, saying: "Sabhiya, you should live the spiritual life with whatever ascetic or brahmin answers these questions."

Then Sabhiya, after learning those questions in the presence of that deity, approached those ascetics and brahmins who led an order and a community, and taught a community, who were well-known and famous religious founders, deemed holy by many people. That is, Pūraṇa Kassapa, the bamboo-staffed ascetic Gosāla, Ajita of the hair blanket, Pakudha Kaccāyana, Sañjaya Belaṭṭhiputta, and the Jain ascetic of the Ñātika clan. And he asked them those questions, but they were stumped by them. Displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness, they questioned Sabiya in return.

Then Sabhiya thought, "Those famous ascetics and brahmins were stumped by my questions. Displaying annoyance, hate, and bitterness, they questioned me in return on that matter. Why don't I return to a lesser life so I can enjoy sensual pleasures?"

Then Sabhiya thought, "This ascetic Gotama also leads an order and a community, and teaches a community. He's a well-known and famous religious founder, deemed holy by many people. Why don't I ask him this question?"

Then he thought, "Even those ascetics and brahmins who are elderly and senior, who are advanced in years and have reached the final stage of life; who are senior, long standing, long gone forth; who lead an order and a community, and teach a community; who are well-known and famous religious founders, deemed holy by many people—that is Pūraṇa Kassapa and the rest—were stumped by my questions. They displayed annoyance, hate, and bitterness, and even questioned me in return. How can the ascetic Gotama possibly answer my questions, since he is so young in age and newly gone forth?"

Then he thought, "An ascetic should not be looked down upon or disparaged because they are young. Though young, the ascetic Gotama has great psychic power and might. Why don't I ask him this question?"

Then Sabhiya set out for Rājagaha. Traveling stage by stage, he came to Rājagaha, the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding ground. He went up to the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side, and addressed the Buddha in verse:

“I’ve come full of doubts and uncertainties,” said Sabhiya, “wishing to ask some questions. Please solve them for me. Answer my questions in turn, in accordance with the truth.”

“You have come from afar, Sabhiya,” said the Buddha, “wishing to ask some questions. I shall solve them for you, answering your questions in turn, in accordance with the truth.

Ask me your question, Sabhiya, whatever you want. I’ll solve each and every question you have.”

Then Sabhiya thought, “Oh, how incredible, how amazing! Where those other ascetics and brahmins didn’t even give me a chance, the Buddha has invited me.” Uplifted and elated, full of rapture and happiness, he asked this question.

“What must one attain to be called a mendicant?” said Sabhiya, “How is one ‘sweet’, how said to be ‘tamed’? How is one declared to be ‘awakened’? May the Buddha please answer my question.”

“When by the path they have walked themselves,” said the Buddha to Sabhiya, “they reach quenching, with doubt overcome; giving up desire to continue existence or to end it, their journey complete, their rebirths ended: that is a mendicant.

Equanimous towards everything, mindful, they don’t harm anyone in the world. An ascetic who has crossed over, unclouded, not full of themselves, is sweet-natured.

Their faculties have been developed inside and out in the whole world. Having pierced through this world and the next, tamed, they bide their time.

They have examined the eons in their entirety, and both sides of transmigration—passing away and rebirth. Rid of dust, unblemished, purified: the one they call ‘awakened’ has attained the end of rebirth.”

And then, having approved and agreed with what the Buddha said, uplifted and elated, full of rapture and happiness, Sabhiya asked another question:

“What must one attain to be called ‘brahmin’?” said Sabhiya. “Why is one an ‘ascetic’, and how a ‘bathed initiate’? How is one declared to be a ‘giant’? May the Buddha please answer my question.”

“Having banished all bad things,” said the Buddha to Sabhiya, “immaculate, well-composed, steadfast, consummate, they’ve left transmigration behind: unattached, one such is called ‘brahmin’.

An assuaged one who has given up good and evil, stainless, understanding this world and the next, gone beyond rebirth and death: one such is rightly called ‘ascetic’.

Having washed off all bad things inside and out in the whole world, among gods and humans bound to creations, the one they call ‘washed’ does not return to creation.

They do nothing monstrous at all in the world, discarding all yokes and bonds, everywhere not stuck, freed: one such is rightly called ‘giant’.”

And then Sabhiya asked another question:

“Who is a ‘field-victor’ according to the Buddhas?” said Sabhiya, “Why is one ‘skillful’, and how ‘a wise scholar’? How is one declared to be a ‘sage’? May the Buddha please answer my question.”

“They are victors on the fields of deeds in their entirety,” said the Buddha to Sabhiya, “the fields of gods, humans, and Brahmas; released from the root bondage to all fields: one such is rightly called ‘field-victor’.

They have examined the coffers in their entirety, the coffers of gods, humans, and Brahmas; released from the root bondage to all coffers: one such is rightly called ‘skillful’.

They have examined whiteness both inside and out; understanding purity, they have left dark and bright behind: one such is rightly called ‘a wise scholar’.”

Understanding the nature of the bad and the good inside and out in the whole world; one worthy of honor by gods and humans, who has escaped from the net and the snare: that is a sage.”

And then Sabhiya asked another question:

“What must one attain to be called ‘knowledge master’?” said Sabhiya, “Why is one ‘studied’, and how is one ‘heroic’? How to gain the name ‘thoroughbred’? May the Buddha please answer my question.”

“They have examined knowledges in their entirety,” said the Buddha to Sabhiya, “those that are current among ascetics and brahmins; rid of greed for all feelings, having left all knowledges behind: that is a knowledge master.

Having studied proliferation and name & form inside and out—the root of disease; released from the root bondage to all disease: one such is rightly called ‘studied’.

Refraining from all evil here, heroic, he escapes from the suffering of hell; he is heroic and energetic: one such is rightly called ‘hero’.

Whoever's bonds are cut, the root of clinging inside and out; released from the root bondage to all clinging: one such is rightly called 'thoroughbred'."

And then Sabhiya asked another question:

"What must one attain to be called 'scholar'?" said Sabhiya, "Why is one 'noble', and how is one 'well conducted'? How to gain the name 'wanderer'? May the Buddha please answer my question."

"One who has learned every teaching," said the Buddha to Sabhiya, "and has known for themselves what in the world is blameworthy and blameless; a champion, decided, liberated, untroubled everywhere: they call them 'scholar'.

Having cut off defilements and clingings, being wise, they enter no womb. They've expelled the bog of the three perceptions, the one they call 'noble' does not return to creation.

One here who is accomplished and skillful in all forms of good conduct; always understanding the teaching, everywhere not stuck, freed in mind, who has no repulsion: they are 'well-conducted'.

They wander full of wisdom, having banished any deed that results in suffering, deceit and conceit, as well as greed and anger, above, below, all round, between. They have made a limit on name & form; the one they call a 'wanderer' has reached their destination."

And then, having approved and agreed with what the Buddha said, uplifted and elated, full of rapture and happiness, Sabhiya got up from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and extolled the Buddha in his presence with fitting verses:

"O one of vast wisdom, there are three & sixty opinions based on the doctrines of ascetics: they are expressions of perception, based on perception. Having dispelled them all, you passed over the dark flood.

You have gone to the end, gone beyond suffering, you are perfected, a fully awakened Buddha; I think you have ended defilements. Splendid, intelligent, abounding in wisdom, ender of suffering—you brought me across!

When you understood my uncertainty, you brought me beyond doubt—homage to you! A sage, accomplished in the ways of sagacity, you are gentle, not hardhearted, O kinsman of the Sun.

Any doubts that I once had, you have answered for me, O Clear-eyed One. Clearly you are a sage, an Awakened One, there are no hindrances in you.

All your distress is blown away and mown down. Cooled, tamed, steadfast: truth is your strength.

O giant among giants, O great hero, when you are speaking all the gods rejoice, including both Nārada and Pabbata.

Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! In the world with its gods, you have no rival.

You are the Buddha, you are the Teacher, you are the sage who has overcome Māra; you have cut off the underlying tendencies, you've crossed over, and you bring humanity across.

You have transcended attachments, your defilements are shattered; you are a lion, free of grasping, with fear and dread given up.

Like a graceful lotus to which water does not stick, so both good and evil do not stick to you. Stretch out your feet, great hero: Sabhiya bows to the Teacher."

Then the wanderer Sabhiya bowed with his head at the Buddha's feet and said, "Excellent, sir! Excellent! … I go for refuge to the Buddha, to the teaching, and to the mendicant Saṅgha. Sir, may I receive the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha's presence?"

"Sabhiya, if someone formerly ordained in another sect wishes to take the going forth, the ordination in this teaching and training, they must spend four months on probation. When four months have passed, if the mendicants are satisfied, they'll give the going forth, the ordination into monkhood. However, I have recognized individual differences in this matter."

"Sir, if four months probation are required in such a case, I'll spend four years on probation. When four years have passed, if the mendicants are satisfied, let them give me the going forth, the ordination into monkhood." And the wanderer Sabhiya received the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha's presence. And Venerable Sabhiya became one of the perfected.

Snp 3.7

Snp 3.7
With Sela
Selasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was wandering together with a large Saṅgha of 1,250 mendicants in the land of the Aṅguttarāpans when he arrived at a town of theirs named Āpaṇa. The matted-hair ascetic Keṇiya heard: “It seems the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—has arrived at Āpaṇa, together with a large Saṅgha of 1,250 mendicants. He has this good reputation: ‘That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.’ He has realized with his own insight this world—with its gods, Māras and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, gods and humans—and he makes it known to others. He teaches Dhamma that’s good in the beginning, good in the middle, and good in the end, meaningful and well-phrased. And he reveals a spiritual practice that’s entirely full and pure. It’s good to see such perfected ones.”

So Keṇiya approached the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side. The Buddha educated, encouraged, fired up, and inspired him with a Dhamma talk. Then he said to the Buddha, “Would Mister Gotama together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow’s meal from me?” When he said this, the Buddha said to him, “The Saṅgha is large, Keṇiya; there are 1,250 mendicants. And you are devoted to the brahmins.”

For a second time, Keṇiya asked the Buddha to accept a meal offering. “Never mind that the Saṅgha is large, with 1,250 mendicants, and that I am devoted to the brahmins. Would Mister Gotama together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow’s meal from me?” And for a second time, the Buddha gave the same reply.

For a third time, Keṇiya asked the Buddha to accept a meal offering. “Never mind that the Saṅgha is large, with 1,250 mendicants, and that I am devoted to the brahmins. Would Mister Gotama together with the mendicant Saṅgha please accept tomorrow’s meal from me?” The Buddha consented with silence. Then, knowing that the Buddha had consented, Keṇiya got up from his seat and went to his own hermitage. There he addressed his friends and colleagues, relatives and family members, “My friends and colleagues, relatives and family members: please listen! The ascetic Gotama together with the mendicant Saṅgha has been invited by me for tomorrow’s meal. Please help me out with the manual preparations.” “Yes, sir,” they replied. Some dug ovens, some chopped wood, some washed dishes, some set out a water jar, and some spread out seats. Meanwhile, Keṇiya set up the pavilion himself.

Now at that time the brahmin Sela was residing in Āpaṇa. He had mastered the three Vedas, together with their vocabularies, ritual, phonology and etymology, and the testament as fifth. He knew philology and grammar, and was well versed in cosmology and the marks of a great man. And he was teaching three hundred students to recite the hymns.

And at that time Keṇiya was devoted to Sela. Then Sela, while going for a walk escorted by the three hundred students, approached Keṇiya's hermitage. He saw the preparations going on, and said to Keṇiya, "Keṇiya, is your son or daughter being married? Or are you setting up a big sacrifice? Or has King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha been invited for tomorrow's meal?"

"There is no marriage, Sela, and the king is not coming. Rather, I am setting up a big sacrifice. The ascetic Gotama has arrived at Āpaṇa, together with a large Saṅgha of 1,250 mendicants. He has this good reputation: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' He has been invited by me for tomorrow's meal together with the mendicant Saṅgha." "Mister Keṇiya, did you say 'the awakened one'?" "I said 'the awakened one'." "Mister Keṇiya, did you say 'the awakened one'?" "I said 'the awakened one'."

Then Sela thought, "It's hard to even find the word 'awakened one' in the world. The thirty-two marks of a great man have been handed down in our hymns. A great man who possesses these has only two possible destinies, no other. If he stays at home he becomes a king, a wheel-turning monarch, a just and principled king. His dominion extends to all four sides, he achieves stability in the country, and he possesses the seven treasures. He has the following seven treasures: the wheel, the elephant, the horse, the jewel, the woman, the treasurer, and the counselor as the seventh treasure. He has over a thousand sons who are valiant and heroic, crushing the armies of his enemies. After conquering this land girt by sea, he reigns by principle, without rod or sword. But if he goes forth from the lay life to homelessness, he becomes a perfected one, a fully awakened Buddha, who draws back the veil from the world. "But Keṇiya, where is the Blessed One at present, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha?"

When he said this, Keṇiya pointed with his right arm and said, "There, Mister Sela, at that line of blue forest." Then Sela, together with his students, approached the Buddha. He said to his students, "Come quietly, gentlemen, tread gently. For the Buddhas are intimidating, like a lion living alone. When I'm consulting with the ascetic Gotama, don't interrupt. Wait until I've finished speaking."

Then Sela went up to the Buddha, and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, he sat down to one side. and scrutinized the Buddha's body for the thirty-two marks of a great man. He saw all of them except for two, which he had doubts about: whether the private parts were covered in a foreskin, and the largeness of the tongue.

Then it occurred to the Buddha, "Sela sees all the marks except for two, which he has doubts about: whether the private parts are covered in a foreskin, and the largeness of the tongue." The Buddha used his psychic power to will that Sela would see his private parts covered in a foreskin. And he stuck out his tongue and stroked back and forth on his ear holes and nostrils, and covered his entire forehead with his tongue.

Then Sela thought, “The ascetic Gotama possesses the thirty-two marks completely, lacking none. But I don’t know whether or not he is an awakened one. I have heard that brahmins of the past who were elderly and senior, the teachers of teachers, said, ‘Those who are perfected ones, fully awakened Buddhas reveal themselves when praised.’ Why don’t I extoll him in his presence with fitting verses?” Then Sela extolled the Buddha in his presence with fitting verses:

“O Blessed One, your body’s perfect, you’re radiant, handsome, lovely to behold; golden colored, with teeth so white; you’re strong.

The characteristics of a handsome man, the marks of a great man, are all found on your body.

Your eyes are clear, your face is fair, you’re formidable, upright, majestic. In the midst of the Saṅgha of ascetics, you shine like the sun.

You’re a mendicant fine to see, with skin of golden sheen. But with such excellent appearance, what do you want with the ascetic life?

You’re fit to be a king, a wheel-turning monarch, chief of charioteers, victorious in the four quarters, lord of all India.

Aristocrats, nobles, and kings ought follow your rule. Gotama, may you reign as king of kings, lord of men!”

“I am a king, Sela”, said the Buddha, “the supreme king of the teaching. By the teaching I roll forth the wheel which cannot be rolled back.”

“You claim to be awakened,” said Sela the brahmin, “the supreme king of the teaching. ‘I roll forth the teaching’: so you say, Gotama.

Then who is your general, the disciple who follows the Teacher’s way? Who keeps rolling the wheel of the teaching you rolled forth?”

“By me the wheel was rolled forth,” said the Buddha, “the supreme wheel of the teaching. Sāriputta, taking after the Realized One, keeps it rolling on.

I have known what should be known, and developed what should be developed, and given up what should be given up: and so, brahmin, I am a Buddha.

Dispel your doubt in me—make up your mind, brahmin! The sight of a Buddha is hard to find again.

I am a Buddha, brahmin, the supreme surgeon, one of those whose appearance in the world is hard to find again.

A manifestation of divinity, unequaled, crusher of Māra’s army; having subdued all my opponents, I rejoice, fearing nothing from any quarter.”

“Pay heed, sirs, to what is spoken by the Clear-eyed One. The surgeon, the great hero, roars like a lion in the jungle.

A manifestation of divinity, unequaled, crusher of Māra’s army; who would not be inspired by him, even one born in a dark class?

Those who wish may follow me; those who don’t may go. Right here, I’ll go forth in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom.”

“Sir, if you endorse the teaching of the Buddha, we’ll also go forth in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom.”

“These three hundred brahmins with joined palms held up, ask: ‘May we lead the spiritual life in your presence, Blessed One?’”

“The spiritual life is well explained,” said the Buddha, “apparent in the present life, immediately effective. Here the going forth isn’t in vain for one who trains with diligence.”

And the brahmin Sela together with his assembly received the going forth, the ordination in the Buddha’s presence. And when the night had passed Keṇiya had delicious fresh and cooked foods prepared in his own home. Then he had the Buddha informed of the time, saying, “It’s time, Mister Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Buddha robed up in the morning and, taking his bowl and robe, went to Keṇiya’s hermitage, where he sat on the seat spread out, together with the Saṅgha of mendicants.

Then Keṇiya served and satisfied the mendicant Saṅgha headed by the Buddha with his own hands with delicious fresh and cooked foods. When the Buddha had eaten and washed his hand and bowl, Keṇiya took a low seat and sat to one side. The Buddha expressed his appreciation with these verses:

“The foremost of sacrifices is the offering to the sacred flame; the Sāvitrī Mantra is the foremost of poetic meters; of humans, the king is the foremost; the ocean’s the foremost of rivers;

the foremost of stars is the moon; the sun is the foremost of lights; for those who sacrifice seeking merit, the Saṅgha is the foremost.”

When the Buddha had expressed his appreciation to Keṇiya the matted-hair ascetic with these verses, he got up from his seat and left. Then Venerable Sela and his assembly, living alone, withdrawn, diligent, keen, and resolute, soon realized the supreme end of the spiritual path in this very life. They lived having achieved with their own insight the goal for which gentlemen rightly go forth from the lay life to homelessness. And Venerable Sela together with his assembly became perfected.

Then Sela with his assembly went to see the Buddha. He arranged his robe over one shoulder, raised his joined palms toward the Buddha, and said:

“This is the eighth day since we went for refuge, O Clear-eyed One. In these seven days, Blessed One, we’ve become tamed in your teaching.

You are the Buddha, you are the Teacher, you are the sage who has overcome Māra; you have cut off the underlying tendencies, you’ve crossed over, and you bring humanity across.

You have transcended attachments, your defilements are shattered; you are a lion, free of grasping, with fear and dread given up.

These three hundred mendicants stand with joined palms raised. Stretch out your feet, great hero: let these giants bow to the Teacher.”

Snp 3.8

Snp 3.8
The Dart
Sallasutta

Unforeseen and unknown is the extent of this mortal life—hard and short and bound to pain.

There is no way that those born will not die. On reaching old age death follows: such is the nature of living creatures.

As ripe fruit are always in danger of falling, so mortals once born are always in danger of death.

As clay pots made by a potter all end up being broken, so is the life of mortals.

Young and old, foolish and wise—all go under the sway of death; all are destined to die.

When those overcome by death leave this world for the next, a father cannot protect his son, nor relatives their kin.

See how, while relatives look on, wailing profusely, mortals are led away one by one, like a cow to the slaughter.

And so the world is stricken by old age and by death. That is why the wise do not grieve, for they understand the way of the world.

For one whose path you do not know—not whence they came nor where they went—you lament in vain, seeing neither end.

If a bewildered person, lamenting and self-harming, could extract any good from that, then those who see clearly would do the same.

For not by weeping and wailing will you find peace of heart. It just gives rise to more suffering, and distresses your body.

Growing thin and pale, you hurt yourself. It does nothing to help the dead: your lamentation is in vain.

Unless a person gives up grief, they fall into suffering all the more. Bewailing those whose time has come, you fall under the sway of grief.

See, too, other folk departing to fare after their deeds; fallen under the sway of death, beings flounder while still here.

For whatever you imagine it is, it turns out to be something else. Such is separation: see the way of the world!

Even if a human lives a hundred years or more, they are parted from their family circle, they leave this life behind.

Therefore, having learned from the Perfected One, dispel lamentation. Seeing the dead and departed, think: “I cannot escape this.”

As one would extinguish a blazing refuge with water, so too a sage—a wise, astute, and skilled person—would swiftly blow away grief that comes up, like the wind a tuft of cotton.

One who seeks their own happiness would pluck out the dart from themselves—the wailing and moaning, and sadness inside.

With dart plucked out, unattached, having found peace of mind, overcoming all sorrow, one is sorrowless and extinguished.

Snp 3.9

Snp 3.9
With Vāseṭṭha
Vāseṭṭhasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. Now at that time several very well-known well-to-do brahmins were residing in Icchānaṅgala. They included the brahmins Caṅkī, Tārukkha, Pokkharasādi, Jānussoṇi, Todeyya, and others. Then as the brahmin students Vāseṭṭha and Bhāradvāja were going for a walk they began to discuss the question: "How do you become a brahmin?"

Bhāradvāja said this: "When you're well born on both your mother's and father's side, of pure descent, with irrefutable and impeccable genealogy back to the seventh paternal generation—then you're a brahmin."

Vāseṭṭha said this: "When you're ethical and accomplished in doing your duties— then you're a brahmin." But neither was able to persuade the other.

So Vāseṭṭha said to Bhāradvāja, "Mister Bhāradvāja, the ascetic Gotama—a Sakyan, gone forth from a Sakyan family—is staying in a forest near Icchānaṅgala. He has this good reputation: 'That Blessed One is perfected, a fully awakened Buddha, accomplished in knowledge and conduct, holy, knower of the world, supreme guide for those who wish to train, teacher of gods and humans, awakened, blessed.' Come, let's go to see him and ask him about this matter. As he answers, so we'll remember it." "Yes, sir," replied Bhāradvāja.

So they went to the Buddha and exchanged greetings with him. When the greetings and polite conversation were over, they sat down to one side, and Vāseṭṭha addressed the Buddha in verse:

"We're both authorized masters of the three Vedas. I'm a student of Pokkharasādi, and he of Tārukkha.

We're fully qualified in all the Vedic experts teach. As philologists and grammarians, we match our teachers in recitation.

We have a dispute regarding genealogy. For Bhāradvāja says that one is a brahmin due to birth, but I declare it's because of one's deeds. Oh Clear-eyed One, know this as our debate.

Since neither of us was able to convince the other, we've come to ask you, sir, renowned as the awakened one.

As people honor with joined palms the moon on the cusp of waxing, bowing, they revere Gotama in the world.

We ask this of Gotama, the Eye arisen in the world: is one a brahmin due to birth, or else because of deeds? We don't know, please tell us, so we can recognize a brahmin."

"I shall explain to you," said the Buddha, "accurately and in sequence, the taxonomy of living creatures, for species are indeed diverse.

Know the grass and trees, though they lack self-awareness. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

Next there are bugs and moths, and so on, to ants and termites. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

Know the quadrupeds, too, both small and large. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

Know, too, the long-backed snakes, crawling on their bellies. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

Next know the fish, whose habitat is the water. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

Next know the birds, winged chariots in flight. They're defined by birth, for species are indeed diverse.

While the differences between these species are defined by birth, the differences between humans are not defined by birth.

Not by hair nor by head, not by ear nor by eye, not by mouth nor by nose, not by lips nor by eyebrow, not by shoulder nor by neck, not by belly nor by back, not by buttocks nor by breast, not by groin nor by genitals, not by hands nor by feet, not by fingers nor by nails, not by knees nor by thighs, not by color nor by voice: none of these are defined by birth as it is for other species.

In individual human bodies you can't find such distinctions. The distinctions among humans are spoken of by convention.

Anyone among humans who lives off keeping cattle: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a farmer, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off various professions: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a professional, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off trade: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a trader, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off serving others: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a servant, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off stealing: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a bandit, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off archery: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a soldier, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who lives off priesthood: know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a sacrificer, not a brahmin.

Anyone among humans who taxes village and nation, know them, Vāseṭṭha, as a ruler, not a brahmin.

I don't call someone a brahmin after the mother's womb they're born from. If they still have attachments, they're just someone who says 'mister'. Having nothing, taking nothing: that's who I call a brahmin.

Having cut off all fetters they have no anxiety; they've slipped their chains and are detached: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've cut the strap and harness, the reins and bridle too; with cross-bar lifted, they're awakened: that's who I call a brahmin.

Abuse, killing, caging: they endure these without anger. Patience is their powerful army: that's who I call a brahmin.

Not irritable or stuck up, dutiful in precepts and observances, tamed, bearing their final body: that's who I call a brahmin.

Like water from a lotus leaf, like a mustard seed off a pin-point, sensual pleasures slip off them: that's who I call a brahmin.

They understand for themselves the end of suffering in this life; with burden put down, detached: that's who I call a brahmin.

Deep in wisdom, intelligent, expert in what is the path and what is not the path; arrived at the highest goal: that's who I call a brahmin.

mixing with neither householders nor the homeless; a migrant with no shelter, few in wishes: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've laid aside violence against creatures firm and frail; not killing or making others kill: that's who I call a brahmin.

Not fighting among those who fight, extinguished among those who are armed, not taking among those who take: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've discarded greed and hate, along with conceit and contempt, like a mustard seed off the point of a pin: that's who I call a brahmin.

The words they utter are sweet, informative, and true, and don't offend anyone: that's who I call a brahmin.

They don't steal anything in the world, long or short, fine or coarse, beautiful or ugly: that's who I call a brahmin.

They have no hope for this world or the next. with no need for hope, detached: that's who I call a brahmin.

They have no clinging, knowledge has freed them of indecision, they've plunged into freedom from death: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've escaped clinging to both good and bad deeds; sorrowless, stainless, pure: that's who I call a brahmin.

Pure as the spotless moon, clear and undisturbed, they've ended delight and future lives: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've got past this grueling swamp of delusion, transmigration. Meditating in stillness, free of indecision, they have crossed over to the far shore. They're extinguished by not grasping: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've given up sensual stimulations, and have gone forth from lay life; they've ended rebirth in the sensual realm: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've given up craving, and have gone forth from lay life; they've ended craving to be reborn: that's who I call a brahmin.

They've thrown off the human yoke, and slipped out of the heavenly yoke; unyoked from all yokes: that's who I call a brahmin.

Giving up discontent and desire, they're cooled and free of attachments; a hero, master of the whole world: that's who I call a brahmin.

They know the passing away and rebirth of all beings; unattached, holy, awakened: that's who I call a brahmin.

Gods, centaurs, and humans don't know their destiny; the perfected ones with defilements ended: that's who I call a brahmin.

They have nothing before or after, or even in between. Having nothing, taking nothing: that's who I call a brahmin.

Leader of the herd, excellent hero, great seer and victor; unstirred, washed, awakened: that's who I call a brahmin.

They know their past lives, and sees heaven and places of loss, and has attained the ending of rebirth, that's who I call a brahmin.

For name and clan are formulated as mere convention in the world. Produced by mutual agreement, they're formulated for each individual.

For a long time this misconception has prejudiced those who don't understand. Ignorant, they declare that one is a brahmin by birth.

You're not a brahmin by birth, nor by birth a non-brahmin. You're a brahmin by your deeds, and by deeds a non-brahmin.

You're a farmer by your deeds, by deeds you're a professional; you're a trader by your deeds, by deeds are you a servant;

you're a bandit by your deeds, by deeds you're a soldier; you're a sacrificer by your deeds, by deeds you're a ruler.

In this way the astute regard deeds in accord with truth. Seeing dependent origination, they're expert in deeds and their results.

Deeds make the world go on, deeds make people go on; sentient beings are bound by deeds, like a moving chariot's linchpin.

By fervor and spiritual practice, by restraint and by self-control: that's how to become a brahmin, this is the supreme brahmin.

Accomplished in the three knowledges, peaceful, with rebirth ended, know them, Vāseṭṭha, as Brahmā and Sakka to the wise."

When he had spoken, Vāseṭṭha and Bhāradvāja said to him, "Excellent, Mister Gotama! Excellent! … From this day forth, may Mister Gotama remember us as lay followers who have gone for refuge for life."

Snp 3.10

Snp 3.10
With Kokālika
Kokālikasutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta's Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the mendicant Kokālika went up to the Buddha, bowed, sat down to one side, and said to him, "Sir, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have corrupt wishes. They've fallen under the sway of corrupt wishes."

When this was said, the Buddha said to Kokālika, "Don't say that, Kokālika! Don't say that, Kokālika! Have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they're good monks."

For a second time … For a third time Kokālika said to the Buddha, "Despite my faith and trust in the Buddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have corrupt wishs. They've fallen under the sway of corrupt wishes." For a third time, the Buddha said to Kokālika, "Don't say that, Kokālika! Don't say that, Kokālika! Have confidence in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, they're good monks."

Then Kokālika got up from his seat, bowed, and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right, before leaving. Not long after he left his body erupted with boils the size of mustard seeds. The boils grew to the size of mung beans, then chickpeas, then jujube seeds, then jujubes, then myrobalans, then unripe wood apples, then ripe wood apples. Finally they burst open, and pus and blood oozed out. Then the mendicant Kokālika died of that illness. He was reborn in the Pink Lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.

Then, late at night, the beautiful Brahmā Sahampati, lighting up the entire Jeta's Grove, went up to the Buddha, bowed, stood to one side, and said to him, "Sir, the mendicant Kokālika has passed away. He was reborn in the Pink Lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna." That's what Brahmā Sahampati said. Then he bowed and respectfully circled the Buddha, keeping him on his right side, before vanishing right there.

Then, when the night had passed, the Buddha told the mendicants all that had happened.

When he said this, one of the mendicants said to the Buddha, "Sir, how long is the life span in the Pink Lotus hell?" "It's long, mendicant. It's not easy to calculate how many years, how many hundreds or thousands or hundreds of thousands of years it lasts." "But sir, is it possible to give a simile?" "It's possible," said the Buddha.

"Suppose there was a Kosalan cartload of twenty bushels of sesame seed. And at the end of every hundred years someone would remove a single seed from it. By this means the Kosalan cartload of twenty bushels of sesame seed would run out faster than a single lifetime in the Abbuda hell. Now, twenty lifetimes in the Abbuda hell equal one lifetime in the Nirabbuda hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Nirabbuda hell equal one lifetime in the Ababa hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Ababa hell equal one lifetime in the Aṭaṭa hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Aṭaṭa hell equal one lifetime in the Ahaha hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Ahaha hell equal one lifetime in the Yellow Lotus hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Yellow Lotus hell equal one lifetime in the Sweet-Smelling hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Sweet-Smelling hell equal one lifetime in the Blue Water Lily hell. Twenty lifetimes in the Blue Water Lily hell equal one lifetime in the White Lotus hell. Twenty lifetimes in the White Lotus hell equal one lifetime in the Pink Lotus hell. The mendicant Kokālika has been reborn in the Pink Lotus hell because of his resentment for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.” That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

“A person is born with an axe in their mouth. A fool cuts themselves with it when they say bad words.

When you praise someone worthy of criticism, or criticize someone worthy of praise, you choose bad luck with your own mouth: you’ll never find happiness that way.

Bad luck at dice is a trivial thing, if all you lose is your money and all you own, even yourself. What’s really terrible luck is to hate the holy ones.

For more than two quinquadecillion years, and another five quattuordecillion years, a slanderer of noble ones goes to hell, having aimed bad words and thoughts at them.

A liar goes to hell, as does one who denies what they did. Both are equal in the hereafter, those men of base deeds.

Whoever wrongs a man who has done no wrong, a pure man who has not a blemish, the evil backfires on the fool, like fine dust thrown upwind.

One addicted to the way of greed, abuses others with their speech, faithless, miserly, uncharitable, stingy, addicted to backbiting.

Foul-mouthed, divisive, ignoble, a baby-killer, wicked, wrongdoer, worst of men, cursed, base-born—quiet now, for you are bound for hell.

You stir up dust, causing harm, when you, evildoer, malign the good. Having done many bad deeds, you’ll go to the pit for a long time.

For no-one’s deeds are ever lost, they return to their owner. In the next life that stupid evildoer sees suffering in themselves.

They approach the place of impalement, with its iron spikes, sharp blades, and iron stakes. Then there is the food, which appropriately, is like a red-hot iron ball.

For the speakers speak not sweetly, they don’t hurry there, or find shelter. They lie upon a spread of coals, they enter a blazing mass of fire.

Wrapping them in a net, they strike them there with iron hammers. They come to blinding darkness, which spreads about them like a fog.

Next they enter a copper pot, a blazing mass of fire. There they roast for a long time, writhing in the masses of fire.

Then the evildoer roasts there in a mixture of pus and blood. No matter where they settle, everything they touch there hurts them.

The evildoer roasts in worm-infested water. There's not even a shore to go to, for all around are the same kind of pots.

They enter the Wood of Sword-Leaves, so sharp they cut their body to pieces. Having grabbed the tongue with a hook, they stab it, slashing back and forth.

Then they approach the impassable Vetaraṇi River, with its sharp blades, its razor blades. Idiots fall into it, the wicked who have done wicked deeds.

There dogs all brown and spotted, and raven flocks, and greedy jackals devour them as they wail, while hawks and crows attack them.

Hard, alas, is the life here that evildoers endure. That's why for the rest of this life a person ought do their duty without fail.

Experts have counted the loads of sesame as compared to the Pink Lotus Hell. They amount to 50,000,000 times 10,000, plus another 12,000,000,000.

As painful as life is said to be in hell, that's how long one must dwell there. That's why, for those who are pure, well-behaved, full of good qualities, one should always guard one's speech and mind."

Snp 3.11

Snp 3.11
About Nālaka
Nālakasutta

The seer Asita in his daily meditation saw the bright-clad gods of the Thirty-Three and their lord Sakka joyfully celebrating, waving streamers in exuberant exaltation.

Seeing the gods rejoicing, elated, he paid respects and said this there: “Why is the community of gods in such excellent spirits? Why take up streamers and whirl them about?

Even in the war with the titans, when gods were victorious and titans defeated, there was no such excitement. What marvel have the celestials seen that they so rejoice?

Shouting and singing and playing music, they clap their hands and dance. I ask you, dwellers on Mount Meru’s peak, quickly dispel my doubt, good sirs!”

“The being intent on awakening, a peerless gem, has been born in the human realm for the sake of welfare and happiness, in Lumbinī, a village in the Sakyan land. That’s why we’re so happy, in such excellent spirits.

He is supreme among all beings, the best of people, chief of men, supreme among all creatures. He will roll forth the wheel in the grove of the seers, roaring like a mighty lion, lord of beasts.”

Hearing this, he swiftly descended and right away approached Suddhodana’s home. Seated there he said this to the Sakyans, “Where is the boy? I too wish to see him!”

Then the Sakyans showed their son to the one named Asita—the boy shone like burning gold well-wrought in the forge; resplendent with glory, of peerless beauty.

The boy beamed like crested flame, pure as the moon, lord of stars traversing the sky, blazing like the sun free of clouds after the rains; seeing him, he was joyful, brimming with happiness.

The celestials held up a parasol in the sky, many-ribbed and thousand-circled; and golden-handled chowries waved—but none could see who held the chowries or the parasols.

When the dreadlocked seer called “Dark Splendor” had seen the boy like a gold nugget on a cream rug with a white parasol held over his head, he received him, elated and happy.

Having received the Sakyan bull, the seeker, master of marks and hymns, lifted up his voice with confident heart: “He is supreme, the best of men!”

But then, remembering he would depart this world, his spirits fell and his tears flowed. Seeing the weeping seer, the Sakyans said, “Surely there will be no threat to the boy?”

Seeing the crestfallen Sakyans, the hermit said, “I do not forsee harm befall the boy, and there will be no threat to him, not in the least; set your minds at ease.

This boy shall reach the highest awakening. As one of perfectly purified vision, compassionate for the welfare of the many, he shall roll forth the wheel of the teaching; his spiritual path will become widespread.

But I have not long left in this life, I shall die before then. I will never hear the teaching of the one who bore the unequaled burden. That’s why I’m so upset and distraught—it’s a disaster for me!”

Having brought abundant happiness to the Sakyans, the spiritual seeker left the royal compound. He had a nephew; and out of compassion he encouraged him in the teaching of the one who bore the unequaled burden.

“When you hear the voice of another saying ‘Buddha’— one who has attained awakening and who reveals the foremost teaching— go there and ask about his breakthrough; lead the spiritual life under that Blessed One.”

Now, that Nālaka had a store of accumulated merit; so when instructed by one of such kindly intent, with perfectly purified vision of the future, he waited in hope for the Victor, guarding his senses.

When he heard of the Victor rolling forth the excellent wheel he went to him, and seeing the leading seer, he became confident. The time of Asita’s instruction had arrived; so he asked the excellent sage about the highest sagacity.

The introductory verses are finished.

“I now know that Asita’s words have turned out to be true. I ask you this, Gotama, who has gone beyond all things:

For one who has entered the homeless life, seeking food on alms round, when questioned, O sage, please tell me of sagacity, the ultimate state.”

“I shall school you in sagacity,” said the Buddha, “so difficult and challenging. Come, I shall tell you all about it. Brace yourself; stay strong!

In the village, keep the same attitude no matter if reviled or praised. Guard against ill-tempered thoughts, wander peaceful, not frantic.

Many different things come up, like tongues of fire in a forest. Women try to seduce a sage —let them not seduce you!

Refraining from sex, having left behind sensual pleasures high and low, don't be hostile or attached to living creatures firm or frail.

'As am I, so are they; as are they, so am I'—Treating others like oneself, neither kill nor incite to kill.

Leaving behind desire and greed for what ordinary people are attached to, one whose eye is clear would set out to practice, they'd cross over this abyss.

With empty stomach, taking limited food, few in wishes, not greedy; truly hungerless regarding all desires, desireless, one is quenched.

Having wandered for alms, they'd take themselves into the forest; and nearing the foot of a tree, the sage would take their seat.

That wise one intent on absorption, would delight within the forest. They'd practice absorption at the foot of a tree, filling themselves with bliss.

Then, at the end of the night, they'd take themselves into a village. They'd not welcome being called, nor offerings brought from the village.

A sage who has come to a village would not walk hastily among the families. They'd not discuss their search for food, nor would they speak suggestively.

'I got something, that's good. I got nothing, that's fine.' Impartial in both cases, they return right to the tree.

Wandering with bowl in hand, not dumb, but thought to be dumb, they wouldn't scorn a tiny gift, nor look down upon the giver.

For the practice has many aspects, as explained by the Ascetic. They do not go to the far shore twice, nor having gone once do they fall away.

When a mendicant has no creeping, and has cut the stream of craving, and given up all the various duties, no fever is found in them.

I shall school you in sagacity. Practice as if you were licking a razor's edge. With tongue pressed to the roof of your mouth, be restrained regarding your stomach.

Don't be sluggish in mind, nor think overly much. Be free of putrefaction and unattached, committed to the spiritual life.

Train in a lonely seat, attending closely to ascetics; solitude is sagacity, they say. If you welcome solitude, you'll light up the ten directions.

Having heard the words of the wise, the meditators who've given up sensual desires, a follower of mine would develop conscience and faith all the more.

Understand this by the way streams move in clefts and crevices: the little creeks flow on babbling, while silent flow the great rivers.

What is lacking, babbles; what is full is at peace. The fool is like a half-full pot; the wise like a brimfull lake.

When the Ascetic speaks much it is relevant and meaningful: knowing, he teaches the Dhamma; knowing, he speaks much.

But one who, knowing, is restrained, knowing, does not speak much; that sage is worthy of sagacity, that sage has achieved sagacity."

Snp 3.12

Snp 3.12
3.12 Contemplating Pairs
Dvayatānupassanāsutta

So I have heard. At one time the Buddha was staying near Sāvatthī in the Eastern Monastery, the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother. Now, at that time it was the sabbath—the full moon on the fifteenth day—and the Buddha was sitting in the open surrounded by the Saṅgha of monks. Then the Buddha looked around the Saṅgha of mendicants, who were so very silent. He addressed them:

"Suppose, mendicants, they questioned you thus: 'There are skillful teachings that are noble, emancipating, and lead to awakening. What is the real reason for listening to such teachings?' You should answer: 'Only so as to truly know the pairs of teachings.' And what pairs do they speak of?

'This is suffering; this is the origin of suffering': this is the first contemplation. 'This is the cessation of suffering; this is the practice that leads to the cessation of suffering': this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates rightly contemplating a pair of teachings in this way—diligent, keen, and resolute—they can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there's something left over, non-return."

That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

"There are those who don't understand suffering and suffering's cause, and where all suffering ceases with nothing left over. And they do not know the path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

They lack the heart's release, as well as the release by wisdom. Unable to make an end, they continue to be reborn and grow old.

But there are those who understand suffering and suffering's cause, and where all suffering ceases with nothing left over. And they understand the path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

They're endowed with the heart's release, as well as the release by wisdom. Able to make an end, they don't continue to be reborn and grow old."

"Suppose, mendicants, they questioned you thus: 'Could there be another way to contemplate the pairs?' You should say, 'There could.' And how could there be? 'All the suffering that originates is caused by attachment': this is one contemplation. 'With the utter cessation of attachment there is no origination of suffering': this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return." Then the Teacher went on to say:

"Attachment is the source of suffering in all its countless forms in the world. When an ignorant person builds up attachments, that idiot returns to suffering again and again. So let one who understands not build up attachments, contemplating the origin of suffering and rebirth."

"Suppose, mendicants, they questioned you thus: 'Could there be another way to contemplate the pairs?' You should say, 'There could.' And how could there be? 'All the suffering that originates is caused by ignorance': this is one contemplation. 'With the utter cessation of ignorance there is no origination of suffering': this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return." Then the Teacher went on to say:

"Those who journey again and again, transmigrating through birth and death; they go from this state to another, destined only for ignorance.

For ignorance is the great delusion because of which we have long transmigrated. Those beings who have arrived at knowledge do not proceed to a future life."

"'Could there be another way?' … And how could there be? 'All the suffering that originates is caused by choices': this is one contemplation. 'With the utter cessation of choices there is no origination of suffering': this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return." Then the Teacher went on to say:

"All the suffering that originates is caused by choices. With the cessation of choices, there is no origination of suffering.

Knowing this danger, that suffering is caused by choices; through the stilling of all choices, and the stopping of perceptions, this is the way suffering ends. For those who truly know this, rightly seeing, knowledge masters, the astute, understanding rightly, having thrown off Māra's yoke, do not proceed to a future life."

"'Could there be another way?' … And how could there be? 'All the suffering that originates is caused by consciousness': this is one contemplation. 'With the utter cessation of consciousness there is no origination of suffering': this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return." Then the Teacher went on to say:

“All the suffering that originates is caused by consciousness. With the cessation of consciousness, there is no origination of suffering.

Knowing this danger, that suffering is caused by consciousness, with the stilling of consciousness a mendicant is hungerless, extinguished.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by contact’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of contact there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“Those mired in contact, swept down the stream of rebirths, practicing the wrong way, are far from the ending of fetters.

But those who completely understand contact, who, understanding, delight in peace; by comprehending contact they are hungerless, extinguished.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by feeling’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of feeling there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“Having known everything that is felt—whether pleasure or pain, as well as what’s neutral, both internally and externally—

as suffering, deceptive, falling apart; they see it vanish with every touch: that’s how they understand it. With the ending of feelings, a mendicant is hungerless, extinguished.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by craving’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of craving there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“Craving is a person’s partner as they transmigrate on this long journey. They go from this state to another, but don’t escape transmigration.

Knowing this danger, that craving is the cause of suffering—rid of craving, free of grasping, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by grasping’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of grasping there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“Grasping is the cause of continued existence; one who exists falls into suffering. Death comes to those who are born—this is the origination of suffering.

That’s why with the end of grasping, the astute, understanding rightly, having directly known the end of rebirth, do not proceed to a future life.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by instigating karma’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of instigation there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“All the suffering that originates is caused by instigating karma. With the cessation of instigation, there is no origination of suffering.

Knowing this danger, that suffering is caused by instigating karma, having given up all instigation, one is freed with respects to instigation.

For the mendicant with peaceful mind, who has cut off craving for continued existence, transmigration through births is finished; there are no future lives for them.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by sustenance’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of sustenance there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“All the suffering that originates is caused by sustenance. With the cessation of sustenance, there is no origination of suffering.

Knowing this danger, that suffering is caused by sustenance, completely understanding all sustenance, one is independent of all sustenance.

Having rightly understood the state of health, through the ending of defilements, using after reflection, firm in principle, a knowledge master cannot be reckoned.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘All the suffering that originates is caused by perturbation’: this is one contemplation. ‘With the utter cessation of perturbation there is no origination of suffering’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“All the suffering that originates is caused by perturbation. With the cessation of perturbation, there is no origination of suffering.

Knowing this danger, that suffering is caused by perturbation, that’s why, having relinquished perturbation, and stopped making karmic choices, imperturbable, free of grasping, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘For the dependent there is agitation’: this is the first contemplation. ‘For the independent there’s no agitation’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“For the independent there’s no agitation. The dependent, grasping, goes from this state to another, without escaping transmigration.

Knowing this danger, the great fear in dependencies, independent, free of grasping, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘Formless states are more peaceful than states of form’: this is the first contemplation. ‘Cessation is more peaceful than formless states’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“There are beings in the realm of luminous form, and others stuck in the formless. Not understanding cessation, they return in future lives.

But the people who completely understand form, not stuck in the formless, released in cessation—they are conquerors of death.”

“‘Could there be another way?’ … And how could there be? ‘What this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—focuses on as true, the noble ones have clearly seen with right wisdom to be actually false’: this is the first contemplation. ‘What this world focuses on as false, the noble ones have clearly seen with right wisdom to be actually true’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates in this way they can expect enlightenment or non-return.” Then the Teacher went on to say:

“See how the world with its gods imagines not-self to be self; habituated to name and form, imagining this is truth.

For whatever you imagine it is, it turns out to be something else. And that is what is false in it, for the ephemeral is deceptive by nature.

Extinguishment has an undeceptive nature, the noble ones know it as truth. Having comprehended the truth, they are hungerless, extinguished.”

“Suppose, mendicants, they questioned you thus: ‘Could there be another way to contemplate the pairs?’ You should say, ‘There could.’ And how could there be? ‘What this world—with its gods, Māras, and Brahmās, this population with its ascetics and brahmins, its gods and humans—focuses on as happiness, the noble ones have clearly seen with right wisdom to be actually suffering’: this is the first contemplation. ‘What this world focuses on as suffering, the noble ones have clearly seen with right wisdom to be actually happiness’: this is the second contemplation. When a mendicant meditates rightly contemplating a pair of teachings in this way—diligent, keen, and resolute—they can expect one of two results: enlightenment in the present life, or if there’s something left over, non-return. That is what the Buddha said. Then the Holy One, the Teacher, went on to say:

“Sights, sounds, tastes, smells, touches, and ideas, the lot of them—they’re likable, desirable, and pleasurable as long as you can say that they exist.

For all the world with its gods, this is what they deem happiness. And where they cease is deemed as suffering for them.

The noble ones have seen as happiness the ceasing of substantial reality. This insight by those who see contradicts the whole world.

What others say is happiness the noble ones say is suffering. What others say is suffering the noble ones know as happiness.

See, this teaching is hard to understand, it confuses the ignorant. There is darkness for the shrouded; blackness for those who don’t see.

But the good are open; like light for those who see. Though close, they do not understand, those fools inexpert in the teaching.

They’re mired in desire to be reborn, flowing along the stream of lives, mired in Māra’s sway: this teaching isn’t easy for them to understand.

Who, apart from the noble ones, is qualified to understand this state? Having rightly understood this state, the undefiled become fully extinguished.”

That is what the Buddha said. Satisfied, the mendicants approved what the Buddha said. And while this discourse was being spoken, the minds of sixty mendicants were freed from defilements by not grasping.

Snp 4.1

Snp 4.1
Sensual Pleasures
Kāmasutta

If a mortal desires sensual pleasure and their desire succeeds, they definitely become elated, having got what they want.

But for that person in the throes of pleasure, aroused by desire, if those pleasures fade, it hurts like an arrow's strike.

One who, being mindful, avoids sensual pleasures like side-stepping a snake's head, transcends attachment to the world.

There are many objects of sensual desire: fields, lands, and gold; cattle and horses; slaves and servants; women and relatives. When a man lusts over these, the weak overpower him and adversities crush him. Suffering follows him like water in a leaky boat.

That's why a person, ever mindful, should avoid sensual pleasures. Give them up and cross the flood, as a bailed-out boat reaches the far shore.

Snp 4.2

Snp 4.2
Eight on the Cave
Guhaṭṭhakasutta

Trapped in a cave, thickly overspread, sunk in delusion they stay. A person like this is far from seclusion, for sensual pleasures in the world are not easy to give up.

The chains of desire, the bonds of life's pleasures are hard to escape, for one cannot free another. Looking to the past or the future, they pray for these pleasures or former ones.

Greedy, fixated, infatuated by sensual pleasures, they are incorrigible, habitually immoral. When led to suffering they lament, "What will become of us when we pass away from here?"

That's why a person should train in this life: should you know that anything in the world is wrong, don't act wrongly on account of that; for the wise say this life is short.

I see the world's population floundering, given to craving for future lives. Base men wail in the jaws of death, not rid of craving for life after life.

See them flounder over belongings, like fish in puddles of a dried-up stream. Seeing this, live unselfishly, forming no attachment to future lives.

Rid of desire for both ends, having completely understood contact, free of greed, doing nothing for which they'd blame themselves, the wise don't cling to the seen and the heard.

Having completely understood perception and having crossed the flood, the sage, not clinging to possessions, with dart plucked out, living diligently, does not long for this world or the next.

Snp 4.3

Snp 4.3
Eight on Malice
Duṭṭhaṭṭhakasutta

Some speak with malicious intent, while others speak set on truth. When disputes come up a sage does not get involved, which is why they've no barrenness at all.

How can you transcend your own view when you're led by preference, dogmatic in belief? Inventing your own undertakings, you'd speak according to your notion.

Some, unasked, tell others of their own precepts and vows. They have an ignoble nature, say the experts, since they speak on themselves of their own accord.

A mendicant, peaceful, quenched, never boasts "thus am I" of their precepts. They have a noble nature, say the experts, not proud of anything in the world.

For one who formulates and creates teachings, and promotes them despite their defects, if they see an advantage for themselves, they become dependent on that, relying on unstable peace.

It's not easy to get over dogmatic views adopted after judging among the teachings. That's why, among all these dogmas, a person rejects one teaching and takes up another.

The cleansed one has no formulated view at all in the world about the different realms. Having given up illusion and conceit, by what path would they go? They are not involved.

For one who is involved gets embroiled in disputes about teachings—but how to dispute with the uninvolved? About what? For picking up and putting down is not what they do; they have shaken off all views in this very life.

Snp 4.4

Snp 4.4
Eight on the Pure
Suddhaṭṭhakasutta

“I see a being who is pure, ultimate, free of disease; it is vision that grants a person purity.” Recalling this notion of the ultimate, they believe in the notion that there is one who observes purity.

If a person were granted purity through what is seen, or if by a notion they could give up suffering, then one with attachments is purified by another: their view betrays them as one who asserts thus.

The brahmin speaks not of purity from another in terms of what is seen, heard, or thought; or by precepts or vows. They are unsullied in the midst of good and evil, letting go what was picked up, without creating anything new here.

Having let go the last they lay hold of the next; following impulse, they don’t get past the snare. They grab on and let go like a monkey grabbing and releasing a branch.

Having undertaken their own vows, a person visits various teachers, being attached to perception. One who knows, having comprehended the truth through the knowledges, does not visit various teachers, being of vast wisdom.

They are remote from all things seen, heard, or thought. Seeing them living openly, how could anyone in this world judge them?

They don’t make things up or promote them, or speak of the uttermost purity. After untying the tight knot of grasping they long for nothing in the world.

The brahmin has stepped over the boundary; knowing and seeing, they adopt nothing. Neither in love with passion nor besotted by dispassion, there is nothing here they adopt as the ultimate.

Snp 4.5

Snp 4.5
Eight on the Ultimate Paramaṭṭhakasutta

If, maintaining that theirs is the “ultimate” view, a person makes it out to be highest in the world; then they declare all others are “lesser”; that’s why they’re not over disputes.

If they see an advantage for themselves in what’s seen, heard, or thought; or in precepts or vows, in that case, having adopted that one alone, they see all others as inferior.

Experts say that, too, is a knot, relying on which people see others as lesser. That’s why a mendicant ought not rely on what’s seen, heard, or thought, or on precepts and vows.

Nor would they form a view about the world through a notion or through precepts and vows. They would never represent themselves as “equal”, nor conceive themselves “worse” or “better”.

What was picked up has been set down and is not grasped again; they form no dependency even on notions. They follow no side among the factions, and believe in no view at all.

One here who has no wish for either end—for any form of existence in this life or the next—has adopted no dogma at all after judging among the teachings.

For them not even the tiniest idea is formulated here regarding what is seen, heard, or thought. That brahmin does not grasp any view—how could anyone in this world judge them?

They don’t make things up or promote them, and don’t subscribe to any of the doctrines. The brahmin has no need to be led by precept or vow; gone to the far shore, one such does not return.

Snp 4.6

Snp 4.6
Old Age
Jarāsutta

Short, alas, is this life; you die before a hundred years. Even if you live a little longer, you still die of old age.

People grieve over belongings, yet there is no such thing as permanent possessions. Separation is a fact of life; when you see this, you wouldn't stay living at home.

Whatever a person thinks of as belonging to them, that too is given up when they die. Knowing this, an astute follower of mine would not be bent on ownership.

Just as, upon awakening, a person does not see what they encountered in a dream; so too you do not see your loved ones when they are dead and gone.

You used to see and hear those folk, and call them by their name. Yet the name is all that's left to tell of a person when they're gone.

Those who are greedy for belongings don't give up sorrow, lamentation, and stinginess. That's why the sages, seers of sanctuary, left possessions behind and wandered.

For a mendicant who lives withdrawn, frequenting a secluded seat, they say it's fitting to not show themselves in a home.

The sage is independent everywhere, they don't form likes or dislikes. Lamentation and stinginess slip off them like water from a leaf.

Like a droplet slips from a lotus-leaf, like water from a lotus flower; the sage doesn't cling to that which is seen or heard or thought.

For the one who is cleansed does not conceive in terms of things seen, heard, or thought. They do not wish to be purified by another; they are neither passionate nor growing dispassioned.

Snp 4.7

Snp 4.7
With Tissametteyya
Tissametteyyasutta

“When someone indulges in sex,” said Venerable Tissametteyya, “tell us, sir: what trouble befalls them? After hearing your instruction, we shall train in seclusion.”

“When someone indulges in sex,” replied the Buddha, “they forget their instructions and go the wrong way—that is something ignoble in them.

Someone who formerly lived alone and then resorts to sex is like a chariot careening off-track; in the world they call them a low, ordinary person.

Their former fame and reputation also fall away. Seeing this, they’d train to give up sex.

Oppressed by thoughts, they brood like a wretch. When they hear what others are saying, such a person is embarrassed.

Then they lash out with verbal daggers when reproached by others. This is their great blind spot; they sink to lies.

They once were considered astute, committed to the solitary life. But then they indulged in sex, dragged along by desire like an idiot.

Knowing this danger in falling from a former state here, a sage would firmly resolve to wander alone, and would not resort to sex.

They’d train themselves only in seclusion; this, for the noble ones, is highest. One who’d not think themselves “best” due to that has truly drawn near to extinguishment.

People tied to sensual pleasures envy them: the isolated, wandering sage who has crossed the flood, unconcerned for sensual pleasures.

Snp 4.8

Snp 4.8
With Pasūra
Pasūrasutta

“Here alone is purity,” they say, denying that there is purification in other teachings. Speaking of the beauty in that which they depend on, each one is dogmatic about their own idiosyncratic interpretation.

Desiring debate, they plunge into an assembly, where each takes the other as a fool. Relying on others they state their contention, desiring praise while claiming to be experts.

Addicted to debating in the midst of the assembly, their need for praise makes them nervous. But when they’re repudiated they get embarrassed; upset at criticism, they find fault in others.

If their doctrine is said to be weak, and judges declare it repudiated, the loser weeps and wails, moaning, “They beat me.”

When these arguments come up among ascetics, they get excited or dejected. Seeing this, refrain from contention, for the only purpose is praise and profit.

But if, having declared their doctrine, they are praised there in the midst of the assembly, they laugh and proudly show off because of it, having got what they wanted.

Their pride is their downfall, yet they speak from conceit and arrogance. Seeing this, one ought not get into arguments, for experts say this is no way to purity.

As a warrior, after feasting on royal food, goes roaring, looking for someone to fight—go off and find an opponent, Sūra, for here, as before, there is no-one to fight.

When someone argues about a view they’ve adopted, saying, “This is the only truth,” say to them, “Here you’ll have no adversary when a dispute has come up.”

There are those who live far from the crowd, not countering views with view. Who is there to argue with you, Pasūra, among those who grasp nothing here as the highest?

And so you come along speculating, thinking up theories in your mind. Now that you’ve challenged someone who is cleansed, you’ll not be able to respond.

Snp 4.9

Snp 4.9
With Māgaṇḍiya
Māgaṇḍiyasutta

“Even when I saw the sirens Craving, Delight, and Lust, I had no desire for sex. What is this body full of piss and shit? I wouldn’t even want to touch it with my foot.”

“If you do not want a gem such as this, a lady desired by many rulers of men, then what manner of theory, precepts and vows, livelihood, and rebirth in a new life do you assert?”

“After judging among the teachings,” said the Buddha to Māgaṇḍiya, “none have been adopted thinking, ‘I assert this.’ Seeing views without adopting any, searching, I saw inner peace.”

“O sage, you speak of judgments you have formed,” said Māgaṇḍiya, “without having adopted any of those views. As to that matter of ‘inner peace’—how is that described by the wise?”

“Purity is spoken of not in terms of view,” said the Buddha to Māgaṇḍiya, “learning, knowledge, or precepts and vows; nor in terms of that without view, learning, knowledge, or precepts and vows. Having relinquished these, not adopting them, peaceful, independent, one would not pray for another life.”

“It seems purity is spoken of not in terms of view,” said Māgaṇḍiya, “learning, knowledge, or precepts and vows; nor in terms of that without view, learning, knowledge, or precepts and vows. If so, I think this teaching is sheer confusion; for some believe in purity in terms of view.”

“Continuing to question while relying on a view,” said the Buddha to Māgaṇḍiya, “you’ve become confused by all you’ve adopted. From this you’ve not glimpsed the slightest idea, which is why you consider the teaching confused.

If you think that ‘I’m equal, special, or worse’, you’ll get into arguments. Unwavering in the face of the three discriminations, you’ll have no thought ‘I’m equal or special’.

Why would that brahmin say, ‘It’s true’, or with whom would they argue, ‘It’s false’? There is no equal or unequal in them, so who would they take on in debate?

After leaving shelter to migrate unsettled, a sage doesn’t get close to anyone in town. Rid of sensual pleasures, expecting nothing, they wouldn’t get in arguments with people.

A spiritual giant would not take up for argument the things in the world from which they live secluded. As a prickly lotus born in the water is unsullied by water and mud, so the greedless sage, proponent of peace, is unsmeared by sensuality and the world.

A knowledge master does not become conceited due to view or thought, for they are not determined by that. They've no need for deeds or learning, they're not indoctrinated in dogmas.

There are no ties for one detached from ideas; there are no delusions for one freed by wisdom. But those who have adopted ideas and views wander the world causing conflict."

Snp 4.10

Snp 4.10
Before the Breakup
Purābhedasutta

“Seeing how, behaving how, is one said to be at peace? When asked, Gotama, please tell me about the ultimate person.”

“Rid of craving before the breakup,” said the Buddha, “not dependent on the past, unfathomable in the middle, they are not governed by anything.

Unangry, unafraid, not boastful or regretful, thoughtful in counsel, not restless—truly that sage is controlled in speech.

Rid of attachment to the future, they don’t grieve for the past. A seer of seclusion in the midst of contacts is not led astray among views.

Withdrawn, free of deceit, they’re not envious or stingy, nor rude or disgusting, or given to slander.

Not swept up in pleasures, or given to arrogance, they’re gentle and articulate, neither hungering nor growing dispassionate.

They don’t train out of desire for profit, nor get annoyed at lack of profit. Not hostile due to craving, nor greedy for flavors, they are equanimous, ever mindful. They never conceive themselves in the world as equal, special, or less than; for them there is no pride.

They have no dependencies, understanding the teaching, they are independent. No craving is found in them to continue existence or to end it.

I declare them to be at peace, unconcerned for sensual pleasures. No ties are found in them, they have crossed over clinging.

They have no sons or cattle, nor possess fields or lands. No picking up or putting down is found in them.

That by which one might describe an ordinary person or ascetics and brahmins has no importance to them, which is why they’re unaffected by words.

Freed of greed, not stingy, a sage doesn’t speak of themselves as being among superiors, inferiors, or equals. One not prone to creation does not return to creation.

They who have nothing in the world of their own do not grieve for that which is not, or drift among the teachings; that's who is said to be at peace."

Snp 4.11

Snp 4.11
Quarrels and Disputes
Kalahavivādasutta

“Where do quarrels and disputes come from? And lamentation and sorrow, and stinginess? What of conceit and arrogance, and slander too—tell me please, where do they come from?”

“Quarrels and disputes come from what we hold dear, as do lamentation and sorrow, stinginess, conceit and arrogance. Quarrels and disputes are linked to stinginess, and when disputes have arisen there is slander.”

“So where do things held dear in the world spring from? And the lusts that are loose in the world? Where spring the hopes and aims a man has for the next life?”

“What we hold dear in the world spring from desire, as do the lusts that are loose in the world. From there spring the hopes and aims a man has for the next life.”

“So where does desire in the world spring from? And evaluations, too, where do they come from? And anger, lies, and doubt, and other things spoken of by the Ascetic?”

“What they call pleasure and pain in the world—based on that, desire comes about. Seeing the appearance and disappearance of forms, a person makes evaluations in the world.

Anger, lies, and doubt—these things are, too, when that pair is present. One who has doubts should train in the path of knowledge; it is from knowledge that the Ascetic speaks of these things.”

“Where do pleasure and pain spring from? When what is absent do these things not occur? And also, on the topic of appearance and disappearance—tell me where they spring from.”

“Pleasure and pain spring from contact; when contact is absent they do not occur. And on the topic of appearance and disappearance—I tell you they spring from there.”

“So where does contact in the world spring from? And possessions, too, where do they come from? When what is absent is there no possessiveness? When what disappears do contacts not strike?”

“Name and form cause contact; possessions spring from wishing; when wishing is absent there is no possessiveness; when form disappears, contacts don’t strike.”

“Form disappears for one proceeding how? And how do happiness and suffering disappear? Tell me how they disappear; I think we ought to know these things.”

“Without normal perception or distorted perception; not lacking perception, nor perceiving what has disappeared. Form disappears for one proceeding thus; for judgements due to proliferation spring from perception.”

“Whatever I asked you have explained to me. I ask you once more, please tell me this: Do some astute folk here say that this is the highest extent of purity of the spirit? Or do they say it is something else?”

“Some astute folk do say that this is the highest extent of purity of the spirit. But some of them, claiming to be experts, speak of a time when nothing remains.

Knowing that these states are dependent, and knowing what they depend on, the inquiring sage, having understood, is freed, and enters no dispute. The wise do not proceed to life after life.”

Snp 4.12

Snp 4.12
The Shorter Discourse on Arrayed For Battle
Cūḷabyūhasutta

“Each maintaining their own view, the experts disagree, arguing: ‘Whoever sees it this way understands the teaching; those who reject this are inadequate.’

So arguing, they quarrel, saying, ‘The other is a fool, an amateur!’ Which one of these speaks true, for they all claim to be an expert?”

“If not accepting another’s teaching makes you a useless fool lacking wisdom, then they’re all fools lacking wisdom, for they all maintain their own view.

But if having your own view makes you pristine—pure in wisdom, expert and intelligent—then none of them lack wisdom, for such is the view they have all embraced.

I do not say that it is correct when they call each other fools. Each has built up their own view to be the truth, which is why they take the other as a fool.”

“What some say is true and correct, others say is hollow and false. So arguing, they quarrel; why don’t ascetics say the same thing?”

“The truth is one, there is no second, understanding which folk would not argue. But those ascetics each boast of different truths; that’s why they don’t say the same thing.”

“But why do they speak of different truths, these proponents who claim to be experts? Are there really so many different truths, or do they just follow their own lines of reasoning?”

“No, there are not many different truths that, apart from perception, are lasting in the world. Having formed their reasoning regarding different views, they say there are two things: true and false.

The seen, heard, or thought, or precepts or vows— based on these they show disdain. Standing in judgment, they scoff, saying, ‘The other is a fool, an amateur!’

They take the other as a fool on the same grounds that they speak of themselves as an expert. Claiming to be an expert on their own authority, they disdain the other while saying the same thing.

They are perfect, according to their own extreme view; drunk on conceit, imagining themselves proficient. They have anointed themselves in their own mind, for such is the view they have embraced.

If the word of your opponent makes you deficient, then they too are lacking wisdom. But if on your own authority you're a knowledge master, a wise person, then there are no fools among the ascetics.

'Those who proclaim a teaching other than this have fallen short of purity, and are inadequate': so say each one of the sectarians, for they are deeply attached to their own view.

'Here alone is purity,' they say, denying that there is purification in other teachings. Thus each one of the sectarians, being dogmatic, speaks forcefully within the context of their own journey.

But in that case, so long as they are speaking forcefully of their own journey, how can they take the other as a fool? They are the ones who provoke conflict when they call the other a fool with an impure teaching.

Standing in judgment, measuring by their own standard, they dispute with the world more and more. But a person who has given up all judgments creates no conflict in the world."

Snp 4.13

Snp 4.13
The Longer Discourse on Arrayed for Battle
Mahābyūhasutta

“Regarding those who maintain their own view, arguing that, ‘This is the only truth’: are all of them subject only to criticism, or do some also win praise for that?”

“That is a small thing, insufficient for peace, these two fruits of conflict, I say. Seeing this, one ought not get into arguments, looking for sanctuary in the land of no conflict.

One who knows does not get involved with any of the many different convictions. Why would the uninvolved get involved, since they do not believe based on the seen or the heard?

Those who champion ethics speak of purity through self-control; having undertaken a vow, they stick to it: ‘Let us train right here, then we will be pure.’ Claiming to be experts, they are led on to future lives.

If they fall away from their precepts and vows, they tremble, having failed in their task. They pray and long for purity, like one who has lost their caravan while journeying far from home.

But having given up all precepts and vows, and these deeds blameworthy or blameless; not longing for ‘purity’ or ‘impurity’, live detached, fostering peace.

Relying on mortification in disgust at sin, or else on what is seen, heard, or thought, they moan that purification comes through heading upstream, not rid of craving for life after life.

For one who longs there are prayers, and trembling too over ideas they have formed. But one here for whom there is no passing away or reappearing: why would they tremble? For what would they pray?”

“The very same teaching that some say is ‘ultimate’, others say is inferior. Which of these doctrines is true, for they all claim to be an expert?”

“They say their own teaching is perfect, while the teaching of others is inferior. So arguing, they quarrel, each saying their own convictions are the truth.

If someone else’s disparagement makes you inferior, no-one in any teaching would be distinguished. For each of them says the other’s teaching is lacking, while forcefully advocating their own.

But if they honor their own teachings just as they praise their own journeys, then all doctrines would be equally valid, and purity for them would be an individual matter.

After judging among the teachings, a brahmin has adopted nothing that requires interpretation by another. That's why they've gotten over disputes, for they see no other doctrine as best.

Saying, 'I know, I see, that's how it is', some believe that purity comes from view. But if they've really seen, what use is that view to them? Overlooking what matters, they say purity comes from another.

When a person sees, they see name and form, and having seen, they will know just these things. Gladly let them see much or little, for experts say this is no way to purity.

It's not easy to educate someone who is dogmatic, promoting a view they have formulated. Speaking of the beauty in that on which they depend, they talk of purity in accord with what they saw there.

The brahmin does not get involved with formulating and calculating; they're not followers of views, nor kinsmen of notions. Having understood the many different convictions, they look on when others grasp.

Having untied the knots here in the world, the sage takes no side among factions. Peaceful among the peaceless, equanimous, they don't grasp when others grasp.

Having given up former defilements and not making new ones, not swayed by preference, nor a proponent of dogma, that wise one is released from views, not clinging to the world, nor reproaching themselves.

They are remote from all things seen, heard, or thought. With burden put down, the sage is released: not formulating, not abstaining, not longing."

Snp 4.14

Snp 4.14
Speedy
Tuvaṭakasutta

“Great seer, I ask you, the kinsman of the Sun, about seclusion and the state of peace. How, having seen, is a mendicant quenched, not grasping anything in this world?”

“They would cut off the idea, ‘I am the thinker,” said the Buddha, “which is the root of all judgements that emerge from proliferation. Ever mindful, they would train to remove any internal cravings.

Regardless of what things they know, whether internal or external, they wouldn’t be proud because of that, for that is not extinguishment, say the good.

They wouldn’t let that make them conceited, thinking themselves better or worse or alike. When questioned in many ways, they wouldn’t keep justifying themselves.

A mendicant would find peace inside themselves, and not seek peace from another. For one at peace inside themselves, there’s no picking up, whence putting down?

Just as, in the mid-ocean deeps no waves arise, it stays still; so too one unstirred is still—a mendicant would not swell with pride at all.”

“He whose eyes are open has explained the truth he witnessed, where adversities are removed. Please now speak of the practice, sir, the monastic code and immersion in samādhi.”

“With eyes not wanton, they’d turn their ears from village gossip. They wouldn’t be greedy for flavors, nor possessive about anything in the world.

Though struck by contacts, a mendicant would not lament at all. They wouldn’t pray for another life, nor tremble in the face of dangers.

When they receive food and drink, edibles and clothes, they wouldn’t store them up, nor worry about not getting them.

Meditative, not footloose, they’d avoid remorse and not be negligent. Then a mendicant would stay in quiet places to sit and rest.

They wouldn’t take much sleep, but, being keen, would apply themselves to wakefulness. They’d give up sloth, illusion, mirth, and play, and sex and ornamentation.

They wouldn’t cast Artharvaṇa spells, interpret dreams or omens, or practice astrology. My followers would not study ominous animal cries, work as a doctor, or treat an impacted fetus.

Not shaken by criticism, a mendicant would not pride themselves when praised. They’d reject greed and stinginess, anger, and slander.

They’d not stand for buying and selling; a mendicant would not speak ill at all. They wouldn’t linger in the village, nor cajole people from desire for profit.

A mendicant would be no boaster, nor would they speak suggestively. They wouldn’t train in impudence, nor speak argumentatively.

They wouldn’t be led into lying, nor be deliberately devious. And they’d never look down on another because of livelihood, wisdom, or precepts and vows.

Though provoked from hearing much talk from ascetics saying all different things, they wouldn’t react harshly, for the virtuous do not retaliate.

Having understood this teaching, inquiring, a mendicant would always train mindfully. Knowing extinguishment as peace, they’d not be negligent in Gotama’s bidding.

For he is the the vanquisher, the unvanquished, seer of the truth as witness, not by hearsay —that’s why, being diligent, they would always train respectfully in the Buddha’s teaching.”

Snp 4.15

Snp 4.15
Taking Up Arms
Attadaṇḍasutta

Peril stems from those who take up arms—just look at people in conflict! I shall extol how I came to be stirred with a sense of urgency.

I saw this population flounder, like a fish in a little puddle. Seeing them fight each other, fear came upon me.

The world around was hollow, all directions were in turmoil. Wanting a home for myself, I saw nowhere unsettled.

Yet even in their settlement they fight— seeing that, I grew uneasy. Then I saw a dart there, so hard to see, stuck in the heart.

When struck by that dart, you run around in all directions. But when that same dart has been plucked out, you neither run around nor sink down.

(On that topic, the trainings are recited.) Whatever attachments there are in the world, don't pursue them. Having pierced through sensual pleasures in every way, train yourself for quenching.

Be truthful, not rude, free of deceit, and rid of slander; without anger, a sage would cross over the evils of greed and avarice.

Prevail over sleepiness, sloth, and drowsiness, don't abide in negligence, A person intent on quenching would not stand for arrogance.

Don't be led into lying, or get caught up in fondness for form. Completely understand conceit, and desist from hasty conduct.

Don't relish the old, or welcome the new. Don't grieve for what is running out, or get attached to things that pull you in.

Greed, I say, is the great flood, and longing is the current—the basis, the compulsion, the swamp of sensuality so hard to get past.

The sage never strays from the truth; the brahman stands firm on the shore. Having given up everything, they are said to be at peace.

They have truly known, they're a knowledge master, understanding the teaching, they are independent. They rightly proceed in the world, not coveting anything here.

One who has crossed over sensuality here, the snare in the world so hard to get past, grieves not, nor hopes; they've cut the strings, they're no longer bound.

What came before, let wither away, and after, let there be nothing. If you don't grasp at the middle, you will live at peace.

One who has no sense of ownership in the whole realm of name and form, does not grieve for that which is not, they suffer no loss in the world.

If you don't think of anything as belonging to yourself or others, not finding anything to be 'mine', you won't grieve, thinking 'I don't have it'.

Not bitter, not fawning, unstirred, everywhere even; when asked about one who is unshakable, I declare that that is the benefit.

For the unstirred who understand, there's no performance of deeds. Desisting from instigation, they see sanctuary everywhere.

A sage doesn't speak of themselves as being among superiors, inferiors, or equals. Peaceful, rid of stinginess, they neither take nor reject.

Snp 4.16

Snp 4.16
With Sāriputta
Sāriputtasutta

“Never before have I seen,” said Venerable Sāriputta, “or heard from anyone about a teacher of such graceful speech, come from Tusita heaven to lead a community.

To all the world with its gods he appears as a Clear-eyed One who has dispelled all darkness, and alone attained to bliss.

On behalf of the many here still bound, I have come seeking with a question to that Buddha, unattached and impartial, free of deceit, come to lead a community.

Suppose a mendicant who loathes attachment frequents a lonely lodging—the root of a tree, a charnel ground, on mountains, or in caves.

In these many different lodgings, how many dangers are there at which a mendicant in their silent lodging ought not tremble?

On their journey to the untrodden place, how many adversities are there in the world that must they overcome in their remote lodging?

What ways of speech should they have? Of what kind is their alms resort? What precepts and vows should a resolute mendicant uphold?

Having undertaken what training, unified, alert, and mindful, would they purge their own stains, like a smith smelting silver?”

“If one who loathes attachment frequents a lonely lodging,” said the Buddha to Sāriputta, “in their search for awakening—as accords with the teaching—I shall tell you, as I understand it, what is comfortable for them.

A wise one, a mindful mendicant living on the periphery should not be afraid of five perils: flies, mosquitoes, snakes, human contact, or four-legged creatures.

Nor should they fear followers of other teachings, even having seen the many threats they pose. And then one seeking the good should overcome any other adversities.

Afflicted by illness and hunger, they should endure cold and excessive heat. Though afflicted by many such things, the homeless one should exert energy, firmly striving.

They must not steal or lie; and should touch creatures firm or frail with love. If they notice any clouding of the mind, they should dispel it as Māra’s ally.

They must not fall under the sway of anger or arrogance; having dug them out by the root, they would stand firm. Then, withstanding likes and dislikes, they would overcome.

Putting wisdom in the foremost place, rejoicing in goodness, they would put an end to those adversities. They'd vanquish discontent in their remote lodging. And they'd vanquish the four lamentations:

'What will I eat? Where will I eat? Oh, I slept badly! Where will I sleep?' The trainee, the homeless migrant, would dispel these lamentable thoughts.

Receiving food and clothes in due season, they would know moderation for the sake of contentment. Guarded in these things, walking restrained in the village, they wouldn't speak harshly even when provoked.

Eyes downcast, not footloose, devoted to absorption, they'd be very wakeful. Grounded in equanimity, serene, they should cut off worrisome habits of thought.

A mindful one should welcome repoach, breaking up hard-heartedness for their spiritual companions. They may utter skillful speech, but not for too long, and they shouldn't provoke people to blame.

And there are five more taints in the world, for the removal of which the mindful one should train, vanquishing desire for sights, sounds, flavors, smells, and touches.

Having removed desire for these things, a mindful mendicant, their heart well freed, rightly investigating the Dhamma in good time, at one, would banish the darkness."

Snp 5.1

Snp 5.1
Introductory Verses
Vatthugāthā

From the fair city of the Kosalans to the southern region came a brahmin expert in hymns, aspiring to nothingness.

He settled in a region under the shared dominion of Assaka and Muḷaka, where he lived on the bank of the Godhāvarī River, getting by on gleanings and fruit.

He was supported by a prosperous village nearby. With the revenue earned from there he performed a great sacrifice.

When he had completed the great sacrifice, he returned to his hermitage once more. Upon his return, another brahmin arrived.

Foot-sore and thirsty, with grotty teeth and dusty head, he approached the other and asked for five hundred coins.

When Bāvari saw him, he invited him to sit down, asked of his happiness and well-being, and said the following.

“Whatever I had available to give, I have already distributed. Believe me, brahmin, I don’t have five hundred coins.”

“If, good sir, you do not give me what I ask, then on the seventh day, let your head explode in seven!”

After performing a ritual, that charlatan uttered his dreadful curse. When he heard these words, Bāvari became distressed.

Not eating, he grew emaciated, stricken by the dart of sorrow. And in such a state of mind, he could not enjoy absorption.

Seeing him anxious and distraught, a goddess wishing to help, approached Bāvari and said the following.

“That charlatan understands nothing about the head, he only wants money. When it comes to heads or head-splitting, he has no knowledge at all.”

“Madam, surely you must know—please answer my question. Let me hear what you say about heads and head-splitting.”

“I too do not know that, I have no knowledge in that matter. When it comes to heads or head-splitting, it is the Victors who have vision.”

“Then, in all this vast territory, who exactly does know about heads and head-splitting? Please tell me, goddess.”

“From the city of Kapilavatthu the World Leader has gone forth. He is a scion of King Okkāka, a Sakyan, and a beacon.

For he, brahmin, is the Awakened One! He has gone beyond all things; he has attained to all knowledge and power; his eye sees clearly in all things, he has attained the end of all deeds; he is freed with the ending of attachments.

That Buddha, the Blessed One in the world, the Clear-eyed One, teaches Dhamma. Go to him and ask—he will answer you.”

When he heard the word “Buddha”, Bāvari was elated. His sorrow faded, and he was filled to brimming with joy.

Uplifted, elated, and inspired, Bāvari questioned that goddess: “But in what village or town, or in what land is the protector of the world, where we may go and pay respects to the Awakened One, best of men?”

“Near Sāvatthī, home of the Kosalans, is the Victor abounding in wisdom, vast in intelligence. That Sakyan is indefatigable, free of defilements, that chief of men understands head-splitting.

Therefore he addressed his pupils, brahmins who had mastered the hymns: “Come, students, I shall speak. Listen to what I say.

Today has arisen in the world one whose appearance in the world is hard to find again—he is renowned as the Awakened One. Quickly go to Sāvatthī and see the best of men.”

“Brahmin, how exactly are we to know the Buddha when we see him? We don’t know, please tell us, so we can recognize him.”

“The marks of a great man have been handed down in our hymns. Thirty-two have been described, complete and in order.

One upon whose body is found these marks of a great man has two possible destinies, there is no third.

If he stays at home, having conquered this land without rod or sword, he shall govern by principle.

But if he goes forth from the lay life to homelessness, he becomes an Awakened One, a perfected one, with veil drawn back, supreme.

Ask him about my birth, clan, and marks, my hymns and students; and further, about heads and head-splitting—but do so only in your mind!

If he is the Buddha of unobstructed vision, he will answer with his voice the questions in your mind.”

Sixteen brahmin pupils heard what Bāvari said: Ajita, Tissametteyya, Puṇṇaka and Mettagū,

Dhotaka and Upasīva, Nanda and then Hemaka, both Todeyya and Kappa, and Jatukaṇṇī the astute, Bhadrāvudha and Udaya, and the brahmin Posāla, Mogharājā the intelligent, and Piṅgiya the great seer.

Each of them had their own following, they were renowned the whole world over. Those wise ones, meditators who love absorption, were redolent with the potential of their past deeds.

Having bowed to Bāvari, and circled him to his right, they set out for the north, with their dreadlocks and hides.

First to Patiṭṭhāna of Muḷaka, then on to the citadel of Māhissatī; to Ujjenī and Gonaddhā, and Vedisa, and Vanasa.

Then to Kosambī and Sāketa, and the supreme city of Sāvatthī; on they went to Setavyā and Kapilavatthu, and the homestead at Kusinārā.

To Pāvā they went, and Bhoga City, and on to Vesālī and the Magadhan city. Finally they reached the Pāsāṇaka shrine, fair and delightful.

Like a thirsty person to cool water, like a merchant to great profit, like a heat-struck person to shade, they quickly climbed the mountain.

At that time the Buddha at the fore of the mendicant Saṅgha, was teaching the mendicants the Dhamma, like a lion roaring in the jungle.

Ajita saw the Buddha, like the sun shining with a hundred rays, like the moon on the fifteenth day when it has come into its fullness.

Then he saw his body, complete in all features. Thrilled, he stood to one side and asked this question in his mind.

“Speak about the brahmin’s birth; of his clan; and his own marks; what hymns is he proficient in; and how many he teaches.”

“His age is a hundred and twenty. By clan he is a Bāvari. There are three marks on his body. He is a master of the three Vedas, the teachings on the marks, the testaments, the vocabularies, and the rituals. He teaches recitation to five hundred, and has reached proficiency in his own teaching.”

“O supreme person, cutter of craving, please reveal in detail Bāvari’s marks—let us doubt no longer!”

“He can cover his face with his tongue; there is a tuft of hair between his eyebrows; his private parts are concealed in a foreskin: know them as this, young man.”

Hearing the answers without having heard any questions, all the people, inspired, with joined palms, wondered:

“Who is it that asked a question with their mind? Was it a god or Brahmā? Or Indra, Sujā’s husband? To whom does the Buddha reply?”

“Bāvari asks about heads and head-splitting. May the Buddha please answer, and so, O seer, dispel our doubt.”

“Know ignorance as the head, and knowledge as the head-splitter, when joined with faith, mindfulness, and immersion, and enthusiasm and energy.”

At that, the brahmin student, full of inspiration, arranged his antelope-skin cloak over one shoulder, and fell with his head to the Buddha’s feet.

“Good sir, the brahmin Bāvari together with his pupils, elated and happy, bows to your feet, O Clear-eyed One!”

“May the brahmin Bāvari be happy, together with his pupils. And may you, too, be happy! May you live long, young man.

To Bāvari and you all I grant the opportunity to clear up all doubt. Please ask whatever you want.”

Granted the opportunity by the Buddha, they sat down with joined palms. Ajita asked the Realized One the first question right there.

The introductory verses are finished.

Snp 5.2

Snp 5.2
The Questions of Ajita
Ajitamāṇavapucchā

“By what is the world shrouded?” said Venerable Ajita. “Why does it not shine? Tell me, what is its tar pit? What is its greatest fear?”

“The world is shrouded in ignorance.” replied the Buddha. “Avarice and negligence make it not shine. Prayer is its tar pit. Suffering is its greatest fear.”

“The streams flow everywhere,” said Venerable Ajita. “What is there to block them? And tell me the restraint of streams—by what are they locked out?”

“The streams in the world,” replied the Buddha, “are blocked by mindfulness. I tell you the restraint of streams—they are locked out by wisdom.”

“That wisdom and mindfulness,” said Venerable Ajita, “and that which is name and form, good sir; when questioned, please tell me of this: where does this all cease?”

“This question which you have asked, I shall answer you, Ajita. Where name and form cease with nothing left over—with the cessation of consciousness, that’s where they cease.”

“There are those who have appraised the teaching, and many kinds of trainees here. Tell me about their behavior, good sir, when asked, for you are alert.”

“Not greedy for sensual pleasures, their mind would be unclouded. Skilled in all things, a mendicant would wander mindful.”

Snp 5.3

Snp 5.3
The Questions of Tissametteyya
Tissametteyyamāṇavapucchā

“Who here in the world is content?” said Venerable Tissametteyya. “Who has no disturbances? What thoughtful one, having known both ends, is not stuck in the middle? Who do they say is a great man? Who here has escaped the seamstress?”

“Leading the spiritual life among sensual pleasures,” replied the Buddha, “rid of craving, ever mindful; a mendicant who, after appraisal, is quenched: that’s who has no disturbances.

That thoughtful one, having known both ends, is not stuck in the middle. He is a great man, I declare, he has escaped the seamstress here.”

Snp 5.4

Snp 5.4
The Questions of Puṇṇaka
Puṇṇakamāṇavapucchā

“To the imperturbable, the seer of the root,” said Venerable Puṇṇaka, “I have come seeking with a question. On what grounds have seers and men, aristocrats and brahmins here in the world performed so many different sacrifices to the gods? I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this.”

“Whatever seers and men,” replied the Buddha, “aristocrats and brahmins here in the world have performed so many different sacrifices to the gods: all performed sacrifices bound to old age, hoping for some state of existence.”

“As to those seers and men,” said Venerable Puṇṇaka, “and aristocrats and brahmins here in the world who have performed so many different sacrifices to the gods: being diligent in the methods of sacrifice, have they crossed over rebirth and old age, good sir? I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this.”

“Hoping, invoking, praying, and worshiping,” replied the Buddha, “they pray for pleasure derived from profit. Devoted to sacrifice, besotted by rebirth, they’ve not crossed over rebirth and old age, I declare.”

“If those devoted to sacrifice,” said Venerable Puṇṇaka, “have not, by sacrificing, crossed over rebirth and old age, then who exactly in the world of gods and humans has crossed over rebirth and old age, good sir? I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this.”

“Having appraised the world high and low,” replied the Buddha, “there is nothing in the world that disturbs them. Peaceful, unclouded, untroubled, with no need for hope—they’ve crossed over rebirth and old age, I declare.”

Snp 5.5

Snp 5.5
The Questions of Mettagū
Mettagūmāṇavapucchā

“I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this,” said Venerable Mettagū, “for I think you are a knowledge master, evolved. Where do all these sufferings come from, in all their countless forms in the world?”

“You have rightly asked me of the origin of suffering,” replied the Buddha, “I shall tell you as I understand it. Attachment is the source of suffering in all its countless forms in the world.

When an ignorant person builds up attachments, that idiot returns to suffering again and again. So let one who understands not build up attachments, contemplating the origin of suffering and rebirth.”

“Whatever I asked you have explained to me. I ask you once more, please tell me this: How do the wise cross the flood of rebirth, old age, sorrow, and lamenting? Please, sage, answer me clearly, for truly you understand this matter.”

“I shall extol a teaching to you,” replied the Buddha, “that is apparent in the present, not relying on tradition. Having understood it, one who lives mindfully may cross over clinging in the world.”

“And I rejoice, great seer, in that supreme teaching, having understood which, one who lives mindfully may cross over clinging in the world.”

“Once you’ve expelled relishing and dogmatism,” replied the Buddha, “regarding everything you are aware of—above, below, all round, between— having uprooted consciousness, don’t continue in existence.

A mendicant who wanders meditating like this, diligent and mindful, calling nothing their own, would, being wise, give up the suffering of rebirth, old age, sorrow and lamenting right here.”

“I rejoice in the words of the great seer! You have expounded non-attachment well, Gotama. Clearly the Buddha has given up suffering, for truly you understand this matter.

Surely those you’d regularly instruct would also give up suffering. Therefore, having met, I bow to you, O spiritual giant; hopefully the Buddha may regularly instruct me.”

“Any brahmin recognized as a knowledge master, who has nothing, unattached to sensual life, clearly has crossed this flood, crossed to the far shore, kind, wishless.

And a wise person here, a knowledge master, having untied the bond to life after life, free of craving, untroubled, with no need for hope, has crossed over rebirth and old age, I declare."

Snp 5.6

Snp 5.6
The Questions of Dhotaka
Dhotakamāṇavapucchā

“I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this,” said Venerable Dhotaka, “I long for your voice, great seer. After hearing your message, I shall train myself for quenching.”

“Well then, be keen, alert,” replied the Buddha, “and mindful right here. After hearing this message, go on and train yourself for quenching.”

“I see in the world of gods and humans a brahmin travelling with nothing. Therefore I bow to you, All-seer: release me, Sakyan, from my doubts.”

“I am not able to release anyone in the world who has doubts, Dhotaka. But when you understand the best of teachings, you shall cross this flood.”

“Teach me, brahmin, out of compassion, the principle of seclusion so that I may understand. I wish to practice right here, peaceful, independent, as unimpeded as space.”

“I shall extol that peace for you,” replied the Buddha, “that is apparent in the present, not relying on tradition. Having understood it, one who lives mindfully may cross over clinging in the world.”

“And I rejoice, great seer, in that supreme peace, having understood which, one who lives mindfully may cross over clinging in the world.”

“Once you have understood that everything,” replied the Buddha, “you are aware of in the world—above, below, all round, between—is a snare, don’t crave for life after life.”

Snp 5.7

Snp 5.7
The Questions of Upasīva
Upasīvamāṇavapucchā

“Alone and independent, O Sakyan,” said Venerable Upasīva, “I am not able to cross the great flood. Tell me a support, All-seer, depending on which I may cross this flood.”

“Mindfully contemplating nothingness,” replied the Buddha, depending on the perception ‘there is nothing’, cross the flood. Giving up sensual pleasures, refraining from chatter, watch day and night for the ending of craving.”

“One who is free of all sensual desires,” said Venerable Upasīva, “depending on nothingness, all else left behind, intent on the ultimate liberation of perception: might they remain there without travelling on?”

“One free of all sensual desires,” replied the Buddha, “depending on nothingness, all else left behind, intent on the ultimate liberation of perception: they might remain there without travelling on.”

“If they were to remain there without travelling on, even for myriad years, All-seer, and, being freed, were to grow cool right there, would the consciousness of such a one pass away?”

“As a flame tossed by a gust of wind,” replied the Buddha, “comes to an end and cannot be reckoned; so too, a sage freed from the set of mental phenomena comes to an end and cannot be reckoned.”

“One who has come to an end—do they not exist? Or are they free from disease for eternity? Please, sage, answer me clearly, for truly you understand this matter.”

“One who has come to an end cannot be defined,” replied the Buddha. “They have nothing by which others might describe them. When all things have been eradicated, eradicated, too, are all ways of speech.”

Snp 5.8

Snp 5.8
The Questions of Nanda
Nandamāṇavapucchā

“People say there are sages in the world,” said Venerable Nanda, “but how is this the case? Is someone called a sage because of their knowledge, or because of their way of life?”

“Experts do not speak of a sage in terms of view, learning, or knowledge. Those who are sages live far from the crowd, I say, untroubled, with no need for hope.”

“As to those ascetics and brahmins,” said Venerable Nanda, “who speak of purity in terms of what is seen or heard, or in terms of precepts and vows, or in terms of countless different things. Living self-controlled in that matter, have they crossed over rebirth and old age, good sir? I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this.”

“As to those ascetics and brahmins,” replied the Buddha, “who speak of purity in terms of what is seen or heard, or in terms of precepts and vows, or in terms of countless different things. Even though they live self-controlled in that matter, they’ve not crossed over rebirth and old age, I declare.”

“As to those ascetics and brahmins,” said Venerable Nanda, “who speak of purity in terms of what is seen or heard, or in terms of precepts and vows, or in terms of countless different things. You say they have not crossed the flood, sage. Then who exactly in the world of gods and humans has crossed over rebirth and old age, good sir? I ask you, Blessed One; please tell me this.”

“I don’t say that all ascetics and brahmins,” replied the Buddha, “are shrouded by rebirth and old age. There are those here who have given up all that is seen, heard, and thought, and precepts and vows, who have given up all the countless different things. Fully understanding craving, free of defilements, those people, I say, have crossed the flood.”

“I rejoice in the words of the great seer! You have expounded non-attachment well, Gotama. There are those here who have given up all that is seen, heard, and thought, and precepts and vows, who have given up all the countless different things. Fully understanding craving, free of defilements, those people, I agree, have crossed the flood.”

Snp 5.9

Snp 5.9
The Questions of Hemaka
Hemakamāṇavapucchā

“Those who have previously answered me,” said Venerable Hemaka, “before I encountered Gotama’s teaching, said ‘thus it was’ or ‘so it shall be’. All that was just the testament of hearsay; all that just fostered speculation: I found no delight in that.

But you, sage, explain to me the teaching that destroys craving. Having understood it, one who lives mindfully may cross over clinging in the world.”

“The removal of desire and lust, Hemaka, for what is seen, heard, thought, or cognized here; for anything liked or disliked, is extinguishment, the imperishable state.

Those who have fully understood this, mindful, are extinguished in this very life. Always at peace, they’ve crossed over clinging to the world.”

Snp 5.10

Snp 5.10
The Questions of Todeyya
Todeyyamāṇavapucchā

“In whom sensual pleasures do not dwell,” said Venerable Todeyya, “and for whom there is no craving, and who has crossed over doubts—of what kind is their liberation?”

“In whom sensual pleasures do not dwell,” replied the Buddha, “and for whom there is no craving, and who has crossed over doubts—their liberation is none other than this.”

“Are they free of hope, or are they still in need of hope? Do they possess wisdom, or are they still forming wisdom? O Sakyan, elucidate the sage to me, so that I may understand, All-seer.”

“They are free of hope, they are not in need of hope. They possess wisdom, they are not still forming wisdom. That, Todeyya, is how to understand a sage, one who has nothing, unattached to sensual life.”

Snp 5.11

Snp 5.11
The Questions of Kappa
Kappamāṇavapucchā

“For those overwhelmed by old age and death,” said Venerable Kappa, “stuck mid-stream as the terrifying flood arises, tell me an island, good sir. Explain to me an island so that this may not occur again.”

“For those overwhelmed by old age and death,” replied the Buddha, “stuck mid-stream as the terrifying flood arises, I shall tell you an island, Kappa.

Having nothing, taking nothing: this is the isle of no return. I call it extinguishment, the ending of old age and death.

Those who have fully understood this, mindful, are extinguished in this very life. They don’t fall under Māra’s sway, nor are they his lackeys.”

Snp 5.12

Snp 5.12
The Questions of Jatukaṇṇī
Jatukaṇṇimāṇavapucchā

“Hearing of the hero with no desire for sensual pleasures,” said Venerable Jatukaṇṇī, “who has passed over the flood, I’ve come with a question for that desireless one. Tell me the state of peace, O natural visionary. Tell me this, Blessed One, as it really is.

For, having mastered sensual desires, the Blessed One proceeds, as the blazing sun shines on the earth. May you of vast wisdom explain the teaching to me of little wisdom so that I may understand the giving up of rebirth and old age here.”

“With sensual desire dispelled,” replied the Buddha, “seeing renunciation as sanctuary, don’t be taking up or putting down anything at all.

What came before, let wither away, and after, let there be nothing. If you don’t grasp at the middle, you will live at peace.

One rid of greed, brahmin, for the whole realm of name and form, has no defilements by which they might fall under the sway of Death.”

Snp 5.13

Snp 5.13
The Questions of Bhadrāvudha
Bhadrāvudhamāṇavapucchā

“I beseech you, the shelter-leaver, the craving-cutter, the imperturbable,” said Venerable Bhadrāvudha, “the delight-leaver, the flood-crosser, the freed, the formulation-leaver, the intelligent. Different people have gathered from across the nations wishing to hear your word, O hero. After hearing the spiritual giant they will depart from here. Please, sage, answer them clearly, for truly you understand this matter.”

“Dispel all craving for attachments,” replied the Buddha, “above, below, all round, between. For whatever a person grasps in the world, Māra pursues them right there.

So let a mindful mendicant who understands not grasp anything in all the world, observing that, in clinging to attachments, these people cling to the domain of death.”

Snp 5.14

Snp 5.14
The Questions of Udaya
Udayamāṇavapucchā

“To the meditator, rid of hopes,” said Venerable Udaya, “who has completed the task, is free of defilements, and has gone beyond all things, I have come seeking with a question. Tell me the liberation by enlightenment, the smashing of ignorance.”

“The giving up of both” replied the Buddha, “sensual desires and displeasures; the dispelling of dullness, and the prevention of remorse.

Pure equanimity and mindfulness, with investigation of principles running out in front—this, I declare, is liberation by enlightenment, the smashing of ignorance.”

“What fetters the world? How does it travel about? With the giving up of what is extinguishment spoken of?”

“Delight fetters the world. It travels about by means of thought. With the giving up of craving extinguishment is spoken of.”

“For one living mindfully, how does consciousness cease? We’ve come to ask the Buddha; let us hear what you say.”

“Not taking pleasure in feeling internally and externally—for one living mindfully, that’s how consciousness ceases.”

Snp 5.15

Snp 5.15
The Question of Posāla
Posālamāṇavapucchā

“To the one who reveals the past,” said Venerable Posāla, “who is imperturbable, with doubts cut off, and who has gone beyond all things, I have come seeking with a question.

Consider one who perceives the disappearance of form, who has entirely given up the body, and who sees nothing at all internally and externally. I ask the Sakyan about knowledge for them; how should one like that be guided?”

“The Realized One directly knows,” said the Buddha, “all the planes of consciousness. And he knows this one who remains, committed to that as their final goal.

Understanding that desire for rebirth in the dimension of nothingness is a fetter, and directly knowing what this really means, one then sees that matter clearly. That is their knowledge of truth, the brahmin who has lived the life.”

Snp 5.16

Snp 5.16
The Questions of Mogharājā
Mogharājamāṇavapucchā

“Twice I have asked the Sakyan,” said Venerable Mogharājā, “but you haven’t answered me, O Clear-eyed One. I have heard that the divine seer answers when questioned a third time.

Regarding this world, the other world, and the realm of Brahmā with its gods, I’m not familiar with the view of the renowned Gotama.

So I have come seeking with a question for the one of excellent vision. How to look upon the world so the King of Death won’t see you?”

“Look upon the world as empty, Mogharājā, ever mindful. Having uprooted the view of self, you may thus cross over death. That’s how to look upon the world so the King of Death won’t see you.”

Snp 5.17

Snp 5.17
The Questions of Piṅgiya
Piṅgiyamāṇavapucchā

“I am old, feeble, and pallid,” said Venerable Piṅgiya, “my eyes unclear, my hearing faint —don’t let me perish while still confused. Explain the teaching so that I may understand the giving up of rebirth and old age here.”

“Seeing them harmed on account of forms,” replied the Buddha, “on account of forms those negligent folk are afflicted—therefore, Piṅgiya, being diligent, give up form so as not to be reborn.”

“The four quarters, the intermediate directions, below, and above: in these ten directions there’s nothing at all in the world that you’ve not seen, heard, thought, or cognized. Explain the teaching so that I may understand the giving up of rebirth and old age here.”

“Observing people sunk in craving,” replied the Buddha, “tormented, mired in old age; therefore, Piṅgiya, being diligent, give up craving so as not to be reborn.”

Snp 5.18

Snp 5.18
Homage to the Way to the Far Shore
Pārāyanatthutigāthā

This was said by the Buddha while staying in the land of the Magadhans at the Pāsāṇake shrine. When requested by the sixteen brahmin devotees, he answered their questions one by one. If you understand the meaning and the teaching of each of these questions, and practice accordingly, you may go right to the far shore of old age and death. These teachings are said to lead to the far shore, which is why the name of this exposition of the teaching is “The Way to the Far Shore”.

Ajita, Tissametteyya, Puṇṇaka and Mettagū, Dhotaka and Upasiva, Nanda and then Hemaka, both Todeyya and Kappa, and Jatukaṇṇī the astute, Bhadrāvudha and Udaya, and the brahmin Posāla, Mogharājā the intelligent, and Piṅgiya the great seer:

they approached the Buddha, the seer of consummate conduct. Asking their subtle questions, they came to the most excellent Buddha.

The Buddha answered their questions in accordance with truth. The sage satisfied the brahmins with his answers to their questions.

Those who were satisfied by the Clear-eyed One, the Buddha, kinsman of the Sun, led the spiritual life in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom.

If you practice in accordance with each of these questions as taught by the Buddha, you’ll go from the near shore to the far.

Developing the supreme path, you’ll go from the near shore to the far. This path is for going to the far shore; that’s why it’s called “The Way to the Far Shore”.

Snp 5.19

Snp 5.19
Preserving the Way to the Far Shore
Pārāyanānugītigāthā

“I shall keep reciting the Way to the Far Shore,” said Venerable Piṅgiya, “which was taught as it was seen by the immaculate one of vast intelligence. He is desireless, unentangled, a spiritual giant: why would he speak falsely?

Come, let me extol in sweet words of praise the one who’s given up stains and delusions, conceit and contempt.

The Buddha, all-seer, dispeler of darkness, has gone to world’s end, beyond all rebirths; he is free of defilements, and has given up all pain, the rightly-named one, brahmin, is revered by me.

Like a bird that flees a little copse, to roost in a forest abounding in fruit, I’ve left the near-sighted behind, like a swan come to a great river.

Those who explained to me previously, before I encountered Gotama’s teaching, said ‘thus it was’ or ‘so it shall be’. All that was just the testament of hearsay; all that just fostered speculation.

Alone, the dispeler of darkness is splendid, a beacon: Gotama, vast in wisdom, Gotama, vast in intelligence.

He is the one who taught me Dhamma, apparent in the present life, immediately effective, the untroubled, the end of craving, to which there is no compare.”

“Why would you dwell apart from him even for an hour, Piṅgiya? From Gotama, vast in wisdom, from Gotama, vast in intelligence?

He is the one who taught you Dhamma, apparent in the present life, immediately effective, the untroubled, the end of craving, to which there is no compare.”

“I never dwell apart from him, not even for an hour, brahmin. From Gotama, vast in wisdom, from Gotama, vast in intelligence.

He is the one who taught me Dhamma, apparent in the present life, immediately effective, the untroubled, the end of craving, to which there is no compare.

Being diligent, I see him in my mind’s eye day and night. I spend the night in homage to him, hence I think I dwell with him.

My faith and joy and intent and mindfulness never stray from Gotama's teaching. I bow to whatever direction the one of vast wisdom heads.

I'm old and feeble, so my body cannot go there, but I always travel in my thoughts, for my mind, brahmin, is bound to him.

Lying floundering in the mud, I drifted from island to island. Then I saw the Buddha, the undefiled one who has crossed the flood."

"Just as Vakkali was committed to faith— Bhadrāvudha and Gotama of Āḷavī too—so too you should commit to faith. You will go, Piṅgiya, beyond the domain of death."

"My confidence grows as I hear the word of the sage, the Buddha with veil drawn back, so kind and eloquent.

Having directly known all about the gods, he understands all top to bottom, the teacher who settles all questions for those who admit their doubts.

Unfaltering, unshakable; that to which there is no compare. For sure I will go there, I have no doubt of that. Remember me as one whose mind is made up."

The Anthology of Discourses is completed.

Thag - Theragāthā: Verses of the Senior Monks

Thag 1.1

Thag 1.1
Subhūti
Subhūtittheragāthā

Background

Homage to that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!

Like the lions of mighty fang who roar in mountain caves—hear now from those who've practiced well their own verses about themselves.

What their name, and what their clan, and how they lived by the teaching; how dedicated were those wise ones, as they meditated tirelessly.

Clearly seeing in every case, they reached the imperishable state. Reviewing their completed task, they spoke about it in these words.

Subhūti

My little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind: so rain, sky-god, as you please! My mind is serene and freed, I practice wholeheartedly: so rain, sky-god!

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Subhūti.

Thag 1.2

Thag 1.2
Mahākoṭṭhita
Mahākoṭṭhikattheragāthā

Calm and still, thoughtful in counsel, not restless—he shakes off bad qualities as the wind shakes leaves off a tree.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Mahākoṭṭhita.

Thag 1.3

Thag 1.3
Revata the Doubter
Kaṅkhārevatattheragāthā

See this wisdom of the Realized Ones! Like a fire blazing in the night, giving light, giving vision, they dispel the doubt of those who’ve come.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Revata the Doubter.

Thag 1.4

Thag 1.4
Puṇṇa (1st)
Puṇṇattheragāthā

Associate only with the virtuous, the astute ones who see the goal. The wise ones, diligent and clear-seeing, realize the goal so great and profound, hard to see, subtle, and fine.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Puṇṇa son of Mantāṇī.

Thag 1.5

Thag 1.5
Dabba
Dabbattheragāthā

Once hard to tame, now tamed himself; clever, content, with doubt overcome; victorious since his fears have vanished: Dabba is steadfast, and has become extinguished.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Dabba.

Thag 1.6

Thag 1.6
Sītavaniya
Sītavaniyattheragāthā

The monk who went to Sītavana is solitary, content and serene, victorious, with goosebumps vanished, guarding mindfulness of the body, steadfast.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Sītavaniya.

Thag 1.7

Thag 1.7
Bhalliya
Bhalliyattheragāthā

He has swept away the army of the King of Death, as a fragile bridge of reeds by a great flood. Victorious since his fears have vanished: tame and steadfast, he has become extinguished.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Bhalliya.

Thag 1.8

Thag 1.8
Vīra
Vīrattheragāthā

Once hard to tame, now tamed himself; a hero, content, with doubt overcome; victorious, with goosebumps vanished, Vīra is steadfast, and has become extinguished.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Vīra.

Thag 1.9

Thag 1.9
Pilindavaccha
Pilindavacchattheragāthā

It was welcome, not unwelcome, the advice I got was good. Of the well-explained teachings, I arrived at the best.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Pilindavaccha.

Thag 1.10

Thag 1.10
Puṇṇamāsa (1st)
Puṇṇamāsattheragāthā

A knowledge master, peaceful and self-controlled, is rid of concern for this world and the world beyond. Unsullied in the midst of all things, they'd know the arising and passing of the world.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior venerable Puṇṇamāsa.

Thag 1.11

Thag 1.11
Cūḷavaccha
Cūḷavacchattheragāthā

A monk full of joy in the teaching proclaimed by the Buddha would realize the peaceful state, the blissful stilling of conditions.

Thag 1.12

Thag 1.12
Mahāvaccha
Mahāvacchattheragāthā

Empowered by wisdom, with precepts and observances intact, serene, loving absorption, mindful, eating just the needed food, one should bide one’s time here, free of desire.

Thag 1.13

Thag 1.13
Vanavaccha (1st)
Vanavacchattheragāthā

Glistening, they look like blue storm clouds, with waters cool and streams so clear, and covered all in ladybugs: these rocky crags delight me!

Thag 1.14

Thag 1.14
The Novice Sivaka
Sivakasāmaṇeragāthā

My mentor said to me: “Let’s leave here, Sīvaka.” My body lives in the village, but my mind has gone to the wilderness. I go there even when lying down—you can't snare those who know.

Thag 1.15

Thag 1.15
Kuṇḍadhāna
Kuṇḍadhānattheragāthā

Five to cut, five to drop, and five more to develop. When a mendicant slips five chains they’re said to have crossed the flood.

Thag 1.16

Thag 1.16
Belaṭṭhasīsa
Belaṭṭhasīsattheragāthā

Just as a fine thoroughbred proceeds with ease, tail and mane flying in the wind; so my days and nights proceed with ease, full of joy not of the flesh.

Thag 1.17

Thag 1.17
Dāsaka
Dāsakattheragāthā

One who gets drowsy from overeating, fond of sleep, rolling round the bed like a great hog stuffed with grain: that idiot is reborn again and again.

Thag 1.18

Thag 1.18
Siṅgāla's Father
Siṅgālapituttheragāthā

There was an heir of the Buddha, a monk in Bhesakaḷā forest, who suffused the entire earth with the perception of bones. I think he will quickly get rid of sensual desire.

Thag 1.19

Thag 1.19
Kula
Kulattheragāthā

Irrigators guide water, fletchers shape arrows, carpenters carve timber; those true to their vows tame themselves.

Thag 1.20

Thag 1.20
Ajita
Ajitattheragāthā

I do not fear death; nor do I long for life. I’ll lay down this body, aware and mindful.

Thag 1.21

Thag 1.21
Nigrodha
Nigrodhattheragāthā

I’m not afraid of fear, for our teacher is expert in freedom from death. Mendicants advance by the path where no fear remains.

Thag 1.22

Thag 1.22
Cittaka
Cittakattheragāthā

Crested peacocks with beautiful blue necks cry out in Karaṁvī. Stirred by a cool breeze, they wake the sleeper to practice absorption.

Thag 1.23

Thag 1.23
Gosāla
Gosālattheragāthā

I’ll eat honey and milk-rice in Veḷugumba. And then, skillfully scrutinizing the rise and fall of the aggregates, I’ll return to my forest hill and foster seclusion.

Thag 1.24

Thag 1.24
Sugandha
Sugandhattheragāthā

See the excellence of the teaching! Just one rainy season after I went forth, I attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 1.25

Thag 1.25
Nandiya
Nandiyattheragāthā

Dark One, after attacking such a monk—one who has arrived at the fruit, and whose mind is always full of light—you'll fall into suffering.

Thag 1.26

Thag 1.26
Abhaya
Abhayattheragāthā

Having heard the fine words of the Buddha, the kinsman of the Sun, I penetrated the subtle truth, like a hair-tip with an arrow.

Thag 1.27

Thag 1.27
Lomasakaṅgiya
Lomasakaṅgiyattheragāthā

With my chest I’ll thrust aside the grasses, vines, and creepers, and foster seclusion.

Thag 1.28

Thag 1.28
Jambugāmikaputta
Jambugāmikaputtattheragāthā

Aren’t you obsessed with clothes? Don’t you just love jewelry? Is it not you—and no-one else—who spreads the scent of virtue?

Thag 1.29

Thag 1.29
Hārita (1st)
Hāritattheragāthā

Straighten yourself, like a fletcher straightens an arrow. When your mind is upright, Hārita, break ignorance to bits!

Thag 1.30

Thag 1.30
Uttiya (1st)
Uttiyattheragāthā

When I was ill in the past, mindfulness arose in me. Now I am ill once more—it’s time for me to be heedful.

Thag 1.31

Thag 1.31
Gahvaratīriya
Gahvaratīriyattheragāthā

Pestered by flies and mosquitoes in the wilds, the formidable forest, one should mindfully endure, like an elephant at the head of the battle.

Thag 1.32

Thag 1.32
Suppiya
Suppiyattheragāthā

I’ll swap old age for the unaging, burning for extinguishment—the ultimate peace, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Thag 1.33

Thag 1.33
Sopāka (1st)
Sopākattheragāthā

Just as a mother would be good to her beloved only child; so, to creatures all and everywhere, let one be good.

Thag 1.34

Thag 1.34
Posiya
Posiyattheragāthā

It's always better for a smart person to avoid sharing a seat with such women. I went from the village to the wilderness; from there I entered a house. Though I was there to be fed, I got up and left without taking leave.

Thag 1.35

Thag 1.35
Sāmaññakāni
Sāmaññakānittheragāthā

Seeking happiness, they find it through this practice. They get a good reputation and grow in fame, those who develop the direct route: the noble eightfold path to realize freedom from death.

Thag 1.36

Thag 1.36
Kumāputta
Kumāputtattheragāthā

Learning is good, living well is good, the homeless life is always good. Questions on the meaning, actions that are skillful: this is the ascetic life for one who has nothing.

Thag 1.37

Thag 1.37
Kumāputtasahāyaka
Kumāputtasahāyakattheragāthā

Some travel to different countries, wandering undisciplined. If they lose their meditation, what will such rotten conduct achieve? So you should dispel pride, practicing absorption undistracted.

Thag 1.38

Thag 1.38
Gavampati
Gavampatittheragāthā

His psychic power made the river Sarabhu stand still; Gavampati is unbound and unperturbed. The gods bow to that great sage, who has slipped all chains, and gone beyond rebirth.

Thag 1.39

Thag 1.39
Tissa (1st)
Tissattheragāthā

Like they’re struck by a sword, like their head was on fire, a mendicant should wander mindful to give up sensual desire.

Thag 1.40

Thag 1.40
Vaḍḍhamāna
Vaḍḍhamānattheragāthā

Like they’re struck by a sword, like their head was on fire, a mendicant should wander mindful, to give up desire for rebirth.

Thag 1.41

Thag 1.41
Sirivaḍḍha
Sirivaḍḍhattheragāthā

Lightning flashes down on the cleft of Vebhāra and Paṇḍava. But in the mountain cleft he is absorbed in jhāna—the son of the Buddha, inimitable and poised.

Thag 1.42

Thag 1.42
Revata of the Acacia Wood
Khadiravaniyattheragāthā

Cāla, Upacāla, and Sīsupacāla meditate mindfully! I’ve come to you like a hair-splitter.

Thag 1.43

Thag 1.43
Sumaṅgala
Sumaṅgalattheragāthā

Well freed! Well freed! I’m very well freed from three crooked things: my sickles, my ploughs, and my little hoes. Even if they were here, right here—I’d be done with them, done! Practice absorption Sumaṅgala! Practice absorption Sumaṅgala! Stay heedful, Sumaṅgala!

Thag 1.44

Thag 1.44
Sānu
Sānuttheragāthā

Mum, they weep for the dead, or for one who’s alive but has disappeared. I’m alive and you can see me, so mum, why do you weep for me?

Thag 1.45

Thag 1.45
Ramaṇīyavihārin
Ramaṇīyavihārittheragāthā

Though a fine thoroughbred may stumble, it soon stands firm again. Even so is one accomplished in vision, a disciple of the Buddha.

Thag 1.46

Thag 1.46
Samiddhi
Samiddhittheragāthā

I went forth out of faith from the lay life to homelessness. My mindfulness and wisdom have grown, my mind is serene. Make whatever illusions you want, it doesn’t bother me.

Thag 1.47

Thag 1.47
Ujjaya
Ujjayattheragāthā

Homage to you, O Buddha, O hero, freed in every way! Meditating in the fruits of your practice, I live without defilements.

Thag 1.48

Thag 1.48
Sañjaya
Sañjayattheragāthā

Since I went forth from the lay life to homelessness, I’ve not been aware of any thought that is ignoble and hateful.

Thag 1.49

Thag 1.49
Rāmaṇeyyaka
Rāmaṇeyyakattheragāthā

Even with all the sounds, the chirping and cheeping of the birds, my mind doesn’t waver, for I’m devoted to oneness.

Thag 1.50

Thag 1.50
Vimala (1st)
Vimalattheragāthā

The rain falls and the wind blows on mother earth, while lightning flashes across the sky!
But my thoughts are stilled, my mind is serene.

Thag 1.51

Thag 1.51
Godhika
Godhikattheragāthā

The sky-god rains like a sweet song. My little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind. My mind is serene: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

Thag 1.52

Thag 1.52
Subāhu
Subāhuttheragāthā

The sky-god rains like a sweet song. My little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind. My mind is immersed in my body: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

Thag 1.53

Thag 1.53
Valliya (1st)
Valliyattheragāthā

The sky-god rains like a sweet song. My little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind. I meditate there, diligent: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

Thag 1.54

Thag 1.54
Uttiya (2nd)
Uttiyattheragāthā

The sky-god rains like a sweet song. My little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind. I dwell there without a partner: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

Thag 1.55

Thag 1.55
Añjanavaniya
Añjanavaniyattheragāthā

I plunged into the Añjana forest and made a little hut to live in. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 1.56

Thag 1.56
Kuṭivihārin (1st)
Kuṭivihārittheragāthā

“Who is in this little hut?” “A monk is in this little hut, free of lust, his mind serene. My friend, you should know this: your little hut wasn’t built in vain.”

Thag 1.57

Thag 1.57
Kuṭivihārin (2nd)
Dutiyakuṭivihārittheragāthā

This was your old hut, but you still want a new hut. Let go of hope for a hut, monk! A new hut will only bring more suffering.

Thag 1.58

Thag 1.58
Ramaṇīyakuṭika
Ramaṇīyakuṭikattheragāthā

My little hut is pleasing, delightful, a gift given in faith. I’ve no need of girls: go, ladies, to those in need!

Thag 1.59

Thag 1.59
Kosalavihārin
Kosalavihārittheragāthā

I went forth out of faith and built a little hut in the wilderness. I’m heedful, ardent, aware, and mindful.

Thag 1.60

Thag 1.60
Sīvali
Sīvalittheragāthā

My wishes—the purpose I had for entering this hut—came true. Abandoning the tendency to conceit, I'll realize knowledge and liberation.

Thag 1.61

Thag 1.61
Vappa
Vappattheragāthā

One who sees sees those who see and those who don’t. One who doesn’t see sees neither.

Thag 1.62

Thag 1.62
Vajjiputta (1st)
Vajjiputtattheragāthā

We dwell alone in the wilderness, like a log rejected in a forest. Lots of people are jealous of me, as beings in hell are of one going to heaven.

Thag 1.63

Thag 1.63
Pakkha
Pakkhattheragāthā

They fall, collapsed and fallen; greedy, they return. The work is done, the joyful is enjoyed, happiness is found through happiness.

Thag 1.64

Thag 1.64
Vimalakoṇḍaññā
Vimalakoṇḍaññattheragāthā

I arose from the one named after a tree; I was born of the one whose banner shines. The banner killer has destroyed the great banner, by means of the banner itself.

Thag 1.65

Thag 1.65
Ukkhepakatavaccha
Ukkhepakatavacchattheragāthā

Vaccha has tossed away what he built over many years. Sitting comfortably, uplifted with joy, he teaches this to householders.

Thag 1.66

Thag 1.66
Meghiya
Meghiyattheragāthā

He counseled me, the great hero, the one who has gone beyond all things. When I heard his teaching I stayed close by him, mindful. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 1.67

Thag 1.67
Ekadhammasavanīya
Ekadhammasavanīyattheragāthā

My defilements have been burnt away by practicing absorption—rebirth into all states of existence is eradicated, transmigration through births is finished, now there'll be no more future lives.

Thag 1.68

Thag 1.68
Ekudāniya
Ekudāniyattheragāthā

A sage of higher consciousness, diligent, training in the ways of sagacity: there are no sorrows for such a one, calm and ever mindful.

Thag 1.69

Thag 1.69
Channa
Channattheragāthā

Hearing the sweet Dhamma taught by the master, all-knowing, of superb knowledge, I’ve entered the path to realize freedom from death—he is the expert on the road to sanctuary from the yoke.

Thag 1.70

Thag 1.70
Puṇṇa (2nd)
Puṇṇattheragāthā

Ethical conduct is best in this life, but one with wisdom is supreme. Someone with both virtue and wisdom is victorious among men and gods.

Thag 1.71

Thag 1.71
Vacchapāla
Vacchapālattheragāthā

For one who sees the meaning so very subtle and fine; who is skilled in thought and humble in manner; who has cultivated mature ethics, it’s not hard to gain extinguishment.

Thag 1.72

Thag 1.72
Ātuma
Ātumattheragāthā

A young bamboo is hard to extract when the point is grown and become all woody. That’s how I feel with the wife who was arranged for me. Give me permission—now I’ve gone forth.

Thag 1.73

Thag 1.73
Māṇava
Māṇavattheragāthā

Seeing an old person, and one suffering from disease, and a corpse come to the end of life,
I went forth, becoming a wanderer, and giving up the pleasures of the senses.

Thag 1.74

Thag 1.74
Suyāmana
Suyāmanattheragāthā

Sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness, and doubt are not found in a monk at all.

Thag 1.75

Thag 1.75
Susārada
Susāradattheragāthā

Good is the sight of those who’ve practiced well: doubt is cut off and intelligence grows—even a fool grows wise! That’s why it’s good to meet good people.

Thag 1.76

Thag 1.76
Piyañjaha
Piyañjahattheragāthā

Settle down when others spring up; spring up when others settle down. Remain when others have departed; don’t delight when others delight.

Thag 1.77

Thag 1.77
Hatthārohaputta
Hatthārohaputtattheragāthā

In the past my mind wandered how it wished, where it liked, as it pleased. Now I’ll carefully guide it, as a trainer with a hook guides a rutting elephant.

Thag 1.78

Thag 1.78
Meṇḍasira
Meṇḍasirattheragāthā

Transmigrating through countless rebirths, I’ve journeyed without reward. I’ve suffered, but now the mass of suffering has fallen away.

Thag 1.79

Thag 1.79
Rakkhita
Rakkhitattheragāthā

All my lust is given up, all my hate is eradicated, all my delusion is gone: I’m cooled, extinguished.

Thag 1.80

Thag 1.80
Ugga
Uggattheragāthā

Any deeds I have done, a little or a lot, are all completely exhausted: now there are no more future lives.

Thag 1.81

Thag 1.81
Samitigutta
Samitiguttattheragāthā

Any bad things I’ve done in previous lives, are to be experienced right here, not in any other place.

Thag 1.82

Thag 1.82
Kassapa
Kassapattheragāthā

Go, child, to any place where there’s plenty of food, where it’s safe and free of peril—may you not be overcome by sorrow!

Thag 1.83

Thag 1.83
Sīha
Sīhattheragāthā

Meditate diligently, Sīha, tireless all day and night. Develop skillful qualities, and quickly discard this bag of bones.

Thag 1.84

Thag 1.84
Nīta
Nītattheragāthā

Sleeping all night, happily socializing by day, when will the fool make an end of suffering?

Thag 1.85

Thag 1.85
Sunāga
Sunāgattheragāthā

Skilled in the patterns of the mind, understanding the nectar of seclusion, practicing absorption, alert, mindful: such a person would realize pleasure not of the flesh.

Thag 1.86

Thag 1.86
Nāgita
Nāgitattheragāthā

Elsewhere there are many other doctrines; those paths don’t lead to quenching like this one does. For the Buddha himself instructs the Saṅgha; the Teacher shows the palms of his hands.

Thag 1.87

Thag 1.87
Paviṭṭha
Paviṭṭhattheragāthā

The aggregates are seen as they truly are; all rebirths are shattered; transmigration through births is finished; now there are no more future lives.

Thag 1.88

Thag 1.88
Ajjuna
Ajjunattheragāthā

I was able to lift myself up from the water to the shore. While being swept away by the great flood, I penetrated the truths.

Thag 1.89

Thag 1.89
Devasabha (1st)
(Paṭhama) Devasabhattheragāthā

I’ve crossed the bogs, I’ve avoided the cliffs, I’m freed from floods and ties, and I've wiped out all conceit.

Thag 1.90

Thag 1.90
Sāmidatta
Sāmidattattheragāthā

The five aggregates are fully understood; they remain, but their root is cut. Transmigration through births is finished, now there’ll be no more future lives.

Thag 1.91

Thag 1.91
Paripuṇṇaka
Paripuṇṇakattheragāthā

What I consumed today is considered better than delicious grain of a hundred flavors—the Dhamma taught by the Buddha, Gotama of infinite vision.

Thag 1.92

Thag 1.92
Vijaya
Vijayattheragāthā

One whose defilements have ended; who’s not attached to food; whose resort is the liberation of the signless and the empty: their track is hard to trace, like birds in the sky.

Thag 1.93

Thag 1.93
Eraka
Erakattheragāthā

Sensual pleasures are suffering, Eraka! Sensual pleasures aren’t happiness, Eraka! One who enjoys sensual pleasures enjoys suffering, Eraka! One who doesn’t enjoy sensual pleasures doesn’t enjoy suffering, Eraka!

Thag 1.94

Thag 1.94
Mettaji
Mettajittheragāthā

Homage to that Blessed One, the glorious Sakyan! Having reached the best, he beautifully taught the best teaching.

Thag 1.95

Thag 1.95
Cakkhupāla
Cakkhupālattheragāthā

I’m blind, my eyes are ruined, I’m traveling a desolate road. Even if I have to crawl I’ll keep going—though not with wicked companions.

Thag 1.96

Thag 1.96
Khaṇḍasumana
Khaṇḍasumanattheragāthā

I offered a single flower and then amused myself in heavens for 800 million years; with what's left over I've become quenched.

Thag 1.97

Thag 1.97
Tissa (2nd)
Tissattheragāthā

Giving up a valuable bronze bowl, and a precious golden one, too, I took a bowl made of clay: this is my second initiation.

Thag 1.98

Thag 1.98
Abhaya
Abhayattheragāthā

When you see a sight, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it. Your defilements grow, leading to the root of rebirth.

Thag 1.99

Thag 1.99
Uttiya (3rd)
Uttiyattheragāthā

When you hear a sound, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it. Your defilements grow, leading to transmigration.

Thag 1.100

Thag 1.100
Devasabha (2nd)
(Dutiya) Devasabhattheragāthā

Accomplished in the four right efforts, mindfulness meditation is your territory; festooned with the flowers of liberation, undefiled, you'll be fully extinguished.

Thag 1.101

Thag 1.101
Belaṭṭhānika
Belaṭṭhānikattheragāthā

He’s given up the household life, but he has no purpose. Living for his belly, lazy, he uses his snout as a plow, like a great hog stuffed with grain. That idiot is reborn again and again.

Thag 1.102

Thag 1.102
Setuccha
Setucchattheragāthā

Deceived by conceit, defiled among conditions, oppressed by gain and loss, they don’t reach immersion.

Thag 1.103

Thag 1.103
Bandhura
Bandhurattheragāthā

I have no need of this—I’m happy and satisfied with the sweet teaching. I’ve drunk the best, the supreme nectar: I won’t go near poison.

Thag 1.104

Thag 1.104
Khitaka
Khitakattheragāthā

Hey! My body is light, full of so much rapture and happiness. My body feels like it’s floating, like cotton in the wind.

Thag 1.105

Thag 1.105
Malitavambha
Malitavambhattheragāthā

Dissatisfied, one should not stay; and even if happy, one should depart. One who sees clearly wouldn’t stay in a place that was not conducive to the goal.

Thag 1.106

Thag 1.106
Suhemanta
Suhemantattheragāthā

Though the meaning has a hundred facets, and bears a hundred characteristics, the fool sees only one factor, while the sage sees a hundred.

Thag 1.107

Thag 1.107
Dhammasava
Dhammasavattheragāthā

After investigating, I went forth from the lay life to homelessness. I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 1.108

Thag 1.108
Dhammasavapitu
Dhammasavapituttheragāthā

At 120 years old I went forth to homelessness. I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 1.109

Thag 1.109
Saṅgharakkhita
Saṁgharakkhitattheragāthā

Even on retreat he doesn’t heed the counsel of the one with supreme compassion for his welfare. He lives with unrestrained faculties, like a young deer in the woods.

Thag 1.110

Thag 1.110
Usabha (1st)
Usabhattheragāthā

The trees on the mountain-tops have grown tall, freshly sprinkled by towering clouds. For Usabha, who loves seclusion, and who thinks only of wilderness, goodness flourishes more and more.

Thag 1.111

Thag 1.111
Jenta
Jentattheragāthā

Going forth is hard; living at home is hard; Dhamma is profound; money is hard to come by. Getting by is difficult for we who accept whatever comes, so we should always think about impermanence.

Thag 1.112

Thag 1.112
Vacchagotta
Vacchagottattheragāthā

I am a master of the three knowledges, I’m a great meditator, an expert in serenity of heart.
I’ve realized my own true goal and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 1.113

Thag 1.113
Vanavaccha (2nd)
Vanavacchattheragāthā

The water’s clear and the rocks are broad, monkeys and deer are all around; festooned with dewy moss, these rocky crags delight me!

Thag 1.114

Thag 1.114
Adhimutta (1st)
Adhimuttattheragāthā

Your body is uncomfortably heavy, and life is running out; greedy for physical pleasure, how can you find happiness as an ascetic?

Thag 1.115

Thag 1.115
Mahānāma
Mahānāmattheragāthā

By Mount Nesādaka, with its famous covering of abundant shrubs and trees, you’re found deficient.

Thag 1.116

Thag 1.116
Pārāpariya (1st)
Pārāpariyattheragāthā

I’ve given up the six spheres of sense-contact, my sense doors are guarded and well restrained; I’ve ejected the root of misery and attained the ending of defilements.

Thag 1.117

Thag 1.117
Yasa
Yasattheragāthā

I’m well-anointed and well-dressed, adorned with all my jewellery. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 1.118

Thag 1.118
Kimbila (1st)
Kimilattheragāthā

Old age falls like a curse; it’s the same body, but it seems like someone else’s. I remember myself as if I were someone else, but I’m still the same, I haven’t been away.

Thag 1.119

Thag 1.119
Vajjiputta (2nd)
Vajjiputtattheragāthā

You’ve left for the jungle, the root of a tree, with quenching in your heart. Practice absorption, Gotama, don’t be negligent! What is this hullabaloo to you?

Thag 1.120

Thag 1.120
Isidatta
Isidattattheragāthā

The five aggregates are fully understood, they remain, but their root is cut. I have reached the end of suffering and attained the ending of defilements.

Thag 2.1

Thag 2.1
Uttara (1st)
Uttarattheragāthā

No life is permanent, and no conditions last forever. The aggregates are reborn and pass away, again and again.

Knowing this danger, I have no need for another life. I've escaped all sensual pleasures, and attained the ending of defilements.

That is how these verses were recited by the senior venerable Uttara.

Thag 2.2

Thag 2.2
Bhāradvāja the Alms-Gatherer
Piṇḍolabhāradvājattheragāthā

You can’t live by fasting, but food doesn’t lead to peace of heart. Seeing how this bag of bones is sustained by food, I wander, seeking.

They know it’s just a swamp, this homage and veneration in respectable families. Honor is a subtle dart, hard to extract, and hard for a sinner to give up.

That is how these verses were recited by the senior venerable Bhāradvāja the Alms-Gatherer.

Thag 2.3

Thag 2.3
Valliya (2nd)
Valliyattheragāthā

A monkey went up to the little hut with five doors. He circles around, knocking on each door, again and again.

Stand still monkey, don’t run! Things are different now; you’ve been caught by wisdom—you won’t go far.

Thag 2.4

Thag 2.4
Gaṅgātīriya
Gaṅgātīriyattheragāthā

My hut on the bank of the Ganges is made from three palm leaves. My alms-bowl is a funeral pot, my robe is cast-off rags.

In my first two rainy seasons I spoke only one word. In my third rainy season the mass of darkness was shattered.

Thag 2.5

Thag 2.5
Ajina
Ajinattheragāthā

Even a master of the three knowledges, undefiled, conqueror of death, is looked down upon for being unknown by ignorant fools.

But any person here who gets food and drink is honored by them, even if they are of bad character.

Thag 2.6

Thag 2.6
Meḷajina
Meḷajinattheragāthā

When I heard the Teacher speaking Dhamma, I wasn’t aware of any doubt in the all-knowing, unconquered one, the caravan leader, the great hero, the most excellent of charioteers. I have no doubt in the path or practice.

Thag 2.7

Thag 2.7
Rādha
Rādhattheragāthā

Just as rain seeps into a poorly roofed house, lust seeps into an undeveloped mind.

Just as rain doesn’t seep into a well roofed house, lust doesn’t seep into a well-developed mind.

Thag 2.8

Thag 2.8
Surādha
Surādhattheragāthā

Rebirth is ended for me; the victor’s instruction is fulfilled; what they call a “net” is given up; the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I’ve reached the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness: the ending of all fetters.

Thag 2.9

Thag 2.9
Gotama (1st)
Gotamattheragāthā

Sages sleep at ease when they’re not bound to women. For the truth is hard to find among them and one must always be guarded.

Sensual pleasure, you’ve been slain! We’re not in your debt any more. Now we go to quenching, where there is no sorrow.

Thag 2.10

Thag 2.10
Vasabha
Vasabhattheragāthā

First one kills oneself, then one kills others. One kills oneself, really dead, like one who kills birds using a dead bird as a decoy.

A holy man’s color is not on the outside; a holy man is colored on the inside. Whoever harbors bad deeds is truly a dark one, Sujampati.

Thag 2.11

Thag 2.11
Mahācunda
Mahācundattheragāthā

It’s from eagerness to learn that learning grows; when you’re learned, wisdom grows; by wisdom, you know the goal; knowing the goal brings happiness.

You should frequent remote lodgings and practice to be released from fetters. If you don’t find enjoyment there, live in the Saṅgha, self-guarded and mindful.

Thag 2.12

Thag 2.12
Jotidāsa
Jotidāsattheragāthā

People who act harshly— attacking people, binding them with rope, hurting them in all kinds of ways—they're treated in the same way; their deeds don't vanish.

Whatever deeds a person does, whether good or bad, they are the heir to each and every deed they do.

Thag 2.13

Thag 2.13
Heraññakāni
Heraññakānittheragāthā

The days and nights rush by, and then life is cut short. The life of mortals wastes away, like the water in tiny streams.

But while doing bad deeds the fool doesn’t realize—it’ll be bitter later on; for the result will be bad for them.

Thag 2.14

Thag 2.14
Somamitta
Somamittattheragāthā

If you’re lost in the middle of a great sea, and you clamber up on a little log, you’ll sink.
So too, a person who lives well sinks by relying on a lazy person. Hence you should avoid such a lazy person who lacks energy.

Dwell with the noble ones who are secluded and determined and always energetic; the astute who practice absorption.

Thag 2.15

Thag 2.15
Sabbamitta
Sabbamittattheragāthā

People are attached to people; people depend on people; people are hurt by people; and people hurt people.

So what's the point of people, or those born of people? Go, abandon these people, who've hurt so many people.

Thag 2.16

Thag 2.16
Mahākāḷa
Mahākāḷattheragāthā

There’s a big black woman who looks like a crow. She broke off thigh-bones, first one then another; she broke off arm-bones, first one then another; she broke off a skull like a curd-bowl, and then arranged them and sat nearby.

When an ignorant person builds up attachments, that idiot returns to suffering again and again. So let one who understands not build up attachments: may I never again lie with a broken skull!

Thag 2.17

Thag 2.17
Tissa (3rd)
Tissattheragāthā

A shaven one wrapped in the outer robe gets many enemies when they receive food and drink, clothes and bedding.

Knowing this danger, this great fear in honors, a mendicant should wander mindful, with few possessions, not full of desire.

Thag 2.18

Thag 2.18
Kimbila (2nd)
Kimilattheragāthā

In Pācīnavaṁsa grove the Sakyan friends, having given up great wealth, are happy with the scraps in their bowls.

Energetic, resolute, always staunchly vigorous; having given up mundane delights, they enjoy the delights of the Dhamma.

Thag 2.19

Thag 2.19
Nanda
Nandattheragāthā

Because of focusing on the wrong things, I was addicted to ornamentation. I was vain, fickle, racked by desire for pleasures of the senses.

But with the help of the Buddha, the kinsman of the Sun, so skilled in means, I practiced rationally and extracted attachment to continued existence from my mind.

Thag 2.20

Thag 2.20
Sirima
Sirimattheragāthā

If others praise one who has no immersion, they praise in vain, as one has no immersion.

If others rebuke one who does have immersion, they rebuke in vain, as one does have immersion.

Thag 2.21

Thag 2.21
Uttara (2nd)
Uttarattheragāthā

I've fully understood the aggregates; I've eradicated craving; I've developed the factors of awakening, I've attained the ending of defilements.

Having fully understood the aggregates, having plucked out the weaver of the web, having developed the factors of awakening, being undefiled, I will be fully extinguished.

Thag 2.22

Thag 2.22
Bhaddaji
Bhaddajittheragāthā

There was a king named Panāda who had a sacrificial post all golden. Its height was sixteen times its width, and the top was a thousand-fold.

It had a thousand panels and a hundred ball-caps, all adorned with banners, and made of gold. There danced the centaurs, numbering seven times six thousand.

Thag 2.23

Thag 2.23
Sobhita
Sobhitattheragāthā

As a monk, mindful and wise, empowered and full of energy, I recollected five hundred eons in a single night.

Developing the four mindfulness meditations, the seven factors of awakening, and the eightfold path, I recollected five hundred eons in a single night.

Thag 2.24

Thag 2.24
Valliya (3rd)
Valliyattheragāthā

The duty of one whose energy is strong; the duty of one who longs to wake up: that I'll do, I won't fail—see my energy and vigor!

Teach me the path, the direct route that culminates in freedom from death. I'll know it with wisdom, as the Ganges knows the ocean.

Thag 2.25

Thag 2.25
Vītasoka
Vītasokattheragāthā

The barber approached to shave my head. I picked up a mirror and examined my body.

My body appeared hollow; I once was blind, but the darkness disappeared. My fancy hairdo has been cut off: now there’ll be no more future lives.

Thag 2.26

Thag 2.26
Puṇṇamāsa (2nd)
Puṇṇamāsattheragāthā

I gave up the five hindrances for the sake of finding sanctuary from the yoke. I took Dhamma as a mirror for knowing and seeing myself.

I examined this body, all of it, inside and out. Internally and externally my body appeared hollow.

Thag 2.27

Thag 2.27
Nandaka (1st)
Nandakattheragāthā

Though a fine thoroughbred may stumble, it soon stands firm again. It gains even more urgency, and draws its load undeterred.

Even so is one accomplished in vision, a disciple of the Buddha. Remember me as a thoroughbred, the Buddha’s rightful son.

Thag 2.28

Thag 2.28
Bharata
Bharatattheragāthā

Come, Nandaka, let’s go to visit our preceptor. We’ll roar our lion’s roar before the best of Buddhas.

The sage gave us the going forth out of compassion, so we could realize the ending of all fetters—now we have reached that goal.

Thag 2.29

Thag 2.29
Bhāradvāja
Bhāradvājattheragāthā

This is how the wise roar: like lions in mountain caves, heroes, triumphant in battle, having vanquished Māra and his mount.

I've served the teacher; I've honored the Dhamma and the Saṅgha; I'm happy and joyful, because I've seen my son free of defilements.

Thag 2.30

Thag 2.30
Kaṇhadinna
Kaṇhadinnattheragāthā

I regularly sat close by true persons and learnt the teaching. What I learned, I practiced, the direct route that culminates in freedom from death.

I’ve slain the desire to be reborn, it won’t be found in me again. It was not, and it won’t be in me, and it isn’t found in me now.

Thag 2.31

Thag 2.31
Migasira
Migasirattheragāthā

When I had gone forth in the teaching of the Buddha, while letting go, I rose up; escaping the sensual realm.

Then, as the supreme one looked on, my mind was freed. My freedom is unshakable with the ending of all fetters.

Thag 2.32

Thag 2.32
Sivaka
Sivakattheragāthā

Houses are impermanent—on and on, life after life. I’ve been searching for the house-builder—painful is birth again and again.

I’ve seen you, house-builder! You won’t build a house again. Your rafters are all broken, your ridgepole is shattered. My mind is released from limits: in this very life it will dissipate.

Thag 2.33

Thag 2.33
Upavāna
Upavāṇattheragāthā

The perfected one, the Holy One in the world, the sage is afflicted by winds. If there’s hot water, give it to the sage, brahmin.

I wish to bring it to the one who is esteemed by the estimable, honored by the honorable, and venerated by the venerable.

Thag 2.34

Thag 2.34
Isidinna
Isidinnattheragāthā

I’ve seen lay disciples who have memorized discourses, saying, “Sensual pleasures are impermanent”. But they’re obsessed with jeweled earrings, concerned for their partners and children.

To be honest, they don’t know Dhamma, even though they say “Sensual pleasures are impermanent”. They don’t have the power to cut their lust, so they cling to children, wives, and wealth.

Thag 2.35

Thag 2.35
Sambulakaccāna
Sambulakaccānattheragāthā

The sky rains, the sky thunders down, I’m staying alone in a frightful hole. But while I’m staying alone in that frightful hole, I’ve no fear, no dread, no goosebumps.

This is my normal state while staying alone in a frightful hole: I’ve no fear, no dread, no goosebumps.

Thag 2.36

Thag 2.36
Nitaka
Nitakattheragāthā

Whose mind is like a rock, steady, never trembling—free of desire for desirable things, not getting annoyed when things are annoying? From where will suffering strike one whose mind is developed like this?

My mind is like a rock, steady, never trembling—free of desire for desirable things, not getting annoyed when things are annoying. From where will suffering strike me whose mind is developed like this?

Thag 2.37

Thag 2.37
Soṇapoṭiriya
Soṇapoṭiriyattheragāthā

Night, with her garland of stars, is not only for sleeping. For those who know, this night is really for waking.

Were I to fall from the back of an elephant, trampled by the tuskers that follow, better for me to die in battle, than to live on in defeat.

Thag 2.38

Thag 2.38
Nisabha
Nisabhattheragāthā

One who’s given up the five sensual titillations, so pleasing and delightful, and who’s left the home life out of faith—let them make an end to suffering!

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, aware and mindful.

Thag 2.39

Thag 2.39
Usabha (2nd)
Usabhattheragāthā

Arranging a robe over my shoulder, the color of young mango sprouts, I entered the village for alms sitting on an elephant’s neck!

But when I dismounted from the elephant, I was struck with a sense of urgency. I burned with shame, but then I found peace, and attained the ending of defilements.

Thag 2.40

Thag 2.40
Kappaṭakura
Kappaṭakurattheragāthā

This fellow, “Rag-rice”, he sure is a rag! Into the vase of freedom from death, polished and overflowing, sufficient teaching has been poured; the path to build up absorptions has been laid out.

Don’t nod off, Rag—I’ll smack your ear! Nodding off in the middle of the Saṅgha? You know no bounds.

Thag 2.41

Thag 2.41
Kassapa the Prince
Kumārakassapattheragāthā

Oh, the Buddhas! Oh, the Dhammas! Oh, the accomplishments of the Teacher! Here a disciple may realize such a teaching for themselves.

Through countless eons they obtained individual identities. This is their last, their very final body in the transmigration through births and deaths; now there are no more future lives.

Thag 2.42

Thag 2.42
Dhammapāla
Dhammapālattheragāthā

The young monk who is devoted to the teaching of the Buddha, wakeful while others sleep —his life is not in vain.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.

Thag 2.43

Thag 2.43
Brahmāli
Brahmālittheragāthā

Whose faculties have become serene, like horses tamed by a charioteer? With conceit and defilements given up, who is such as envied by even the gods?

My faculties have become serene, like horses tamed by a charioteer. With conceit and defilements given up, I am such as envied by even the gods.

Thag 2.44

Thag 2.44
Mogharājā
Mogharājattheragāthā

“Your skin is nasty but your heart is good; Mogharājā, you’re always immersed in samādhi. But in the nights of winter, so dark and cold, how will you get by, monk?”

“I’ve heard that all the Magadhans have an abundance of grain. I’ll make my bed under a thatched roof, just like those who live in comfort.”

Thag 2.45

Thag 2.45
Visākhapañcālaputta
Visākhapañcālaputtattheragāthā

One should not suspend others from the Saṅgha, nor raise objections against them; and neither disparage nor raise one's voice against one who has crossed to the further shore. One should not praise oneself among the assemblies, not restless, measured in speech, and true to your vows.

For one who sees the meaning so very subtle and fine, who is skilled in thought and humble in manner, who has cultivated mature ethics—it's not hard to gain extinguishment.

Thag 2.46

Thag 2.46
Cūḷaka
Cūḷakattheragāthā

The peacocks cry out with their fair crests and tails, their lovely blue necks and fair faces, their beautiful song and their call. This broad earth is lush with grass and dew, and the sky is full of beautiful clouds.

One practicing absorption is happy in mind, and their appearance is uplifting; going forth in the teaching of the Buddha is easy for a good person. You should realize that supreme, unchanging state, so very pure, subtle, and hard to see.

Thag 2.47

Thag 2.47
Anūpama
Anūpamattheragāthā

The conceited mind, addicted to pleasure, impales itself on its own stake. It always goes where there's a stake, a chopping board.

I declare you the demon mind! I declare you the insidious mind! You've found the teacher so hard to find—don't lead me away from the goal.

Thag 2.48

Thag 2.48
Vajjita
Vajjitattheragāthā

Transmigrating for such a long time, I’ve proceeded through various states of rebirth, not seeing the noble truths, a blind, unenlightened person.

But when I became heedful, transmigrations were mown down. All states of rebirth are cut off; now there are no more future lives.

Thag 2.49

Thag 2.49
Sandhita
Sandhitattheragāthā

Beneath the Bodhi Tree, bright green and growing, being mindful, my perception became one with the Buddha.

It’s been thirty one eons since I gained that perception; and it’s due to that perception that I’ve attained the ending of defilements.

Thag 3.1

Thag 3.1
Aṅgaṇikabhāradvāja
Aṅgaṇikabhāradvājattheragāthā

Seeking purity the wrong way, I served the sacred fire in a grove. Not knowing the path to purity, I mortified my flesh in search of immortality.

I've gained this happiness by means of happiness: see the excellence of the teaching! I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

In the past I was related to Brahmā, but now I really am a brahmin! I am master of the three knowledges, I'm a bathed initiate, I'm a scholar and a knowledge master.

Thag 3.2

Thag 3.2
Paccaya
Paccayattheragāthā

I went forth five days ago, a trainee, my heart’s desire unfulfilled. I entered my dwelling and resolved in my heart:

I won’t eat; I won’t drink; I won’t leave my dwelling; nor will I lie down on my side—not until the dart of craving is plucked.

See my energy and vigor as I meditate like this! I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 3.3

Thag 3.3
Bākula
Bākulattheragāthā

Whoever wishes to do afterwards what they should have done before has lost the causes for happiness, and afterwards they’re tormented by regrets.

You should only say what you would do; you shouldn’t say what you wouldn’t do. The wise will recognize one who talks without doing.

Oh! Extinguishment is so very blissful, as taught by the fully awakened Buddha: sorrowless, stainless, secure, where suffering all ceases.

Thag 3.4

Thag 3.4
Dhaniya
Dhaniyattheragāthā

If you wish to live in happiness, longing for the ascetic life, don't look down on the Saṅgha's robes, or its food and drinks.

If you wish to live in happiness, longing for the ascetic life, stay in the Saṅgha's lodgings like a snake making use of a mouse's hole.

If you wish to live in happiness, longing for the ascetic life, develop this one quality: be content with whatever is offered.

Thag 3.5

Thag 3.5
Mātaṅgaputta
Mātaṅgaputtattheragāthā

“It’s too cold, too hot, too late,” they say. When the young neglect their work like this, opportunities pass them by.

But one who considers heat and cold as nothing more than blades of grass—he does his duties as a man, and his happiness never fails.

With my chest I’ll thrust aside the grasses, vines, and creepers, and foster seclusion.

Thag 3.6

Thag 3.6
Khujjasobhita
Khujjasobhitattheragāthā

“One of those monks who live in Pāṭaliputta—such brilliant speakers, and very learned—stands at the door: the old man, Khujjasobhita.

One of those monks who live in Pāṭaliputta—such brilliant speakers, and very learned—stands at the door: an old man, trembling in the wind.”

“By war well fought, by sacrifice well made, by victory in battle; by leading the spiritual life: that’s how one prospers in happiness.”

Thag 3.7

Thag 3.7
Vāraṇa
Vāraṇattheragāthā

Anyone among men who harms other creatures: that person will fall both from this world and the next.

But someone with a mind of love, compassionate for all creatures: a person like that creates much merit.

One should train in following good advice, in attending closely to ascetics, in sitting alone in hidden places, and in calming the mind.

Thag 3.8

Thag 3.8
Vassika
Vassikattheragāthā

I was the only one in my family who had faith and wisdom. It’s good for my relatives that I’m firm in principle, and ethical.

I corrected my family out of compassion, telling them off out of love for my family and relatives. They performed a service for the monks and then they passed away, finding happiness in the heaven of the Thirty-three. There, my brothers and mother enjoy all the pleasures they desire.

Thag 3.9

Thag 3.9
Yasoja
Yasojattheragāthā

“With knobbly knees, thin and veiny, eating and drinking but little—this person’s spirit is undaunted.”

“Pestered by flies and mosquitoes in the wilds, the formidable forest, one should mindfully endure, like an elephant at the head of the battle.

A monk alone is like the supreme Brahmā; a pair of monks are like gods; three are like a village; and more than that is a rabble.”

Thag 3.10

Thag 3.10
Sāṭimattiya
Sāṭimattiyattheragāthā

In the past you had faith, today you have none. What’s yours is yours alone—I’ve done nothing wrong.

Faith is impermanent, fickle: or so I have seen. Passions wax and wane: why would a sage waste away on that account?

The meal of a sage is cooked bit by bit in this family or that. I’ll walk for alms, for my legs are strong.

Thag 3.11

Thag 3.11
Upāli
Upālittheragāthā

One newly gone forth, who has left their home out of faith, should mix with spiritual friends, who are tireless and pure of livelihood.

One newly gone forth, who has left their home out of faith, a mendicant staying in the Saṅgha, being wise, would train in monastic discipline.

One newly gone forth, who has left their home out of faith, skilled in what is appropriate and what is not, would wander undistracted.

Thag 3.12

Thag 3.12
Uttarapāla
Uttarapālattheragāthā

I was, indeed, an astute scholar, competent to think on the meaning. The five kinds of sensual stimulation in the world, so delusory, were my downfall.

Leaping into Māra's domain, I was struck by a powerful dart. But I was able to free myself from the trap laid by the King of Death.

I have given up all sensual pleasures; all rebirths are shattered; transmigration through births is finished; now there are no more future lives.

Thag 3.13

Thag 3.13
Abhibhūta
Abhibhūtattheragāthā

Listen up, all my relatives, those who have gathered here: I'll teach you Dhamma! Painful is birth again and again.

Rouse yourselves, try harder! Devote yourselves to the instructions of the Buddha! Crush the army of death, as an elephant a hut of reeds.

Whoever shall meditate diligently in this teaching and training, giving up transmigration, will make an end to suffering.

Thag 3.14

Thag 3.14
Gotama (2nd)
Gotamattheragāthā

Transmigrating, I went to hell, and to the ghost realm time and again. Many times I dwelt long in the animal realm, so full of pain.

I was also reborn as a human, and from time to time I went to heaven. I've stayed in realms of form and formlessness, among the neither-percipient-nor-non-percipient, and the non-percipient.

I know well these created states are worthless— conditioned, unstable, always in motion. When I understood that this is created in myself, mindful, I found peace.

Thag 3.15

Thag 3.15
Hārita (2nd)
Hāritattheragāthā

Whoever wishes to do afterwards what they should have done before has lost the causes for happiness, and afterwards they're tormented by regrets.

You should only say what you would do; you shouldn't say what you wouldn't do. The wise will recognize one who talks without doing.

Oh! Extinguishment is so very blissful, as taught by the fully awakened Buddha: sorrowless, stainless, secure, where suffering all ceases.

Thag 3.16

Thag 3.16
Vimala (2nd)
Vimalattheragāthā

Shunning bad friends, associate with the best of people. Stick to the advice he gave you, aspiring to unshakable happiness.

If you’re lost in the middle of a great sea, and you clamber up on a little log, you’ll sink. So too, a person who lives well sinks by relying on a lazy person. Hence you should avoid such a lazy person who lacks energy.

Dwell with the noble ones who are secluded and determined and always energetic; the astute who practice absorption.

Thag 4.1

Thag 4.1
Nāgasamāla
Nāgasamālattheragāthā

Adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, with garlands, and sandalwood makeup piled on, along the main street is a lady—a dancer dancing as the music plays.

I entered for alms, and while walking along I glanced at her, adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, like a snare of death laid down.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear, and I grew firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the teaching! I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 4.2

Thag 4.2
Bhagu
Bhaguttheragāthā

Overwhelmed by drowsiness, I left my dwelling. Stepping up to the path for walking meditation, I fell to the ground right there.

I rubbed my limbs, and again I stepped up on the path for walking meditation. I walked meditation up and down the path, serene inside myself.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear, and I grew firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the teaching! I've attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 4.3

Thag 4.3
Sabhiya
Sabhiyattheragāthā

Others don’t understand that we need restraint in this. But those who do understand this, being clever, settle their conflicts.

And when those who don’t understand behave as though they were immortal, those who understand the Dhamma are like the healthy among the sick.

Any lax act, any corrupt observance, or suspicious spiritual life, is not very fruitful.

Whoever has no respect for their spiritual companions is as far from true Dhamma as the sky from the earth.

Thag 4.4

Thag 4.4
Nandaka (2nd)
Nandakattheragāthā

Damn you mortal frame, you stink! You're on Māra's side, you ooze! O body, you have nine streams that are flowing all the time.

Don't think much of mortal frames; don't disparage the Realized Ones. They're not even aroused by heaven, let alone by humans.

But those who are stupid fools, with bad advisors, shrouded in delusion, that kind of person is aroused by bodies, when Māra has laid down the snare.

Those in whom greed, hate, and ignorance have faded away; such people are not aroused by bodies, they've cut the strings, they're no longer bound.

Thag 4.5

Thag 4.5
Jambuka
Jambukattheragāthā

For fifty-five years I wore dust and dirt. Eating one meal a month, I tore out my hair and beard.

I stood on one foot; I rejected seats; I ate dried-out dung; I didn’t accept food set aside for me.

I did many deeds of this kind, which lead to a bad destination. Swept away by a great flood, I went to the Buddha for refuge.

See the going for refuge! See the excellence of the teaching! I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 4.6

Thag 4.6
Senaka
Senakattheragāthā

It was so welcome for me during the Gayā spring festival to see the Awakened One teaching the supreme Dhamma.

He was glorious, the teacher of a community, a leader who had realized the highest. In all the world with its gods, he was the victor of unequaled vision.

A great giant, a great hero, a great light free of defilement. With the utter ending of all defilements, the teacher fears nothing from any quarter.

For a long time, sadly, I was corrupted, fettered by the bond of wrong view. That Blessed One, Senaka, released me from all ties.

Thag 4.7

Thag 4.7
Sambhūta
Sambhūtattheragāthā

Hurrying when it’s time to dawdle; dawdling when it’s time to hurry; being so disorganized a fool falls into suffering.

Their good fortune wastes away like the moon in the waning fortnight. They become disgraced and alienated from their friends.

Dawdling when it’s time to dawdle; hurrying when it’s time to hurry; being so well organized, an astute person comes into happiness.

Their good fortune flourishes like the moon in the waxing fortnight. They become famous and respected, not alienated from their friends.

Thag 4.8

Thag 4.8
Rāhula
Rāhulattheragāthā

I am known as “Fortunate Rāhula”, because I’m accomplished in both ways: I am the son of the Buddha, whose eye sees clearly in all things.

Since my defilements have ended, since there are no more future lives—I’m perfected, worthy of offerings, master of the three knowledges, seer of freedom from death.

Blinded by sensual pleasures, trapped in a net, they are smothered over by craving; bound by the kinsman of the negligent, like a fish caught in a funnel-net trap.

Having thrown off those sensual pleasures, having cut Māra’s bond, and having plucked out craving, root and all: I’m cooled, extinguished.

Thag 4.9

Thag 4.9
Candana
Candanattheragāthā

Covered over with gold, surrounded by all her maids, with my son upon her hip, my wife came to me.

I saw her coming, the mother of my son, adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, like a snare of death laid down.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear, and I was firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the teaching! I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 4.10

Thag 4.10
Dhammika
Dhammikattheragāthā

“Dhamma surely protects one who practices Dhamma; the teaching brings happiness when practiced well. This is the benefit of practicing Dhamma: one doesn’t go to a bad destination.

It’s not the case that Dhamma and what is not Dhamma lead to the same results. What is not Dhamma leads to hell, while Dhamma takes you to a good place.

So you should rouse up enthusiasm for the teachings; such rejoicing is owing to the Holy One, the poised. The disciples of the best of Holy Ones are firm in the teaching; those wise ones are led on, headed to the very best of refuges.”

“The boil has been burst from its root, the net of craving is eradicated. He has ended transmigration, he has nothing, he’s like the full moon on a bright night.”

Thag 4.11

Thag 4.11
Sappaka
Sappakattheragāthā

When the crane with its beautiful white wings, startled by fear of the dark thundercloud, flees, seeking shelter—then the River Ajakaraṇī delights me.

When the crane, so pure and white, startled by fear of the dark thundercloud, seeks a cave to shelter in, but can't see one—then the River Ajakaraṇī delights me.

Who wouldn't be delighted by the rose-apple trees that adorn both banks of the river, there, behind my cave?

Rid of snakes, that death-mad swarm, the lazy frogs croak: "Today isn't the time to stray from mountain streams; Ajakaraṇī is safe, pleasant, and delightful."

Thag 4.12

Thag 4.12
Mudita
Muditattheragāthā

I went forth to save my life. But I embraced faith after receiving full ordination. I strove, strong in effort:

gladly, let this body be broken! Let this scrap of meat disintegrate! Let both my legs fall off at the knees!

I won’t eat, I won’t drink, I won’t leave my dwelling, nor will I lie down on my side, until the dart of craving is plucked.

As I meditate like this, see my energy and vigor! I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 5.1

Thag 5.1
Rājadatta
Rājadattattheragāthā

I, a monk, went to a charnel ground and saw a woman’s body abandoned there, discarded in a cemetery, full of worms that devoured.

Some men were disgusted, seeing her dead and rotten; but sexual desire arose in me, I was as if blind to her oozing body.

Quicker than the cooking of rice I left that place! Mindful and aware, I retired to a discreet place.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear, and I was firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the teaching! I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 5.2

Thag 5.2
Subhūta
Subhūtattheragāthā

When a person, wishing for a certain outcome, applies themselves where they ought not; not achieving what they worked for, they say: “That’s a sign of my bad luck.”

When a misfortune is extracted and beaten, to surrender it in part would be like losing at dice; but to surrender it all you’d have to be blind, not seeing the even and the uneven.

You should only say what you would do; you shouldn’t say what you wouldn’t do. The wise will recognize one who talks without doing.

Just like a glorious flower that’s colorful but lacks fragrance; well-spoken speech is fruitless for one who does not act on it.

Just like a glorious flower that's both colorful and fragrant, well-spoken speech is fruitful for one who acts on it.

Thag 5.3

Thag 5.3
Girimānanda
Girimānandattheragāthā

The sky-god rains like a sweet song; my little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind; I meditate there, peaceful: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

The sky-god rains like a sweet song; my little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind; I meditate there, my mind at peace: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

The sky-god rains like a sweet song; my little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind; I meditate there, free of greed: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

The sky-god rains like a sweet song; my little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind; I meditate there, free of hate: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

The sky-god rains like a sweet song; my little hut is roofed and pleasant, sheltered from the wind; I meditate there, free of delusion: so rain, sky-god, if you wish.

Thag 5.4

Thag 5.4
Sumana (1st)
Sumanattheragāthā

My mentor helped me to learn, hoping I would practice those teachings. Aspiring to freedom from death, I've done what had to be done.

I've realized the Dhamma, witnessing it for myself, not based on hearsay. With purified knowledge, free of doubt, I declare it in your presence.

I know my past lives, my clairvoyance is purified, I've realized my own true goal, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Being diligent in the training, I learned your teachings well. All my defilements are ended; now there'll be no more future lives.

You advised me in noble observances; compassionate, you helped teach me. Your instruction was not in vain—I, your pupil, am fully trained.

Thag 5.5

Thag 5.5
Vaḍḍha
Vaḍḍhattheragāthā

Oh so well was the goad shown to me by my mother, on hearing whose words, advised by my mother, energetic and resolute, I realized supreme awakening.

I'm perfected, worthy of offerings, master of the three knowledges, seer of freedom from death. I've conquered the army of Namuci, and live without defilements.

Those defilements that were found in me, internally and externally, are all cut off without remainder, and will not arise again.

My self-assured sister said this to me: 'Now neither you nor I have any entanglements.'

Suffering is at an end; this bag of bones is my last in the transmigration through births and deaths; now there are no more future lives."

Thag 5.6

Thag 5.6
Nadīkassapa
Nadīkassapattheragāthā

It was truly for my benefit that the Buddha went to the river Nerañjara. When I heard his teaching, I shunned wrong view.

I used to perform a diverse spectrum of sacrifices; I served the sacred flame, imagining, “This is purity.” I was a blind, ordinary person.

Caught in the thicket of wrong view, deluded by misapprehension. Thinking impurity was purity, I was blind and ignorant.

I’ve abandoned wrong view; all rebirths are shattered. I serve the truly worthy flame: I bow to the Realized One.

I’ve given up all delusion; craving for continued existence is shattered; transmigration through births is finished; now there are no more future lives.

Thag 5.7

Thag 5.7
Gayākassapa
Gayākassapattheragāthā

Three times a day—morning, midday, and evening—I plunged into the water at Gayā for the Gayā spring festival.

“Any bad things I’ve done in previous lives, I’ll now wash away right here”—such was the view I used to hold.

Having heard the fine words, a passage meaningful and principled, I rationally reflected on the true, essential goal.

I’ve washed away all bad things; I’m stainless, clean, pristine; the pure heir of the pure one, a true-born son of the Buddha.

When I plunged into the eightfold stream, all bad things were washed away. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 5.8

Thag 5.8
Vakkali
Vakkalittheragāthā

“Struck by a wind ailment while dwelling in a forest grove, you’ve entered a tough place for gathering alms—how will you get by, monk?”

“Pervading this bag of bones with abundant rapture and happiness, putting up with what’s tough, I’ll dwell in the forest.

Developing mindfulness meditation, the faculties and the powers, developing the factors of awakening, I’ll dwell in the forest.

Having seen those who are energetic, resolute, always staunchly vigorous, harmonious and united, I’ll dwell in the forest.

Recollecting the Buddha—the best, the tamed, the serene—tireless all day and night I’ll dwell in the forest.”

Thag 5.9

Thag 5.9
Vijitasena
Vijitasenattheragāthā

I'll cage you, mind, like an elephant in a stockade. Born of the flesh, that net of the senses, I won't urge you to do bad.

Caged, you won't go anywhere, like an elephant who can't find an open gate. Demon-mind, you won't wander again and again, bullying, in love with wickedness.

Just as a strong trainer with a hook takes a wild, newly captured elephant and wins it over against its will, so I'll win you over.

Just as a fine charioteer, skilled in the taming of fine horses, tames a thoroughbred, so I'll tame you, firmly established in the five powers.

I'll bind you with mindfulness; devout, I shall tame you; kept in check by harnessed energy, mind, you won't go far from here.

Thag 5.10

Thag 5.10
Yasadatta
Yasadattattheragāthā

With fault-finding mind, the dullard listens to the victor’s instruction. They’re as far from the true teaching as the earth is from the sky.

With fault-finding mind, the dullard listens to the victor’s instruction. They fall away from the true teaching, like the moon in the waning fortnight.

With fault-finding mind, the dullard listens to the victor’s instruction. They wither away in the true teaching, like a fish in a little puddle.

With fault-finding mind, the dullard listens to the victor’s instruction. They don’t thrive in the true teaching, like a rotten seed in a field.

But one with contented mind who listens to the victor’s instruction—having wiped out all defilements; having witnessed the unshakable; having arrived at ultimate peace—the undefiled become fully extinguished.”

Thag 5.11

Thag 5.11
Soṇa of the Sharp Ears
Soṇakuṭikaṇṇattheragāthā

I’ve received ordination; I am liberated, without defilements; I’ve seen the Blessed One myself, and even stayed together with him.

The Blessed One, the teacher, spent much of the night in the open; then he, who is so skilled in meditation, entered his dwelling.

Spreading his outer robe, Gotama made his bed, like a lion in a rocky cave, with fear and dread given up.

Then, with lovely enunciation, Soṇa, a disciple of the Buddha, recited the true teaching before the best of Buddhas.

When he has completely understood the five aggregates, developed the direct route, and arrived at ultimate peace, undefiled, he’ll be fully extinguished.

Thag 5.12

Thag 5.12
Kosiya
Kosiyattheragāthā

Whatever wise one, understanding their teacher’s words, stays with them, their fondness growing; that astute person is indeed devoted—knowing the teachings, they’re distinguished.

When extreme stresses arise, one who does not tremble, but reflects instead, that astute person is indeed strong—knowing the teachings, they’re distinguished.

Steady as the ocean, imperturbable, their wisdom is deep, they see the subtle meaning; that astute person is indeed immovable—knowing the teachings, they’re distinguished.

They’re very learned, and have memorized the teaching, living in line with the teachings —that astute person is indeed such—knowing the teachings, they’re distinguished.

They know the meaning of what is said, and act accordingly; that astute person is indeed a master of meaning—knowing the teachings, they’re distinguished.

Thag 6.1

Thag 6.1
Uruveḷakassapa
Uruveḷakassapattheragāthā

Seeing the demonstrations of the renowned Gotama was not enough for me to bow to him —I was blinded by jealousy and conceit.

Knowing my thoughts, the trainer of men scolded me. I was struck with a sense of urgency, so astonishing and hair-raising!

Rejecting the petty powers I had before as a matted-hair ascetic, I then went forth in the victor's instruction.

I used to be content with sacrifice, the realm of sensual pleasures was my priority. But later I eradicated desire, and hatred and also delusion.

I know my past lives; my clairvoyance is clarified; I have psychic powers, and know the minds of others; I have attained clairaudience.

I've attained the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness —the ending of all fetters.

Thag 6.2

Thag 6.2
Tekicchakāri
Tekicchakārittheragāthā

“The rice has been harvested and gathered on the threshing-floor—but I don’t get any almsfood! How will I get by?”

“In faith, recollect the immeasurable Buddha! Your body soaked with rapture, you’ll always be full of joy.

In faith, recollect the immeasurable teaching! Your body soaked with rapture, you’ll always be full of joy.

In faith, recollect the immeasurable Saṅgha! Your body soaked with rapture, you’ll always be full of joy.”

“You stay in the open, though these winter nights are cold. Don’t perish, overcome with cold; enter your dwelling, with latch shut fast.”

“I’ll realize the four immeasurable states, and meditate happily in them. I won’t perish, overcome with cold; I’ll dwell unperturbed.”

Thag 6.3

Thag 6.3
Mahānāga
Mahānāgattheragāthā

Whoever has no respect for their spiritual companions falls away from the true teaching, like a fish in a little puddle.

Whoever has no respect for their spiritual companions doesn't thrive in the true teaching, like a rotten seed in a field.

Whoever has no respect for their spiritual companions is far from quenching, in the teaching of the Dhamma king.

Whoever does have respect for their spiritual companions doesn't fall away from the true teaching, like a fish in plenty of water.

Whoever does have respect for their spiritual companions thrives in the true teaching, like a fine seed in a field.

Whoever does have respect for their spiritual companions is close to quenching in the teaching of the Dhamma king.

Thag 6.4

Thag 6.4
Kulla
Kullattheragāthā

I, Kulla, went to a charnel ground and saw a woman's body abandoned there, discarded in a cemetery, full of worms that devoured.

"See this bag of bones, Kulla—diseased, filthy, rotten, oozing and trickling, a fool's delight."

Taking the teaching as a mirror for realizing knowledge and vision, I examined this body, hollow, inside and out.

As this is, so is that; as that is, so is this. As below, so above; as above, so below.

As by day, so by night; as by night, so by day. As before, so after; as after, so before.

Even the music of a five-piece band can never give such pleasure as when, with unified mind, you rightly discern the Dhamma.

Thag 6.5

Thag 6.5
Māluṅkyaputta (1st)
Mālukyaputtattheragāthā

When a person lives heedlessly, craving grows in them like a camel's foot creeper. They jump from life to life, like a monkey greedy for fruit in a forest grove.

Whoever is beaten by this wretched craving, this attachment to the world, their sorrow grows, like grass in the rain.

But whoever prevails over this wretched craving, so hard to get over in the world, their sorrows fall from them, like a drop from a lotus-leaf.

I say this to you, good people, all those who have gathered here: dig up the root of craving, as you'd dig up the grass in search of roots. Don't let Māra break you again and again, like a stream breaking a reed.

Act on the Buddha's words, don't let the moment pass you by. For if you miss your moment you'll grieve when sent to hell.

Negligence is always dust; dust follows right behind negligence. Through diligence and knowledge, pluck out the dart from yourself.

Thag 6.6

Thag 6.6
Sappadāsa
Sappadāsattheragāthā

In the twenty-five years since I went forth, I have not found peace of mind, even as long as a finger-snap.

Since I couldn't get my mind unified, I was racked by desire for pleasures of the senses. Wailing, with outstretched arms, I left my dwelling.

Shall I … or shall I slit my wrists? What's the point of living? For how on earth can one such as me die after resigning the training?

Then I picked up a razor, I sat on a cot: the razor was ready to slice my vein.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear, and I was firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the teaching! I've attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Thag 6.7

Thag 6.7
Kātiyāna
Kātiyānattheragāthā

Get up, Kātiyāna, and sit! Don’t sleep too much, be wakeful. Don’t be lazy and let the kinsman of the negligent, the King of Death, catch you in his trap.

Like a wave in the mighty ocean, rebirth and old age sweep you under. Make a safe island of yourself, for you have no other shelter.

The teacher has mastered this path, which transcends chains, and the fear of birth and old age. Be diligent all the time and dedicate yourself to practice.

Free yourself from your former bonds! Wearing your outer robe, with shaven head, eating almsfood, don’t delight in play or sleep, dedicate yourself to absorption, Kātiyāna.

Meditate and conquer, Kātiyāna, you’re an expert in the path to sanctuary from the yoke. Attaining unexcelled purity, you’ll be quenched, as a flame by water.

A lamp of feeble flame is bent down by the wind, like a creeper; just so, kinsman of Indra, shake off Māra, without grasping. Free of lust for feelings, await your time here, cooled.

Thag 6.8

Thag 6.8
Migajāla
Migajālattheragāthā

It was well-taught by the Clear-eyed One, the Buddha, kinsman of the Sun, who has transcended all fetters, and destroyed all rolling-on.

Emancipating, it leads across, drying up the root of craving, and, having cut off the poisonous root, the slaughterhouse, it leads to quenching.

By breaking the root of unknowing, it smashes the mechanism of deeds, and drops the thunderbolt of knowledge on the taking up of consciousnesses.

It informs us of our feelings, releasing us from grasping, contemplating with understanding all states of existence as a pit of burning coals.

It's very sweet and very deep, holding birth and death at bay; it is the noble eightfold path —the stilling of suffering, bliss.

Knowing deed as deed and result as result; seeing dependently originated phenomena as if they were in a clear light; leading to the great sanctuary and peace, it's excellent at the end.

Thag 6.9

Thag 6.9
Jenta, the High Priest's Son
Purohitaputtajentattheragāthā

I was drunk with the pride of birth and wealth and authority. I wandered about intoxicated with my own gorgeous body.

No-one was my equal or my better—or so I thought. I was such an arrogant fool, stuck up, waving my own flag.

I never paid homage to anyone: not even my mother or father, nor others esteemed as respectable. I was stiff with pride, lacking regard for others.

When I saw the foremost leader, the most excellent of charioteers, shining like the sun, at the fore of the mendicant Saṅgha,

I discarded conceit and vanity, and, with a clear and confident heart, I bowed down with my head to the most excellent of all beings.

The conceit of superiority and the conceit of inferiority have been given up and eradicated. The conceit "I am" is cut off, and every kind of conceit is destroyed.

Thag 6.10

Thag 6.10
Sumana (2nd)
Sumanattheragāthā

I was only seven years old and had just gone forth when I overcame the mighty serpent king with my psychic powers.

I brought water for my mentor from the great lake Anotatta. When he saw me, my teacher declared:

“Sāriputta, see this young boy coming, carrying a water pot, serene inside himself.

His conduct inspires confidence, he is of lovely deportment: he is Anuruddha’s novice, assured in psychic powers.

Made a thoroughbred by a thoroughbred, made good by the good, educated and trained by Anuruddha, who has completed his task.

Having attained ultimate peace and witnessed the unshakable, that novice Sumana has the wish: ‘May no-one find me out!’”

Thag 6.11

Thag 6.11
Nhātakamuni
Nhātakamunittheragāthā

“Struck by a wind ailment while dwelling in a forest grove, you’ve entered a tough place for gathering alms—how will you get by, monk?”

“Pervading this bag of bones with abundant rapture and happiness, putting up with what’s tough, I’ll dwell in the forest.

Developing the seven awakening factors, the faculties and the powers, endowed with subtle absorptions, I’ll dwell without defilements.

Freed from corruptions, my pure mind is unclouded. Frequently reviewing this, I’ll meditate without defilements.

Those defilements that were found in me, internally and externally, are all cut off without remainder, and will not arise again.

The five aggregates are fully understood, they remain, but their root is cut. I have reached the ending of suffering, now there’ll be no more future lives.”

Thag 6.12

Thag 6.12
Brahmadatta
Brahmadattattheragāthā

From where would anger come for one free of anger, tamed, living justly, freed by right knowledge, peaceful and poised?

When you get angry at an angry person you just make things worse for yourself. When you don’t get angry at an angry person you win a battle hard to win.

When you know that the other is angry, you act for the good of both yourself and the other if you’re mindful and stay calm.

People unfamiliar with the teaching consider one who heals both oneself and the other to be a fool.

If anger arises in you, reflect on the simile of the saw; if craving for flavors arises in you, remember the simile of the child’s flesh.

If your mind runs off to sensual pleasures and future lives, quickly curb it with mindfulness, as one would curb a greedy cow eating grain.

Thag 6.13

Thag 6.13
Sirimaṇḍa
Sirimaṇḍattheragāthā

The rain saturates things that are covered up; it doesn't saturate things that are open. Therefore you should open up a covered thing, so the rain will not saturate it.

The world is beaten down by death and surrounded by old age. The dart of craving has struck it down, and it's always fuming with desire.

The world is beaten down by death, caged by old age, beaten constantly without respite, like a thief being flogged.

Three things are coming, like a wall of flame: death, disease, and old age. No power can stand before them, and no speed's enough to flee.

Don't waste your day, a little or a lot. Every night that passes shortens your life by that much.

Walking or standing, sitting or lying down: your final night draws near; you have no time to be careless.

Thag 6.14

Thag 6.14
Sabbakāmi
Sabbakāmittheragāthā

This two-legged body is dirty and stinking, full of different carcasses, and oozing all over the place—but still it is cherished!

Like a lurking deer by a trick, like a fish by a hook, like a monkey by tar—they trap an ordinary person.

Sights, sounds, tastes, smells, and touches so delightful: these five kinds of sensual stimulation are seen in a woman's body.

Those ordinary people, their minds full of lust, who pursue those women: they swell the horrors of the charnel ground, piling up future lives.

One who, being mindful, avoids them like a snake's head with their foot, gets over clinging to the world.

Seeing the danger in sensual pleasures, seeing renunciation as sanctuary, I've escaped all sensual pleasures, and attained the ending of defilements.

Thag 7.1

Thag 7.1
Sundarasamudda
Sundarasamuddattheragāthā

Adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, with her garland and her makeup on, and her feet so brightly rouged: the courtesan was wearing sandals.

Stepping off her sandals in front of me, her palms joined in greeting, smiling, she spoke to me so softly and so sweet:

“You’re too young to go forth—come, stay in my teaching! Enjoy human sensual pleasures, I’ll give you riches. I promise this is the truth—I swear it by the Sacred Flame.

And when we’ve grown old together, both of us leaning on staffs, we shall both go forth, and hold a perfect hand on both counts.”

I saw the courtesan seducing me, her palms joined in greeting, adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, like a snare of death laid down.

Then the realization came upon me—the danger became clear and I grew firmly disillusioned.

Then my mind was freed—see the excellence of the Dhamma! I’ve attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thag 7.2

Thag 7.2
Lakuṇṭaka Bhaddiya
Lakuṇḍakabhaddiyattheragāthā

Bhaddiya has plucked out craving, root and all, and in a jungle thicket on the far side of the Wild Mango Monastery, he practices absorption; he is truly well-favoured.

Some delight in clay drums, in arched harps, and in cymbals. But here, at the foot of a tree, I delight in the Buddha's teaching.

If the Buddha were to grant me one wish, and I were to get what I wished for, I'd choose for the whole world constant mindfulness of the body.

Those who've judged me on appearance, and those swayed by my voice, are full of desire and greed; they don't know me.

Not knowing what's inside, nor seeing what's outside, the fool shut in on every side, gets carried away by a voice.

Not knowing what's inside, but seeing what's outside, seeing the fruit outside, they're also carried away by a voice.

Understanding what's inside, and seeing what's outside, of unobstructed vision, they don't get carried away by a voice.

Thag 7.3

Thag 7.3
Bhadda
Bhaddattheragāthā

I was an only child, loved by my mother and father. They had me by practicing many prayers and observances.

Out of compassion for me wishing me well and wanting the best for me, my mother and father took me to see the Buddha.

“We had this son with difficulty; he is delicate and dainty. We offer him to you, Lord, to attend upon the victor.”

The teacher, having accepted me, declared to Ānanda: “Quickly give him the going-forth —this one will be a thoroughbred!”

After he, the teacher, had sent me forth, the victor entered his dwelling. Before the sun set my mind was freed.

The teacher didn’t neglect me; when he came out from seclusion, he said: “Come Bhadda!” That was my ordination.

At seven years old I received ordination. I’ve attained the three knowledges; oh, the excellence of the teaching!

Thag 7.4

Thag 7.4
Sopāka (2nd)
Sopākattheragāthā

I saw the supreme person walking mindfully in the shade of the terrace, so I approached, and bowed to the supreme among men.

Arranging my robe over one shoulder and clasping my hands together, I walked alongside that stainless one, supreme among all beings.

The wise one, expert in questions, questioned me. Brave and fearless, I answered the teacher.

When all his questions were answered, the Realized One congratulated me. Looking around the mendicant Saṅgha, he said the following:

“It is a blessing for the people of Aṅga and Magadha that this person enjoys their robe and almsfood, requisites and lodgings, their respect and service—it’s a blessing for them,” he declared.

“Sopāka, from this day on you are invited to come and see me. And Sopāka, let this be your ordination.”

At seven years old I received ordination. I bear my final body—oh, the excellence of the teaching!

Thag 7.5

Thag 7.5
Sarabhaṅga
Sarabhaṅgattheragāthā

I broke the reeds off with my hands, made a hut, and stayed there. That's how I became known as "Reed-breaker".

But now it's not appropriate for me to break reeds with my hands. The training rules have been laid down for us by Gotama the renowned.

Previously, I, Sarabhaṅga, didn't see the disease in its entirety. But now I have seen the disease, as I've practiced what was taught by he who is beyond the gods.

Gotama traveled by that straight road; the same path traveled by Vipassī, by Sikhī, Vessabhū, Kakusandha, Koṇāgamana, and Kassapa.

These seven Buddhas have plunged into the ending, free of craving, without grasping, having become Dhamma, poised. They have taught this Dhamma out of compassion for living creatures—suffering, origin, path, and cessation, the ending of suffering. In these four noble truths, the endless suffering of transmigration finally comes to an end. When the body breaks up, and life comes to an end, there are no future lives; I'm everywhere well-freed.

Thag 8.1

Thag 8.1
Mahākaccāyana
Mahākaccāyanattheragāthā

Don’t get involved in lots of work, avoid people, and don’t try to acquire things. If you’re eager and greedy for flavors, you’ll miss the goal that brings such happiness.

They know it really is a bog, this homage and veneration in respectable families. Honor is a subtle dart, hard to extract, and hard for a sinner to give up.

The deeds of a mortal aren’t bad because of what others do. You yourself should not do bad, for mortals have deeds as their kin.

You’re not a bandit because of what someone says, you’re not a sage because of what someone says; but as you know yourself, so the gods will know you.

Others don’t understand that we need restraint in this. But those who do understand this, being clever, settle their conflicts.

A wise person lives on even after loss of wealth; but without gaining wisdom, even a rich person doesn’t really live.

All is heard with the ear, all is seen with the eye; the wise ought not forsake all that is seen and heard.

Though you have eyes, be as if blind; though you have ears, be as if deaf; though you have wisdom, be as if dumb; though you have strength, be as if feeble. And when issues come up lie as still as a corpse.

Thag 8.2

Thag 8.2
Sirimitta
Sirimittattheragāthā

Free of anger and hostility, free of deceit, and rid of slander; that’s how such a mendicant doesn’t grieve after passing away.

Free of anger and hostility, free of deceit, and rid of slander; that’s how a mendicant with sense doors always guarded doesn’t grieve after passing away.

Free of anger and hostility, free of deceit, and rid of slander; that’s how a mendicant of good morals doesn’t grieve after passing away.

Free of anger and hostility, free of deceit, and rid of slander; that’s how a mendicant with good friends doesn’t grieve after passing away.

Free of anger and hostility, free of deceit, and rid of slander; that’s how a mendicant of good wisdom, doesn’t grieve after passing away.

Whoever has faith in the Realized One, unwavering and well grounded; whose ethical conduct is good, praised and loved by the noble ones; who has confidence in the Saṅgha, and correct view: they’re said to be prosperous; their life is not in vain.

So let the wise devote themselves to faith, ethical behavior, confidence, and insight into the teaching, remembering the instructions of the Buddhas.

Thag 8.3

Thag 8.3
Mahāpanthaka
Mahāpanthakattheragāthā

When I first saw the Teacher who fears nothing from any quarter, I was struck with a sense of urgency, seeing the supreme among men.

Anyone who, having found such a Teacher, would lose them again, is like one who, when approached by Lady Luck, would ward her off with their hands and feet.

Then I left behind my children and wives, my riches and my grain; I had my hair and beard cut off, and went forth to homelessness.

Endowed with the monastic training and livelihood, my sense faculties well-restrained, paying homage to the Buddha, I meditated undefeated.

Then a wish occurred to me, my heart's truest wish: I wouldn't sit down, not even for a moment, until the dart of craving was plucked.

As I meditate like this, see my energy and vigor! I've attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

I know my past lives, my clairvoyance is clarified; I'm perfected, worthy of offerings, liberated, free of attachments.

Then, at the end of the night, as the rising of the sun drew near, all craving was dried up, so I sat down cross-legged.

Thag 9.1

Thag 9.1
Bhūta
Bhūtattheragāthā

When an astute person knows, “Old age and death are suffering; yet an ignorant ordinary person is bound to them”, completely understanding suffering, being mindful, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When clinging, the carrier of suffering, and craving, the carrier of this painful mass of proliferation, are destroyed, and one is mindful, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When the eightfold way, so full of grace, the supreme path, cleanser of all corruptions, is seen with wisdom; and one is mindful, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When one develops that peaceful state, sorrowless, stainless, unconditioned, cleanser of all corruptions, cutter of fetters and bonds: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When the thunder-cloud rumbles in the sky, while the rain pours on the path of birds all around, and a monk has gone to a mountain cave, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When sitting on a riverbank covered in flowers, garlanded with brightly colored forest plants, one is truly happy, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When it is midnight in a lonely forest, and the lions roar as the sky pours down, and a monk has gone to a mountain cave, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When one’s own thoughts have been cut off, between two mountains, sheltered inside a cleft, without stress or heartlessness, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

When one is happy, destroyer of stains, heartlessness, and sorrow, free of obstructions, entanglements, and thorns, and with all defilements annihilated, practicing absorption: there is no greater pleasure than this.

Thag 10.1

Thag 10.1
Kāḷudāyī
Kāḷudāyittheragāthā

“The trees are now crimson, venerable sir, they’ve shed their foliage, and are ready to fruit. They’re splendid, as if aflame; great hero, this season is full of flavor.

The blossoming trees are delightful, wafting their scent all around, in all directions. They’ve shed their leaves and wish to fruit, hero, it is time to depart from here.

It is neither too hot nor too cold, venerable sir, it’s a pleasant season for traveling. Let the Sākiyans and Koliyans see you, heading west across the Rohiṇī river.

In hope, the field is plowed; the seed is sown in hope; in hope, merchants travel the seas, carrying rich cargoes. The hope that I stand for: may it succeed!

Again and again, they sow the seed; again and again, the lord god sends rain; again and again, farmers plow the field; again and again, grain is produced for the nation.

Again and again, the beggars wander, again and again, the donors give. Again and again, when the donors have given, again and again, they take their place in heaven.

A hero of vast wisdom purifies seven generations of the family in which they’re born. Sakya, I believe you’re the king of kings, since you fathered the one who is truly called a sage.

The father of the great seer is named Suddhodana; and the Buddha’s mother is named Māyā. Having borne the Bodhisatta in her belly, she rejoices in the heaven of the Thirty-Three.

When she died and passed away from here, she was blessed with heavenly sensual pleasures; enjoying the five kinds of sensual stimulation. Gotamī is surrounded by those hosts of gods.”

“I’m the son of the Buddha, the incomparable Aṅgīrasa, the poised, the bearer of the unbearable. You, Sakya, are my father’s father; Gotama, you are my grandfather in the Dhamma.”

Thag 10.2

Thag 10.2
Ekavihāriya
Ekavihāriyattheragāthā

If no-one else is found in front or behind, it's extremely pleasant to be dwelling alone in a forest grove.

Come now, I'll go alone to the wilderness praised by the Buddha. It's pleasant for a mendicant to be dwelling alone and resolute.

Alone and self-disciplined, I'll quickly enter the delightful forest, which gives joy to meditators, and is frequented by rutting elephants.

In Sītavana, so full of flowers, in a cool mountain cave, I'll bathe my limbs and walk mindfully alone.

When will I dwell alone, without a companion, in the great wood, so delightful, my task complete, free of defilements?

This is what I want to do: may my wish succeed! I'll make it happen myself, for no-one can do another's duty.

Fastening my armor, I'll enter the forest. I won't leave without attaining the end of defilements.

As the cool breeze blows with fragrant scent, I'll split ignorance apart, sitting on the mountain-peak.

In a forest grove covered with blossoms, in a cave so very cool, I take pleasure in the Mountainfold, happy with the happiness of freedom.

I've got all I wished for like the moon on the fifteenth day. With the utter ending of all defilements, now there'll be no more future lives.

Thag 10.3

Thag 10.3
Mahākappina
Mahākappinattheragāthā

If you're prepared for the future, both the good and the bad, then those, whether enemies or well-wishers, who examine you for weakness will see none.

One who has fulfilled, developed, and gradually consolidated mindfulness of breathing as it was taught by the Buddha: they light up the world, like the moon freed from a cloud.

Yes, my mind is clean, limitless and well-developed; it has broken through and been uplifted—it radiates in every direction.

A wise person lives on even after loss of wealth; but without gaining wisdom, even a rich person doesn't really live.

Wisdom questions what is learned; wisdom grows fame and reputation; a person who has wisdom finds happiness even among sufferings.

It's not a teaching just for today; it isn't incredible or amazing. When you're born, you die—what's amazing about that?

For anyone who is born, death always follows after life. Everyone who is born here dies here; such is the nature of living creatures.

The things that are useful for the living are of no use for the dead—not fame, not celebrity, not praise by ascetics and brahmins. For the dead, there is only weeping.

And weeping impairs the eye and the body; complexion, health, and intelligence decline. Your enemies rejoice; but your well-wishers are not happy.

So you should wish that those who stay in your family have intelligence and learning, and do their duty through the power of wisdom, just as you'd cross a full river by boat.

Thag 10.4

Thag 10.4
Cūḷapanthaka
Cūḷapanthakattheragāthā

My progress was slow, I was despised in the past. Even my brother turned me away, saying, “Go home now.”

Turned away at the gate of the Saṅgha’s monastery, I stood there sadly, longing for the dispensation.

Then the Buddha came and touched my head. Taking me by the arm, he brought me into the Saṅgha’s monastery.

The Teacher, out of compassion, gave me a foot-wiping cloth, saying: “Focus your awareness exclusively on this clean cloth.”

After hearing his words, I happily did his bidding. I practiced meditative immersion for the attainment of the highest goal.

I know my past lives, my clairvoyance is clarified; I’ve attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

I, Panthaka, created a thousand images of myself, and sat in the delightful mango grove until the time for the meal offering was announced.

Then the teacher sent to me a messenger to announce the time. When the time was announced, I flew to him through the air.

I paid homage at the teacher’s feet, and sat to one side. When he knew I was seated, the teacher received the offering.

Recipient of gifts from the whole world, receiver of sacrifices, field of merit for humanity, he received the religious donation.

Thag 10.5

Thag 10.5
Kappa
Kappattheragāthā

Filled with different kinds of dirt, a great producer of dung, like a stagnant cesspool, a huge boil, a bad wound, full of pus and blood, sunk in a toilet-pit, trickling with fluids, this rotting body always oozes.

Bound by sixty tendons, coated with a fleshy coating, clothed in a jacket of skin, this rotting body is worthless.

Held together by a skeleton of bones, and bound by sinews; it assumes postures due to a complex of many things.

We set out in the certainty of death, in the presence of the King of Death; and having discarded the body right here, a person goes where he likes.

Shrouded by ignorance, tied by the four ties, this body is sinking in the flood, caught in the net of the underlying tendencies.

Yoked to the five hindrances, afflicted by thought, stuck to the root of craving, hidden by delusion:

that is how the body goes on, propelled by the mechanism of deeds. But existence ends in perishing; separated, the body perishes.

Those blind, ordinary people who think of this body as theirs, swell the horrors of the charnel ground, taking hold of future lives.

The undefiled who shun this body like a snake smeared with dung, having expelled the root of rebirth, will be fully extinguished.

Thag 10.6

Thag 10.6
Upasena son of Vaṅgantā
Vaṅgantaputtaupasenattheragāthā

In order to go on retreat, a monk should stay in lodgings that are secluded and quiet, frequented by beasts of prey.

Having gathered scraps from rubbish heaps, cemeteries and streets, and making an outer robe from them, one should wear that coarse robe.

Humbling their heart, a mendicant should walk for alms from family to family indiscriminately, with sense doors guarded, well-restrained.

They should be content even with coarse food, not hoping for lots of flavors. The mind that's greedy for flavors doesn't enjoy absorption.

With few wishes, content, a sage should live secluded, mixing with neither householders nor the homeless.

They should present themselves as if stupid or dumb; an astute person would not speak overly long in the midst of the Saṅgha.

They would not insult anyone, and would avoid causing damage. Restrained in the monastic code, they would eat in moderation.

Expert in the arising of thought, they would grasp well the pattern of the mind. They would be devoted to practicing serenity and discernment at the right time.

Though endowed with energy and perseverance, and always devoted to meditation, a wise person would not be too sure of themselves, until they have attained the end of suffering.

For a mendicant who meditates in this way, longing for purification, all their defilements wither away, and they realize quenching.

Thag 10.7

Thag 10.7
Another Gotama
(Apara) Gotamattheragāthā

You should understand your own purpose, and consider the dispensation carefully, as well as what's appropriate for one who has entered the ascetic life.

Good friendship in the community, undertaking plenty of training, eagerness to learn from the teachers—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Respect for the Buddha, reverence for the Dhamma as it really is, esteem for the Saṅgha—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Commitment to good conduct and alms-resort, a livelihood that is pure and blameless, and stilling the mind—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

An impressive deportment in things that should be done, and in those better avoided; commitment to the higher mind—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Wilderness lodgings, remote and quiet, fit for use by a sage—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Ethics, learning, investigation of teachings in line with the truth, and penetration of the truths—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Developing the perceptions of impermanence, non-self, and unattractiveness, and dissatisfaction with the whole world—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Developing the awakening factors, the bases for psychic power, the faculties and powers, and the noble eightfold path—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

A sage should abandon craving, defilements shattered, root and all, they should live liberated—this is appropriate for an ascetic.

Thag 11.1

Thag 11.1
Saṅkicca
Saṅkiccattheragāthā

“What good does it do you to be in the grove, my dear? You’re like a little bird in the rain! The city of Verambhā is nice for you—seclusion is for meditators.”

“Just as the wind in Verambhā scatters the clouds as they pour down, so the city scatters my perception of seclusion.”

“It’s all black and born of an egg—the crow that lives in the charnel ground rouses my mindfulness, based on dispassion for the body.

Not protected by others, nor protecting others: such a monk sleeps at ease, without concern for sensual pleasures.

The water’s clear and the rocks are broad, monkeys and deer are all around; festooned with dewy moss, these rocky crags delight me!

I’ve stayed in the wilderness, in caves and caverns and remote lodgings frequented by beasts of prey.

‘May these beings be killed! May they be slaughtered! May they suffer!’—I’m not aware of having any such ignoble, malicious intentions.

I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I’ve attained the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness—the ending of all fetters.

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, like a worker waiting for their wages.

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, aware and mindful.”

Thag 12.1

Thag 12.1
Sīlava
Sīlavattheragāthā

One should train just in ethical conduct, for in this world, when ethical conduct is cultivated and well-trained, it provides all success.

Wishing for three kinds of happiness—praise, prosperity, and to delight in heaven after passing away—the wise would take care of their ethics.

The well-behaved have many friends, because of their self-restraint. But one lacking ethics, of bad conduct, drives away their friends.

A person whose ethics are bad has ill-repute and infamy. A person whose conduct is ethical always has a good reputation, fame, and praise.

Ethical conduct is the starting point and foundation; the mother at the head of all good things: that's why you should purify your ethics.

Ethics provide a boundary and a restraint, an enjoyment for the mind; the ford where all the Buddhas cross over: that's why you should purify your ethics.

Ethics are the matchless power; ethics are the ultimate weapon; ethics are the best ornament; ethics are a marvelous coat of armor.

Ethics are a mighty bridge; ethics are the unsurpassed scent; ethics are the best perfume, that float from place to place.

Ethics are the best provision; ethics are the unsurpassed supply for a journey; ethics are the best vehicle that take you from place to place.

In this life they're criticized; after departing they grieve in a lower realm; a fool is unhappy everywhere, because they are unsteady in ethics.

In this life they're renowned; after departing they're happy in heaven; a wise one is happy everywhere, because they are steady in ethics.

Ethical conduct is best in this life, but one with wisdom is supreme. Someone with both virtue and wisdom is victorious among men and gods.

Thag 12.2

Thag 12.2
Sunīta
Sunītattheragāthā

I was born in a low-class family. We were poor, with little to eat. My job was lowly—I threw out the old flowers.

Shunned by people, I was disregarded and held in contempt. I humbled my heart and paid respects to many people.

Then I saw the Buddha at the fore of the mendicant Saṅgha; the great hero was entering the capital city of Magadhā.

I dropped my flail and approached to pay homage. Out of compassion for me, the supreme man stood still.

When I had paid homage at the Teacher's feet, I stood to one side and asked the supreme being for the going-forth.

Then the Teacher, being sympathetic, and having compassion for the whole world, said to me, "Come, monk!" That was my ordination.

Staying alone in the wilderness, meditating tirelessly, I have completed what the Teacher taught, just as the victor advised me.

In the first watch of the night, I recollected my past lives. In the middle watch of the night, I purified my clairvoyance. In the last watch of the night, I shattered the mass of darkness.

At the end of the night, as the sunrise drew near, Indra and Brahmā came and revered me with joined hands.

"Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! Since your defilements are ended, you, sir, are worthy of a religious donation."

When he saw me honored by the assembly of gods, the teacher smiled and said the following:

"By fervor and spiritual practice, by restraint and by self-control: that's how to become a brahmin, this is the supreme brahmin."

Thag 13.1

Thag 13.1
Soṇakoḷivisa
Soṇakoḷivisattheragāthā

He who was special in the kingdom, the footman to the king of Aṅga, today is special in the Dhamma—Soṇa has gone beyond suffering.

Five to cut, five to drop, and five more to develop. When a mendicant slips five chains they're said to have crossed the flood.

If a monk is insolent and negligent, concerned only with externals, their ethics, immersion, and wisdom do not become fulfilled.

They disregard what should be done, and do what should not be done. For the insolent and the negligent, their defilements only grow.

Those that have properly undertaken constant mindfulness of the body, don't cultivate what should not be done, but always do what should be done. Mindful and aware, their defilements come to an end.

The straight path has been explained—go on it and don't turn back. Urge yourself on and take yourself to quenching.

When my energy was over-exerted, the supreme Teacher in the world created the simile of the arched harp for me. The Clear-eyed One taught the Dhamma, and when I heard what he said, I happily did his bidding.

Practicing serenity of mind for the attainment of the highest goal. I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

When you're dedicated to renunciation and seclusion of the heart; when you're dedicated to kindness and the end of grasping;

when you're dedicated to the ending of craving and clarity of heart; and you've seen the arising of the senses, your mind is rightly freed.

For that one, rightly freed, a mendicant with peaceful mind, there's nothing to be improved, and nothing more to do.

As the wind cannot stir a solid mass of rock, so too sights, tastes, sounds, smells, and touches—the lot—and ideas, whether liked or disliked, don’t disturb the poised one. Their mind is steady and unfettered as they observe disappearance.

Thag 14.1

Thag 14.1
Revata of the Acacia Wood
Khadiravaniyarevatattheragāthā

Since I've gone forth from the lay life to homelessness, I'm not aware of any intention that is ignoble and hateful.

"May these beings be killed! May they be slaughtered! May they suffer!"—I'm not aware of having any such intentions in all this long while.

I have been aware of loving-kindness, limitless and well-developed; gradually consolidated as it was taught by the Buddha.

I'm friend and comrade to all, compassionate for all beings! I develop a mind of love, always delighting in harmlessness.

Unfaltering, unshakable, I gladden the mind. I develop a divine meditation, which sinners do not cultivate.

When in a meditation free of placing the mind, a disciple of the Buddha is at that moment blessed with noble silence.

As a rocky mountain is unwavering and well grounded, so when delusion ends, a monk, like a mountain, doesn't tremble.

To the man who has not a blemish who is always seeking purity, even a hair-tip of evil seems as big as a cloud.

As a frontier city is guarded inside and out, so you should ward yourselves—don't let the moment pass you by.

I don't long for death; I don't long for life; I await my time, like a worker waiting for their wages.

I don't long for death; I don't long for life; I await my time, aware and mindful.

I've served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I've attained the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness —the ending of all fetters.

Persist with diligence: this is my instruction. Come, I'll be fully extinguished—I'm liberated in every way.

Thag 14.2

Thag 14.2
Godatta
Godattattheragāthā

Just as a fine thoroughbred, yoked to a carriage, endures the load. Though oppressed by the heavy burden, it doesn't shake off the yoke.

So too, those who are as full of wisdom as the ocean is with water, don't look down on others; this is the teaching of the noble ones for living creatures.

People who fall under the sway of time, the sway of rebirth in this or that state, undergo suffering, and those young men grieve in this life.

Elated by things that bring happiness, downcast by things that bring suffering: this pair destroys the fool who doesn't see things as they are.

But those who in suffering, and in happiness, and in the middle have overcome the weaver —they stand like a boundary pillar, neither elated nor downcast.

Not to gain nor loss, not to fame nor reputation, not to criticism nor praise, not to suffering nor happiness—the wise cling to nothing, like a droplet on a lotus-leaf. They are happy everywhere, and victorious everywhere.

There's legitimate loss, and there's illegitimate gain. Legitimate loss is better than illegitimate gain.

There's the fame of the unintelligent, and there's the disrepute of the discerning. The disrepute of the discerning is better than the fame of the unintelligent.

There's praise by fools, and there's criticism by the discerning. Criticism by the discerning is better than praise by fools.

There's the happiness of sensual pleasures, and there's the suffering of seclusion. The suffering of seclusion is better than the happiness of sensual pleasures.

There's life without principles, and there's death with principles. Death with principles is better than life without principles.

Those who've given up desire and anger, their minds at peace regarding rebirth in this or that state, wander in the world unattached, for them nothing is beloved or unloved.

Having developed the awakening factors, the faculties and the powers, having arrived at ultimate peace, the undefiled become fully extinguished.

Thag 15.1

Thag 15.1
Koṇḍañña Who Understood
Aññāsikoṇḍaññattheragāthā

“My confidence grew as I heard the teaching, so full of flavor. Dispassion is what was taught, without any grasping at all.”

“There are so many pretty things in this vast territory. They disturb one’s thoughts, it seems to me, attractive, provoking lust.

Just as a rain cloud would settle the dust blown up by the wind, so thoughts settle down when seen with wisdom.

All conditions are impermanent—when this is seen with wisdom one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.

All conditions are suffering—when this is seen with wisdom one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.

All things are not-self—when this is seen with wisdom one grows disillusioned with suffering: this is the path to purity.”

“The senior monk who was awakened right after the Buddha, Koṇḍañña, is keenly energetic. He has given up birth and death, and has completed the spiritual journey.”

“There are floods, snares, and strong posts, and a mountain hard to crack; snapping the posts and snares, breaking the mountain so hard to break, crossing over to the far shore, a meditator is freed from Māra’s bonds.

When a mendicant is haughty and fickle, relying on bad friends, they sink down in the great flood, overcome by a wave.

But one not restless or fickle, alert, with senses restrained, intelligent, with good friends, makes an end of suffering.

With knobbly knees, thin and veiny, eating and drinking in moderation—this person’s spirit is undaunted.

Pestered by flies and mosquitoes in the wilds, the formidable forest, one should mindfully endure, like an elephant at the head of the battle.

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, like a worker waiting for their wages.

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, aware and mindful.

I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I’ve attained the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness —what use do I have for pupils?”

Thag 15.2

Thag 15.2
Udāyī
Udāyittheragāthā

Awakened as a human being, self-tamed and immersed in samādhi, following the spiritual path, he loves peace of mind.

Revered by people, gone beyond all things, even the gods revere him; so I've heard from the perfected one.

He has transcended all fetters, and escaped from entanglements. Delighting to renounce sensual pleasures, he's freed like gold from stone.

That giant outshines all, like the Himalaya beside other mountains. Of all those named "giant", he is truly named, supreme.

I shall extol the giant for you, for he does nothing monstrous. Gentleness and harmlessness are two feet of the giant.

Mindfulness and awareness are his two other feet. Faith is the giant's trunk, and equanimity his white tusks.

Mindfulness is his neck, his head is wisdom—investigation and thinking about principles. His belly is the sacred hearth of the Dhamma, and his tail is seclusion.

Practicing absorption, enjoying the breath, he is serene within. The giant is serene when walking, the giant is serene when standing, the giant is serene when lying down, and when sitting, the giant is serene. The giant is restrained everywhere: this is the accomplishment of the giant.

He eats blameless things, he doesn't eat blameworthy things. When he gets food and clothes, he avoids storing them up.

Having severed all bonds, fetters large and small, wherever he goes, he goes without concern.

A white lotus, fragrant and delightful, sprouts in water and grows there, but the water doesn't cling to it.

Just so the Buddha is born in the world, and lives in the world, but the world doesn't stick to him, as water does not stick to the lotus.

A great blazing fire dies down when the fuel runs out. And when the coals have gone out it's said to be "extinguished".

This simile is taught by the discerning to express the meaning clearly. Great giants will understand what the giant taught the giant.

Free of greed, free of hate, free of delusion, undefiled; the giant, giving up his body, undefiled, will be fully extinguished.

Thag 16.1

Thag 16.1
Adhimutta (2nd)
Adhimuttattheragāthā

“Those who we killed in the past, whether for sacrifice or for wealth, without exception were afraid; they trembled and they squealed.

But you’re not scared; you look even calmer than before. Why don’t you cry out in such a terrifying situation?”

“There isn’t any mental suffering for one without hope, village chief. All fears are left behind by one whose fetters have ended.

When the conduit to rebirth is ended, and the truth is seen as it is, there is no fear of death; it’s like laying down a burden.

I’ve lived the spiritual life well, and developed the path well, too. I do not fear death; it’s like the passing of a disease.

I’ve lived the spiritual life well, and developed the path well, too. I’ve seen that there’s nothing gratifying in existences, like someone who has tasted poison, then thrown it out.

One who has gone beyond, without grasping, they’ve completed the task and are free of defilements. They are content at the end of life, like someone released from execution.

Having realized the supreme Dhamma, without needing anything in the whole world, one doesn’t grieve at death; for it’s like escaping from a burning house.

Whatever has come to pass, wherever life is obtained, there is no Lord of all that: so said the great seer.

Whoever understands this as it was taught by the Buddha doesn’t grab on to any new life, like you wouldn’t grab a hot iron ball.

It doesn’t occur to me, ‘I existed in the past’; nor, ‘I will exist in the future’. All conditions will disappear—why weep over that?

Seeing truly the bare arising of phenomena, and the bare process of conditions, there is no fear, village chief.

The world is like grass and sticks: when this is seen with wisdom, not finding anything to be mine, you won’t grieve, thinking ‘I don’t have it’.

I’m fed up with the body; I have no need for another life. This body will be broken up, and there won’t be another.

Do what you want with my corpse. I won’t be angry or attached on account of that.”

When they heard these words, so astonishing and hair-raising, the young men laid down their swords and spoke these words:

“What have you practiced, Venerable? And who is your teacher? Whose instructions do we follow to gain the sorrowless state?”

“The knower of all, the seer of all: the victor is my teacher. He is a Teacher of great compassion, healer of the whole world.

He taught this Dhamma, leading to ending, unsurpassed. Following his instructions, you can gain the sorrowless state.”

When the bandits heard the good words of the seer, they laid down their swords and weapons. Some refrained from their former deeds, while others chose the going-forth.

Having gone forth in the teaching of the Holy One, those astute ones developed the awakening factors and the powers. Elated, happy, their faculties complete, they realized the state of quenching, the unconditioned.

Thag 16.2

Thag 16.2
Pārāpariya (2nd)
Pārāpariyattheragāthā

This thought came to the ascetic, the monk Pārāpariya, as he was seated alone meditating in seclusion:

“Following what procedure, what observance, what conduct, may I do what I need to do for myself, without harming anyone else?

The faculties of human beings can lead to both welfare and harm. Unguarded they lead to harm; guarded they lead to welfare.

By protecting the faculties, taking care of the faculties, I can do what I need to do for myself without harming anyone else.

If your eye wanders among sights without check, not seeing the danger, you’re not freed from suffering.

If your ear wanders among sounds without check, not seeing the danger, you’re not freed from suffering.

If, not seeing the escape, you indulge in a smell, you’re not freed from suffering, being besotted by smells.

Recollecting the sour, the sweet and the bitter, captivated by craving for taste, you don’t understand the heart.

Recollecting lovely and pleasurable touches, full of desire, you experience many kinds of suffering because of lust.

Unable to protect the mind from such thoughts, suffering follows them because of all five.

This body is full of pus and blood, it’s home to many carcasses; but cunning people decorate it like a lovely painted casket.

You don’t understand that the sweetness of honey turns bitter, and the bonds to those we love cause pain, like a razor’s edge smeared with honey.

Full of lust for the sight of a woman, for the voice and the smells of a woman, for a woman’s touch, you experience many kinds of suffering.

All of a woman’s streams flow from five to five. Whoever, being energetic, is able to curb these, purposeful and firm in principle, is clever and clear-seeing. Though he might enjoy himself, his duty is connected with the teaching and its goal.

One who’s diligent and discerning, thinking, “This ought not be done”, would avoid a useless task that’s doomed to failure.

Whatever is meaningful, and whatever happiness is principled, let one undertake and follow that: this is the best happiness.

They want to get hold of what belongs to others by any means, fair or foul. They kill, injure, and torment, violently plundering what belongs to others.

Just as a strong person when building knocks out a peg with a peg, so the skillful person knocks out the faculties with the faculties.

Developing faith, energy, immersion, mindfulness, and wisdom; destroying the five with the five, the brahmin walks on without worry.

Purposeful and firm in principle, having fulfilled in every respect the instructions spoken by the Buddha, that person prospers in happiness.”

Thag 16.3

Thag 16.3
Telakāni
Telakānittheragāthā

For a long time, sadly, though I keenly contemplated the teaching, I gained no peace of mind. So I asked this of ascetics and brahmins:

“Who has crossed over the world? Whose attainment culminates in freedom from death? Whose teaching do I accept to understand the ultimate goal?

I was hooked inside, like a fish gulping bait; bound like the titan Vepaciti in Mahinda’s trap.

Dragging it along, I’m not free from grief and lamentation. Who will free me from bonds in the world, so that I may know awakening?

What ascetic or brahmin points out what is frail? Whose teaching do I accept to sweep away old age and death?

Tied up with uncertainty and doubt, secured by the power of pride, stiff as a mind beset by anger; the arrow of covetousness, propelled by the bow of craving, is stuck in my twice-fifteen ribs—see how it stands in my breast, breaking my strong heart.

Speculative views are not abandoned, they are sharpened by memories and intentions; and pierced by this I tremble, like a leaf blowing in the wind.

Having arisen within, what belongs to me burns quickly, in that place where the body always heads with its six sense-fields of contact.

I don’t see a healer who can pull out my dart of doubt without a lance or some other blade.

Without knife or wound, who will pull out this dart that’s stuck inside me, without harming any part of my body?

He really would be the Lord of the Dhamma, the best one to cure the damage of poison; when I have fallen into deep waters, he would give me his show me the shore.

I’ve plunged into a lake, and I can’t wash off the mud and dirt. It’s full of fraud, jealousy, pride, and dullness and drowsiness.

Like a thunder-cloud of restlessness, like a rain-cloud of fetters; lustful thoughts are winds that sweep off a person with bad views.

The streams flow everywhere; a weed springs up and remains. Who will block the streams? Who will cut the weed?”

“Venerable sir, build a dam to block the streams. Don’t let your mind-made streams cut you down suddenly like a tree.”

That is how the teacher whose weapon is wisdom, surrounded by the Saṅgha of seers, was my shelter when I was full of fear, seeking the far shore from the near.

As I was being swept away, he gave me a strong, simple ladder, made of the heartwood of Dhamma, and he said to me: “Do not fear.”

I climbed the tower of mindfulness meditation, and checked back down at people delighting in substantial reality, as I’d obsessed over in the past.

When I saw the path, as I was embarking on the ship, without fixating on the self, I saw the supreme landing-place.

The dart that arises in oneself, and that which stems from the conduit to rebirth: he taught the supreme path for the canceling of these.

For a long time it had lain within me; for a long time it was fixed in me: the Buddha cast off the knot, curing the damage of poison.

Thag 16.4

Thag 16.4
Raṭṭhapāla
Raṭṭhapālattheragāthā

“See this fancy puppet, a body built of sores, diseased, obsessed over, in which nothing lasts at all.

See this fancy figure, with its gems and earrings; it is bones encased in skin, made pretty by its clothes.

Rouged feet and powdered face may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

Hair in eight braids and eyeshadow may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

A rotting body all adorned like a freshly painted makeup box may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

The hunter laid his snare, but the deer didn’t spring the trap. I’ve eaten the bait and now I go, leaving the trapper to lament.

The hunter’s snare is broken, but the deer didn’t spring the trap. I’ve eaten the bait and now I go, leaving the deer-hunter to grieve.”

“I see rich people in the world who, because of delusion, give not the wealth they’ve earned. Greedily, they hoard their riches, yearning for ever more sensual pleasures.

A king who conquered the earth by force, ruling the land from sea to sea, unsatisfied with the near shore of the ocean, would still yearn for the further shore.

Not just the king, but others too, reach death not rid of craving. They leave the body still wanting, for in this world sensual pleasures never satisfy.

Relatives lament, their hair disheveled, saying ‘Ah! Alas! They’re not immortal!’ They take out the body wrapped in a shroud, heap up a pyre, and burn it there.

It’s poked with stakes while being burnt, in just a single cloth, all wealth gone. Relatives, friends, and companions can’t help you when you’re dying.

Heirs take your riches, while beings fare on according to their deeds. Riches don’t follow you when you die; nor do children, wife, wealth, nor kingdom.

Longevity isn’t gained by riches, nor does wealth banish old age; for the wise say this life is short, it’s perishable and not eternal.

The rich and the poor feel its touch; the fool and the wise feel it too. But the fool lies stricken by their own folly, while the wise don’t tremble at the touch.

Therefore wisdom’s much better than wealth, since by wisdom you reach consummation in this life. But if because of delusion you don’t reach consummation, you’ll do evil deeds in life after life.

One who enters a womb and the world beyond, will transmigrate from one life to the next. While someone of little wisdom, placing faith in them, also enters a womb and the world beyond.

As a bandit caught in a window is punished for his own bad deeds; so after departing, in the world beyond, people are punished for their own bad deeds.

Sensual pleasures are diverse, sweet, delightful, appearing in disguise they disturb the mind. Seeing danger in sensual stimulations, I went forth, O King.

As fruit falls from a tree, so people fall, young and old, when the body breaks up. Seeing this, too, I went forth, O King; the ascetic life is unfailingly better.”

“I went forth out of faith joining the victor’s dispensation. My going forth wasn’t wasted; I enjoy my food free of debt.

I saw sensual pleasures as burning, gold as a cutting blade, conception in a womb as suffering, and the hells as very fearful.

Knowing this danger, I was struck with a sense of urgency. I was stabbed, but then I found peace, attaining the end of defilements.

I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I’ve reached the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness —the ending of all fetters.”

Thag 16.5

Thag 16.5
Māluṅkyaputta (2nd)
Mālukyaputtattheragāthā

When you see a sight, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from sights. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you hear a sound, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from sounds. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you smell an odor, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from smells. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you enjoy a taste, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from tastes. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you sense a touch, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from touches. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you know an idea, mindfulness is lost as you focus on a pleasant feature. Experiencing it with a mind full of desire, you keep clinging to it.

Many feelings grow arising from thoughts. The mind is damaged by covetousness and cruelty. Heaping up suffering like this, you're said to be far from quenching.

When you see a sight with mindfulness, there's no desire for sights. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don't keep clinging to it.

Even as you see a sight and undergo a feeling, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

When you hear a sound with mindfulness, there’s no desire for sounds. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don’t keep clinging to it.

Even as you hear a sound and undergo a feeling, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

When you smell an odor with mindfulness, there’s no desire for odors. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don’t keep clinging to it.

Even as you smell an odor and undergo a feeling, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

Enjoying a taste with mindfulness, there’s no desire for tastes. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don’t keep clinging to it.

Even as you savor a taste and undergo a feeling, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

When you sense a touch with mindfulness, there’s no desire for touches. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don’t keep clinging to it.

Even as you sense a touch and get familiar with how it feels, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

When you know an idea with mindfulness, there’s no desire for ideas. Experiencing it with a mind free of desire, you don’t keep clinging to it.

Even as you know an idea and get familiar with how it feels, you wear away, you don’t heap up: that’s how to live mindfully. Eroding suffering like this, you’re said to be in the presence of quenching.

Thag 16.6

Thag 16.6
Sela
Selattheragāthā

“O Blessed One, your body’s perfect, you’re radiant, handsome, lovely to behold; golden colored, with teeth so white; you’re strong.

The characteristics of a handsome man, the marks of a great man, are all found on your body.

Your eyes are clear, your face is fair, you’re formidable, upright, majestic. In the midst of the Saṅgha of ascetics, you shine like the sun.

You’re a mendicant fine to see, with skin of golden sheen. But with such excellent appearance, what do you want with the ascetic life?

You’re fit to be a king, a wheel-turning monarch, chief of charioteers, victorious in the four quarters, lord of all India.

Aristocrats, nobles, and kings ought follow your rule. Gotama, you should reign as king of kings, lord of men!”

“I am a king, Sela”, said the Buddha to Sela, “the supreme king of the teaching. By the teaching I roll forth the wheel which cannot be rolled back.”

“You claim to be awakened,” said Sela the brahmin, “the supreme king of the teaching. ‘I roll forth the teaching’: so you say, Gotama.

Then who is your general, the disciple who follows the Teacher’s way? Who keeps rolling the wheel of the teaching you rolled forth?”

“By me the wheel was rolled forth,” said the Buddha, “the supreme wheel of the teaching. Sāriputta, taking after the Realized One, keeps it rolling on.

I have known what should be known, and developed what should be developed, and given up what should be given up: and so, brahmin, I am a Buddha.

Dispel your doubt in me—make up your mind, brahmin! The sight of a Buddha is hard to find again.

I am a Buddha, brahmin, the supreme surgeon, one of those whose appearance in the world is hard to find again.

A manifestation of divinity, unequaled, crusher of Māra's army; having subdued all my opponents, I rejoice, fearing nothing from any quarter."

"Pay heed, sirs, to what is spoken by the Clear-eyed One. The surgeon, the great hero, roars like a lion in the jungle.

A manifestation of divinity, unequaled, crusher of Māra's army; who would not be inspired by him, even one born in a dark class?

Those who wish may follow me; those who don't may go. Right here, I'll go forth in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom."

"Sir, if you endorse the teaching of the Buddha, we'll also go forth in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom."

"These three hundred brahmins with joined palms held up, ask: 'May we lead the spiritual life in your presence, Blessed One?'"

"The spiritual life is well explained," said the Buddha, "apparent in the present life, immediately effective. Here the going forth isn't in vain for one who trains with diligence."

"This is the eighth day since we went for refuge, O Clear-eyed One. In these seven days, Blessed One, we've become tamed in your teaching.

You are the Buddha, you are the Teacher, you are the sage who has overcome Māra; you have cut off the underlying tendencies, you've crossed over, and you bring humanity across.

You have transcended attachments, your defilements are shattered; by not grasping, like a lion, you've given up fear and dread.

These three hundred mendicants stand with joined palms raised. Stretch out your feet, great hero: let these giants bow to the Teacher."

Thag 16.7

Thag 16.7
Kāḷigodhāputtabhaddiya
Kāḷigodhāputtabhaddiyattheragāthā

I rode on an elephant's neck, wearing luxurious clothes. I ate rice congee with pure meat sauce.

Today I am fortunate, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Wearing rags, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Living on almsfood, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Possessing only three robes, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Wandering for alms indiscriminately, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Sitting alone, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Eating only what's put in the alms-bowl, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Never eating too late, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Living in the wilderness, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Living at the foot of a tree, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Living in the open, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Living in a charnel ground, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Accepting whatever seat is offered, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Not lying down to sleep, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Few in wishes, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Content, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Secluded, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Aloof, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Energetic, persistent, happy with the scraps in my bowl: Bhaddiya son of Godhā practices absorption without grasping.

Giving up a valuable bronze bowl, and a precious golden one, too, I took a bowl made of clay: this is my second initiation.

I used to live in a citadel with walls so high, with battlements strong and gates, all guarded by swordsmen—and yet I trembled with fear.

Today I am fortunate, free of cowardice, with fear and dread given up. Bhaddiya son of Godhā has plunged into the forest and practices absorption.

Established in the entire spectrum of ethics, developing the mind and wisdom, gradually I attained the ending of all fetters.

Thag 16.8

Thag 16.8
Aṅgulimāla
Aṅgulimālattheragāthā

“While walking, ascetic, you say ‘I’ve stopped.’ And I have stopped, but you tell me I’ve not. I’m asking you this, ascetic: how is it you’ve stopped and I have not?”

“Aṅgulimāla, I have forever stopped—I’ve laid aside violence towards all creatures. But you can’t stop yourself from harming living creatures; that’s why I’ve stopped, but you have not.”

“Oh, at long last a renowned great seer, an ascetic has followed me into this deep wood. Now that I’ve heard your verse on Dhamma, I shall discard a thousand evils.”

With these words, the bandit hurled his sword and weapons down a cliff into an abyss. He venerated the Holy One’s feet, and asked the Buddha for the going forth right away.

Then the Buddha, the compassionate great seer, the teacher of the world with its gods, said to him, “Come, monk!” And with that he became a monk.

“He who once was heedless, but turned to heedfulness, lights up the world, like the moon freed from a cloud.

Someone whose bad deed is supplanted by the good, lights up the world, like the moon freed from a cloud.

A young mendicant devoted to the Buddha’s teaching, lights up the world, like the moon freed from a cloud.

May even my enemies hear a Dhamma talk! May even my enemies devote themselves to the Buddha’s teaching! May even my enemies associate with those good people who establish others in the Dhamma!

May even my enemies hear Dhamma at the right time, from those who teach acceptance, praising acquiescence; and may they follow that path!

For then they’d never wish harm upon myself or others. Having arrived at ultimate peace, they’d look after creatures firm and frail.

For irrigators guide the water, and fletchers straighten arrows; carpenters carve timber—but the astute tame themselves.

Some tame by using the rod, some with goads, and some with whips. But the poised one tamed me without rod or sword.

My name is ‘Harmless’, though I used to be harmful. The name I bear today is true, for I do no harm to anyone.

I used to be a bandit, the notorious Aṅgulimāla. Swept away in a great flood, I went to the Buddha for refuge.

I used to have blood on my hands, the notorious Aṅgulimāla. See the refuge I’ve found—the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I’ve done many of the sort of deeds that lead to a bad destination. The result of my deeds has already struck me, so I enjoy my food free of debt.

Fools and half-wits devote themselves to negligence. But the wise protect diligence as their best treasure.

Don’t devote yourself to negligence, or delight in sexual intimacy. For if you’re diligent and practice absorption, you’ll attain ultimate happiness.

It was welcome, not unwelcome, the advice I got was good. Of the well-explained teachings, I arrived at the best.

It was welcome, not unwelcome, the advice I got was good. I’ve attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.”

“In the wilderness, at a tree’s root, on mountains, or in caves—it used to be that wherever I stood, my mind was anxious.

But now I lie down happily and stand up happily, I live my life happily, out of Māra’s reach; the teacher had compassion for me.

I once was of brahmin birth, highborn on both sides, now I’m a son of the Holy One, the Teacher, King of Dhamma.

I am rid of craving, free of grasping, my sense doors are guarded and well-restrained. I’ve destroyed the root of misery, and attained the ending of defilements.

I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.”

Thag 16.9

Thag 16.9
Anuruddha
Anuruddhattheragāthā

Leaving my mother and father behind, as well as sisters, kinsmen, and brothers; having given up the five sensual titillations, Anuruddha practices absorption.

Surrounded by song and dance, awakened by cymbals and gongs, he did not find purification while delighting in Māra's domain.

But he has gone beyond all that, and delights in the Buddha's teaching. Having crossed over the entire flood, Anuruddha practices absorption.

Sights, sounds, tastes, smells, and touches so delightful: having crossed over these as well, Anuruddha practices absorption.

Returning from almsround, alone, without companion, seeking rags from the dust heap, Anuruddha is without defilements.

The thoughtful sage selected rags from the dust heap; he picked them up, washed, dyed, and wore them; Anuruddha is without defilements.

The principles of someone who has many wishes and is not content, who socializes and is conceited, are wicked and corrupting.

But someone who is mindful, few of wishes, content and untroubled, delighting in seclusion, joyful, always resolute and energetic; their principles are skillful, leading to awakening; they are without defilements—so said the great seer.

"Knowing my thoughts, the supreme Teacher in the world came to me in a mind-made body, using his psychic power.

He taught me more than I had thought of. The Buddha who loves non-proliferation taught me non-proliferation.

Understanding that teaching, I happily did his bidding. I've attained the three knowledges, and have fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

For the last fifty-five years I have not lain down to sleep. Twenty-five years have passed since I eradicated drowsiness."

“There was no more breathing for the poised one of steady heart. Imperturbable, committed to peace, the Clear-eyed One became fully extinguished.

He put up with painful feelings without flinching. The liberation of his heart was like the extinguishing of a lamp.”

“Now these touches and the other four are the last to be experienced by the sage; nor will there be other phenomena since the Buddha became fully extinguished.

Weaver of the web in the company of the gods, now there are no future lives. Transmigration through births is finished, now there’ll be no more future lives.”

“Knowing in an hour the galaxy, together with the Brahmā realm; that mendicant, a master of psychic powers, knowing the passing away and rebirth of beings, sees even the gods at that time.”

“In the past I was Annabhāra, a poor carrier of fodder. I practiced as an ascetic, the renowned Upariṭṭha.

Then I was reborn in the Sakyan clan, where I was known as ‘Anuruddha’. Surrounded by song and dance, I was awakened by cymbals and gongs.

Then I saw the Buddha, the Teacher, fearing nothing from any quarter; filling my mind with confidence in him, I went forth to homelessness.

I know my past lives, the places I used to live. I was born as Sakka, and stayed among the Thirty-Three gods.

Seven times I was a king of men ruling a kingdom, victorious in the four quarters, lord of all India. Without rod or sword, I governed by principle.

Seven from here, seven from there—fourteen transmigrations in all. I remember my past lives; at that time I stayed in the realm of the gods.

I have gained complete tranquility in immersion with five factors. Peaceful, serene, my clairvoyance is purified.

Steady in five-factored absorption, I know the passing away and rebirth of beings, their coming and going, their lives in this state and that.

I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

In the Vajjian village of Veḷuva, my life will come to an end. Beneath a thicket of bamboos, being undefiled, I will be fully extinguished.”

Thag 16.10

Thag 16.10
Pārāpariya (3rd)
Pārāpariyattheragāthā

This thought came to the ascetic in the forest full of flowers, as he was seated alone meditating in seclusion:

“The behavior of the mendicants these days seems different from when the protector of the world, the best of men, was still here.

Their robes were only for covering the private parts, and protection from the cold and wind. They ate in moderation, content with whatever they were offered.

Whether food was refined or rough, a little or a lot, they ate only for sustenance, without greed or gluttony.

They weren’t so very eager for the requisites of life, such as tonics and other necessities, as they were for the ending of defilements.

In the wilderness, at a tree’s root, in caves and caverns, fostering seclusion, they lived with that as their final goal.

They were used to simple things, unburdensome, gentle, not pompous at heart, unsullied, not scurrilous, their thoughts were intent on the goal.

That’s why they inspired confidence, in their movements, eating, and practice; their deportment was as smooth as a stream of oil.

With the utter ending of all defilements, those senior monks have now been quenched. They were great meditators and great benefactors—there are few like them today.

With the ending of good principles and understanding, the victor’s teaching, full of all excellent qualities, has fallen apart.

This is the season for bad principles and defilements. Those who are ready for seclusion are all that’s left of the true Dhamma.

As they grow, the defilements possess most people; they play with fools, it seems to me, like monsters with the mad.

Overcome by defilements, they run here and there among the bases for defilement, as if they had declared war on themselves.

Having abandoned the true teaching, they argue with each other. Following wrong views they think, ‘This is better.’

They cut off their wealth, children, and wife to go forth. But then they do what they shouldn’t, for the sake of a measly spoon of almsfood.

They eat until their bellies are full, and then they lie to sleep on their backs. When they wake up, they keep on chatting, the kind of talk that the teacher criticized.

Valuing all the arts and crafts, they train themselves in them. Not being settled inside, they think, ‘This is the goal of the ascetic life.’

They provide clay, oil, and talcum powder, water, lodgings, and food for householders, expecting more in return.

And in addition, tooth-picks, portia flowers, flowers, food to eat, well-cooked almsfood, mangoes and myrobalans.

In medicine they are like doctors, in business like householders, in makeup like prostitutes, in sovereignty like lords.

Cheats, frauds, false witnesses, sly: using multiple plans, they enjoy things of the flesh.

Pursuing shams, contrivances, and plans, by such means they accumulate a lot of wealth for the sake of their own livelihood.

They assemble the community for business rather than Dhamma. They teach the Dhamma to others for gain, not for the goal.

Those outside the Saṅgha quarrel over the Saṅgha’s property. They’re shameless, and do not care that they live on someone else’s property.

Some with shaven head and robe are not devoted to practice, but wish only to be honored, besotted with property and reverence.

When things have come to this, it’s not easy these days to realize what has not yet been realized, or to preserve what has been realized.

When shoeless on a thorny path, one would walk very mindfully; that’s how a sage should walk in the village.

Remembering the meditators of old, and recollecting their conduct, even in the latter days, it’s still possible to realize freedom from death.”

That is what the ascetic, whose faculties were fully developed, said in the sāl tree grove. The brahmin, the seer, became quenched, putting an end to all future lives.

Thag 17.1

Thag 17.1
Phussa
Phussattheragāthā

Seeing many who inspire confidence, evolved and well-restrained, the seer of the Paṇḍara clan, asked the one known as Phussa:

“In future times, what desire and motivation and behavior will people have? Please answer my question.”

“Listen to my words, Paṇḍarasa the seer, and remember them carefully, I will describe the future.

In the future many will be angry and hostile, offensive, stubborn, and devious, jealous, holding divergent views.

Imagining they understand the depths of the teaching, they remain on the near shore. Superficial and disrespectful towards the teaching, they lack respect for one another.

In the future many dangers will arise in the world. Idiots will defile the Dhamma that was taught so well.

Though bereft of good qualities, unlearned prattlers, too sure of themselves, will become powerful in running Saṅgha proceedings.

Though possessing good qualities, the conscientious and unbiased, acting in the proper spirit, will become weak in running Saṅgha proceedings.

In the future, fools will accept money, gold, and silver, fields and land, goats and sheep, and bonded servants, male and female.

Fools looking for fault in others, but unsteady in their own ethics, will wander about, insolent, like cantankerous beasts.

They’ll be haughty, wrapped in robes of blue; deceivers and flatterers, pompous and fake, they’ll wander as if they were noble ones.

With hair sleeked back with oil, fickle, their eyes painted with eye-liner, they’ll travel on the high-road, wrapped in robes of ivory color.

The deep-dyed ocher robe, worn without disgust by the free, they will come to loathe, besotted by white clothes.

They'll want lots of possessions, and be lazy, lacking energy. Weary of the forest, they'll stay within villages.

Being unrestrained, they'll keep company with those who get lots of stuff, and who always enjoy wrong livelihood, following their example.

They won't respect those who don't get lots of stuff, and they won't associate with the wise, even though they're very amiable.

Disparaging their own banner, dyed a vermilion color, some will wear the white banner of those of other religions.

Then they'll have no respect for the ocher robe. The mendicants will not reflect on the nature of the ocher robe.

This awful lack of reflection was unthinkable to the elephant, who was overcome by suffering, injured by an arrow strike.

Then the six-tusked elephant, seeing the deep-dyed banner of the perfected ones, straight away spoke these verses connected with the goal.

One who, not free of stains themselves, would wear the robe stained in ocher, bereft of self-control and truth: they are not worthy of the ocher robe.

One who's purged all their stains, steady in ethics, possessing truth and self-control: they are truly worthy of the ocher robe.

Devoid of virtue, unintelligent, wild, doing what they like, their minds astray, indolent: they are not worthy of the ocher robe.

One accomplished in ethics, free of greed, serene, their heart's intention pure: they are truly worthy of the ocher robe.

The conceited, arrogant fool, who has no ethics at all, is worthy of a white robe—what use is an ocher robe for them?

In the future, monks and nuns with corrupt hearts, lacking regard for others, will disparage those with hearts of loving-kindness.

Though trained in wearing the robe by senior monks, the unintelligent will not listen, wild, doing what they like.

With that kind of attitude to training, those fools won't respect each other, or take any notice of their mentors, like a wild colt with its charioteer.

Even so, in the future, this will be the practice of monks and nuns when the latter days have come.

Before this frightening future arrives, be easy to admonish, courteous in speech, and respect one another.

Have hearts of love and compassion, and please do keep your precepts. Be energetic, resolute, and always staunchly vigorous.

Seeing negligence as fearful, and diligence as a sanctuary, develop the eightfold path, realizing the state free of death."

…

Thag 17.2

Thag 17.2
Sāriputta
Sāriputtattheragāthā

“One who’s mindful as per their conduct and mindfulness, diligent as per their intentions and meditation, happy inside, serene, solitary, contented: that is what they call a mendicant.

When eating fresh or dried food, one shouldn’t be overly replete. A mendicant should wander mindfully, with empty stomach, taking limited food.

Four or five mouthfuls before you’re full, drink some water; this is enough for a resolute mendicant to live in comfort.

If they cover themselves with a robe that’s allowable and fit for purpose; this is enough for a resolute mendicant to live in comfort.

When sitting cross-legged, the rain doesn’t fall on the knees; this is enough for a resolute mendicant to live in comfort.”

“When you’ve seen happiness as suffering, and suffering as a dart, and that there’s nothing between the two—what keeps you in the world? What would you become?

Thinking, ‘May I have nothing to do with those of bad wishes, lazy, lacking energy, unlearned, lacking regard for others’—what keeps you in the world? What would you become?”

“An intelligent, learned person, steady in ethics, devoted to serenity of heart—let them stand at the head.”

“A beast who likes to proliferate, enjoying proliferation, fails to win extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

But one who gives up proliferation, enjoying the state of non-proliferation, wins extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.”

“Whether in the village or the wilderness, in a valley or the uplands, wherever the perfected ones live is a delightful place.”

“The wilderness is so lovely! Though most people don’t like it, those free of greed are happy there, as they don’t seek sensual pleasures.”

“Regard one who sees your faults as a guide to a hidden treasure. Stay close to one so wise and astute who corrects you when you need it. Sticking close to such an impartial person, things get better, not worse.”

“Advise and instruct; curb wickedness: for you shall be loved by the good, and disliked by the bad.”

“The Blessed One, the Buddha, the seer was teaching Dhamma to another. As he taught the Dhamma, I lent an ear to get the meaning.

My listening wasn’t wasted: I’m freed, without defilements.”

“Not for knowledge of past lives, nor even for clairvoyance; not for psychic powers, or reading the minds of others, nor for knowing people’s passing away and being reborn; not for purifying the power of clairaudience, did I have any wish.”

“His only shelter is the foot of a tree; shaven, wrapped in his outer robe, the senior monk foremost in wisdom, Upatissa himself practices absorption.

When in a meditation free of placing the mind, a disciple of the Buddha is at that moment blessed with noble silence.

As a rocky mountain is unwavering and well grounded, so when delusion ends, a monk, like a mountain, doesn’t tremble.

“To the man who has not a blemish, who is always seeking purity, even a hair-tip of evil seems as big as a cloud.”

“I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I will lay down this body, aware and mindful.

I don’t long for death; I don’t long for life; I await my time, like a worker waiting for their wages.”

“Both what came before and what follows after are nothing but death, not freedom from death. Practice, don’t perish—don’t let the moment pass you by.

Just like a frontier city, is guarded inside and out, so you should ward yourselves—don’t let the moment pass you by. For if you miss your moment you’ll grieve when sent to hell.”

“Calm and still, thoughtful in counsel, not restless—he shakes off bad qualities as the wind shakes leaves off a tree.

Calm and still, thoughtful in counsel, not restless—he plucks off bad qualities as the wind plucks leaves off a tree.

Calm and free of despair, clear and unclouded, of good morals, intelligent: one would make an end of suffering.”

“Some householders, and even some renunciants, are not to be trusted. Some who were good later become bad; while some who were bad become good.”

“Sensual desire, ill will, dullness and drowsiness, restlessness, and doubt: these are the five mental stains for a monk.”

“Whether they’re honored or not honored, or both, their immersion doesn’t waver as they live diligently.

They persistently practice absorption with subtle view and discernment. Rejoicing in the ending of grasping, they’re said to be a true person.”

“The oceans and the earth, the mountains and the wind—none of these can compare with the Teacher’s magnificent liberation.”

“The senior monk who keeps the wheel rolling, he is very wise and serene. Like earth, like water, like fire, he is neither attracted nor repelled.

He has attained the perfection of wisdom, so intelligent and thoughtful. He is bright, but seems to be dull; he always wanders, quenched.”

“I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.”

“Persist with diligence: this is my instruction. Come, I’ll be fully extinguished—I am everywhere free.”

Thag 17.3

Thag 17.3
Ānanda
Ānandattheragāthā

“The astute would not make friends with the slanderous or the hateful, with a miser or a gloater, for it’s bad to consort with sinners.

The astute would make friends with the faithful and the pleasant, the wise and the learned, for it’s a blessing to consort with true persons.”

“See this fancy puppet, a body built of sores, diseased, obsessed over, in which nothing lasts at all.

See this fancy puppet, with its gems and earrings; it is bones encased in skin, made pretty by its clothes.

Rouged feet and powdered face may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

Hair in eight braids and eyeliner may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

A rotting body all adorned like a freshly painted makeup box may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.”

“Gotama is learned, a brilliant speaker, the attendant to the Buddha. With burden put down, detached, Gotama made his bed.

Defilements ended, detached, he has got over clinging and become quenched. He bears his final body, having gone beyond birth and death.”

“Gotama stands firm on the path that leads to quenching, where the teachings of the Buddha, the kinsman of the Sun, are grounded.”

“82,000 from the Buddha, and 2,000 more from the monks: 84,000 teachings I’ve learned, and these are what I promulgate.”

“A person of little learning ages like an ox—their flesh grows, but not their wisdom.

A learned person who, on account of their learning, looks down on someone of little learning, seems to me like a blind man holding a lamp.

You should stay close to a learned person—don't lose what you've learned. It is the root of the spiritual life, which is why you should memorize the teaching.

Knowing the sequence and meaning of the teaching, expert in the interpretation of terms, they make sure it is well memorized, and then examine the meaning.

Accepting the teachings, they become enthusiastic; making an effort, they weigh up the teaching. When it's time, they strive serene inside themselves.

If you want to understand the teaching, you should befriend the sort of person who is learned and has memorized the teachings, a wise disciple of the Buddha.

One who is learned and has memorized the teaching, a keeper of the great seer's treasury, is a visionary for the whole world, learned and honorable.

Delighting in the teaching, enjoying the teaching, contemplating the teaching, a mendicant who recollects the teaching doesn't decline in the true teaching."

"When your body is pampered and heavy, while your remaining time is running out, greedy for physical pleasure, how can you be comfortable as an ascetic?"

"I'm completely disorientated! The teachings don't spring to mind! With the passing of our good friend, everything seems dark.

When your friend has passed away, and your Teacher is past and gone, there's no friend like mindfulness of the body.

The old have passed away, and I don't agree with the new. Today I meditate alone like a bird snug in its nest."

"Many international visitors have come to visit. Don't block the audience, let the congregation see me."

"Lots of international visitors have come to visit. The teacher grants them the opportunity, the Clear-eyed One doesn't turn them away."

"In the twenty five years that have passed since I became a trainee, no sensual perception has arisen in me: see the excellence of the teaching!

In the twenty-five years since I became a trainee, no malicious perception has arisen in me: see the excellence of the teaching!"

'For 25 years I attended on the Buddha with loving deeds, like a shadow that never left.

For 25 years I attended on the Buddha with loving words, like a shadow that never left.

For 25 years I attended on the Buddha with loving thoughts, like a shadow that never left.

While the Buddha was walking mindfully, I walked behind him. As he taught the Dhamma, knowledge arose in me."

“I’m a trainee, who has more to do; my heart’s desire is still unfulfilled. Yet the Teacher, who was so compassionate to me, has become completely quenched.

Then there was terror! Then they had goosebumps! When the Buddha, endowed with all fine qualities, became fully extinguished.”

“Ānanda, who was learned and had memorized the teaching, a keeper of the great seer’s treasury, a visionary for the entire world, has become fully quenched.

He was learned and had memorized the teaching, a keeper of the great seer’s treasury, a visionary for the entire world, in thick of night he dispelled the dark.

He is the seer who remembered the teachings, and mastered their sequence, holding them firm. The senior monk who memorized the teaching, Ānanda was a mine of gems.”

“I’ve served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, now there are no more future lives.”

Thag 18.1

Thag 18.1
Mahākassapa
Mahākassapattheragāthā

“You shouldn’t live for the adulation of a following; it turns your mind, making it hard to get immersion. Seeing that popularity is suffering, you shouldn’t consent to a following.

A sage should not visit respectable families; it turns your mind, making it hard to get immersion. If you’re eager and greedy for flavors, you’ll miss the goal that brings such happiness.

They know it really is a bog, this homage and veneration in respectable families. Honor is a subtle dart, hard to extract, and hard for a sinner to give up.”

“I came down from my lodging and entered the city for alms. I courteously stood by while a leper ate.

With his putrid hand he offered me a morsel. Putting the morsel in my bowl, his finger dropped off right there.

Sitting by a wall, I ate that lump of rice. I did not feel any disgust while eating or afterwards.

Anyone who makes use of leftovers for food, rancid urine as medicine, the root of a tree as lodging, and cast-off rags as robes, is at ease in any quarter.”

“Where some have fallen to ruin while climbing the mountain, there Kassapa ascends; an heir of the Buddha, aware and mindful, owing to his psychic powers.

Returning from almsround, Kassapa ascends the mountain, and practices absorption without grasping, with fear and dread given up.

Returning from almsround, Kassapa ascends the mountain, and practices absorption without grasping, quenched amongst those who burn.

Returning from almsround, Kassapa ascends the mountain, and practices absorption without grasping, his task completed, free of defilements.”

“Strewn with garlands of the musk-rose tree, these regions are so delightful, so lovely, echoing with the trumpeting of elephants: these rocky crags delight me!

Glistening, they look like blue storm clouds, with waters cool and streams so clear, and covered all in ladybugs: these rocky crags delight me!

Like the peak of a blue storm cloud, or like a fine bungalow, lovely, echoing with the trumpeting of elephants: these rocky crags delight me!

The rain comes down on the lovely flats, in the mountains frequented by seers. Echoing with the cries of peacocks, these rocky crags delight me!

It's enough for me, who loves absorption, to remain resolute. It's enough for me, a resolute monk who loves the goal.

It's enough for me, a resolute monk who loves comfort. It's enough for me, resolute and poised, loving meditation.

Covered with flowers of flax, like the sky covered with clouds, full of flocks of many different birds, these rocky crags delight me!

Empty of householders, frequented by herds of deer, full of flocks of many different birds, these rocky crags delight me!

The water's clear and the rocks are broad, monkeys and deer are all around; festooned with dewy moss, these rocky crags delight me!"

"Even the music of a five-piece band can never give such pleasure as when, with unified mind, you rightly discern the Dhamma."

"Don't get involved in lots of work, avoid people, and don't try to acquire things. If you're eager and greedy for flavors, you'll miss the goal that brings such happiness.

Don't get involved in lots of work, avoid what doesn't lead to the goal. The body gets worn out and fatigued, and when you ache, you won't find serenity."

"You won't see yourself by merely reciting words, wandering stiff-necked and thinking, 'I'm better than them.'

The fool is no better, but they think they are. The wise don't praise pompous people.

Whoever is not affected by the modes of conceit—'I am better', 'I'm not better', 'I am worse', or 'I am the same'— with such understanding, poised, steady in ethics, and devoted to serenity of mind: that is who the wise praise."

"Whoever has no respect for their spiritual companions is as far from the true teaching as the earth is from the sky.

Those whose conscience and shame are always rightly established, thrive in the spiritual life; for them, there are no future lives.

When a mendicant who is haughty and fickle wears rags from the rubbish-heap, that doesn't make them shine: they're like a monkey in a lion skin.

But if they not restless or fickle, alert, with senses restrained, then, wearing rags from the rubbish-heap, they shine like a lion in a mountain cave."

"These many gods powerful and glorious, all 10,000 of them, belong to the host of Brahmā.

They stand with joined palms honoring Sāriputta, the general of the Dhamma, the hero, the serene great meditator:

'Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! We don't understand the basis of your absorption.

The profound domain of the Buddhas is truly amazing. We don't understand, though we've gathered here to split hairs.'

When he saw the host of gods paying homage to Sāriputta—who is truly worthy of homage—Kappina smiled."

"As far as the range of the Buddha extends, I am outstanding in austerities. I have no equal, apart from the great sage himself.

I've served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, now there'll be no more future lives."

"Like a lotus flower to which water will not stick, Gotama the immeasurable is unstained by robes, lodgings, or food. He inclines to renunciation, and has escaped the three states of existence.

The great sage's neck is mindfulness meditation; faith is his hands, and wisdom his head. Having great knowledge, he always wanders, quenched."

Thag 19.1

Thag 19.1
Tālapuṭa
Tālapuṭattheragāthā

Oh, when will I stay in a mountain cave, alone, with no companion, discerning all states of existence as impermanent? This hope of mine, when will it be?

Oh, when will I stay happily in the forest, a sage wearing a torn robe, dressed in ocher, unselfish, with no need for hope, with greed, hate, and delusion destroyed?

Oh, when will I stay alone in the wood, fearless, discerning this body as impermanent, a nest of death and disease, oppressed by death and old age; when will it be?

Oh, when will I live, having grasped the sharp sword of wisdom and cut the creeper of craving that tangles around everything, the mother of fear, the bringer of suffering? When will it be?

Oh, when will I, seated on the lion's throne, swiftly grasp the sword of the sages, forged by wisdom, of fiery might, and swiftly break Māra and his army? When will it be?

Oh, when will I be seen striving in the assemblies with those who are virtuous, poised, respecting the Dhamma, seeing things as they are, with faculties subdued? When will it be?

Oh, when will I focus on my own goal at the Mountainfold, free of oppression by laziness, hunger, thirst, wind, heat, insects, and reptiles? When will it be?

Oh, when will I, serene and mindful, understand the four truths, that were realized by the great seer, and are so very hard to see? When will it be?

Oh, when will I, devoted to serenity, see with understanding the infinite sights, sounds, smells, tastes, touches, and ideas as burning? When will it be?

Oh, when will I not be distraught because of criticism, nor elated because of praise? When will it be?

Oh when will I discern the aggregates and the infinite varieties of phenomena, both internal and external, as no more than wood, grass, and creepers? When will it be?

Oh, when will the rain clouds in season freshly wet me in my robe in the forest, walking the path trodden by the sages? When will it be?

Oh, when will I rise up, intent on attaining freedom from death, hearing, in the mountain cave, the cry of the crested peacock in the forest? When will it be?

Oh, when will I cross the Ganges, Yamunā, and Sarasvatī rivers, the Pātāla country, and the dangerous Baḷavāmukha sea, by psychic power unimpeded? When will it be?

Oh, when will I be devoted to absorption, rejecting entirely the signs of beauty, splitting apart desire for sensual stimulation, like an elephant that wanders free of ties? When will it be?

Oh, when will I realize the teaching of the great seer and be content, like a poor person harassed in debt, harassed by creditors, who finds a hidden treasure? When will it be?

For many years you begged me, “Enough of living in a house for you!” Why do you not urge me on, mind, now that I’ve gone forth as an ascetic?

Didn’t you entice me, mind: “On the Mountainfold, the birds with colorful wings, greeting the thunder, Mahinda’s voice, will delight you as you meditate in the forest?”

In my family circle, friends, loved ones, and relatives; and in the world, sports and play, and sensual pleasures; all these I gave up when I entered this life: and even then you’re not content with me, mind!

This is mine alone, it doesn’t belong to others; when it is time to don your armor, why lament? Observing that all this is unstable, I went forth, seeking the state free of death.

The methodical teacher, supreme among people, great physician, guide for those who wish to train, said: “The mind fidgets like a monkey, so it’s very hard to control if you are not free of lust.”

Sensual pleasures are diverse, sweet, delightful; an ignorant ordinary person is bound to them. Seeking to be reborn again, they wish for suffering; led on by their mind, they’re relegated to hell.

“Staying in the grove resounding with cries of peacocks and herons, and adorned by leopards and tigers, abandon concern for the body, without fail!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Develop the absorptions and spiritual faculties, the powers, awakening factors, and immersion; realize the three knowledges in the teaching of the Buddha!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Develop the eightfold path to realize freedom from death emancipating, plunging into the end of all suffering, and cleansing all defilements!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Reflect rationally on the aggregates as suffering, and abandon that from which suffering arises; make an end of suffering in this very life!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Rationally discern that impermanence is suffering, that emptiness is non-self, and that misery is death. Uproot the wandering mind!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Bald, unsightly, accursed, seek alms amongst families, bowl in hand. Devote yourself to the word of the teacher, the great seer!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Wander the streets well-restrained, unattached to families and sensual pleasures, like the full moon on a bright night!” So you used to urge me, mind.

“Be a wilderness-dweller and an alms-eater, one who lives in charnel grounds, a rag-robe wearer, one who never lies down, always delighting in ascetic practices.” So you used to urge me, mind.

Mind, when you urge me to the impermanent and unstable, you’re acting like someone who plants trees, then, when they’re about to fruit, wishes to cut down the very same trees.

Incorporeal mind, far-traveler, lone-wanderer: I won’t do your bidding any more. Sensual pleasures are suffering, painful, and very dangerous; I’ll wander with my mind focused only on quenching.

I didn’t go forth due to bad luck or shamelessness, or due to a whim or banishment, nor for the sake of a livelihood; it was because I agreed to the promise you made, mind.

“Having few wishes, abandoning disparagement, the stilling of suffering: these are praised by good people.” So you used to urge me, mind, but now you keep on with your old habits!

Craving, ignorance, the loved and unloved, pretty sights, pleasant feelings, and the delightful kinds of sensual stimulation: I’ve vomited them all, and I won’t swallow them back.

I’ve done your bidding everywhere, mind! For many births, I’ve done nothing to upset you. Yet the creation in myself is because of your ingratitude— for a long time I’ve transmigrated in the suffering you’ve made.

Only you, mind, make a brahmin; you make an aristocrat or a royal seer. Sometimes we become peasants or menials; and life as a god is also on account of you.

You alone make us titans; because of you we’re born in hell. Then sometimes we become animals, and life as a ghost is also on account of you.

Come what may, you won’t betray me again, dazzling me with your ever-changing display! You play with me like I’m mad—but how have I ever failed you, mind?

In the past my mind wandered how it wished, where it liked, as it pleased. Now I’ll carefully guide it, as a trainer with a hook guides a rutting elephant.

The teacher willed that this world appear to me as impermanent, unstable, insubstantial. Mind, let me leap into the victor’s teaching, carry me over the great flood, so hard to pass.

Things have changed, mind! Nothing could make me return to your control! I’ve gone forth in the teaching of the great seer, those like me don’t come to ruin.

Mountains, oceans, rivers, the earth; the four quarters, the intermediate directions, below and in the sky; the three realms of existence are all impermanent and troubled—where can you go to find happiness, mind?

Mind, what will you do to someone who has made the ultimate commitment? Nothing could make me a follower under your control, mind; I'd never touch a bellows with a mouth open at each end; curse this mortal frame flowing with nine streams!

You've ascended the mountain peak, full of nature's beauty, frequented by boars and antelopes, a grove sprinkled with fresh water in the rains; and there you'll be happy in your cave-home.

Peacocks with beautiful necks and crests, colorful tail-feathers and wings, crying out at the resounding thunder: they'll delight you as you meditate in the forest.

When the sky has rained down, and the grass is four inches high, and the grove is full of flowers like a cloud, in the mountain cleft, like the fork of a tree, I'll lie; it will be as soft as cotton-buds.

I'll act as a master does: let whatever I get be enough for me. And that's why I'll make you as supple as a tireless worker makes a cat-skin bag.

I'll act as a master does: let whatever I get be enough for me. I'll control you with my energy, as a skilled trainer controls an elephant with a hook.

Now that you're well-tamed and reliable, I can use you, like a trainer uses a straight-running horse, to practice the path so full of grace, cultivated by those who take care of their minds.

I shall strongly fasten you to a meditation subject, as an elephant is tied to a post with firm rope. You'll be well-guarded by me, well-developed by mindfulness, and unattached to rebirth in all states of existence.

You'll use understanding to cut the follower of the wrong path, curb them by practice, and settle them on the right path. And when you have seen the cause of suffering arise and pass away, you'll be an heir to the greatest teacher.

Under the sway of the four distortions, mind, you dragged me around like a bull in a pit; but now you won't associate with the great sage of compassion, the cutter of fetters and bonds?

Like a deer roaming free in the colorful forest, I'll ascend the lovely mountain wreathed in cloud, and rejoice to be on that hill, free of folk—there is no doubt you'll perish, mind.

The men and women who live under your will and command, whatever pleasure they experience, they are ignorant and fall under Māra's control; loving life, they're your disciples, mind.

Thag 20.1

Thag 20.1
Mahāmoggallāna
Mahāmoggallānattheragāthā

“Living in the wilderness, eating only almsfood, happy with the scraps in our bowls, let us tear apart the army of death, while remaining serene within.

Living in the wilderness, eating only almsfood, happy with the scraps in our bowls, let us crush the army of death, as an elephant a hut of reeds.

Living at the foot of a tree, persistent, happy with the scraps in our bowls, let us tear apart the army of death, while remaining serene within.

Living at the foot of a tree, persistent, happy with the scraps in our bowls, let us crush the army of death, as an elephant a hut of reeds.”

“You little hut, made of a chain of bones, sewn together with flesh and sinew; damn you mortal frame, you stink, you cherish the parts of others!

You sack of dung encased in skin! You demoness with horns on your chest! O body, you have nine streams that are flowing all the time.

With its nine streams, your body stinks, full of dung. A monk seeking purity would avoid it like excrement.

If they knew you like I do, they’d keep far away, like a cesspit in the rain.”

“So it is, great hero! As you say, ascetic! But some flounder here like an old bull stuck in a bog.”

“Whoever might think of making the sky yellow, or some other color, would only trouble themselves.

This mind is like the sky: serene inside itself. Evil-minded one, don’t attack me, you’ll end up like a moth in a bonfire.”

“See this fancy puppet, a body built of sores, diseased, obsessed over, in which nothing lasts at all.

See this fancy figure, with its gems and earrings; it is bones encased in skin, made pretty by its clothes.

Rouged feet and powdered face may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

Hair in eight braids and eyeshadow may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

A rotting body all adorned like a freshly painted makeup box may be enough to beguile a fool, but not a seeker of the far shore.

The hunter laid his snare, but the deer didn't spring the trap. I've eaten the bait and now I go, leaving the trapper to lament.

The hunter's trap is broken, but the deer didn't spring the trap. I've eaten the bait and now I go, leaving the deer-hunter to grieve."

"Then there was terror! Then they had goosebumps! When Sāriputta, endowed with many fine qualities, became extinguished.

Oh! Conditions are impermanent, their nature is to rise and fall; having arisen, they cease; their stilling is true bliss."

"Those who see the five aggregates as other, not as self, penetrate a subtle thing, like a hair-tip with an arrow.

Those who see conditions as other, not as self, pierce a fine thing, like a hair-tip with an arrow."

"Like they're struck by a sword, like their head was on fire, a mendicant should wander mindful, to give up sensual desire.

Like they're struck by a sword, like their head was on fire, a mendicant should wander mindful, to give up desire for rebirth."

"Urged by the developed one, who bore his final body, I shook the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother with my big toe."

"Not by being slack, or with little strength is extinguishment realized, the release from all ties."

"This young monk, this best of men, bears his final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount."

"Lightning flashes down on the cleft of Vebhāra and Paṇḍava. But in the mountain cleft he is absorbed in jhāna—the son of the Buddha, inimitable and poised."

"Calm and still, the sage in his remote lodging, the heir to the best of Buddhas, is honored even by Brahmā.

Calm and still, the sage in his remote lodging, is heir to the best of Buddhas: Brahmin, you should honor Kassapa!

Even if someone were to be born again and again a hundred times in the human realm, and always as a brahmin, a student accomplished in the Vedas; and if he were to become a reciter, a master of the three Vedas: honoring such a person isn't worth a sixteenth of that.

One who attains the eight liberations forwards and backwards before breakfast, and then goes on almsround—don't attack such a mendicant! Don't ruin yourself, brahmin! Let your heart have trust in the perfected one, the poised; quickly venerate him with joined palms: don't let your head explode!"

"If you prioritize transmigration, you don't see the true teaching. You're following a twisted path, a bad path that will lead you down.

Like a worm smeared with dung, he is besotted with conditions. Consumed by gain and honor, Poṭṭhila goes on, hollow."

"See Sāriputta coming! It is good to see him; he is freed in both ways, serene inside himself; free of thorns, with yoking ended, master of the three knowledges, conqueror of death; worthy of offerings, a supreme field of merit for the people."

"These many gods, powerful and glorious, all 10,000 of them, are ministers of Brahmā. They stand with joined palms honoring Moggallāna:

'Homage to you, O thoroughbred! Homage to you, supreme among men! Since your defilements are ended, you, sir, are worthy of teacher's offerings."

"Venerated by men and gods, he has arisen, the master of death. He is unsmeared by conditions, as a lotus-flower by water.

Knowing in an hour the thousand-fold world, together with the Brahmā realm; master of psychic powers and the knowledge of the passing away and rebirth of beings; that mendicant sees the gods in time."

"Sāriputta is full of wisdom, ethics, and peace. Even a mendicant who has crossed over might at best equal him.

But in a moment I can create the likenesses of ten million times 100,000 people! I'm skilled in transformations; I'm a master of psyshic powers.

A member of the Moggallāna clan, attained to perfection and mastery in immersion and knowledge, wise in the teachings of the unattached, with serene faculties, has burst his bonds like an elephant bursts a vine.

I've served the teacher and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions. The heavy burden is laid down, the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

I've attained the goal for the sake of which I went forth from the lay life to homelessness —the end of all fetters."

"What kind of hell was that, where Dūsī was roasted after attacking the disciple Vidhura along with the brahmin Kakusandha?

There were 100 iron spikes, each one individually painful. That's the kind of hell where Dūsī was roasted after attacking the disciple Vidhura along with the brahmin Kakusandha.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

There are mansions that last an eon standing in the middle of a lake. Sapphire-colored, brilliant, they sparkle and shine. Dancing there are nymphs shining in all different colors.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

I'm the one who, urged by the Buddha, shook the stilt longhouse of Migāra's mother with his big toe as the Saṅgha of mendicants watched.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

I'm the one who shook the Palace of Victory with his big toe owing to psychic power, inspiring deities to awe.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

I'm the one who asked Sakka in the Palace of Victory: 'Sir, I hope you recall the one who is freed through the ending of craving?' And I'm the one to whom Sakka admitted the truth when asked.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

I'm the one who asked Brahmā in the Hall of Justice before the assembly: 'Sir, do you still have the same view that you had in the past? Or do you see the radiance transcending the Brahmā realm?'

And I'm the one to whom Brahmā admitted the truth when asked. 'Good sir, I don't have that view that I had in the past.

I see the radiance transcending the Brahmā realm. So how could I say today that I am permanent and eternal?'

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you'll fall into suffering.

I’m the one who touched the peak of Mount Neru using the power of meditative liberation. I’ve visited the forests of the people who dwell in the Eastern Continent.

Dark One, if you attack a mendicant who directly knows this, a disciple of the Buddha, you’ll fall into suffering.

Though a fire doesn’t think: ‘I’ll burn the fool!’ Still the fool who attacks the fire gets burnt.

In the same way, Māra, in attacking the Realized One, you’ll only burn yourself, like a fool touching the flames.

Māra’s done a bad thing in attacking the Realized One. Wicked One, do you imagine that your wickedness won’t bear fruit?

Your deeds heap up wickedness that will last a long time, Terminator! Give up on the Buddha, Māra! And hold no hope for the mendicants!”

“That is how, in the Bhesekaḷā grove, the mendicant rebuked Māra. That spirit, downcast, disappeared right there!”

That is how these verses were recited by the senior venerable Mahāmoggallāna.

Thag 21.1

Thag 21.1
Vaṅgīsa
Vaṅgīsattheragāthā

“Now that I’ve gone forth from the lay life to homelessness, I’m overrun by the rude thoughts of the Dark One.

Even if a thousand mighty princes and great archers, well trained, with strong bows, were to completely surround me; I would never flee.

And even if women come, many more than that, they won’t scare me, for I stand firm in the teaching.

I heard this with my own ears from the Buddha, kinsman of the Sun, about the path going to extinguishment; that’s what delights my mind.

Wicked One, if you come near me as I meditate like this, I’ll make sure that you, Death, won’t even see the path I take.”

“Giving up discontent and desire, along with all thoughts of the lay life, they wouldn’t get entangled in anything; unentangled, disentangled: that’s a real mendicant.

Whether on this earth or in the sky, whatever in the world is included in form wears out, it is all impermanent; the thoughtful live having comprehended this truth.

People are bound to their attachments, to what is seen, heard, felt, and thought. Unstirred, dispel desire for these things; for one called ‘a sage’ does not cling to them.

Attached to the sixty wrong views, and full of their own opinions, ordinary people are fixed in wrong principles. But that mendicant wouldn’t join a sectarian group, still less would they utter lewd speech.

Clever, long serene, free of deceit, alert, without envy, the sage has reached the state of peace; and because he’s extinguished, he bides his time.”

“Give up conceit, Gotama! Completely abandon the different kinds of conceit! Besotted with the different kinds of conceit, you’ve had regrets for a long time.

Smeared by smears and slain by conceit, people fall into hell. When people slain by conceit are reborn in hell, they grieve for a long time.

But a mendicant who practices rightly, winner of the path, never grieves. They enjoy happiness and a good reputation, and they rightly call him a ‘Seer of Truth’.

So don’t be hard-hearted, be energetic, with hindrances given up, be pure. Then with conceit given up completely, use knowledge to make an end, and be calmed.”

“I’ve got a burning desire for pleasure; my mind is on fire! Please, out of compassion, Gotama, tell me how to quench the flames.”

“Your mind is on fire because of a perversion of perception. Turn away from the sign that’s attractive, provoking lust.

With your mind unified and serene, meditate on the ugly aspects of the body. With mindfulness immersed in the body, be full of disillusionment.

Meditate on the signless, give up the tendency to conceit; and when you comprehend conceit, you will live at peace.”

“Speak only such words that do not hurt yourself nor harm others; such speech is truly well spoken.

Speak only pleasing words, words gladly welcomed. Pleasing words are those that bring nothing bad to others.

Truth itself is the undying word: this is an eternal truth. Good people say that the teaching and its meaning are grounded in the truth.

The words spoken by the Buddha for finding the sanctuary, extinguishment, for making an end of suffering: this really is the best kind of speech.”

“Deep in wisdom, intelligent, expert in what is the path and what is not the path; Sāriputta, so greatly wise, teaches Dhamma to the mendicants.

He teaches in brief, or he speaks at length. His call, like a myna bird, overflows with inspiration.

While he teaches the mendicants listen to his sweet voice, sounding attractive, clear and graceful. They listen joyfully, their hearts elated.”

“Today, on the fifteenth day sabbath, five hundred monks have gathered together to purify their precepts. These untroubled sages have cut off their fetters and bonds, they will not be reborn again.

Just as a wheel-rolling monarch surrounded by ministers travels all around this land that’s girt by sea.

So disciples with the three knowledges, conquerors of death, revere the winner of the battle, the unsurpassed caravan leader.

All are sons of the Blessed One—there is no rubbish here. I bow to the kinsman of the Sun, destroyer of the dart of craving.”

“Over a thousand mendicants revere the Holy One as he teaches the immaculate Dhamma, extinguishment, fearing nothing from any quarter.

They listen to the immaculate Dhamma taught by the fully awakened Buddha; the Buddha is so brilliant, at the fore of the mendicant Saṅgha.

Blessed One, your name is ‘Giant’, seventh of the sages. You are like a great cloud that rains on your disciples.

I’ve left my day’s meditation, out of desire to see the teacher. Great hero, your disciple Vaṅgīsa bows at your feet.”

“Having overcome Māra’s devious path, you wander with hard-heartedness dissolved. See him, the liberator from bonds, unattached, analyzing the teaching.

You have explained in many ways the path to cross the flood. The Seers of Truth stand unfaltering in the freedom from death you’ve explained.

As the bringer of light who has pierced the truth, you’ve seen what lies beyond all realms. When you saw and realized this for yourself, you taught it first to the group of five.

When the Dhamma has been so well taught, how could those who know it be negligent? That’s why, being diligent, we should always train respectfully in the Buddha’s teaching.”

“The senior monk who was awakened right after the Buddha, Koṇḍañña, is keenly energetic. He regularly gains blissful meditative states, and the three kinds of seclusion.

Whatever can be attained by a disciple who does the Teacher’s bidding, he has attained it all, through diligently training himself.

With great power and the three knowledges, expert in comprehending the minds of others, Koṇḍañña, the heir to the Buddha, bows at the Teacher’s feet.”

“As the sage, who has gone beyond suffering, sits upon the mountain slope, he is revered by disciples with the three knowledges, conquerors of death.

Moggallāna, of great psychic power, comprehends with his mind, scrutinizing their minds, liberated, free of attachments.

So they revere Gotama, the sage gone beyond suffering, who is endowed with all path factors, and with a multitude of attributes.”

“Like the moon on a cloudless night, like the shining immaculate sun, so too Aṅgīrasa, O great sage, your glory outshines the entire world.”

“We used to wander, drunk on poetry, from village to village, town to town. Then we saw the Buddha, who has gone beyond all things.

He, the sage gone beyond suffering, taught me the Dhamma. When we heard the Dhamma, we became confident—faith arose in us.

Hearing him speak of the aggregates, the sense-fields, and the elements, I understood; and then I went forth to homelessness.

It is for the benefit of many that the Realized Ones arise—the men and women who follow their instructions.

It is truly for their benefit that the sage realized awakening—for the monks and for the nuns who see that they've reached certainty.

The Clear-eyed One, the Buddha, the kinsman of the Sun, has well taught the four noble truths out of compassion for living creatures.

Suffering, suffering's origin, suffering's transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

As these things were taught, so I have seen them. I've realized my own true goal, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

It was so welcome for me to be in the presence of the Buddha. Of the well-explained teachings, I arrived at the best.

I've realized the perfection of direct knowledge; my clairaudience is purified; I am master of three knowledges, attained in psychic power, I'm expert at reading the minds of others."

"I ask the teacher unrivaled in wisdom, who has cut off all doubts in this very life: a monk has died at Aggāḷava, who was well-known, famous, and quenched.

Nigrodhakappa was his name; it was given to that brahmin by you, Blessed One. He wandered in your honor, yearning for freedom, energetic, a resolute Seer of Truth.

O Sakyan, All-seer, we all wish to know about that disciple. Our ears are eager to hear, for you are the most excellent teacher.

Cut off our doubt, declare this to us; your wisdom is vast, tell us of his quenching! All-seer, speak among us, like the thousand-eyed Sakka in the midst of the gods!

Whatever ties there are, or paths to delusion, or things on the side of unknowing, or that are bases of doubt vanish on reaching a Realized One, for his eye is the best of all people's.

If no man were ever to disperse corruptions, like the wind dispersing the clouds, darkness would veil the whole world; not even brilliant men would shine.

The wise are bringers of light; my hero, that is what I think of you. We've come for your discernment and knowledge: here in this assembly, declare to us about Kappāyana.

Swiftly send forth your sweet, sweet voice, like a goose stretching its neck, gently honking, lucid-flowing, with lovely tone: alert, we all listen to you.

You have entirely abandoned birth and death; restrained and pure, speak the Dhamma! For ordinary people have no wish-granter, but Realized Ones have a comprehensibility-granter.

Your answer is definitive, and we will adopt it, for you have perfect understanding. We raise our joined palms one last time, one of unrivaled wisdom, don't deliberately confuse us.

Knowing the teaching of the noble ones from top to bottom, one of unrivaled energy, don't deliberately confuse us. Like a man in the baking summer sun would long for water, I long for your voice, so let the sound rain down.

Surely Kappāyana did not lead the spiritual life in vain? Did he realize quenching, or did he still have a remnant of defilement? Let us hear what kind of liberation he had!"

"He cut off craving for name and form right here," said the Buddha, "the river of darkness that had long lain within him. He has entirely crossed over birth and death." So declared the Blessed One, the leader of the five.

"Now that I have heard your words, seventh of sages, I am confident. My question, it seems, was not in vain, the brahmin did not deceive me.

As he spoke, so he acted; he was a disciple of the Buddha. He cut the net of death the deceiver, so extended and strong.

Blessed One, Kappāyana saw the starting point of grasping. He has indeed gone far beyond Death's domain so hard to pass.

God of gods, best of men, I bow to you, and to your son, who followed your example, a great hero; a giant, true-born son of a giant."

That is how these verses were recited by the senior venerable Vaṅgīsa.

The Verses of the Senior Monks are finished.

Thig - Therīgāthā: Verses of the Senior Nuns

Thig 1.1

Thig 1.1
An Unnamed Nun (1st)
Aññatarātherīgāthā

Homage to that Blessed One, the perfected one, the fully awakened Buddha!

Sleep softly, little nun, wrapped in the cloth you sewed yourself; for your desire has been quelled, like vegetables boiled dry in a pot.

That is how this verse was recited by a certain unnamed nun.

Thig 1.2

Thig 1.2
Muttā (1st)
Muttātherīgāthā

Muttā, be released from your yokes, like the moon released from the eclipse. When your mind is released, enjoy your alms free of debt.

That is how the Buddha regularly advised the trainee nun Muttā with these verses.

Thig 1.3

Thig 1.3
Puṇṇā
Puṇṇātherīgāthā

Puṇṇā, be filled with good qualities, like the moon on the fifteenth day. When your wisdom is full, shatter the mass of darkness.

That is how this verse was recited by the senior nun Puṇṇā.

Thig 1.4

Thig 1.4
Tissā
Tissātherīgāthā

Tissā, train in the trainings—don’t let your yokes overcome you. Unyoked from all yokes, live in the world free of defilements.

Thig 1.5

Thig 1.5
Another Tissā
Aññatarātissātherīgāthā

Tissā, apply yourself to good qualities—don’t let the moment pass you by. For if you miss your moment, you’ll grieve when sent to hell.

Thig 1.6

Thig 1.6
Dhīrā
Dhīrātherīgāthā

Dhīrā, touch cessation, the blissful stilling of perception. Win extinguishment, the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Thig 1.7

Thig 1.7
Vīrā
Vīrātherīgāthā

She’s known as Vīrā because of her heroic qualities, a nun with faculties developed. She bears her final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount.

Thig 1.8

Thig 1.8
Mittā (1st)
Mittātherīgāthā

Having gone forth out of faith, appreciate your spiritual friends, Mittā. Develop skillful qualities for the sake of finding sanctuary from the yoke.

Thig 1.9

Thig 1.9
Bhadrā
Bhadrātherīgāthā

Having gone forth out of faith, appreciate your blessings, Bhadrā. Develop skillful qualities for the sake of the supreme sanctuary from the yoke.

Thig 1.10

Thig 1.10
Upasamā
Upasamātherīgāthā

Upasamā, cross the flood, Death’s domain so hard to pass. When you have vanquished Māra and his mount, bear your final body.

Thig 1.11

Thig 1.11
Muttā (2nd)
Muttātherīgāthā

I’m well freed, so very well freed, freed from the three things that humped me: the mortar, the pestle, and my humpbacked husband. I’m freed from birth and death; the conduit to rebirth is eradicated.

Thig 1.12

Thig 1.12
Dhammadinnā
Dhammadinnātherīgāthā

One who is eager and determined would be filled with awareness. Their mind not bound to pleasures of sense, they’re said to be heading upstream.

Thig 1.13

Thig 1.13
Visākhā
Visākhātherīgāthā

Do the Buddha’s bidding, you won’t regret it. Having quickly washed your feet, sit in a discreet place to meditate.

Thig 1.14

Thig 1.14
Sumanā
Sumanātherīgāthā

Having seen the elements as suffering, don’t get reborn again. When you’ve discarded desire for rebirth, you will live at peace.

Thig 1.15

Thig 1.15
Uttarā (1st)
Uttarātherīgāthā

I was restrained in body, speech, and mind. Having plucked out craving, root and all, I’m cooled and quenched.

Thig 1.16

Thig 1.16
Sumanā, Who Went Forth Late in Life
Vuḍḍhapabbajitasumanātherīgāthā

Sleep softly, old lady, wrapped in the cloth you sewed yourself; for your desire has been quelled, you’re cooled and quenched.

Thig 1.17

Thig 1.17
Dhammā
Dhammātherīgāthā

I wandered for alms though feeble, leaning on a staff. My limbs wobbled and I fell to the ground right there. Seeing the danger of the body, my mind was freed.

Thig 1.18

Thig 1.18
Saṅghā
Saṁghātherīgāthā

I gave up my home, my child, my cattle, and all that I love, and went forth. And now that I’ve given up desire and hate, dispelled ignorance, and plucked out craving, root and all, I’m at peace, I’m quenched.

Thig 2.1

Thig 2.1
Abhirūpanandā
Abhirūpanandātherīgāthā

Nandā, see this bag of bones as diseased, filthy, and rotten. With mind unified and serene, meditate on the ugly aspects of the body.

Meditate on the signless, give up the underlying tendency to conceit; and when you comprehend conceit, you will live at peace.

That is how the Buddha regularly advised the trainee nun Nandā with these verses.

Thig 2.2

Thig 2.2
Jentā
Jentātherīgāthā

Of the seven awakening factors, the path for attaining extinguishment, I have developed them all, just as the Buddha taught.

For I have seen the Blessed One, and this bag of bones is my last. Transmigration through births is finished, now there'll be no more future lives.

That is how these verses were recited by the senior nun Jentā.

Thig 2.3

Thig 2.3
Sumaṅgala's Mother
Sumaṅgalamātātherīgāthā

I'm well freed, well freed, so very well freed from the pestle! My shameless husband popped up like a mushroom, my mortar wafted like eels.

Greed and hate sizzle and hiss as I squelch them. Having gone to the root of a tree, I meditate happily, thinking, "Oh, what bliss!"

Thig 2.4

Thig 2.4
Aḍḍhakāsi
Aḍḍhakāsitherīgāthā

The price for my services amounted to the nation of Kāsi. By setting that price, the townsfolk made me priceless.

Then, growing disillusioned with my form, I became dispassionate. Don’t journey on and on, transmigrating through rebirths! I've realized the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 2.5

Thig 2.5
Cittā
Cittātherīgāthā

Though I’m skinny, sick, and very feeble, I climb the mountain, leaning on a staff.

Having laid down my outer robe, and overturned my bowl, propping myself against a rock, I shattered the mass of darkness.

Thig 2.6

Thig 2.6
Mettikā
Mettikātherīgāthā

Though in pain, feeble, my youth long gone, I climb the mountain, leaning on a staff.

Having laid down my outer robe and overturned my bowl, sitting on a rock, my mind was freed. I’ve attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 2.7

Thig 2.7
Mittā (2nd)
Mittātherīgāthā

I rejoiced in the host of gods, having observed the sabbath complete in all eight factors, on the fourteenth and the fifteenth days, and the eighth day of the fortnight, as well as on the fortnightly special displays. Today I eat just once a day, my head is shaven, I wear the outer robe. I don’t long for the host of gods, for stress has been removed from my heart.

Thig 2.8

Thig 2.8
To Abhayā's Mother From Her Daughter
Abhayamātutherīgāthā

My dear mother, I examined this body, up from the soles of the feet, and down from the tips of the hairs, so impure and foul-smelling.

Meditating like this, all my lust is eradicated. The fever of passion is cut off, I'm cooled and quenched.

Thig 2.9

Thig 2.9
Abhayā
Abhayātherīgāthā

Abhayā, the body is fragile, yet ordinary people are attached to it. I'll lay down the body, aware and mindful.

Though subject to so many painful things, I have, through my love of diligence, reached the ending of craving, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 2.10

Thig 2.10
Sāmā
Sāmātherīgāthā

Four or five times I left my dwelling. I had failed to find peace of heart, or any control over my mind. Now it is the eighth night since craving was eradicated.

Though subject to so many painful things, I have, through my love of diligence, reached the ending of craving, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 3.1

Thig 3.1
Another Sāmā
Aparāsāmātherīgāthā

In the twenty-five years since I went forth, I don’t know that I had ever found serenity in my mind.

I had failed to find peace of heart, or any control over my mind. When I remembered the victor’s instructions, I was struck with a sense of urgency.

Though subject to so many painful things, I have, through my love of diligence, reached the ending of craving, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions. This is the seventh day since my craving dried up.

Thig 3.2

Thig 3.2
Uttamā
Uttamātherīgāthā

Four or five times I left my dwelling. I had failed to find peace of heart, or any control over my mind.

I approached a nun in whom I had faith. She taught me the Dhamma: the aggregates, sense fields, and elements.

When I had heard her teaching, in accordance with her instructions, I sat cross-legged for seven days without moving, given over to rapture and bliss. On the eighth day I stretched out my feet, having shattered the mass of darkness.

Thig 3.3

Thig 3.3
Another Uttamā
Aparāuttamātherīgāthā

Of the seven awakening factors, the path for attaining extinguishment, I have developed them all, just as the Buddha taught.

I attain the meditations on emptiness and signlessness whenever I want. I am the Buddha's rightful daughter, always delighting in quenching.

All sensual pleasures are cut off, whether human or divine. Transmigration through births is finished, now there'll be no more future lives.

Thig 3.4

Thig 3.4
Dantikā
Dantikātherīgāthā

Leaving my day's meditation on Vulture's Peak Mountain, I saw an elephant on the riverbank having just come up from his bath.

A man, taking a pole with a hook, asked the elephant, "Give me your foot." The elephant presented his foot, and the man mounted him.

Seeing a wild beast so tamed, submitting to human control, my mind became serene: that is why I've gone to the forest!

Thig 3.5

Thig 3.5
Ubbirī
Ubbiritherīgāthā

“You cry ‘Please be living!’ in the forest. Ubbirī, get a hold of yourself! Eighty-four thousand people, all named ‘living being’, have been burnt in this funeral ground: which one do you grieve for?”

“Oh! For you have plucked the arrow from me, so hard to see, stuck in the heart. You’ve swept away the grief for my daughter in which I once was mired.

Today I’ve plucked the arrow, I’m hungerless, extinguished. I go for refuge to that sage, the Buddha, to his teaching, and to the Sangha.”

Thig 3.6

Thig 3.6
Sukkā
Sukkātherīgāthā

“What’s up with these people in Rājagaha? They sprawl like they’ve been drinking mead! They don’t attend on Sukkā as she teaches the Buddha’s instructions.

But the wise—it’s as if they drink it up, so irresistible, delicious and nutritious, like travelers enjoying a cool cloud.”

“She’s known as Sukkā because of her bright qualities, free of greed, serene. She bears her final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount.”

Thig 3.7

Thig 3.7
Selā
Selātherīgāthā

“There’s no escape in the world, so what will seclusion do for you? Enjoy the delights of sensual pleasure; don’t regret it later.”

“Sensual pleasures are like swords and stakes the aggregates are their chopping block. What you call sensual delight is now no delight for me.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 3.8

Thig 3.8
Somā
Somātherīgāthā

“That state’s very challenging; it’s for the sages to attain. It’s not possible for a woman, with her two-fingered wisdom.”

“What difference does womanhood make when the mind is serene, and knowledge is present as you rightly discern the Dhamma.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 4.1

Thig 4.1
Bhaddā Daughter of Kapila
Bhaddākāpilānītherīgāthā

Kassapa is the son and heir of the Buddha, whose mind is immersed in samādhi. He knows his past lives, he sees heaven and places of loss, and has attained the end of rebirth: that sage has perfect insight. It's because of these three knowledges that the brahmin is a master of the three knowledges.

In exactly the same way, Bhaddā daughter of Kapila is master of the three knowledges, conqueror of death. She bears her final body, having vanquished Māra and his mount.

Seeing the danger of the world, both of us went forth. Now we are tamed, our defilements have ended; we've become cooled and quenched.

Thig 5.1

Thig 5.1
An Unnamed Nun (2nd)
Aññataratherīgāthā

In the twenty-five years since I went forth I have not found peace of mind, even for as long as a finger-snap.

Failing to find peace of heart, corrupted by sensual desire, I cried with flailing arms as I entered a dwelling.

I approached a nun in whom I had faith. She taught me the Dhamma: the aggregates, sense fields, and elements.

When I heard her teaching, I retired to a discreet place. I know my past lives; my clairvoyance is purified;

I comprehend the minds of others; my clairaudience is purified; I've realized the psychic powers, and attained the ending of defilements. I have realized the six kinds of direct knowledge, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 5.2

Thig 5.2
Vimalā, the Former Courtesan
Vimalātherīgāthā

Intoxicated by my appearance, my figure, my beauty, my fame, and owing to my youth, I despised other women.

I adorned this body, so fancy, lamented by fools, and stood at the brothel door, like a hunter laying a snare.

I stripped for them, revealing my many hidden treasures. Creating an intricate illusion, I laughed, teasing those men.

Today, having wandered for alms, my head shaven, wearing the outer robe, I sat at the root of a tree to meditate; I've gained freedom from thought.

All yokes are severed, both human and divine. Having wiped out all defilements, I have become cooled and quenched.

Thig 5.3

Thig 5.3
Sīhā
Sīhātherīgāthā

Due to irrational application of mind, I was racked by desire for pleasures of the senses. I was restless in the past, lacking control over my mind.

Overcome by corruptions, pursuing perceptions of the beautiful, I gained no peace of mind. Under the sway of lustful thoughts, thin, pale, and wan, for seven years I wandered, full of pain, finding no happiness by day or night.

Taking a rope I entered deep into the forest, thinking: “It’s better that I hang myself than I return to a lesser life.”

I made a strong noose and tied it to the branch of a tree. Casting it round my neck, my mind was freed.

Thig 5.4

Thig 5.4
Sundarīnandā
Sundarīnandātherīgāthā

“Nandā, see this bag of bones as diseased, filthy, and rotten. With mind unified and serene, meditate on the ugly aspects of the body:

as this is, so is that, as that is, so is this. A foul stink wafts from it, it is the fools’ delight.”

Reflecting in such a way, tireless all day and night, having broken through with my own wisdom, I saw.

Being diligent, rationally investigating, I truly saw this body both inside and out.

Then, growing disillusioned with the body, I became dispassionate within. Diligent, detached, I’m quenched and at peace.

Thig 5.5

Thig 5.5
Nanduttarā
Nanduttarātherīgāthā

In the past I worshiped the sacred flame, the moon, the sun, and the gods. Having gone to a river ford, I plunged into the water.

Undertaking many vows, I shaved half my head. Preparing a bed on the ground, I ate no food at night.

I loved my ornaments and decorations; and with baths and oil-massages, I pandered to this body, racked by desire for pleasures of the senses.

But then I gained faith, and went forth to homelessness. Truly seeing the body, desire for sensual pleasure is eradicated.

All rebirths are cut off, wishes and aspirations too. Unyoked from all yokes, I've found peace of mind.

Thig 5.6

Thig 5.6
Mittākāḷī
Mittākāḷītherīgāthā

Having gone forth out of faith from the lay life to homelessness, I wandered here and there, jealous of possessions and honors.

Neglecting the highest goal, I pursued the lowest. Under the sway of corruptions, I never knew the goal of the ascetic life.

I was struck with a sense of urgency as I was sitting in my hut: “I’m walking the wrong path, under the sway of craving.

My life is short, trampled by old age and sickness. Before this body breaks apart, there is no time for me to be careless.”

I examined in line with the truth the rise and fall of the aggregates. I stood up with mind liberated, having fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 5.7

Thig 5.7
Sakulā
Sakulātherīgāthā

While staying at home I heard the teaching from a monk. I saw the stainless Dhamma, extinguishment, the imperishable state.

Leaving behind my son and my daughter, my riches and my grain, I had my hair cut off, and went forth to homelessness.

As a trainee nun, I developed the direct path. I gave up greed and hate, along with associated defilements.

When I was fully ordained as a nun, I recollected my past lives, and purified my clairvoyance, immaculate and fully developed.

Conditions are born of causes, crumbling; having seen them as other, I gave up all defilements, I’m cooled and quenched.

Thig 5.8

Thig 5.8
Soṇā
Soṇātherīgāthā

I gave birth to ten sons in this form, this bag of bones. Then, when feeble and old, I approached a nun.

She taught me the Dhamma: the aggregates, sense fields, and elements. When I heard her teaching, I shaved off my hair and went forth.

When I was a trainee nun, my clairvoyance was clarified, and I knew my past lives, the places I used to live.

I meditate on the signless, my mind unified and serene. I achieved the immediate liberation, extinguished by not grasping.

The five aggregates are fully understood; they remain, but their root is cut. Curse you, wretched old age! now there'll be no more future lives.

Thig 5.9

Thig 5.9
Bhaddā of the Curly Hair
Bhaddākuṇḍalakesātherīgāthā

My hair mown off, covered in mud, I used to wander wearing just one robe. I saw fault where there was none, and was blind to the actual fault.

Leaving my day's meditation on Vulture's Peak Mountain, I saw the stainless Buddha at the fore of the mendicant Saṅgha.

I bent my knee and bowed, and in his presence raised my joined palms. "Come Bhaddā," he said; that was my ordination.

"I've wandered among the Aṅgans and Magadhans, the Vajjis, Kāsis, and Kosalans. I have eaten the almsfood of the nations free of debt for fifty years."

"O! He has made so much merit! That lay follower is so very wise. He gave a robe to Bhaddā, who is released from all ties."

Thig 5.10

Thig 5.10
Paṭācārā
Paṭācārātherīgāthā

Plowing the fields, sowing seeds in the ground, supporting partners and children, young men acquire wealth.

I am accomplished in ethics, and I do the Teacher’s bidding, being neither lazy nor restless —why then do I not achieve quenching?

Having washed my feet, I took note of the water, seeing the foot-washing water flowing from high ground to low.

My mind became serene, like a fine thoroughbred steed. Then, taking a lamp, I entered my dwelling, inspected the bed, and sat on my cot.

Then, grabbing the pin, I drew out the wick. The liberation of my heart was like the quenching of the lamp.

Thig 5.11

Thig 5.11
Thirty Nuns
Tiṁsamattātherīgāthā

“Taking a pestle, young men pound grain. Supporting partners and children, young men acquire wealth.

Do the Buddha’s bidding, you won’t regret it. Having quickly washed your feet, sit in a discreet place to meditate. Devoted to serenity of heart, do the Buddha’s bidding.”

After hearing her words, the instructions of Paṭācārā, they washed their feet and retired to a discreet place. Devoted to serenity of heart, they did the Buddha’s bidding.

In the first watch of the night, they recollected their past lives. In the middle watch of the night, they purified their clairvoyance. In the last watch of the night, they shattered the mass of darkness.

They rose and paid homage at her feet: “We have done your bidding; we shall abide honoring you, as the thirty gods honor Indra, undefeated in battle. Masters of the three knowledges, we are free of defilements.”

That is how thirty senior nuns declared their enlightenment in the presence of Paṭācārā.

Thig 5.12

Thig 5.12
Candā
Candātherīgāthā

I used to be in a sorry state. As a childless widow, bereft of friends or relatives, I got neither food nor clothes.

I took a bowl and a staff and went begging from family to family. For seven years I wandered, burned by heat and cold.

Then I saw a nun receiving food and drink. Approaching her, I said: “Send me forth to homelessness.”

Out of compassion for me, Paṭācārā gave me the going forth. Then, having advised me, she urged me on to the ultimate goal.

After hearing her words, I did her bidding. The lady’s advice was not in vain: master of the three knowledges, I am free of defilements.

Thig 6.1

Thig 6.1
Paṭācārā, Who Had a Following of Five Hundred Pañcasatamattātherīgāthā

“One whose path you do not know, not whence they came nor where they went; though they came from who knows where, you mourn that being, crying, ‘Oh my son!’

But one whose path you do know, whence they came or where they went; that one you do not lament—such is the nature of living creatures.

Unasked he came, he left without leave. He must have come from somewhere, and stayed who knows how many days. He left from here by one road, he will go from there by another.

Departing with the form of a human, he will go on transmigrating. As he came, so he went: why cry over that?”

“Oh! For you have plucked the arrow from me, so hard to see, stuck in the heart. You’ve swept away the grief for my son, in which I once was mired.

Today I’ve plucked the arrow, I’m hungerless, extinguished. I go for refuge to that sage, the Buddha, to his teaching, and to the Sangha.”

That is how Paṭācārā, who had a following of five hundred, declared her enlightenment.

Thig 6.2

Thig 6.2
Vāseṭṭhī
Vāseṭṭhītherīgāthā

Struck down with grief for my son, deranged, out of my mind, naked, my hair flying, I wandered here and there.

I lived on rubbish heaps, in cemeteries and highways. For three years I wandered, stricken by hunger and thirst.

Then I saw the Holy One back at the city of Mithilā. Tamer of the untamed, the Awakened One fears nothing from any quarter.

Regaining my mind, I paid homage and sat down. Out of compassion Gotama taught me the Dhamma.

After hearing his teaching, I went forth to homelessness. Applying myself to the Teacher’s words, I realized the state of grace.

All sorrows are cut off, given up, they end here. I've fully understood the basis from which grief comes to be.

Thig 6.3

Thig 6.3
Khemā
Khemātherīgāthā

“You’re so young and beautiful! I too am young, just a youth. Come, Khemā, let us enjoy the music of a five-piece band.”

“This body is rotting, ailing and frail, I’m horrified and repelled by it, and I’ve eradicated sensual craving.

Sensual pleasures are like swords and stakes; the aggregates are their chopping block. What you call sensual delight is now no delight for me.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

“Worshiping the stars, serving the sacred flame in a grove; failing to grasp the true nature of things, foolish me, I thought this was purity.

But now I worship the Awakened One, supreme among men. Doing the teacher’s bidding, I am released from all suffering.”

Thig 6.4

Thig 6.4
Sujātā
Sujātātherīgāthā

I was adorned with jewelry and all dressed up, with garlands, and sandalwood makeup piled on, all covered over with decorations, and surrounded by my maids.

Taking food and drink, staples and dainties in no small amount, I left my house and took myself to the park.

I enjoyed myself there and played about, and then, returning to my own house, I saw a monastic dwelling, and so I entered the Añjana grove at Sāketa.

Seeing the light of the world, I paid homage and sat down. Out of compassion the Clear-eyed One taught me the Dhamma.

When I heard the great seer, I penetrated the truth. Right there I encountered the Dhamma, the stainless, state free of death.

Then, having understood the true teaching, I went forth to homelessness. I've attained the three knowledges; the Buddha's bidding was not in vain.

Thig 6.5

Thig 6.5
Anopamā
Anopamātherīgāthā

I was born into an eminent family, affluent and wealthy, endowed with a beautiful complexion and figure; Majjha's true-born daughter.

I was sought by princes, coveted by sons of the wealthy. One sent a messenger to my father: "Give me Anopamā!

However much your daughter Anopamā weighs, I'll give you eight times that in gold and gems."

When I saw the Awakened One, the world's Elder, unsurpassed, I paid homage at his feet, and withdrew to one side.

Out of compassion, Gotama taught me the Dhamma. While sitting in that seat, I realized the third fruit.

Then, having shaved off my hair, I went forth to homelessness. This is the seventh day since my craving dried up.

Thig 6.6

Thig 6.6
Mahāpajāpati Gotamī
Mahāpajāpatigotamītherīgāthā

Oh Buddha, my hero: homage to you! Supreme among all beings, who released me from suffering, and many other beings as well.

All suffering is fully understood; craving—its cause—is dried up; the eightfold path has been developed; and cessation has been realized by me.

Previously I was a mother, a son, a father, a brother, and a grandmother. Failing to grasp the true nature of things, I transmigrated without reward.

Since I have seen the Blessed One, this bag of bones is my last. Transmigration through births is finished, now there'll be no more future lives.

I see the disciples in harmony, energetic and resolute, always staunchly vigorous—this is homage to the Buddhas!

It was truly for the benefit of many that Māyā gave birth to Gotama. He swept away the mass of suffering for those stricken by sickness and death.

Thig 6.7

Thig 6.7
Guttā
Guttātherīgāthā

Guttā, you have given up your child, your wealth, and all that you love. Foster the goal for which you went forth; do not fall under the mind's control.

Beings deceived by the mind, playing in Māra's domain, ignorant, they journey on, transmigrating through countless rebirths.

Sensual desire and ill will, and substantialist view; misapprehension of precepts and observances, and doubt as the fifth.

O nun, when you have given up these lower fetters, you won't come back to this world again.

And when you're rid of desire, conceit, ignorance, and restlessness, having cut the fetters, you'll make an end to suffering.

Having wiped out transmigration, and fully understood rebirth, hungerless in this very life, you will live at peace.

Thig 6.8

Thig 6.8
Vijayā
Vijayātherīgāthā

Four or five times I left my dwelling; I had failed to find peace of heart, or any control over my mind.

I approached a nun and politely questioned her. She taught me the Dhamma: the elements and sense fields, the four noble truths, the faculties and the powers, the awakening factors, and the eightfold path for the attainment of the highest goal.

After hearing her words, I did her bidding. In the first watch of the night, I recollected my past lives.

In the middle watch of the night, I purified my clairvoyance. In the last watch of the night, I shattered the mass of darkness.

I then meditated pervading my body with rapture and bliss. On the seventh day I stretched out my feet, having shattered the mass of darkness.

Thig 7.1

Thig 7.1
Uttarā (2nd)
Uttarātherīgāthā

“Taking a pestle, young men pound grain. Supporting partners and children, young men acquire wealth.

Work at the Buddha’s bidding, you won’t regret it. Having quickly washed your feet, sit in a discreet place to meditate.

Establish the mind, unified and serene. Examine conditions as other, not as self.”

“After hearing her words, the instructions of Paṭācārā, I washed my feet and retired to a discreet place.

In the first watch of the night, I recollected my past lives. In the middle watch of the night, I purified my clairvoyance.

In the last watch of the night, I shattered the mass of darkness. I rose up master of the three knowledges: your bidding has been done.

I shall abide honoring you as the thirty gods honor Sakka, undefeated in battle. Master of the three knowledges, I am free of defilements.”

Thig 7.2

Thig 7.2
Cālā
Cālātherīgāthā

“As a nun with developed faculties, having established mindfulness, I penetrated that peaceful state, the blissful stilling of conditions.”

“In whose name did you shave your head? You look like an ascetic, but you don’t believe in any creed. Why do you live as if lost?”

“Followers of other creeds rely on their views. They don’t understand the Dhamma, for they’re no experts in the Dhamma.

But there is one born in the Sakyan clan, the unrivaled Buddha; he taught me the Dhamma for going beyond views.

Suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

After hearing his words, I happily did his bidding. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 7.3

Thig 7.3
Upacālā
Upacālātherīgāthā

“A nun with faculties developed, mindful, seeing clearly, I penetrated that peaceful state, which sinners do not cultivate.”

“Why don’t you approve of rebirth? When you’re born, you get to enjoy sensual pleasures. Enjoy the delights of sensual pleasure; don’t regret it later.”

“Death comes to those who are born; and when born they fall into suffering: the chopping off of hands and feet, killing, caging, misery.

But there is one born in the Sakyan clan, an awakened champion. He taught me the Dhamma for passing beyond rebirth:

suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

After hearing his words, I happily did his bidding. I’ve attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 8.1

Thig 8.1
Sīsūpacālā
Sīsūpacālātherīgāthā

“A nun accomplished in ethics, her sense faculties well-restrained, would realize the peaceful state, so irresistible, delicious and nutritious.”

“There are the Gods of the Thirty-Three, and those of Yama; also the Joyful Deities, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, and the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others. Set your heart on such places, where you used to live.”

“The Gods of the Thirty-Three, and those of Yama; also the Joyful Deities, the Gods Who Love to Imagine, and the Gods Who Control what is Imagined by Others—time after time, life after life, are governed by substantial reality. They haven’t transcended substantial reality, those who transmigrate through birth and death.

All the world is on fire, all the world is alight, all the world is ablaze, all the world is rocking.

The Buddha taught me the Dhamma, unshakable, incomparable, not frequented by ordinary people; my mind adores that place.

After hearing his words, I happily did his bidding. I’ve attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 9.1

Thig 9.1
Vaḍḍha's Mother
Vaḍḍhamātutherīgāthā

"Vaḍḍha, please never ever get entangled in the world. My child, do not partake in suffering again and again.

For happy dwell the sages, Vaḍḍha, unstirred, their doubts cut off, cooled and tamed, and free of defilements.

Vaḍḍha, foster the path that the seers have walked, for the attainment of vision, and for making an end of suffering."

"Mother, you speak with such assurance to me on this matter. My dear mom, I can't help thinking that no entanglements are found in you."

"Vaḍḍha, not a jot or a skerrick of entanglement is found in me for any conditions at all, whether low, high, or middling.

All defilements are ended for me, meditating and diligent. I've attained the three knowledges and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions."

"Oh so excellent was the goad my mother spurred me with! Owing to her compassion, she spoke verses on the ultimate goal.

On hearing her words, advised by my mother, I was struck with righteous urgency for the sake of finding sanctuary from the yoke.

Striving, resolute, tireless all day and night, urged on by my mother, I realized supreme peace.

Thig 10.1

Thig 10.1
Kisāgotamī
Kisāgotamītherīgāthā

“Pointing out how the world works, the sages have praised good friendship. Associating with good friends, even a fool becomes astute.

Associate with true persons, for that is how wisdom grows. Should you associate with true persons, you would be freed from all suffering.

And you would understand suffering, its origin and cessation, the eightfold path, and so the four noble truths.”

“‘A woman’s life is painful,’ explained the Buddha, guide for those who wish to train, ‘and for a co-wife it’s especially so. After giving birth just once, some women even cut their own throat, while refined ladies take poison. Being guilty of killing a person, they both undergo ruin.’”

“I was on the road and about to give birth., when I saw my husband dead. I gave birth there on the road before I’d reached my own house.

My two children have died, and on the road my husband lies dead—oh woe is me! Mother, father, and brother all burning up on the same pyre.”

“Oh woe is you whose family is lost, the suffering you have undergone has no measure; you have been shedding tears for many thousands of lives.”

“While staying in the charnel ground, I saw my son’s flesh being eaten. With my family destroyed, condemned by all, and my husband dead, I realized freedom from death.

I’ve developed the noble eightfold path leading to freedom from death. I’ve realized quenching, as seen in the mirror of the Dhamma.

I’ve plucked out the dart, laid down the burden, and done what needed to be done.” The senior nun Kisāgotamī, her mind released, said this.

Thig 11.1

Thig 11.1
Uppalavaṇṇā
Uppalavaṇṇātherīgāthā

“The two of us were co-wives, though we were mother and daughter. I was struck with a sense of urgency, so astonishing and hair-raising!

Curse those filthy sensual pleasures, so nasty and thorny, where we, both mother and daughter, had to be co-wives together.

Seeing the danger in sensual pleasures, seeing renunciation as sanctuary, I went forth in Rājagaha from the lay life to homelessness.

I know my past lives; my clairvoyance is clarified; I comprehend the minds of others; my clairaudience is purified;

I've realized the psychic powers, and attained the ending of defilements. I’ve realized the six kinds of direct knowledge, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

I created a four-horsed chariot using my psychic powers. Then I bowed at the feet of the Buddha, the glorious protector of the world.”

“You’ve come to this sal tree all crowned with flowers, and stand at its root all alone. But you have no companion with you, silly girl, aren’t you afraid of rascals?”

“Even if 100,000 rascals like this were to gang up, I’d stir not a hair nor tremble. What could you do to me all alone, Māra?

I’ll vanish, or I’ll enter your belly; I could stand between your eyebrows and you still wouldn’t see me.

I’m the master of my own mind, I’ve developed the bases of psychic power well. I’ve realized the six kinds of direct knowledge, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Sensual pleasures are like swords and stakes; the aggregates are their chopping block. What you call sensual delight is now no delight for me.

Relishing is destroyed in every respect, and the mass of darkness is shattered. So know this, Wicked One: you’re beaten, terminator!”

Thig 12.1

Thig 12.1
Puṇṇikā
Puṇṇātherīgāthā

“I used to be a water-carrier. Even when it was cold, I would always plunge into the water, afraid of my masters’ beatings, harassed by fear of abuse and anger.

Brahmin, what are you afraid of, that you always plunge into the water, your limbs trembling in the freezing cold?”

“Oh, but you already know, Madam Puṇṇikā, when you ask me: I am doing good deeds, to ward off the wickedness I have done.

Whosoever young or old performs a wicked deed, by ablution in water they are released from their wicked deed.”

“Who on earth told you this, one ignoramus to another: ‘Actually, by ablution in water one is released from a wicked deed.’

Would not they all go to heaven, then: all the frogs and the turtles, serpents, crocodiles, and other water-dwellers too?

Butchers of sheep and pigs, fishermen, animal trappers, bandits, executioners, and others of evil deeds: by ablution in water they too would be released from their wicked deeds.

If these rivers washed away the bad deeds of the past, then they’d also wash off goodness, and thereby you would be excluded.

Brahmin, the thing that you are afraid of, when you always plunge into the water, do not do that very thing, don’t let the cold harm your skin.”

“I have been on the wrong path, and you’ve guided me to the noble path. Madam, I give to you this ablution cloth.”

“Keep the cloth for yourself, I do not want it. If you fear suffering, if you don’t like suffering, then don’t do bad deeds either openly or in secret. If you should do a bad deed, or you’re doing one now, you won’t be freed from suffering, though you fly away and flee. If you fear suffering, if you don’t like suffering, go for refuge to the Buddha, the poised, to his teaching and to the Sangha. Undertake the precepts, that will be good for you."

"I go for refuge to the Buddha, the poised, to his teaching and to the Sangha. I undertake the precepts, that will be good for me.

In the past I was related to Brahmā, today I truly am a brahmin! I am master of the three knowledges, accomplished in wisdom, I'm a scholar and a bathed initiate."

Thig 13.1

Thig 13.1
Ambapālī
Ambapālītherīgāthā

My hair was as black as bees, graced with curly tips; now old, it has become like hemp bark—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

Crowned with flowers, my head was as fragrant as a perfume box; now old, it smells like dog fur—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My hair was as thick as a well-planted forest, it shone, parted with brush and pins; now old, it's patchy and sparse—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

With plaits of black and ribbons of gold, it was so pretty, adorned with braids; now old, my head's gone bald—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My eyebrows used to look so nice, like crescents painted by an artist; now old, they droop with wrinkles—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My eyes shone brilliant as gems, wide and indigo; ruined by age, they shine no more—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My nose was like a perfect peak, lovely in my bloom of youth; now old, it's shriveled like a pepper; the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My ear-lobes were so pretty, like lovingly crafted bracelets; now old, they droop with wrinkles—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My teeth used to be so pretty, bright as a jasmine flower; now old, they're broken and yellow—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My singing was sweet as a cuckoo wandering in the forest groves; now old, it's patchy and croaking—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My neck used to be so pretty, like a polished shell of conch; now old, it's bowed and bent —the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My arms used to be so pretty, like rounded cross-bars; with age, they wrinkle and sag as a patala tree— the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My hands used to be so pretty, adorned with lovely golden rings; now old, they're like red radishes—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My breasts used to be so pretty, swelling, round, close, and high; now they droop like water bags—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My body used to be so pretty, like a polished slab of gold; now it's covered with fine wrinkles—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

Both my thighs used to be so pretty, like an elephant's trunk; now old, they're like bamboo—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

My calves used to be so pretty, adorned with cute golden anklets; now old, they're like sesame sticks—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

Both my feet used to be so pretty, plump as if with cotton-wool; now old, they're cracked and wrinkly—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

This bag of bones once was such, but now it's withered, home to so much pain; like a house in decay with plaster crumbling—the word of the truthful one is confirmed.

Thig 13.2

Thig 13.2
Rohinī
Rohinītherīgāthā

“You fell asleep saying ‘ascetics’; you woke up saying ‘ascetics’; you only praise ascetics, madam—surely you’ll become an ascetic.

You provide ascetics with abundant food and drink. I ask you now, Rohiṇī: why do you like ascetics?

They don’t like to work, they’re lazy, they live on charity; always on the lookout, greedy for sweets—so why do you like ascetics?”

“Dad, for a long time now you’ve questioned me about ascetics. I shall extol for you their wisdom, ethics, and vigor.

They like to work, they’re not lazy; by giving up greed and hate, they do the best kind of work—that’s why I like ascetics.

As for the three roots of evil, by pure deeds they shake them off. They have given up all wickedness—that’s why I like ascetics.

Their bodily actions are pure; their actions of speech likewise; their actions of mind are pure—that’s why I like ascetics.

Immaculate as a conch-shell, they’re pure inside and out, full of bright qualities—that’s why I like ascetics.

They’re learned and memorize the teaching, noble, living righteously, teaching the text and its meaning: that’s why I like ascetics.

They’re learned and memorize the teaching, noble, living righteously, unified in mind, and mindful—that’s why I like ascetics.

Traveling afar, and mindful, thoughtful in counsel, not restless, they understand the end of suffering—that’s why I like ascetics.

When they leave a village, they don’t look back with longing, but proceed without concern —that’s why I like ascetics.

They hoard no goods in storerooms, nor in pots or baskets. They seek food prepared by others—that’s why I like ascetics.

They don’t receive silver, or gold whether coined or uncoined; feeding on whatever comes that day, that’s why I like ascetics.

They have gone forth from different families, even different countries, and yet they all love one another—that’s why I like ascetics.”

“Dear Rohinī, it was truly for our benefit that you were born in our family! You have faith and such keen respect for the Buddha, his teaching, and the Sangha.

For you understand this supreme field of merit. These ascetics will henceforth receive our religious donation, too.

For there we will place our sacrifice, and it shall be abundant.” “If you fear suffering, if you don’t like suffering, go for refuge to the Buddha, the poised, to his teaching and to the Sangha. Undertake the precepts, that will be good for you.”

“I go for refuge to the Buddha, the poised, to his teaching and to the Sangha. I undertake the precepts, that will be good for me.

In the past I was related to Brahmā, now I genuinely am a brahmin. Possessing the three knowledges, I’m a genuine scholar, I’m a knowledge master, a bathed initiate.”

Thig 13.3

Thig 13.3
Cāpā
Cāpātherīgāthā

“Once I carried a hermit’s staff, but these days I hunt deer. My desires have made me unable to cross from the awful marsh to the far shore.

Thinking me so in love with her, Cāpā kept our son happy. Having cut Cāpā’s bond, I’ll go forth once again.”

“Don’t be mad at me, great hero! Don’t be mad at me, great sage! If you’re mired in anger you can’t stay pure, let alone be fervent.”

“I’m going to leave Nālā! For who’d stay here at Nālā! With their figures, the women trap ascetics who live righteously.”

“Please, Kāḷa, come back to me. Enjoy pleasures like you did before. I’ll be under your control, along with any relatives I have.”

“Cāpā, if even a quarter of what you say were true, it would be a splendid thing for a man in love with you!”

“Kāḷa, I am like a sprouting iris flowering on a mountain top, like a blossoming pomegranate, like a patala tree on an isle;

my limbs are anointed with yellow sandalwood, and I wear the finest Kāsi cloth: when I am so very beautiful, how can you abandon me and leave?”

“You’re like a fowler who wants to catch a bird; but you won’t trap me with your captivating form.”

“But this child, my fruit, was begotten by you, Kāḷa. When I have this child, how can you abandon me and leave?”

“The wise give up children, family, and wealth. Great heroes go forth like elephants breaking their bonds.”

“Now, this son of yours: I’ll strike him to the ground right here, with a stick or with a knife! Grieving your son, you will not leave.”

“Even if you feed our son to jackals and dogs, I’d never return again, you bitch, not even for the child’s sake.”

“Well then, sir, tell me, where will you go, Kāḷa? To what village or town, city or capital?”

“Last time we had followers, we weren’t ascetics, we just thought we were. We wandered from village to village, to cities and capitals.

But now the Blessed One, the Buddha, back on the bank of the Nerañjara River, teaches the Dhamma so that living creatures may abandon all suffering. I shall go to his presence, he shall be my Teacher.”

“Now please convey my respects to the supreme protector of the world. Circling him to your right, dedicate my religious donation.”

“This is the proper thing to do, just as you have said to me. I’ll convey your respects to the supreme protector of the world. Circling him to my right, I’ll dedicate your religious donation.”

Then Kāḷa set out back to the bank of the Nerañjara River. He saw the Awakened One teaching the state free of death:

suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

He paid homage at his feet, circling him to his right, and conveyed Cāpā’s dedication; then he went forth to homelessness. He attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha’s instructions.

Thig 13.4

Thig 13.4
Sundarī
Sundarītherīgāthā

“Before, when your children passed away, you would expose them to be eaten. All day and all night you’d be racked with despair.

Today, brahmin lady, you have exposed seven children in all to be eaten; Vāseṭṭhī, what is the reason why you’re not so filled with despair?”

“Many hundreds of children, hundreds of family circles, both mine and yours, brahmin, have been eaten in the past.

Having known the escape from rebirth and death I neither grieve nor lament, nor do I despair.”

“Wow, Vaseṭṭhī, the words you speak really are amazing! Whose teaching did you understand that you say these things?”

“Brahmin, the Awakened One back at the city of Mithilā, teaches the Dhamma so that living creatures may abandon all suffering.

After hearing the perfected one’s teaching, brahmin, which is free of all attachments, having understood the true teaching there, I’ve swept away grief for children.”

“I too shall go to the city of Mithilā. Hopefully the Buddha may release me from all suffering.”

The brahmin saw the Buddha, liberated, free of attachments. He taught him the Dhamma, the sage gone beyond suffering:

suffering, suffering’s origin, suffering’s transcendence, and the noble eightfold path that leads to the stilling of suffering.

Having understood the true teaching there, he chose to go forth. Three days later Sujāta realized the three knowledges.

“Please, charioteer, go; take back this carriage. Bidding my brahmin lady good health, say: ‘The brahmin has now gone forth. After three days, Sujāta realized the three knowledges.’”

Then taking the carriage, along with a thousand coins, the charioteer bade the brahmin lady good health, and said: “The brahmin has now gone forth. After three days, Sujāta realized the three knowledges."

Hearing that the brahmin had the three knowledges, the lady replied: "I present to you this horse and carriage, O charioteer, along with 1000 coins, and a full bowl as a gift."

"Keep the horse and carriage, lady, along with the thousand coins. I too shall go forth in his presence, the one of such splendid wisdom."

"Elephants, cattle, jeweled earrings, such opulent domestic wealth: having given it up, your father went forth, enjoy these riches Sundarī, you are the family heir."

"Elephants, cattle, jeweled earrings, such delightful domestic wealth: having given it up, my father went forth, racked by grief for his son. I too shall go forth, racked by grief for my brother."

"Sundarī, may the wish you desire come true. Leftovers as gleanings, and cast-off rags as robes—make do with these, free of defilements regarding the next life."

"Ma'am, while I am still a trainee nun, my clairvoyance is clarified; I know my past lives, the places I used to live.

Relying on a fine lady like you, a senior nun who beautifies the Sangha, I've attained the three knowledges, and fulfilled the Buddha's instructions.

Give me permission ma'am, I wish to go to Sāvatthī, where I shall roar my lion's roar before the best of Buddhas."

"Sundarī, see the Teacher! Golden colored, golden skinned, tamer of the untamed, the Awakened One who fears nothing from any quarter."

"See Sundarī coming, liberated, free of attachments. desireless, detached, her task completed, without defilements."

"Having set forth from Varanasi and come to your presence, great hero, your disciple Sundarī bows at your feet.

You are the Buddha, you are the Teacher, I am your rightful daughter, brahmin, born of your mouth. I've completed the task and am free of defilements."

"Then welcome, good lady, you're by no means unwelcome. For this is how the tamed come bowing at the Teacher's feet; desireless, detached, the task completed, without defilements."

Thig 13.5

Thig 13.5
Subhā, the Smith's Daughter
Subhākammāradhītutherīgāthā

"I was so young, my clothes so fresh, at that time I heard the teaching. Being diligent, I comprehended the truth; and then I became profoundly dispassionate towards all sensual pleasures. Seeing fear in substantial reality, I longed for renunciation.

Giving up my family circle, bonded servants and workers, and my flourishing villages and lands, so delightful and pleasant,

I went forth; all that is no small wealth. Now that I've gone forth in faith like this, in the true teaching so well proclaimed, since I desire to have nothing, it would not be appropriate to take back gold and money, having already got rid of them.

Money or gold doesn't lead to peace and awakening. It doesn't befit an ascetic, it's not the wealth of the noble ones; it's just greed and vanity, confusion and growing decadence, dubious, troublesome—there is nothing lasting there.

Depraved and heedless, unenlightened folk, their hearts corrupt, fight each other, creating conflict.

Killing, caging, misery, loss, grief, and lamentation; those sunk in sensual pleasures see many disastrous things.

My family, why do you urge me on to pleasures, as if you were my enemies? You know I've gone forth, seeing fear in sensual pleasures.

It's not due to gold, coined or uncoined, that defilements come to an end. Sensual pleasures are enemies and murderers, hostile forces that bind you to thorns.

My family, why do you urge me on to pleasures, as if you were my enemies? You know I've gone forth, shaven, wrapped in my outer robe.

Leftovers as gleanings, and cast-off rags as robes—that's what's fitting for me, the essentials of the homeless life.

Great seers expel sensual pleasures, both human and divine. Safe in their sanctuary, they are freed, having found unshakable happiness.

May I not encounter sensual pleasures, for no shelter is found in them. Sensual pleasures are enemies and murderers, as painful as a bonfire.

Greed is an obstacle, a threat, full of anguish and thorns; it is out of balance, a great gateway to confusion.

Hazardous and terrifying, sensual pleasures are like a snake's head, where fools delight, the blind ordinary folk.

Stuck in the swamp of sensuality, there are so many ignorant in the world. They know nothing of the end of rebirth and death.

Because of sensual pleasures, people jump right on to the path that goes to a bad place. So many walk the path that brings disease onto themselves.

That's how sensual pleasures create enemies; they are so tormenting, so corrupting, trapping beings with worldly pleasures of the flesh, they are nothing less than the bonds of death.

Maddening, enticing, sensual pleasures derange the mind. They're a snare laid by Māra for the corruption of beings.

Sensual pleasures are infinitely dangerous, they're full of suffering, a terrible poison; offering little gratification, they're makers of strife, withering bright qualities away.

Since I've created so much ruination because of sensual pleasures, I will not relapse to them again, but will always delight in quenching.

Fighting against sensual pleasures, longing for that cool state, I shall meditate diligently for the ending of all fetters.

Sorrowless, stainless, secure: I'll follow that path, the straight noble eightfold way by which the seers have crossed over."

"Look at this: Subhā the smith's daughter, standing firm in the teaching. She has entered the imperturbable state, meditating at the root of a tree.

It's just eight days since she went forth, full of faith in the beautiful teaching. Guided by Uppalavaṇṇā, she is master of the three knowledges, conqueror of death.

This one is freed from slavery and debt, a nun with faculties developed. Unyoked from all yokes, she has completed the task and is free of defilements."

Thus did Sakka, lord of all creatures, along with a host of gods, having come by their psychic powers, honor Subhā, the smith's daughter.

Thig 14.1

Thig 14.1
Subhā of Jīvaka's Mango Grove
Subhājīvakambavanikātherīgāthā

Going to the lovely mango grove of Jīvaka, the nun Subhā was held up by a rascal. Subhā said this to him:

"What harm have I done to you, that you stand in my way? Sir, it's not proper that a man should touch a woman gone forth.

This training was taught by the Holy One, it is a serious matter in my teacher's instructions. I am pure and rid of blemishes, so why do you stand in my way?

One whose mind is sullied against one unsullied; one who is lustful against one free of lust; unblemished, my heart is freed in every respect, so why do you stand in my way?"

"You're young and flawless—what will going-forth do for you? Throw away the ocher robe, come and play in the blossom grove.

Everywhere, the scent of pollen wafts sweet, born of the flowering woods. The start of spring is a happy time—come and play in the blossom grove.

And trees crested with flowers cry out, as it were, in the breeze. But what kind of fun will you have if you plunge into the woods all alone?

Frequented by packs of predators, and cow elephants aroused by rutting bulls; you wish to go without a friend to the deserted, awe-inspiring forest.

Like a shining doll of gold, like a nymph wandering in a park of colorful vines, your matchless beauty will shine in graceful clothes of exquisite muslin.

I'll be under your sway, if we are to stay in the forest. I love no creature more than you, O pixie with such bashful eyes.

Were you to take up my invitation—'Come, be happy, and live in a house'—you'll stay in a longhouse sheltered from wind; let the ladies look to your needs.

Dressed in exquisite muslin, put on your garlands and your cosmetics. I'll make all sorts of adornments for you, of gold and gems and pearls.

Climb onto a costly bed, its coverlet so clean and nice, with a new woolen mattress, so fragrant, sprinkled with sandalwood.

As a blue lily risen from the water remains untouched by men, so too, O chaste and holy lady, your limbs grow old unshared."

"This carcass is full of putrefaction, it swells the charnel ground, for its nature is to fall apart. What do you think is so essential in it that you stare at me so crazily?"

"Your eyes are like those of a doe, or a pixie in the mountains; seeing them, my sensual desire grows all the more.

Set in your flawless face of golden sheen, your eyes compare to a blue lily's bud; seeing them, my sensual excitement grows all the more.

Though you may wander far, I'll still think of you, with your lashes so long, and your vision so clear. I love no eyes more than yours, O pixie with such bashful eyes."

"You're setting out on the wrong road! You're looking to take the moon for your toy! You're trying to leap over Mount Meru! You, who are hunting a child of the Buddha!

For in this world with all its gods, there will be no more lust anywhere in me. I don't even know what kind it could be, it's been smashed root and all by the path.

Cast out like sparks from fiery coals, it's worth no more than a bowl of poison. I don't even see what kind it could be, it's been smashed root and all by the path.

Well may you try to seduce the type of lady who has not reflected on these things, or who has never attended the Teacher: but this is a lady who knows—now you're in trouble!

No matter if I am reviled or praised, or feel pleasure or pain: I stay mindful. Knowing that conditions are ugly, my mind clings to nothing.

I am a disciple of the Holy One, riding in the carriage of the eightfold path. The dart pulled out, free of defilements, I'm happy to have reached an empty place.

I've seen brightly painted dolls and wooden puppets, tied to sticks and strings, and made to dance in many ways.

But when the sticks and strings are taken off—loosed, disassembled, dismantled, irrecoverable, stripped to parts—on what could the mind be fixed?

That's what my body is really like, without those things it can't go on. This being so, on what could the mind be fixed?

It's like when you see a mural on a wall, painted with orpiment, and your vision gets confused, falsely perceiving that it is a person.

Though it's as worthless as a magic trick, or a golden tree seen in a dream, you blindly chase what is hollow, like a puppet show among the people.

An eye is just a ball in a socket, with a pupil in the middle, and tears, and mucus comes from there as well, and so different eye-parts are lumped all together."

The pretty lady ripped out her eye. With no attachment in her mind at all, she said: “Come now, take this eye,” and gave it to the man right then.

And at that moment he lost his lust, and asked for her forgiveness: “May you be well, O chaste and holy lady; such a thing will not happen again.

Attacking a person such as this is like holding on to a blazing fire, or grabbing a deadly viper! May you be well, please forgive me.”

When that nun was released she went to the presence of the excellent Buddha. Seeing the one with excellent marks of merit, her eye became just as it was before.

Thig 15.1

Thig 15.1
Isidāsī
Isidāsītherīgāthā

In Pāṭaliputta, the cream of the world, the city named for a flower, there were two nuns from the Sakyan clan, both of them ladies of quality.

One was named Isidāsī, the second Bodhī. They both were accomplished in ethics, lovers of meditation and chanting, learned, crushing corruptions.

They wandered for alms and had their meal. When they had washed their bowls, they sat happily in a private place and started a conversation.

"You're so lovely, Venerable Isidāsī, your youth has not yet faded. What problem did you see that made you dedicate your life to renunciation?"

Being pressed like this in private, Isidāsī, skilled in teaching Dhamma, voiced the following words. "Bodhī, hear how I went forth.

In the fine town of Ujjenī, my father was a financier, a good and moral man. I was his only daughter, dear, beloved, and cherished.

Then some suitors came for me from the top family of Sāketa. They were sent by a financier abounding in wealth, to whom my father then gave me as daughter-in-law.

Come morning and come night, I bowed with my head to the feet of my father and mother-in-law, just as I had been told.

Whenever I saw my husband's sisters, his brothers, his servants, or even he, my one and only, I nervously gave them a seat.

Whatever they wanted—food and drink, treats, or whatever was in the cupboard—I brought out and offered to them, ensuring each got what was fitting.

Having risen bright and early, I approached the main house, washed my hands and feet, and went to my husband with joined palms.

Taking a comb, adornments, eyeshadow, and a mirror, I myself did the makeup for my husband, as if I were his beautician.

I myself cooked the rice; I myself washed the pots. I looked after my husband like a mother her only child.

Thus I showed my devotion to him, a loyal, virtuous, and humble servant, getting up early, and working tirelessly: yet still my husband did me wrong.

He said to his mother and father: ‘I’ll take my leave and go, I can’t stand to live together with Isidāsī staying in the same house.’

‘Son, don’t speak like this! Isidāsī is astute and competent, she gets up early and works tirelessly, son, why doesn’t she please you?’

‘She hasn’t done anything to hurt me, but I just can’t stand to live with her. As far as I’m concerned, she’s just horrible. I’ve had enough, I’ll take my leave and go.’

When they heard his words, my father-in-law and mother-in-law asked me: ‘What did you do wrong? Tell us honestly, have no fear.’

‘I’ve done nothing wrong, I haven’t hurt him, or said anything bad. What can I possibly do, when my husband finds me so hateful?’

They led me back to my father’s home, distraught, overcome with suffering, and said: ‘By caring for our son, we’ve lost her, so lovely and lucky!’

Next my dad gave me to the household of a second wealthy family-man. For this he got half the bride-price of that which the financier paid.

In his house I also lived a month, before he too wanted me gone; though I served him like a slave, virtuous and doing no wrong.

My father then spoke to a beggar for alms, a tamer of others and of himself: ‘Be my son-in-law; set aside your rags and bowl.’

He stayed a fortnight before he said to my dad: ‘Give me back my rag robes, my bowl, and my cup—I’ll wander begging for alms again.’

So then my mum and my dad and my whole group of relatives said: ‘What has not been done for you here? Quickly, tell us what we can do for you!’

When they spoke to him like this he said, ‘If I can make do for myself, that is enough. I can’t stand to live together with Isidāsī staying in the same house.’

Released, he left. But I sat all alone contemplating: ‘Having taken my leave, I’ll go, either to die or to go forth.’

But then the venerable lady Jinadattā, learned and virtuous, who had memorized the monastic law, came to my dad’s house in search of alms.

When I saw her, I got up from my seat and prepared it for her. When she had taken her seat, I honored her feet and offered her a meal, satisfying her with food and drink, treats, or whatever was in the cupboard. Then I said: ‘Ma’am, I wish to go forth!’

But my dad said to me: ‘Child, practice Dhamma right here! With food and drink satisfy ascetics and the twice-born.’

Then I said to my dad, crying, my joined palms raised to him: ‘I’ve done bad things in the past; I shall wear that bad deed away.’

And my dad said to me: ‘May you attain awakening, the highest state, and may you find the extinguishment that was realized by the best of men!’

I bowed down to my mother and father, and my whole group of relatives; and then, seven days after going forth, I realized the three knowledges.

I know my last seven lives; I shall relate to you the deeds of which this life is the fruit and result: focus your whole mind on that.

In the city of Erakacca I was a goldsmith with lots of money. Drunk on the pride of youth, I had sex with someone else’s wife.

Having passed away from there, I burned in hell for a long time. Rising up from there I was conceived in a monkey’s womb.

When I was only seven days old, I was castrated by the monkey chief. This was the fruit of that deed, because of adultery with another’s wife.

Having passed away from there, passing away in Sindhava grove, I was conceived in the womb of a lame, one-eyed she-goat.

I carried children on my back for twelve years, and all the while I was castrated, worm-eaten, and tail-less, because of adultery with another’s wife.

Having passed away from there, I was reborn in a cow owned by a cattle merchant. A red calf, castrated, for twelve months

I drew a big plow. I shouldered a cart, blind, tail-less, feeble, because of adultery with another’s wife.

Having passed away from there, I was born of a slave in the street, with neither male nor female parts, because of adultery with another’s wife.

I died at thirty years of age, and was reborn as a girl in a carter’s family. We were poor, of little wealth, greatly oppressed by creditors.

Because of the huge interest we owed, I was dragged away screaming, taken by force from the family home by a caravan leader.

When I was sixteen years old, seeing I was a girl of marriageable age, his son confined me as his wife— Giridāsa was his name.

He also had another wife, a virtuous and well-known lady of quality, loyal to her husband; yet I stirred up resentment in her.

As the fruit of that deed, they abandoned me and left, though I served them like a slave. Now I've made an end to this as well."

Thig 16.1

Thig 16.1
Sumedhā
Sumedhātherīgāthā

In Mantāvatī city, Sumedhā, the daughter of King Koñca's chief queen, was converted by those who practice the Buddha's teaching.

She was virtuous, a brilliant speaker, learned, and trained in the Buddha's instructions. She went up to her mother and father and said: "Pay heed, both of you!

I delight in extinguishment! No life is eternal, not even that of the gods; what then of sensual pleasures, so hollow, offering little gratification and much anguish.

Sensual pleasures are bitter as the venom of a snake, yet fools are infatuated by them. Sent to hell for a very long time, they are beaten and tortured.

Those who grow in wickedness always sorrow in the underworld due to their own bad deeds. They're fools, unrestrained in body, mind, and speech.

Those witless, senseless fools, trapped by the origin of suffering, are ignorant, not understanding the noble truths when they are being taught.

Most people, mum, ignorant of the truths taught by the excellent Buddha, look forward to the next life, longing for rebirth among the gods.

Yet even rebirth among the gods in an impermanent state is not eternal. But fools are not scared of being reborn time and again.

Four lower realms and two other realms may be gained somehow or other. But for those who end up in a lower realm, there is no way to go forth in the hells.

May you both grant me permission to go forth in the dispensation of him of the ten powers. Living at ease, I shall apply myself to giving up rebirth and death.

What's the point in hope, in a new life, in this useless, hollow body? Grant me permission, I shall go forth to make an end of craving for a new life.

A Buddha has arisen, the time has come, the unlucky moment has passed. As long as I live I'll never betray my ethical precepts or my celibate path."

Then Sumedhā said to her parents: "So long as I remain a lay person, I'll refuse to eat any food, until I've fallen under the sway of death."

Upset, her mother burst into tears, while her father, though grieved, tried his best to persuade her as she lay collapsed on the longhouse roof.

“Get up child, why do you grieve so? You’re already betrothed to be married! King Anīkaratta the handsome is in Vāraṇavatī: he is your betrothed.

You shall be the chief queen, wife of King Anīkaratta. Ethical precepts, the celibate path—going forth is hard to do, my child.

As a royal there is command, wealth, authority, and the happiness of possessions. Enjoy sensual pleasures while you’re still young! Let your wedding take place, my child!”

Then Sumedhā said to him: “Let this not come to pass! Existence is hollow! I shall either go forth or die, but I shall never marry.

Why cling to this rotting body so foul, stinking of fluids, a horrifying water-bag carcass, always oozing, full of filth?

Knowing it like I do, what’s the point? A carcass is vile, smeared with flesh and blood, food for birds and swarms of worms—why have we been given it?

Before long the body, bereft of consciousness, is carried out to the charnel ground, to be tossed aside like an old log by relatives in disgust.

When they’ve tossed it away in the charnel ground, to be eaten by others, your own parents bathe themselves, disgusted; what then of people at large?

They’re attached to this hollow carcass, this mass of sinews and bone; this rotting body full of saliva, tears, feces, and pus.

If anyone were to dissect it, turning it inside out, the unbearable stench would disgust even their own mother.

Rationally examining the aggregates, elements, and sense fields as conditioned, rooted in birth, suffering—why would I wish for marriage?

Let three hundred sharp swords fall on my body everyday! Even if the slaughter lasted 100 years it’d be worth it if it led to the end of suffering.

One who understands the Teacher’s words would put up with this slaughter: ‘Long for you is transmigration being killed time and time again.’

Among gods and humans, in the realm of animals or that of titans, among the ghosts or in the hells, endless killings are seen.

The hells are full of killing, for the corrupt who have fallen to the underworld. Even among the gods there is no shelter, for no happiness excels extinguishment.

Those who are committed to the dispensation of him of the ten powers attain extinguishment. Living at ease, they apply themselves to giving up rebirth and death.

On this very day, dad, I shall renounce: what's to enjoy in hollow riches? I'm disillusioned with sensual pleasures, they're like vomit, made like a palm stump."

As she spoke thus to her father, Anīkaratta, to whom she was betrothed, approached from Vāraṇavatī at the time appointed for the marriage.

Then Sumedhā took up a knife, and cut off her hair, so black, thick, and soft. Shutting herself in the longhouse, she entered the first absorption.

And as she entered it there, Anīkaratta arrived at the city. Then in the longhouse, Sumedhā well developed the perception of impermanence.

As she investigated in meditation, Anīkaratta quickly climbed the stairs. His limbs adorned with gems and gold, he begged Sumedhā with joined palms:

"As a royal there is command, wealth, authority, and the happiness of possessions. Enjoy sensual pleasures while you're still young! Sensual pleasures are hard to find in the world!

I've handed royalty to you—enjoy riches, give gifts! Don't be sad; your parents are upset."

Sumedhā, having no use for sensual pleasures, and having done away with delusion, spoke right back: "Do not take pleasure in sensuality! See the danger in sensual pleasures!

Mandhātā, king of four continents, foremost in enjoying sensual pleasures, died unsated, his desires unfulfilled.

Were the seven jewels to rain from the sky all over the ten directions, there would be no sating of sensual pleasures: people die insatiable.

Like a butcher's knife and chopping board, sensual pleasures are like a snake's head. They burn like a fire-brand, they resemble a skeleton.

Sensual pleasures are impermanent and unstable, they're full of suffering, a terrible poison; like a hot iron ball, the root of misery, their fruit is pain.

Sensual pleasures are like fruits of a tree, like scraps of meat, painful, they trick you like a dream; sensual pleasures are like borrowed goods.

Sensual pleasures are like swords and stakes; a disease, a boil, misery and trouble. Like a pit of glowing coals, the root of misery, fear and slaughter.

Thus sensual pleasures have been explained to be obstructions, so full of suffering. Please leave! As for me, I have no trust in a new life.

What can someone else do for me when their own head is burning? When stalked by old age and death, you should strive to destroy them."

She opened the door and saw her parents with Anīkaratta, sitting crying on the floor. And so she said this:

“Transmigration is long for fools, crying again and again at that with no known beginning —the death of a father, the killing of a brother or of themselves.

Remember the ocean of tears, of milk, of blood—transmigration with no known beginning. Remember the bones piled up by beings transmigrating.

Remember the four oceans compared with tears, milk, and blood. Remember bones piled up high as Mount Vipula in the course of a single eon.

Transmigration with no known beginning is compared to this broad land of India; if divided into lumps the size of jujube seeds, they’d still be fewer than his mother’s mothers.

Remember the grass, sticks, and leaves, compare that with no known beginning: if split into pieces four inches in size, they’d still be fewer than his father’s fathers.

Remember the one-eyed turtle and the yoke with a hole blown in the ocean from east to west—sticking the head in the hole is a metaphor for gaining a human birth.

Remember the form of this unlucky body, insubstantial as a lump of foam. See the aggregates as impermanent, remember the hells so full of anguish.

Remember those swelling the charnel grounds again and again in life after life. Remember the danger of gharials! Remember the four truths!

When freedom from death is there to be found, why would you drink the five bitter poisons? For every enjoyment of sensual pleasures is so much more bitter than them.

When freedom from death is there to be found, why would you burn for sensual pleasures? For every enjoyment of sensual pleasures is burning, boiling, bubbling, seething.

When there is freedom from enmity, why would you want your enemy, sensual pleasures? Like kings, fire, robbers, flood, and people you dislike, sensual pleasures are very much your enemy.

When liberation is there to be found, what good are sensual pleasures that kill and bind? For though unwilling, when sensual pleasures are there, they are subject to the pain of killing and binding.

As a blazing grass torch burns one who grasps it without letting go, sensual pleasures are like a grass torch, burning those who do not let go.

Don’t give up abundant happiness for the trivial joys of sensual pleasure. Don’t fret later, like a catfish on a hook.

Deliberately control yourself among sensual pleasures! You’re like a dog fixed to a chain: sensual pleasures will surely devour you as hungry corpse-workers would a dog.

Harnessed to sensual pleasure, you undergo endless pain, along with much mental anguish: relinquish sensual pleasures, they don’t last!

When the unaging is there to be found, what good are sensual pleasures in which is old age? All rebirths everywhere are bonded to death and sickness.

This is freedom from old age, freedom from death! This is freedom from old age and death, the sorrowless state! Free of enmity, unconstricted, faultless, fearless, without tribulations.

This freedom from death has been realized by many; even today it can be obtained by those who rationally apply themselves; but it's impossible if you don't try."

So said Sumedhā, lacking delight in conditioned things. Soothing Anīkaratta, Sumedhā cast her hair on the ground.

Standing up, Anīkaratta raised his joined palms to her father and begged: "Let go of Sumedhā, so that she may go forth! She will see the truth of liberation."

Released by her mother and father, she went forth, afraid of grief and fear. While still a trainee nun she realized the six direct knowledges, along with the highest fruit.

The extinguishment of the princess was incredible and amazing; on her deathbed, she declared her several past lives.

"In the time of the Buddha Koṇāgamana, we three friends gave the gift of a newly-built dwelling in the Saṅgha's monastery.

Ten times, a hundred times, a thousand times, ten thousand times, we were reborn among the gods, let alone among humans.

We were mighty among the gods, let alone among humans! I was queen to a king with the seven treasures—I was the treasure of a wife.

That was the cause, that the origin, that the root, that was the acceptance of the dispensation; that first meeting culminated in extinguishment for one delighting in the teaching.

So say those who have faith in the words of the one unrivaled in wisdom. They're disillusioned with being reborn, and being disillusioned they become dispassionate."

That is how these verses were recited by the senior nun Sumedhā.

The Verses of the Senior Nuns are finished.

Revised 1 Nov 2025